

LIBRARIES Y

LIBRARIES Y

Vol. XIII.—No. 653.]

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, JULY 3, 1869.

SINGLE COPIES, TEN CENTS, 54.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1929, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the United States, for the Southern District of New York.

HENRY J. RAYMOND.

On Friday, June 18, we were startled by the sad intelligence of the death of HENRY JARVIA RAYMOND, the founder and editor of the New RAYMOND, the founder and editor of the New York Times. He had died suddenly that morning of apoplexy. Thus passed away in the prime of life—for he was only in his fiftieth year—one of the four most eminent journalists in this country, and also one of the most prominent politicians of this State.

HENRY JARVIS RAYMOND was born in the village of Lima, Livingston County, New York, January 24, 1820. His father, who died only a few months since, was a hardworking farmer of moderate means and of sound in-woman of strong character encouraged his early tendencies toward a life of study. After a short period of ed-ucation in the district school during the winters of his boyhood years, he contin-ned his studies at the vil-lage academy, and in 1833 commenced Latin and Al-gebra at the Genesee Wes-leyan Seminary. He en-tered the University of Ver-mont in the summer of mont in the summer of 1836, and there was gradu-ated in 1840 with the highest honors of his class.

The youth of twenty then came to New York city, where he entered upon the where he entered upon the study of law in the office of Mr. E. W. Marsar. But he had his living to earn, and the only prominent men of the city with whom he was at all acquainted were Mr. Mars, then a law-student in Wall Street, and Horsey Greener and Horace Greriev, then the proprietor of the New Yorker, a weekly news-paper, to which Mr. Rav-mond had contributed during his college course. He still wrote for that paper, and also earned $5 a week by daily news-letters to the Cincinnati Cironicie, then edited by E. D. Mans-FIELD, since known as the "Veteran Observer." Meantime he received an offer of a school in North Carolina at $400 a year; but as Mr. GREELEY offered him the same for his services on the New Yorker he declined the first offer, and remained in New York.

In 1841 Mr. GREELEY established the Tribane, and retained Mr. Ray-MOND'S services as assistant editor. In this posi-tion he demonstrated his ability as a journalist. No one could make so rapid or so accurate a report of a speech; and he was also equally prepared to write a leading editorial. What-ever he did he did well. His report of WEBSTER'S speech at Bunker Hill was a memorable event in these memorable event in those days when short-hand writing was unknown.
Mr. RATMOND accepted

Mr. RAYMOND accepted an editorial position on the New York Courier and Enquirer in 1843. It was in this paper that his part of the celebrated controversy with Mr. Grassian on the doctrine of Fourierism was published. It was during his processing with this course that he have not read to the control of the of Fourierism was published. It was during his connection with this journal that he became a reader in the publishing-house of Harran & Brothers, a position which he held for ten years.

Mr. Raymord's political life began in 1849, when he was elected a member of the New York State Assembly by the Whigs. He was re-elected the next year, and was chosen speaker. In 1851 he started the Times newspaper. In 1852 he went to the Baltimore Convention to report the proceedings for his paper, but was given a seat as a delegate, and made an eloquent speech in exposition of Northern sentiment. In 1854 he was elected Lieutenant-Governor of this State, receiving 157,166 votes, a majority of 28,333 over Lubtow, his principal opponent. As an organizer of the Republican party Mr. Raymons was an active worker. The "Address to the People," which was issued from Pittsburg in 1858, was from his pen. He was a supporter of Framont after the meeting of the first National Convention. In 1857 he refused to be a candidate for Governor of this State. The next four years were devoted to his profession. In His speech on the 29th of January, 1866, was his first elaborate effort in Congress. It was upon the Fourteenth Constitutional Amendment. In concluding this speech Mr. RAYMOND thus expressed his views as to what the Government ought to do:

"In the first place, I think we ought to accept the present status of the Southern States, and regard them as having resumed, under the President's guidance and action, their functions of self-government in the Union. In the second place, I think this House should decide on the admission of Representatives by districts, ad-such measures and precautions, by the dispusi-tion of military forces, as will preserve order and prevent the overthrow, by astripation or other-wise, in any State, of its republican form of gov-erument...... Above all, I beg this House to bear in mind, as the sentiment that should control and quide its action that should control and guide its action, that we of the North and they of the South are at war no longer. The gigantic contest is at an end. The courage and devotion on either side which made it so terrible ard so long no longer one a divided duty, but have become the common property of the American name, the priceless poissession of the American Republic through all time to come. The dead of the contending bests sleep beneath the soil of a sleep beneath the soil of a common country and under one common flag. Their hostilities are husbed, and they are the dead of the nation for eversore. The victor may well exult in the victory he has achiered. Let it be our task, as it will be our highest glory, to make the vanquished, and their posterity to the latest generation, rejoice in their generation, rejoice in their defeat."

On the expiration of his term Mr. RAYMOND, having declined the renomination declined the renomination that was pressed upon him by prominent men of both, parties, withdrew almost wholly from public life, and devoted all his energies to the conduct of his paper. He was offered the Mission to Anglish by Provident to Austria by President Jourson in 1867; but his name was sent to the Sen-ate without his consent, and after he had notified the President that no considerations could induce him to accept the position. The last article written by Mr. RAYMOND for the Times was an editorial on Mr. Seward, which appeared on the morning of June 17, "A remorkable instance of Mr. HAYMOND'S working ability, says the New York Triboar, in an obsturry sketch, occurred on the eccasion of the death of DANIEL WEISTER, a statesman for whom he had the greatest admiration. The news of Mr. Walstra's death reached here on a Saturday afternoon. Mr. Raymoush wrote an admirable biomake which had been been a set of the control of th able biography, which ap-peared in Monday's paper, covering twenty-six col-toms of the Towns, and in addition by wrote three columns of editorial on the name subject. Of this ex-traordinary biography Mr. Raymonn wrote sixteen columns without stopping a moment for rest. As a feat of editorial labor we doubt its ever equaled." having

Mr. RAYMOND passed the afternoon previous to his death in Greenwood, making arrangements for the interment of his son WAL-TER's remains, and called at the office of the Torce about six o'clock in the evening. After a few minutes' conversation on matters pertaining to the business of the paper be returned home. After dinner he sat with his family and some friends who came in until between nine and ten o'clock, when he left them to attend a political consultation; and his family saw no more of him until he was discovered, about half past two next morning, hing in the about half past two next morning, 1/2ng in the hall-way unconscious and apparently dying. Ho had locked the outside door and shut the inner one, and was then apparently stricken with the malady that closed his life. The most eminent medical aid was at once summoned, and the ut-most that science and skill could do were done,

THE LATE HON, HENRY J. RAYNOND,-(PROTEGRAPHED OF BRADE, NEW YORK.)

1858 he sided, apparently, with the supporter; of Mr. Douglas, but in the end resumed his relations with the Republican party. In 1860 in was a warm supporter of Mr. Sawand for the Republican nomination, and he was peculiarly satisfied that Mr. SEWARD was placed in the Cabinet of Mr. Lincoln.

In 1861 Mr. RAYMOND was again elected to the Assembly and was chosen Speaker. In 1864 he was elected to the United States House of Representatives from the Sixth District of this city. His career in that body, during a critical era of our political history, will be reviewed in another column.

mitting none but loyal men who can take the oath we may prescribe, and holding all others as disqualified; the Senate acting, at its discretion, in the same way in regard to Representatives of States. I think, in the third place, we should provide by law for giving to the freedmen of the South all the rights of citizens in courts of law and elsewhere. In the fourth place, I would and elsewhere. In the norm pace, I would exclude from Federal office the leading actors in the conspiracy which led to the rebellion in every State. In the fifth place, I would make such amendments to the Constitution as may seem. wise to Congress and the States, acting freely and without eoercion. And, sixth, I would take

He remained unconscious, and died tranquilly about five o'clock in the morning.

Soon after leaving college Mr. RAYMOND married a most estimable lady, whose acquaintance be had made in Vermont. By her he had several the had made in verminal. By her he had several children, of whom a son, who graduated recent-ly from Yale College, and two daughters, we be-lieve, are now living. His wife is at present in Europe, where one of his daughters is being educated, and we understand that he was to have visited them this summer. As a husband and father he was kind and affectionate

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, JULY 3, 1869.

THE CALM.

FOR the first time within this generation I' there is political peace in the country. The most vital debate in our history, which in its progress became the most sanguinary civil war, has ended in the absolute triumph of the party that held the true American doctrine of equal liberty, the party of humanity, justice, and civilization. Indeed, fierce as the struggle was, involving private griefs too deep and sore ever to be wholly assuaged until the lapse of many years, the advantage to the country was worth it all; and it is impossible even now to think without dismay of the issue of the contest that was sought by the present opposition. The Republican party first appeared at a na-tional election in 1856, when the Democratic party was apparently immovably intropched in power, and the national demoralization seemed almost complete. In 1860 the Republican party succeeded upon the question of the non-extension of Slavery. In 1864 it succeeded upon the issue of Emancipation and unconditional suppression of the robellion. In 1868 it again ecceded upon the question of a Reconstruction policy adapted to secure the national victory,

The Fifteenth Amendment, which guarantees equality of suffrage, and which strikes color out of politics, is the formal end of the party strife of many years, and it will undoubtedly be adopted. There is, therefore, at this moment no domestic political question upon which parties divide. The pristocratic tendency in our politics, whose organization is known as the Democratic party, of course continues to sneer at reconstruction and the policy of equal rights; but it will hardly undertake to open reconstruction as a practical issue. Upon the financial question there are as many theories as talkers and writers; but there is no distinctive policy known as Republican and Democratic, Republicans are not agreed in praise or blame of the Secretary's present course, and Democritis carefully confine themselves to denouncing taxation and revenue swindling, without pro-posing any system of improvement, or any change whatever except their own return to power. Neither party, as such, is a Protective or Free-Trade party.

If the Republican party were to hold a convention to-morrow it would congrutulate the country upon the return of peace; upon equal suffrage; upon the long roll of illustrious and inestimable services which the party has rendered to the public welfare; upon the honesty and economy which it is its aim to introduce into the administration of the government, and of which the character of the President and his Cabinet is the surest guarantee. It would declare its sympathy with all people struggling for liberty, and insist that the differences with England must be settled consistently with the evident justice of the American feeling upon the subject. If the Democratic party were to hold a convention it would accuse the Republicans of delaying and embittering reconstruction; of aiming to destroy the local self-govermment, which is an ancient bulwark of freedom; of planging the country into a frightful delet, and of providing for its payment the most unjust, onerons, and partially administered system of taxation; it would vehemently call for economy and a reduction of burdens; assert the failure of the new Administration; and pronounce for the independence of Cuba and for summary measures with Great Britain.

Under the circumstances every in voter would have to ask himself whether, in the absence of any immediate issue upon which he must support one of the parties, there were any reason to suppose that the general administration of affairs would be more honest and sagacious if the dominant party were everthrown. Indeed, unless something wholly unforeseen occurs during the next two or three months. that is the question which must be answered in the autumn elections. And there are several things for Republicans to remember. Among them is the fact that the party strength is never shown except under pressure. In dull political times the party is usually defeated. As it comprises the mass of the intelligent voters, there is of course more independence of action than in the Democratic party. Another important fact is, that the reputation of the last New York Legislature, which had a Republican majority, was so bad as vitally to injure the party. Those who vote with the party that seems to them upon the whole the most honest and publicspirited, look at the conduct of a Legislature for which the Republicans are responsible, and decide that it is a choice between pot and kettle; and they either refrain from voting, which is a Republican loss, or they vote for a change, which may be a Republican defeat.

Besides these facts there are the heavy taxation, the uneasy suspicion of immense frauds in the revenue department, the widely-ramified personal disappointments that always accompany a new administration, and the inevitable reaction that follows the beginning of an administration of which the most impossible reforms and an ideal policy were vaguely expected. For all these the Republican party, being in power, is held responsible, and its position is therefore precarious, and demands the thought and care of every one who would deplore the renewed ascendency of the party which has been the chief source of all the national woes -of the enormous debt, and the demoralization which is plain to every observer. If the character and purpose of the President and the Cabinet could be diffused through every branch of the administration the simple question for decision would be, whether the Democratic party gave promise of such superior honesty and capacity as to make its return to power desirable. That is a question which we shall

LOOKING AT HOME.

Ir it is desirable to have neutrality laws, as the United States have always contended, it is desirable that they should be executed. And if laws are bad, as the President sagnationaly said in his inaugural address, there is no surer means of procuring their repeal than to execute them stringently.

We have been lately engaged in this country in a somewhat sharp debate with England, in which we charge the loose execution of the British neutrality laws as a very serious offense against us; as showing, in fact, an unfriendly disposition, a willingness to see our Government overthrown. Is it not desirable, therefore, as good policy and for consistency, to say no more, that our conduct shall show our complaint to be at least sincere? If an expedition fitted out in England against the United States, in defiance of the neutrality laws, is, as Mr. Summer asserts, virtually an act of war against a country with which England is at peace, is such an expedition any less an act of war if it is not British, but American; not fitted out in Liverpool, but in New York; and not against the United States, but against Spain? Yet we read in the Tribane, which is very emphatic upon the British offense, that the execution of the neutrality laws of the United States merely gives "great delight to that small but malignant party" which is opposed to the liberation of Cuba. And , in the same number of the paper, that "the Cuban cause loses naught in sympathy and spirit by the check which it has been deemed proper to put upon its agents here in recognition

Now if our neutrality laws interfere with the just claims and hopes of liberty any where, let us have them repealed. But if they are essential to the general welfare of nations, let us have them enforced. In any case, while we are uphraiding the English authorities as "malignant" because they would not enforce the laws, let us refrain from branding those of the United States with the same epithet because they do enforce them. Meanwhile there is no pronder page in our history than that which records the sincere neutrality of the United States, however warm the sympathies of the people with either side; and when Mr. Figure assures the Cuban revolutionary delegate that whatever may be his own feelings in regard to the Cuban movement, the national good faith requires that the United States do not make war upon Spain even to liberate Cuba, he reasserts the policy of WASHINGTON. In 1793, when the great war was raging between England, our then late enemy, and France, our ally and friend, the British Government feared that hostile expeditions would be fitted out from the United States; and, although no enlistment act had then been passed, President WARHINGTON issued a proclamation ding all violations of pentr v. and stat ing that instructions had been given to the officers of the United States to prosecute all of-The Governors of States were asked to arrest suspicious vessels, which they did; and prizes which had been taken from British owners were restored to them, the Government of the United States holding itself responsible for indemnification. In the next year, 1794, Congress passed a law to secure entire neutrality; and immediately after the application of the British Government upon the subject, as Mr. CANNING stated in Parliament - a fact which creditably contrasts with Lord PALMERston's declaration in Parliament, in 1863, that England could not alter her municipal laws to suit other governments. So, at a later day, during the Russian war of 1854-55, the seignre of the bark Moury in New York, at the instance of the British Consul, and upon the feeblest and, as it proved, wholly erroneous suspicion, maintained the traditional good faith of the United States in the observance of international obligation.

Is there any good reason why we should de- ! part from this excellent course? Because we are no longer the weak nation of Wassingros's day shall we show less regard for the enforcement of a municipal law of our own, enacted in furtherance of international comity? "The rule, therefore," says Catheres, "which prohibits the using of neutral territory as a position from which to attack an enemy is simply indispensable to the existence of neutrality. Without it a war between any two states must rapidly draw into its vortex the whole world." When Parliament cheered Mr. When Parliament cheered Mr. LAIRD for boldly evading the British neutrality laws, the indignation of this country was inexpressible. But is it not exactly the same thing, so far as those laws are concerned, to insist that their enforcement merely gratifies maligmant persons?

NATIONAL FINANCES.

Editor Horper's Weskly:
Data Sex,—A generous disposition shown by your paper in a candid treatment of opinions upon national finances prompts me to make a suggestion or two as briefly as possible.

The value of Government credit can be certainly The value of Government credit can be certainly improved by complying with the clause providing for the conversion of the greenbacks which is printed on the backs of most of them, which clause was repealed by Congress from no need or want of the country, but from the trigency of gentlemes interested in National banks. Congress, I think, has as much right to repeal the "promise to pay" contained on the face of them.

Make these noise convertible in the manner essen-tially as urged by Senator Sexualar, or by the act au-thorizing their issue, and our currency would be equal in value to Government time bonds; and those bonds in value to Government time bonds; and those bonds would themselves be worth more abroad, from the removal of the only failure of our Government to meet its obligations. I assume that the discount on the Friee-Twenties in the foreign bond markets is gold to the measure and value of this shadow of repudiation on our demand notes.

A Senator and recently in my hearing that members of Committees of Finance in both Houses sought last Annual and since to anoly the wave orbitons senador.

Argust and since to apply the very obvious remedy of restoring the convertibility of the greenbacks into some class of time bonds, with privilege of reconver-sion at pleasure; but gentlemen connected with the National banks, who appeared to understand the sub-

National banks, who appeared to understand the sub-ject better than they, induced them to leave the cur-rency to take care of liself.

The example of Austrian paper florins retired at 46 per cost., Russian rubles at 35, and French assignats repulliated anticely, should warn as against this leav-ing an over-duc issue of notes to grow stale. Inter-ests combine to depreciate them for profit. Newspa-pers say that "gold is too chasp yet to be retained in the country," which means that they would make the currency still cooper.

currency still poorer.

Will it not suit the National banks to have the Will it not suit the National banks to have the "legal tenders" so poor as never to be demanded in redemption of their notes, while at the same time the bonds which they have piedged at the Treasury are so much improved in value as to make it Treasury are their notes when gold is highest?

Will the American public endure the losses incident to the depreciation of all currency and private obligations without injury to the prospects of bond-holders?

H.

We give our correspondent a hearing, as he touches upon subjects of great importance. which must soon command attention.

The acts of Congress of February 25, 1862, and of July 11, 1862, each of which authorized the issue of $150,000,000 of legal tenders, provided for the funding of these notes, at the pleasure of the holder, in six per cent. bonds They were indorsed "exchangeable for United States six per cent, bonds, redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after five years."

The act authorizing the creation of National banks was passed subsequently, on the 25th of February, 1863; immediately after which, on the 3d of March, 1863, another act was passed, which provided that the holders of notes thus issued "shall present the same for the nurseau of exchanging for bonds, as therein provided, on or before the first day of July, 1863, and thereafter the right so to exchange the same shall cease.

As but six days intervened between the act authorizing the creation of the National banks and the repeal of the law for the exchange of legal tenders for bonds, and as about four months were allowed for their conversion before the repeal took effect, it is scarcely proper to say that it was done by National banks, or that the prospective change amounted to repudiaforeseen that a continuing power to fund the notes was inconsistent with the profitable or safe existence of the National banks, as the latter were to redeem their obligations in those notes which, for interest or purposes of mischief, might be suddenly converted to an extent inconsistent with safety. The time allowed for foreclosing this privilege, four months in the midst of war-en age, counted by the rapid passing of great events-must be deemed reasonable, especially when we reflect that the life of the nation was supposed by the legislative power to hang upon the success of this banking proj-The State banks, whose position was deemed secure, would not have left it and adopted the National plan, if this power to overwhelm them had remained. Some of the State institutions here aspired to become the fiscal agents of the Government on the basis of an unredeemed issue of their local paper; and the real issue was between the adoption of such a plan and the one proposed by Secretary CHASE and made free of that objectionable feature. We must transfer ourselves back to that dark period, with its painful doubts and imperative necessities, to arrive at the rule by which these measures should be judged.

We have arrived, however, happily to the enjoyment of peace, and, looking back upon the grave mistakes made during the conflict and since—chief among which were the extravagent issues of paper made with a view to float the debt, and the failure of President Joneson, on the happening of peace, to call an extra session of Congress to provide instantly a financial policy suitable to the new situation—we are to consider what remedies are required.

And here we agree with the tone of our correspondent, that the National banks, with few exceptions, are opposed to what has now become essential, an improvement of the currency. The debtor interest, which these corporations in the main represent, with all its speculating tendencies, is against contraction and against wooding out and thinning off these institutions,

It would not be expedient to re-enset the original plan for funding, as it would apply to $300,000,000 of the $355,936,431 50 of legal tender notes in circulation on the first of the present month, of which the great bulk have been reissued without the convertible clause. The process of improvement must be gradual, so as to permit preparation and prevent a shock. Various modes are presented, most of which would accomplish the purpose.

The three per cent. certificates amounted, on the 1st of June, 1869, to $53,075,000, on which interest had accrued to $1,061,500. This paidoff, or purchased to go into the sinking fund, would amount to contraction, as it constitutes part of the reserve which the National banks may hold instead of legal tenders. The issue of compound interest notes, at 44 to 5 per cent. interest, limited in amount to such sum as might be absorbed without too much rapidity, would surely accomplish the work of contraction sufficiently if carried out with firmness, a corresponding amount of legal tenders to be simultaneously destroyed, and the new interest notes to have the function imparted or rather transferred to them of being a tender. Such transfer would not be a new execution of the power, but would be merely a continuation of what was already in existence, the legality of which is protected by the vital necessities of an unparalleled conflict.

Other schemes for returning from a debased to a sound system have been proposed, but their discussion will be of little avail at present. It may be that a majority of the people, debauched as they have been with paper-money, need, by disaster to themselves in their financial affairs, to be stimulated to a return to the recognized metallic basis for such issues. If they do the present system will be fruitful of trouble, and it may not be until they adopt the plan of a currency redeemable in the precious metals that our country will be blessed with the power to compete with foreign people, and be on the road to the commercial supremacy which the future will unfold, if in this vital matter we are true to ourselves.

NATIONAL DISCRETION AND RESPONSIBILITY.

In the discussion of the Alabama question it should not be forgotten by our friends in En-gland that no American objects to the principle that every nation must reserve to itself the discretion of conceding belligerent rights to actual belligerents. This is a principle of interna-tional law which is in the interest of revolutions or freedom. If a strong and well-sustaine popular morement against a despotie government begins to any country, every free government will, of course, exercise its discretion, and will both concede belligerent rights to the revolution and recognise its practical success at pleasure, and, of course, at the risk of consequences. This was distinctly stated of consequences. by Mr. WEBSTER in the HULSEMANN letter. No. American who properly understands the subject will object to this principle.

It is, therefore, not the exercise of this right, but the time and circumstances under which it is exercised, that determine the friendly or hosanother power. e dispo stance, when the revolution in Cube began last October, before any serious battle had been fought, before, indeed, there was more than the evident intention of war, the United States had issued a proclamation of neutrality, might not Spain justly have complained that it was unfriendly as giving the revolution respectability, and would not all other powers have been sure that it was intended to help the revolution and secure the separation of Cuba for our own purposes? And if Spain emerged triumphant and powerful from the contest and in a condition of ability to cope with another nation, should we not, of course, expect a very grave demand for explanation? This is the substance of our feeling of unfriendliness in the British concession of belligerence. It was both hasty and unnecessary. The war in Cubs has now lasted nearly ten months, but the United States have not found it necessary, even with all the sympathy which is not concealed for any such movement toward independence, to recognize the belligerent rights of the revolutionists. Why, then, did the British Government before a single great battle had been fought, when there was nothing but the apparent intention of a war, and before the ar-rival of the American Minister, hasten to invest rebels against a friendly government with all the rights of belligerence? Why should the proclamation have issued at all? Mr. FORSTER says that, if it had not been issued, privateers would have sailed from English ports under letters of marque. Very well: they would have sailed under a flag not acknowledged, and would have been mere pirates. Moreover, in 1856, Great Britain, as a member of the Congress of Paris, proposed to us to abolish privateering. Before the proclamation issued we had professed our willingness to accede to that declaration, and the offer failed because Great Britain wished to except the actual situation from its operation. The people of this country do not deny the right of England to determine when belligerent rights shall be conceded; but they feel that the circumstances under which the right was exercised in our case showed a disposition which raises a presumption against a vigilant observance of neutrality.

Mr. SEWARD, who has been blamed for his instructions to Mr. Adams upon the relation of slavery to the war, was at least very emphatic upon this point at the earliest moment. His apprehension was that England would recognize the Confederacy; and in one of his earliest dispatches to Mr. ADAMS, No. 10, dated on the 21st of May, 1861, before the news of the proclamation had reached this country, Mr. Saward

"British recognition would be British intervention to create within our territory a hostile state by over-throwing this republic itself."

And again:

"A concession of belligerent rights is liable to be construed as a recognition of them fembassadors, agents, etc.). No one of these proceedings will pass un-questioned by the United States in this case."

Indeed, it is very plain from the letters of Mr. ADAMS that the general opinion in England when he arrived was that the rebellion would probably succeed. That the proclamation was issued to help it is certainly not evident. But that it was issued with a conviction upon the part of the Government of the probable success of the rebellion can hardly be denied. Add to this the facts of the escape of the Alakowa, facts so notorious, so indisputable, so shame-ful that Earl RUSSELL himself declared that the escape was "a scandal and a reproach;" and we do not see why the British Government should not frankly say to Mr. MOTLEY: "We waive the exact legal points, and we accept the responsibility of the escape of the Alabams through the negligence of our agents." Such a hearty overture could not be misunderstood. Nobody believes that Englishmen are cowardly; and such an act would prove them to be magnanimous, while it would do more to cement the intelligent friendship of the two countries than twenty volumes of diplomatic cor-respondence and legal hair-splitting before arbitrators. We hope, at least, that Englishmen will understand that there is an intelligent and honorable public opinion in this country which can readily distinguish between a general desire of real amity and cowardice-an opinion which instantly understands and heartily despises those in either country who perplex an honorable settlement by the tone and conduct of bullies.

THE STATE OF TRADE.

THE Secretary of the Treasury has again been aided in his desire to put down the price of gold by the action of the German bankers in selling exchange founded on fresh sales of our bonds in Europe. The speculation for a rise in gold has once more been checked by this

There is, however, a want of spirit on the side as well of those who operate for a fall as of those who operate for a rise in the gold market, which is unquestionably founded on the singular financial situation. Gold fell between one and two per cent, under this influence, although up to this time our exports contime to run far below our imports.

blem which confuses Wall Street and indeed all business men is this, at what precise time the balance against us on the trade between us and the foreigner will be more powerful than the effects produced by the sale of our bonds in foreign markets. No one can fail to see that a turn must take place attended with more or less of severity in individual cases according to the amount of improdunce which has been indulged in. While this state of things has a depressing influence upon trade, there are other causes now at work which aid in stimulating it.

The recent advance in cotton will give to the Southern States a considerable addition to their pecuniary means, which now will be distributed among the planters, the reverse of what took place last year, when the advantage of a rise was divided between the foreign manufacturers and the cotton brokers. The policy which has governed in the sale of this year's crop has been producers. It was founded on a careful estimate of the wants of manufacturers and their diminished means of satisfying them.

But the most important element in imparting strength to the United States is the starting of new streams of emigration to our shores. The skilled laborer of England is settling the question of an insufficient aupply of food by coming hither to eat of our abundance. The sophistry of those English writers who, in the face of a continued slaughter of unfed cattle, maintained that the domestic supply of food was equal to what was usual, has been penetrated by those who find that their wages have been diminished, and the land flowing, as they eagerly suppose, with milk and honey rises with hope to their view. It is this which informs the capitalists of Europe of our great future. The people who have the strength to fix the price of cotton, who have food to spare to satis-fy the demand from any quarter, and who can absorb without knowing it the population that crowded states can not feed, and consequently eject, must be regarded as the coming power. That credit should be given carelessly in the face of an undoubted balance of trace against us might for a time be expected.

The advance in cotton has been attended with an advance in the price of the manufactured article, both at the mills and in the hands of city jobbers, but not so as to produce an equalizing price. The mills which stopped, and those which are on anort time remain so, as they suppose that no profit can be made by the resumption of ordinary work. creased price of bleached cloths is due to the action of jobbers more than to the operations of country distributors. It is part of the preparation for the fall trade soon about to open, and has the apparently reasonable basis of a greater advance in rew cotton than of the manufactured article. The policy may encounter difficulty from the well-known want of money among the Western people, and a consequent unusual economy, augmented by the expectation that raw cotton will fall as the dimen of the new grop come to be understood.

HENRY J. RAYMOND.

Is the midst of the general regret at the death of Mr RAYMOND, the tone of tenderness perceptible in all that has been said of him is remarkable, and well interprets the man and the impression he made. From his early youth, as his profession demanded, he was engaged in kind of public debate and controversy. Yet although before he died a certain weariness and disappointmens were unquestionably to be observed in intercourse with him, there was often apparent a youthful freshness of feeling deared him to sli who knew him well, and which had the charm of surprise in a man whose experience was supposed to be of a kind that strips life of its illusions, if not of its ideal,

Mr. RATMOND was called a man of generous mpulses rather than of strong convictions; but it would, perhaps, be more accurate to say that he was of that temperament which sees the reason of both sides so plainly that vehement assertion seemed false and warm partisanship The Mail says of him that he told a friend he never finished a sentence without a profound feeling that it was only partially true. It is a quality of many of the finest natures, LOUIS BLANC remarks it in GLADSTONE. But it produces infirmity of purpose which is incom-patible with leadership, both by preventing en-tire self-confidence and by begetting distrust in others. Consequently it was said of Mr. RAYsono that he was a trimmer; as it was said of Mr. GLADSTONE that he was a prig.

But he smiled at the charge, and declared that every truly wise man was necessarily a trimmer, as it was called, in politics. For politles, he insisted, were not morals. They involved morals only as they were methods of reaching results; and the political duty of the statesman, he thought, is to discover in what way, under the circumstances of the particular situation and with human nature what we know it to be, the good result is to be worked out. This feeling explains Mr. RAYMOND's fidelity to Mr. SEWARD. He believed that Mr. SEWARD'S obects were humane and wise, and he confided in his practical political sagneity, and Mr. Saw-ARD spoke for Mr. RAYMOND, as well as for himself and for all who are called trimmers in polities, when he said: "I early learned from JEF-PERSON that in politics we must do what we can, not what we would." It is a specious but perilous maxim, for it beguiles a man not only to lower the standard of action but of thought, and serves the purpose of the rewal equally with that of the statesman. "Don't be too fine for human nature," is the most subtle of Mephistophelian counsels

We met Mr. RAYMOND just four years ago, a day or two before the Fourth of July, 1865. The joy at the end of the rebellion and the horror of the assassination had both passed away, and Annaew Jourses was still trusted by CHARLES SUMBER HIST MINIOT STRAINS. WO stood talking upon Broadway, and Mr. Rav-MOND never seemed more buoyant and hopeful. extremely sagacious on the part of those most | "Well," he said, "how about reconstruction?" duserving of advantage—its lately unfortunate | To the reply that equal suffrage must be the corner-stone, he said, "Undoubtedly; but how shall we get at it?" And in a few words he stated the position that he afterward elaborated in his speeches in Congress and in the columns of the Times. Politics with him was a question of how to get at it; and his sense of the injustice and even absurdity of an unconditional as-sertion of one side, and of the folly of denouncing a mere difference in the judgment of methods as moral guilt, inclined him to a gradual, as opposed to the "thorough," policy, and pre-served the tone of courtesy which always dis-tinguished his discussions. This last was not politeness merely; it resulted from that fine sense of propriety which concedes that, as the open, the opposite argument may be the soundest after all,

Unfortunately with this temperament was joined a very decided political ambition. We say unfortunately because the time in which Mr. RAYMOND lived demanded the most positive political faith and conduct, while the character of his mind and his temperament forbade that unquestioning confidence which is essential to leadership, and with any thing less than leadership he could not be content. markably serviceable talents; his genuine ability, his quickness, available knowledge, facility of speech and writing; his astounding capacity of labor, his equable temper and cordial manner constantly preferred him to conspicuous positions, which he filled always with credit, if pever with that kind of superiority upon which his heart was set.

Mr. RAYMOND was one of the early Republicans, and wrote the Pittsburg address. In 1859-60 he evidently hoped that Mr. Douglas would take a course in which moderate Republicans could support him; and his political philosophy prevented him from seeing that a man so wholly without political morality as Douglas must be destroyed, as he was destroyed, in an actual crisis. During the war Mr. RAYMOND was uncompromising in his support of the Un-ion. "Through Baltimore or over it," we heard him say on the 20th of April, 1861, in a public speech. He wrote the Baltimere reso-lutions of 1864, and was made Chairman of the Republican National Committee. But the old despondency occasionally mastered him, and he sometimes doubted the result of the election. Mr. LINCOLN and Mr. RAYMOND were mutually attractive. The sweet inflexibility of the one was gratified by the cheerful good sense of the other; and Mr. RAYMOND's only book is the Life of Lincoln.

Long before this time his genius as a journalist was fully developed and acknowledged. Mr. Gerezay, himself an amazing worker, has recorded his admiration of Mr. RAYMOND'S industry; and while he was still connected with Mr. GREELEY in the New Yorker and Tribune, he was engaged as literary adviser to the HAR-PERS. He was the first editor of Harper's Magazine, and wrote the original prospectus which appeared in the first Number. made the selections for the Maguzine, and prepared the "Monthly Record of Current Events." As a literary adviser or "render," his judgments were so sound that the gentleman succeeded him when he became editor of the Times used to say: "If my opinion differs from that of Mr. RAYMOND, I should like to reconsider it; but if any one else has read the book, and his view differs from mine, I will let my opinion stand. Mr. RAYMOND's opinion is worth more than mine." The last paper which he wrote for Harper's Magazine was the "Word of Apology," which appeared in the Number for sary, 1854, the month following the fire in which the buildings of the Hanruns were destroyed. His relations with the house continued for ten years, during his legislative career, and while he was Lieutenant-Governor, and until after the establishment of the Times, and the mutual friendly regard was never inberrapted.

The versatility of Mr. RAYMOND's gifts, and his instinctive knowledge of what a newspaper should be, soon gave the Tireer an eminence as a technically "well-edited" journal, which it has The strictly professional qualities never lost. of a journalist we do not propose to discuss; but no man in the country has probably ever possessed them more fully than Mr. RAYMOND.

His profession, however, did not satisfy him as we have seen, and he passed from one official position to another-from the speakership of the State Assembly and the presidency of the Senate, in both which places his parliamentary knowledge and skill are traditional, to the Congress of the United States. He appenred here at a time when only the most pos-itive policy was practicable. But Mr. Rayintellectual temperament again warned him of all that was to be said upon the other

"Old things need not be therefore true, O brother men, nor yet the new; Ah I still a while the old thought retain, And yet consider it again!"

It was the spirit of FALKLAND in the English civil wars. But, however sincere, it was perilously untimely. It could not have saved liberty in England, and in America its results would have been disastrous.

The Philadelphia movement of 1866 was naturally full of promise to Mr. RAYMOND as opening that moderate way in which alone he thought the country could safely more. was, however, really an invitation to the Republican party to break ranks in front of the foe and before the battle was decided. Ray-MOND's enruestness led him to take a promiment part not for his personal advantage only, but und-alitedly to show that it was not a masked Democratic movement, as was alleged. He was, however, still Chairman of the National Republican Committee, and his action was a fatal political mistake-how fatal the New Orleans massacre only too plainly revealed. From that time Mr. Raymond seems to have been a changed, perhaps a disheartened, man. He owned his mistake with a most generous frankness. But he was really so candid and perceptive that it undoubtedly showed him the futility of his political hopes, and his incapacity for the leadership that be desired. Thenceforth he devoted himself exclusively to the conduct of the Times; and although he became Chairman of one of the Republican organizations in the city, it was in the hope of effecting a reconciliation, and finding that it was not practicable he very recently resigned.

He died undonbtedly of overwork. His enpacity of labor, as we said, was prodigious; but he had been twice warned by failing health that he was straining his powers, and twice he fled to Europe to escape incessant occupation. The suddenness of his death, although a grievons shock to those dearest to him, is for himself not to be deplored. He was never more kindly regarded than when he died, and in the natural reaction of the intense political excitement of the last four years his character and his services were more justly estimated. No man in the editorial fraternity will be personally remembered for more friendly acts, for a more constant kindliness of nature. He was reserved in manner, but the courteous tone of his paper was only the reflex of that of his social inter-

Undoubtedly, as his name is kindly mentioned, there is a half feeling which is always inseparable from a man of his peculiar temperament, of lost opportunities and wasted powers. But it is a feeling of fate rather than of censure. And so we are sure it seemed to those members of the old Press Club of sixteen or seventeen years since who stood by the coffie of their comrade. Remembering the gay and brilliant Saturday feasts long ago at the Astor they recall no brighter companion, no friend more faithful, no truer master of his craft, than HENRY JAR-VIS RAYMOND.

NOTES.

THE twenty-fifth annual meeting of the New York State Teachers' Association will be held at Ithaca in "Library Hall" (Cornell University) July 27, 28, and 29. The opening address will be delivered by WILLIAM N. HEID, the President. Lectures and papers are also expected from B. WATERHOUSE HAWKINS, the eminent h Naturalist, Professor Charles Davies, and others.

An efficient Committee in Ithaca is engaged in providing proper accommodations for all who may attend the Association; and the hotels have consented to adopt special reduced rates of charge for the members in attendance, not to exceed $2

THE telegraph made Mr. GOLDWIN SMITH say at Toronto that "the American press was not universally celebrated for intelligence." Mr. Sattra of course denies in a note to the Tribune that he ever made any such remark.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

Tax Beston Pears Indice closed June 29 with the concert by the children of the public schools. The closing piece was "Old Bundred," and was sung by the audience and children together. After the concert the members of the orderstra presented Mr. Gilmore with a gold watch and chain.

The funeral of Henry J. Baymond took pince at 5 y.M., June 31, at the Presbyterian Church, corner of Tenth Street and University Place, it this city.
Over 1900 Chinese arrived from Hong-Kong at San Francisco on June 18.

The body of John Wilkes Booth is to be placed side by side with those of his father, Junius Bratus Booth, and asster, in Green Mount Conserve, Baltimore.
Dr. Alken March, an eminent sergeon and physician

Dr. Alden Murch, an eminent surgeon and physician of Albany, died in that city June 11. It appears from an official statement that on an average about seventy-five persons annually full victims to the street cars of this city, sine-tenths of whom die,

FOREIGN NEWS.

The British House of Lords passed the Irish Church bill at three o'clock, a.w., on the 19th of June, analysic great excitement, the vote standing 179 in throw of the bill, and 146 against it. The Archbishop of Dublin and aftern Bishops voted.

Someno took the regency oath at Madrid Jame 19. General Prior was announced as Socretary of War and President of the Ministry; Silvela, Socretary of State; and Herrara Grace, Justice. The Republicans in the Spanish Coetes have not succeeded in their attempt to secure the banishment of the Duke de Mongensier. The Cortes has passed a bill giving the acts of the Provisional Government the force of Law, and conferring upon it the power to carry them into effect.

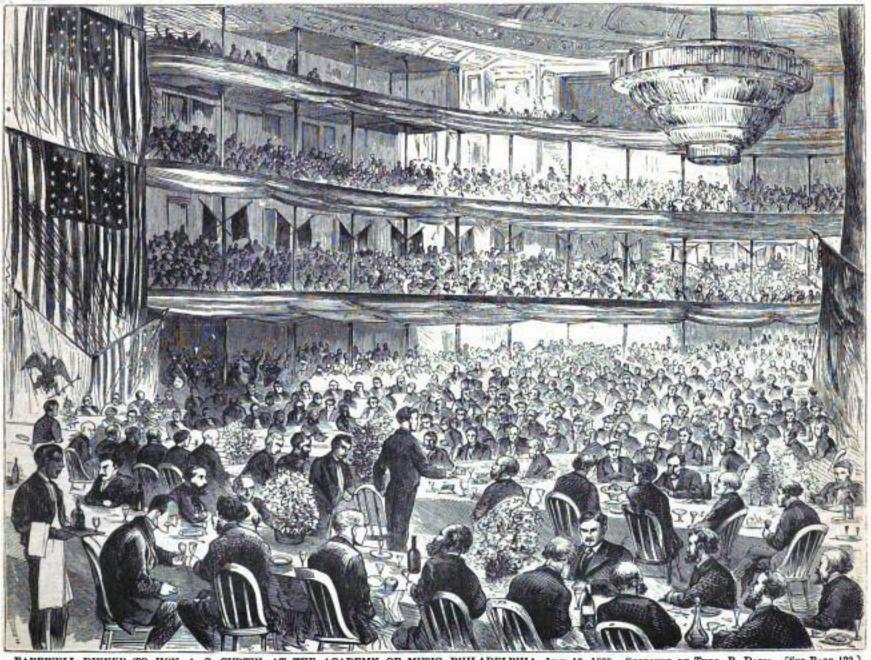

The contestance power by the Ropeal League at Balifas, Nova Sectio, declare that every legitimate means shall be used to sever the connection of Nova Sootia with the Donasiano, and being about a union, on fair and equitable terms, with the United States. Leagues are to be formed throughout the Province for the purpose of agitating the annocation question.

The Great Eastern has gone to Breet, Prassee, from which pert she will shortly sall on her cable-laying expedition.

THE PICKED NINE OF THE "RED STOCKING" BASE-BALL CLUB, CINCINNATI, OHIO.-PHOT. BY F. L. HEFF, 244 BROAD STREET, NEWARK, N. J.-[SEE PAGE 422.]

PAREWELL DINNER TO HON. A. G. CURTIN, AT THE ACADEMY OF MUSIC, PHILADELPHIA, June 12, 1809.—Sketched by Theo. R. Davis.—[See Page 422.]

421

FAREWELL RECEPTION OF A. G. CURTIN, IN PHILADELPHIA.

INDEPENDENCE HALL, Philadelphia, was tendered to Hon. A. G. Curres, our Minister to Russia, by the municipal authorities of that city for a farewell reception of the citizens on Saturday, June 12. We give on our first page an illustration of the dinner given on the evening of that day at the Academy of Music. Over five hundred guests were present. The building was beautifully decorated with American and Russian flags. Mr. Courts made an appropriate speech, proceeding the memorable greats of his speech, recounting the memorable events of his career as Governor of Pennsylvania, and alloded to his mission to Russia in the following lan-

It is somewhat anomalous that the freest and the strongest government in the New World should have maintained the most amicable relashould have maintained the most amicable rela-tions with the most absolute monarchy and the strongest government of the Obl World. Amer-ica and Russia have never had an interruption of their friendly relations. It is my carnest prayer that, during my residence at the Court of the Autocrat of all the Russias, nothing will occur to break these relations."

Other speeches were made, in response to the various toasts of the avening, by prominent in-

THE "RED STOCKING" BASE-BALL CLUB, CINCINNATI.

We give, on page 421, portraits of the picked nine of the "Red Stocking" Base-Hall Club of Cincinnati, Ohio. On the 16th they best the "Mutuals," and the pext day the "Atlantics" of Brooklyn. The latter game was won 32 to 10. If the "Rod Nockings" keep on and hold their own, they will be the champion club before the summer is ended. Hurrah for the Porkopolitans!

THE INTERNATIONAL REGATTA.

We give on our double-page opening this week an illustration representing the Harrard crew in training on the Charles Hiver, as a proparation for the international four-pared race with the Oxford crew, which is to come off in August on the Thomes, spon the Putney Course. Harvard gave the challenge, and Oxford accepted.

The rowers selected by Harvard are Messes. Loring, Simmons, Bans, and Rick, forming as LORING, SIMMONS, BARS, and RICK, forming as good a crew as could be selected. Loring, who has charge of this crew, is 25 years of age, but a remarkably mature car. Hick is a polished cars-man; he is the "first stroke." SIMMONS is the "stroke carsman," and is the strongest man of the crew. The ages of the four average 24 years each. The crow proposes to sail on the 10th of July, so as to spend five or six weeks in England before the contest.

MY GRANDFATHER'S WATCH.

I. I man been less than three months in New York, and if I was not actually already in love I was quite ready to affirm as much, if a fitting occazion should be given me. Moreover, with a worldly wisdom beyond my years, I had suffered my young affections to go out toward no less a personage than Miss De Silver, the banker's daughter. Fortune and my nunt's respectability had even so far sided me that I felt myself at liberty, with a little extra courage, to call on her even at her own leedly home.

The determination to call was a thing by it. self, however, as an examination of my ward-role rerealed the unpleasant fact that my present supplies would hardly army see in keeping with what might there be expected. Solomon could have beaten me entirely. So could the lilies of almost any valley.

My slouder salary as yet offered me no resources, nor would it for another month. I was at my wit's cod, or thereabouts, when an idea struck me. The Chersons were always fertile in ideas, and was not I, Richard, the heir of all the Chersons? And had I not inherited my grandfuther's watch? Did it not, even then, tick drowsily in its swollen fob?

Now this chronometer was of the ancient style; made in a day when the precious metals seem to have been of no account whatever. It was a sort of gold mine, with a time-piece hidden numy in the heart of it. Small it may be for a gold mine, but decidedly large for a watch. It was one of those watches which impart an air of an-tique aristocracy to old gentlemen with good clothes, and affected by them for the same reason that the "shabby genteel" families purchase only fine old furniture. "Sell it?" No "Sell it?" No, by no means; but I thought of Miss De Silver, and of her father, and determined to employ it as a collateral: I could redeem it at any time. Some one had explained to me the meaning of "three golden bulls together," and I forthwich sallied out that evening to search for the dangling arms of the old Lombard usu-

They were conspicuously large and bright over the door to which they attracted me, but the masty old gentleman in a square relvet one, who took my gold mine in his fat and duty fingers, did not realize my ideal of a Lombard. From the appearance of the crowded shelves around him, however, he was clearly prepared to realize on any thing else. Such a moveum of incon-gruous commodities I had never seen before. Surely be was a social wrorker, and these were the spails and waits or manmerable human craft that had gone ashore upon the shoals of New York life. Describe them? No, for language has limits to its powers, and so has even imagin-

I was not the first customer attended to, however, for a fair young girl before me was waiting anxiously while "my uncle" balanced in his hand what seemed to be a brooch of some beauty and value. I thought that it contained a tress of dark hair; that or something else of the keep-

Ten dollar? Not so mosh as dat. Five dol-

"Only five dollars? Why, it is worth furty, and I must flave at least ten!"
"'Musht' is a pig vord, my tear. I gives you but five.

The girl's face was very pale, and her thin lips closed with an expression almost of agony, as she sighed her final assent to the amount of the proposed loan. Her ticket was quickly made out, and I could but note, as she turned to go out with that and the money grasped tightly in her little hand, that for all her paleness and her sorrow she was indeed fair, very fair.

"How much you want on dis watch?"
The harsh and grating voice of "my uncle" did much to dispose of a certain tingling sensa-tion, as of many blushes, with which I had passed under the golden balls. I therefore boldly re-

"About a hundred, I reckon." "A hundard dollar? Oh, vell, that ish nonsense. Ve only lends so mosh as twenty-five.
Dat ish de law, my poy."
"Bother the law!"

"So shay I; it bodders me ver' mosh indeed, but I dosh not ever break de law." "How shall I work it, then? There must be some way. "Dare ish many vays, but dish concern minds do law. I dell you—I lets you have twenty-five on de witch and twenty-five on de chain?"

"That won't make it up."
"Den I takes de chain for de twenty-five, an'

you takes de vatch to de diamond brokers,"

A few moments' conversation having further enlightened me as to the meaning of ⁶ my un-cle" the Lombard, I took my ticket and my de-parture, leaving the chain with him, and in that I was to a certain extent, a wise Cherson.

was, to a certain extent, a wise Cherson.

I must have been five minutes about this business, but as I passed under the next gas-light I was startled to notice, standing with her face unconsciously turned toward its almost ghastly ra-diance, the fair roung lady of the brooch, and I could distinctly hear her mutter to herself, "It wast be ten! What shall I do?" Youth, if you will let it alone in its good impulses, is ever inclined to benevolence, and with a sudden and reckless forgetfulness of Miss De Silver, and of her father the banker, I turned toward the pale unknown and said, with hardly my customary case of manner, "Here is five dollars, Miss. I saw you in the shop." There was a sudden start, and a painful flush in the pale cheek, but my voice and manner were too respectful to admit a suspicion of intentional offense, and I added, quickly,

"You can pay me whenever you choose-in-turest, too, if you want to."

"But you are a stranger."
"So I hope is old Moses What's his name

"Ah, I saw you there! But then, you too "No; I'm not poor. I'm only a foot, that's all. Please take the money. I know you want it. If you don't take it you will be a bigger fool

Almost a smile struggled with the keen pain Almost a smile struggled with the keen pain in her face, but the story of her trouble seemed fairly forced from her lips—and they were presty if they were thin. It was nothing sensational—a sick mother, slow pay for work done, rent due, hard landlord—just an everyday and commonplace sort of an affair. It did not sound very commonplace, though, as she told it, and—well, I crushed the five-dollar bill into her little hand, and ran as the Compressmen did at Manage and ran as the Compressment did at Manage and ran as the Compressment did at Manage and range hand, and ran as the Congressmen did at Manassas, forgetting that by so doing I destroyed all prospect of ever being repaid.

I was anxious to find a broker's office, howevor, and my watch feit heavier without its chain than it ever did with, though I must say that my heart felt not only light but warm. A little in-vestigation made me decide to wait until the fol-vestigation made me decide to writ until the fol-lowing morning, and my next attempt at the unployment of collaterals was made by broad trylight, with my brain cool, and clear of every-ing but Miss De Silver. The office over which I found the kind of sign described by "my uncle" was eminently respect-able, and fronted on the busiest part of Broadway. It was even elegantly furnished, and if that was any evidence of its character, nothing could have helped it better than the aristocratic nir of the elegant youth who so politely greeted me as I entered. No need, certainly, of any qualmish feeling at having to do with such a gen-tleman as Mr. De Roos, the "diamond broker."

"Hather old-fashioned watch, but the eases are heavy. Seventy-five dollars? Let me see!" The cases were balanced for a moment daintily in his jeweled fingers, and the works scanned smerchat disdainfully.

"Seventy-five? Yes, I guess it will bear that.
Thirty days only? Longer if you want it. Well, all right. Nice day, isn't it?"

Entries were made in a book or two, the watch carefully deposited in a drawer, my "ticket" was made out and carefully inclosed in an enrelope; my money was counted out to me with an exceedingly pleasant smile and bow, and my object was attained without the slightest ripple of any thing disagreeable, unless it was the halfbuighing instruction that my impecunicalty was the consequence of recent bacchanalian excesses. wever, I took in good part, for I now felt sure of appearing in proper style at the De Silver mansion. My thoughts ran wholly on apparel, and the probable effect to be produced thereby. II.

I wust say that when my new array did come home I looked remarkably well in it, and, of course. I put it at once in service. But notwithstanding my nearer approach to Solomon or the lilies, I felt more nervousness on the De Silver lities, I felt more nervousness on the De Silver door-step than even under the dangling balls of the "Lombard Arms."

As I stood, a moment later, in the frescoed vestibule fumbling for a card, I could not help overhearing a suppressed conversation which seemed to be going forward at the lower end of Indeed, Miss De Silver, I would not have asked, only we do need it so very much."

"I'shaw, Miss Payne! That's always the story. I won't be angry, though, really; and if you will come in to-morrow I will try and have it ready for you. Of course you will throw off "Oh, Miss De Silver!"

"Oh, Miss De Saver!"

"Well, well—somebody's come, and mamma is waiting for me."

I heard a door close, and then—for somehow I was quite slow and clumsy about finding that card—who should come out through the hall toward me but my fair acquaintance of the five-dollar loan? If I did not blush she did; and right before the astounded flunky she reached out her hand for the bit of pasteboard which I had just discovered, saying, in a quick, curt tone

"Your card, Sir, please!"
She was gone, after she got it, like a figure in dream, and I was ushered into the drawingroom, staggering under a vague feeling that there were three balls on my head, or that somebody had asked me what time it was

There was certainly nothing tike flattery-hardly a fair appearance of appreciation—in the man-ner of my reception when the banker's heiress at last sailed into the room. I could not help won-dering if I should ever dare to call that stately creature "Matilda." Still, I made the best of my conversational powers, and was really making some headway when, to my unotterable dis-may, the sliding-glass which concealed an inner parlor was drawn gently back in its noiseless grooves, and the faultlessly dressed apparition of the elegant "diamond broker" came gliding over the carpet, "to present his adieux to Miss De Silver." Certainly the color did come to my De Silver. he siter." Certainly the color did come to my face, but the excellent young man relieved me in the kindest manner. Nothing could be more cordial or friendly than his recognition, "Ah, you know each other, then?" It was the voice of Miss De Silver, and there was a tremor in it which called my attention to the fact that if I had blushed she had not-on the contrary, quite the reverse.

"Oh, certainly; every body knows Mr. Cherson. Glad to meet him. Opera to-night, Miss son. Glad De Silver?"

"Ah, yes. I was about-" How I thanked the tact of De Roce in thus giving me an opportunity to cut my call short and find my way into the street! I went in his company, of course; and certainly I could not misunderstand the hearty cordiality with which we were both invited to call again.

Once in the street, however, De Roos laughed a silvery, sarcastic laugh.

"I see, my dear fellow, you understand busi-ness. Rather think you have put your foot in it, hey?"
"I should rather say I had," said I, though not exactly comprehending how. "Confound not exactly comprehending how, my stupid blushes!"

"I should say so; but then there's no harm done. Her paleness was as unlucky as your col-or. You're a man of honor though, and you'll keep mum?"

"Mum as the grave. Do you do much of that kind of business? I shouldn't have thought My venture in this remark was a good one, for it implied infinitely more knowledge of the world than I possessed.

ve a perfect run of up-town trade," replied De Roos; "and they're no worse than lots of other women whose husbands and fathers draw their purse-strings a trifle close. They're fixing for a party just now, and if the diamonds won't go far enough I guess the carriage will have to be mended."

I don't take. Can't you do the carriages?" said I.

"Oh no; that's in the motioneer line. reckon they've never spouted any furniture, and maybe not the carriage. The old lady owns her jewels and furniture, etc., in her own right; only is wouldn't do to let the old man know what she does, you know. Sometimes the suctioneers are house, too, and that's bad where it won't do to move it." awkward about leaving securities on store in the

"I see. How do they take their interest?"
"Oh, only the legal, you know; but then there's commissions and a whole dictionary of charges. Good ten to fifteen per month."

"Profitnile. I should say. I never knew about that. Reckon I'm dished there now, any way."

"Not by no manner of means! Safe for a perpetual invite as I am myself. Couldn't afford make an enemy of you—don't you see?"
"Do you go there often?"

"Not very. This party, any how, for the old man's away, and it's bound to be a tip-top affair.

"You'll be there, of course?"

"If I get my cards in time."

"Oh, no fear of that. Let's go to Delmonico's."

I went, and containly I did learn a good deal that evening. Such men as De Roos are capital instructors, and he seemed fairly to have "taken"

III. My eard for the grand De Silver party came quite as promptly as the diamond broker had predicted; but before the arrival of that ampi-cious occasion I received a neat little note inclosing a five-dollar bill, and thanking me, in terms of most lady-like and sincere gratitude, for the opportune benevolence which had prompted my Quixotic loan. The note was signed, plain-iy, "Clara Payne." The circumstance gave me no pain whatever, but brought vividly to my memory the conversation which I had involuntarily overheard.

The party was every way worthy of the efforts and sacrifices of which I was the brilliant and successful fruition.

I met De Roos there, and at a certain pause in the rush and whirl of the festivities something prompted me to whisper him: "Not much falling off in the diamonds of the family. On my word, they look as well as the real."

And he replied: "We have to be up to that.

my dear fellow—trick of the trade, you know, wouldn't do to be detected."

And then he whirled away; but on a closer examination, as the stately Matilda whirled away with me in the subsequent "German," the idea became strangely fixed in my mind that the imitation was altogether too good, and that the dis-monds worn that night by the heiress of the De Silvers were read. It puzzled me, but it only led me to the utterance of a remark in praise of their brilliancy, which was rewarded by a sweet smile and an increasing pallor on the cheeks of my lovely companion.

I called most assiduously after that, with a vague idea that any deficiencies in my wardrobe were quite likely to be kindly overlooked, and found, to my unspeakable delight, that I was beginning to be received on a most confidential beginning to be received on a most connection footing; in short, quite in the character of a friend of the family. I even met the hanker himself once or twice, but could not plume my-self on any very marked attention from him. Meantime Do Roos assured me that the carriage had not required "mending," and that the dia-monds of the fair Matilda and her duches-like mether steed in me immediate degree of footier. mother stood in no immediate danger of forfeit.

As for myself, my employers rather liked the idea of my circulating among the "upper ten," and I awaited the next installment of my insignificant stipend with serene indifference to any thing but the fact that it would enable me to redeem my watch, if not my chain. Somehow I wanted to be square with De Roos at the earliest possible day,

It was by accident a trifle over a month, say a day or two, when I presented myself at my friend's office, money in pocket, with intent to rregain possession of my ponderous and somewhat cherished heir-loom. Who so polite as De Roos! "Chair, my boy. Have a cigar? Been up to the house lately? You seem to be making good headway there, ba? Serious intentions, eh? All right—lots of tin one of these days."

Before long I explained the object of my visit, and even the imperturbable De Roos changed countenance somewhat as he replied, rapidly,

"That watch? Why, I'd no idea you wanted ever to redeem. Month's up, you know. Sent him to the melting-pot yesterday. Sorry, 'pon honor. Must look out for business, you know."

"Month! Melting-pot!" I almost shoused,

"I don't know any thing about a mouth. Here's my ticket—every pawabroker in the city gives a

And I whipped out my envelope, and tore from the evidence of my property and the loss thereon. In fact I myself read it for the first time, while De Roos responded,

"Keep cool, my boy. I'm not a paunbroker. I thought you understood these things. Read it through."

I did: and, surely enough, it was by no means a pawn-ticket, nor was there on it any mention of any loan on interest. It was simply an agree-ment to sell to me, on the day which had just expired, a watch whose number and description I knew only too well, at a price specified, and which was nearer ninety dollars than seventy-five.

For a moment I was fairly furious, and even uttered vague threats of vengeance; but De Roos never lost his equanimity.

"Keep cool, my boy. I'm sorry, and all that sort of thing. Don't want to make a cent out of you. "Tisn't likely it's melted yet; and if you really want it, I'll send down and get it back for you. Come in to-morrow at three. Now, don't get mad. Be decent, and have another Havana. Thought you knew what you was about, you have.

So I consented to smoke and be pacified, and finally went away in the full assurance that really never met a better fellow than De Roos, the fashionable "diamond broker."

Faithfully to the hour, I was on hand the next day as the clock struck three. Having now no time-piece of my own, I had learned to appre-ciate clocks, both public and private. A lurking feeling of uneasiness may account for the fact that I had not called on the De Silvers during the previous evening.

I was promptly on hand, as I said, at the door of the elegant office of my elegant friend, the diamond broker; but, somewhat to my astonish-ment, that door would by no means yield to my repeated attempts to open it. In short, it was locked.

"Gone out for a moment," I muttered. "Well, . I'll wait."

I was quietly proceeding to do so, when I suddenly found a welf roughly collared by somehody in a state of excitement, while a trembling voice

"You secondrel! You are one of his set. I've seen you with him! Where is he, and where is Matilda?"

After a moment of utter bewilderment I managed to recognize in my unlooked for assailant the parental De Nilver himself—the banker—and stammered out a half-choked declaration of my atter ignorance.

"You lie, Sir! He's gone! Matilda's gone with him! He's got all the money! You come with me to the house! Come right along now!"

Any lily of any valley could have offered more resistance than I did, for I felt that I was acquired.

ing valuable information, and I went along with the banker. He talked incessantly, and I speedally became aware that the money used by De Hoos in his extensive transactions as a "dia-mond broker" had been furnished from the very respectable coffers of Matikla's father. Business had been good of late, and both loans and de-posits had been quite large enough to suggest to the elegant young financier a master-stroke in posits had been quite large enough to suggest to the elegant young financier a master-stroke in his own peculiar line. Beyond doubt no amount of "interest" would now suffice to redeem that precious jewel of a daughter, and De Roos had taken care to secure her portion in advance. After all, he had only, in reality, married the daughter of his partner in business—in a some-what quiet way.

what quiet way,
I remembered about the diamonds at the party.

when we arrived at the house we found it in a certain degree of well-regulated confusion, and Madame, the mother of the vanished Matilda, in a very impressive state of weeping and distraction; but what interested me most was a pale face that I mut in the hall. It was that of Clara. face that I met in the hall. It was that of Clars Payne; and I heard her mutter, in a voice whose half-despairing tone I well remembered: "Gone? And I had so counted on her prom-

It fashed upon me that another month's rent was over-due. The money that should have re-deemed my grandfather's watch was burning in my pocket; and as I thrust it into her hand I said to her:

"You have proved yourself good pay, Miss Payne; you won't run away with any body.
Just take that and run away out of this."
This time she actually did smile in my face, but she burried away without a word.

but she hurried away without a word.

It took some time to convince the old banker that I was not an accomplice of De Roos; and, though be had so pay too much money on the "failure" of his sudden son-in-law ever to pardon him, he seemed to pardon me very readily when he found that I had not done any thing. In fact, the shape his pardon took has been worth seen her since several times. In fact, I see her every time I so home. every time I go home.

SEEING BY LIGHTNING.

In the Polytechnic of London some curious and interesting experiments are being made with a monster "induction coll," which mimics lighta monster "induction coil," which mimics light-ning in a remarkable manner. In the darkened theatre of the Institution the long flash lights up the room and the audience with the peculiar lurid glare so well known as an effect of brilliant lightning at night, and displays the features and action of every one present. But it is curious to note that, the flash being of instantaneous dura-tion coil; it allows we make the core. note that, the mash being of instantaneous dura-tion only, it allows no motion to be seen. We should think, if guided by our conacionsmess alone, that the flash lasted an appreciable time; but this would be an error, due to the persistence of the impression on the eye after the flash itself. of the impression on the eye after the flash itself had ceased. If the room be made perfectly dark, and if the spectators all raise their arms and wave their hands to and fro as quickly as they can the flash will display the position of the arms, but not the movements of the hands. While the flash fasts the hand has no time to more, and is consequently seen, as if motionless, in the position in which the flash finds it. It is in consequently to arbit the name offset in in contemplation to exhibit the same effect in a more complete way by affixing a picture to a re-volving disk. When the disk revolves so rapidly that no outlines of the picture can be disting: by means of any ordinary light, they will be per-fectly seen in a darkened room by the light of the flash. It lasts so short a time that the re-volving disk does not change its position in the brief period.

OUR ESTABLISHED CHURCH.

Putnam's Magazine for July contains an elab-orate article showing the influence of the Roman Catholic Church in this city and State. The facts presented in this article are so important that we reprint a well-digested resums of it re-cently published in the New York Evening Post:

Patages's Maparies for July contains an article en-titled "Our Established Church," which will be, we respect, very much read. Its aim is to show that the Roman Cathulles have to a considerable extent suc-ceeded in making theirs the established church of this city and State.

The writer estimates that the real estate owned in fee by "one or either of five socientation in this State."

The writer estimates that he real senate owned in fee by "one or other of five societastics in this State," Moman Catholic Blabops, is worth nearly fifty millions of dollars. He remarks that the frish (Probestiant) Church now to be discentablished owns but sighty-five millions of property: and he proceeds to give some examples of the grants and gifts of public money and real cetals made to the Roman Catholics in this State.

Not far from the year 1947 the diffigunt explorer of our annual statutes will find, almost for the first time, a few donations for charitable purposes quietly stowed away in the depths of the "Act making appropriations for the support of the government" for the current year. Here and there also begin to appear special statutes for like purposes—as, for example, the Act of 1948 (chapter 197), appropriating 2000s of money raised by general tax to the Hospital of the Sisters of Charity in Baffalo. From this point, however, the honorable rivalry of parties was producing a like result to that which attends the not dissimilar emulation of a public anction. The bids rose one above another with a boldness which possibly was not diminished by the fact that the hidders were offering what did not belong to them. From year to year, more and larger benefactions of this class were found necessary to "the support of the government," sult in 1966 they had multiplied enfliciently to be collected into a distinct "Charity Bill," which has been annually exacted ever since, as solicitously as if, like the English Mutiny Act, all our liberties depended upon it.

At the same time, and by a movement almost pre-STATE MODET TO BOMAN CATHOLIC CHARPYCES.

cisely parallel, the yearly statinte-book has been encombered annually to a greater degree with the encombers which authorize the one for the city of New York, the other for the percledly contemnious county, the levy of such same as the State desums adequate for municipal government, and which prescribe the general objects for which they may be expended. Exactly in like manner, there begin to be discovered in these "Tax Lavy" bills considerably less than twenty years ago, the same germs which have fructified so bountifully in the general "Charity Bill" for the State at large. By virtue of the enactment last mentioned the State paid out during the year 1983, for benefactions under religious control, $139,603 40. Of this a Jewish society received $4044 121, four organizations of the Protestiant seems had $1207 02; while the trifling balance of $194,174 14 went to the religious purposes of the Roman Catholics.

Looking, by way of variety, at the following year for data regarding the strictly municipal gifts for like purposes, we find from the last report of the Comprosite of the city, that during 1867 there was paid to Catholic ecisicatical institutions the sum of near $200,000, aside from what may lie hidden in a wast total of over than a million, of which the details can be found only in the report of the Department of Public Charities and Correction. While there are other benefactions in the list, hardly any are for objects having even remotely a religious character, and not one for a sectarian object. And if the proportion thus indicate he princely sum of haif a million, it must be cocceded that the Church is in a fair way of obtaining its own, with perhaps a trifle of what others might lay some claim to.

But there figures do not fully indicate the favor with which the Catholic Church has been treated by her children in the official station, co-operated with a they her children in the official station, co-operated with as they have been by the well-disposed outside the fold.

The last Comptreller's report coulsins, with regard to certain of the real estate which yet remains on the island of Manhattan, some interesting avovals, by which the city government is willing to let its light so shine before men that they may see its works, and glorify its father, which he no matter where. In the schedule of city property, subject to the payment of ground rent (pp. 165-160), we find that the premises on "Fifty-first Streets and Lexington Avenue" are leased to the (Catholic) Nursery and Child's Hospital: that he lease is dated April 1, 1807, je perpetual, and for the amend rent of One Bollar, which was three years in arrears. That the property on "Eighty-fart and Righty-second streets and Madison Avenue" is leased to the "Sisters of Mercy;" that the lease (the dair of which is not given) is propental, and the annual rent one dollar, which, however, had been paid and within two years of the report. That the land on Pifty-first and Pifty-second streets, Fourth and Fifth avenues," was leased April 1, 1807, to "The Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum," perpetually, for the annual rent of one dollar. This sum, however, it is gratifying to observe, has been fully paid to the end of 1881.

Upon some part of this property or upon another tract, last by a list tills and upon similar terms, is in course of erection the new St. Patrick's Cathodral, which is intended to be worthy of its proud rank or not reportion chards of these competent to appealse land in New York, it applied every payment upon the principal, asking nothing for interest, in about one million years.

In so autracellinary a ratio has this devoct allottent of the public revenues in terms of these than 5th devoct allottent of the public revenues in the devoct allottent of the public revenues in t years.

In a extraordinary a ratio has this devout allot-ment of the public revenues increased that what in 1849 was but about $13,600, and that given gradging-ly, is grown to not far from $500,000 in 1868, bestowed with the frank generosity of those who give of others'

PUBLIC MONET GOVER TO BOWANTET

with the frank generosity of those who give of others' goods.

runnic moser ceves we accessed the Church, with such helpers as these, to become independent of State education, has lithern been successful, may be Judged from the data already given, as well as from the stately edifices which in the parishes of every city rival or surpass the grandeur of the State's school-bouses. Not does the Church longer stand, as once it sid, in the attitude (well as the stitude becomes Christ's poee) of a mendicant at the door of the State House, asking for gratuities toward the support of its separate schools.

It has already established by action in the Supreme Court the clear legal right of its orphan asymma, numerous as they are, and liberal as they are in the degree of bereavement required for admission to their scholastic privileges, to an equal participation in all motocys raised by taxation for school purposes in the State, in proportion to their number of papils.

Thus having begun with the demand that public schools be made rigorously seeniar; having then obtained that sectains schools be supported by the State, the only remaining step toward complete ecclestaticism in education is now webseneuty urged, that all secular schools asks? be abolished as sear seminaries of atheirs. Then, and then only, in the view of the Cathodte World for May, 1888, will public education be put upon its true go wind—the ground upon which so much has been done for universal education in laily and Spain, and from which that securities by the constitute of with violence in Austria and France.

Nor is the step a long or a difficult one which seem conget for as an utilizate settlement. Even while we write, the bill which shall do the basiness, having been maturely considered by the Consultee of the Secution, which constains its substance, is a simple provision that "whosever there shall be or has been established and maintained in any city of this State any free school or chooles in which to less than two hundred children have been or are ta session; but the Church can bide her time. In some not distant, year parties may not be so adjusted in the Lagislature as now. When the day comes it may well be believed that the discrimination which precided in the lost Senate that the preferring committee about despression in majority of Cutholies, small as was their minority in the Senate which has pervised in the present Senate that a majority should be made up of Cutholies and certain allies of the Protestion scarse who are ready to maintain the great system of Catholie schools by public largesses, on condition that their own little scheme of sectarian education may albibs at the crambs that fall from their master's table; that such discrimination will see that the interests of religion are cared for. And whatever may be the difficulty and expense of passing the bill, it will be harder yet to repeal it.

THE OFFICES AND BOMAN CATHOLICS.

THE OFFICES AND BOSEAN CATROLICE.

It might perhaps be worth while, if any one should prefer were superficial or extremal signs of supremacy, to notice a few such as may be found in the city of New York itself. Not many a state church in the present age imposes the test of membership as a condition of helding civil office. The Church in Austria does not; in England it has not for forty years; in France not for cichty. It does not yet in New York the How near it comes to it may be partly guessed by any one who will look over a list of New York elective offices with the discriminating sense of him "who knew the stranger was an Arrevicen from his name, O'Flaberty." If the inference from nationality should be deemed illustive, because not all Irishman are Catholics, let it be remembered that the Catholics who are not Irish will far more than make such an error good.

Such researches would show a Jadiciary adorned with the names of Shandley, Canolly, Hogar, and Dennis Quine, and would lead as into very groen fields of nomenclatter; but some one cles has prepared, from better data then were names, the following summary of Irish office-builders as they were at the cud of 1808: Sheriff,
Register,
Comparisoller,
Chy Chamberlain, Corporation Counsel,
Positic Commissioner,
President of the Cruton Board,
Acting Mayor and President of the Board of Aldermen.
Resident of the Read of Councilines.

en, President of the Board of Councilmen, men,

President of the Board of Councilmen,
Clerk of the Common Council,
Clerk of the Board of Councilmen,
President of the Board of Supervisors,
Pive justices of the Courts of Record,
All the civil justices,
All the two of the police justices,
All the police court clerks,
Three out of four convers,
Two members of Councies,
Three out of few convers,
Two members of Councies,
Righteen out of twenty-one members of Assembly, Pourteen-ninetecesths of the Common Council, and Right-teaths of the Supervisors.
In no European country, we say it with some confidence, has the clergy of a Catholic establishment is hands more nearly closed upon the whole system of public education than here in New York. Nowhere in Europe is the hierarchy of an establishment appointed by the Papal See in such absolute independence of the civil government as here.

HOME AND FOREIGN GOSSIP.

HOME AND FOREIGN GOSSIP.

Hawvoon is a city of delightful residences; and a very pleasant trip thither is made at this season by boat, leaving this city at 4 r.w., arriving at Hartford next morang. Or, more faily to enjoy the sail on the charming Connecticut by day, if by chance you are coming from the East, take the morning or more train from Springfield, and you will have a few hours in which to ride or walk about Hartford before the afternoon boat leaves there. We chose a drive, when passing over that route the other day, stipulating for an easy carriage and a communentive driver. Up through Asylum Street first. Elegant residences, with most tasteful grounds, on every side; trees and shrubs of every variety, whose fresh, delicate, June follage contrasts besutifully with the luxuriant richness of the hedges. The weathy people of Hartford on not live in restricted quarters, but extend their borders, apparently at librium, and show much good taste in their surroundings.

The Institution for the Deaf and Domb and the Insane Retreat are handsoms buildings, retired and shady, giving a very passant impression to the stranger. The grounds of the latter are extensive, and the drive through them is open to the public a part of the day. This Asylum has recently been enlarged for the better accommodation of private patients.

Perhaps the most attractive private patients.

for the better accommodation at private patients.

Perhaps the most nitractive private residence is that belonging to the widow of Mr. Samuel Colt, in-Perhaps the most attractive private residence is that belonging to the widow of Mr. Samuel Coit, inventor of the famou Coit's reveiver. He died several years ago, having acquired an inspense property. Although an imposing monument is erected to his memory in one of the dity cemeeries, he is buried upon his own grounds. Mrs. Coit is said to have a "wife and a quarter of green-houses!" and they certainly extend farther than the eye can reach. Her grounds are laid out beautifully, adorsed with every variety of shrubbery and many fine pieces of statuary. The factories stand some distance from the house, a luxuriant meadow intervening, which is drained by an extensive dyke, built by Mr. Coit. On the banks of this dyke be planted willow-trees, and near by is a manufactory where is made "every thing that can be made from the willow-twig." In this vicinity is the "Church of the Good Shepherd," built and sustained entirely by Mrs. Coit, and is free to all. We learned that the Artrian well upon Mrs. Coit's grounds, which attracted so much interest a while ago, is not yet entirely completed.

The epot where the venerable Charter Oak stood was pointed out; but, alsa! it was covered with stone flagging, and made part of the common highway.

An exchange ways that the "coming woman" of the Determine the states of the common highway.

An exchange says that the "coming woman" of the Boston city government is Miss Emily Judson Harris, daughter of the President of the Common Countries, the is to read the Declaration of Independence at the celebration on the Fourth of July. The young lady is a graduate of the Everett School.

In Italy and Sicily the fixest and sweetest grapes grow on the recky rubbish of volcanoes, and on the loose soil along rocky hill-sides. This fact would seem to indicate that rich soil is not necessary to produce the sweetest grapes. From Wisconsin comes a dreadful report concerning From Wisconsin comes a dreadful report concerning two children—a boy of seven and a girl of four years: -living in Miliford, who were bitten by a mad dop. The parants were informed by attending physicians that the only possible way for the children to escape the agonies of rables would be to take their lives. In-reddible as it may seem, they administered an opiate to the boy and bled him to death, and the girl was smothered in a frather-bed.

The cause of missions has experienced a great to In the recent death of Rev. Jones King, D.D., who has been for many years a zealous missionary of the Gos-pel in the capital of Greece. He was a graduate of Williams College, and afterward Professor of Oriental Williams College, and afterward Professor of Oriental Literature at Amberst College. About three years ago he returned from the scope of his labors in Athena account of his bealth. The change was beneficial, and he again went to Greece, but soon sickened. He was a man of remarkable ability and of varied and extensive information. He was closely identified with the question of international comity between the United States and Greece, and did much to advance both religious and civil aborty in the latter country.

A clergyman in Ransas complains that he has manried but one couple in a year. They paid him no-thing, seald to disner, borrowed his umbrella when they left, and never returned it?

Men do not always mean what they say any more seen do not always mean wast they say any more than women. A very petity girl, who was a little proud of her good looks, was reproached by her lover for earing more for her beauty than for his love. So she broke off her four front teeth to prove her love, and then cast herself at his feet. But having loss her beauty she lost her lover also.

Mr. Miall, member of the British Parliament, and leader of the most advanced Liberals, advocates, of course, the right of women to vote. But he also looks forward to the time "when neither in the factory nor in other great shops of industry will women's work be needed; when husbands will be sufficiently remn-norated for their toll—when capital and labor will have become so far reconciled one to another as that men may do the work of men, and women may be spared that work in order that they may the more tally preside over the week of the household." He says: "He were condemned to work; you (women) have been appointed rather to help us who work by your sympathy, your providence, your care, and your love."

sympathy, your providence, your care, and your love."
Germany has appeard of one thousand mineral springs and boths. Vichy has long been famons for its thermal springs; of these there are eight principal ones, ranging in temperature from 66 to 111 degrees Pahreubelt. The waters are acidatons and alkalize, their principal ingredients being carbonate of socia and carbonic acid gas. They are considered particularly effications in chronic disorders of the liver and digestive organs, obstructions of the spleen, diseases of the kidneys, and gout. The waters are bettled and exported for the cure of these complaints; but to effect a radical cure the bath must be taken daily while drinking the waters. drinking the waters.

A good story is told of a genuine Tanker from "down East," who, possing through Washington last winter, determined to see General Grant. He called at the War Odice, and told the door keeper his wishes. "The General is engaged," said the door-keeper. "Well, I want to see him."

"Upon business?"
"No, Sir, I want to see him. I don't want an offor; I don't want to speak to him even; I don't want to occupy a moment of his valuable time. I want to see him merely."

"He is busy."
"When will he be out?"
"In about four hours."

"Well, I am not going home without seeing General Grant. No, 80°; and unless I am thrust out, with your leave I will sit here until he appears." Then, dropping into a chair, he resigned himself to the probable four hours' sitting.

Presently the door-keeper was missing, but he soon whenced with, "It you will go with me I will show you General Grant."

He followed him into another more, and was juice He followed him into another room, and was intro-duced to General Grant. The General extended his hand, and expressed himself happy to see him. He shook the General's hand, took a good hearty look at him, and turned to depart, saying, "My ambition is satisfied. I have seen General Grant?" "Take a chair, Sir, take a chair," said the General,

"Take a chair, Sir, take a coast, and the General, appendingly. "I are happy to see you."

"Thank you, Sir: I will not occupy a moment of your valuable time. I came to see General Grant; I have seen him. His time is valuable; so is mise. Good-by, Sir." And bowing, he left the room, followed by a merry laugh from the astonished President-

The following suggestions to bathers have recently been issued by the Royal Humane Society of London, and are worthy of consideration :

and are worthy of consideration:

"Avoid bathless within two hours after a meal.

"Avoid bathless when the holy is crossing after perspiration; but hathe when the body is crossing after perspiration; but hathe when the body is warm, provided to time is lost in getting into the water; heave the water immediately there is the alightest feeling of chilliness.

"Avoid bathles altogether in the open air if, after having been a short time in the water, there is a sense of chilliness with numbress of the hands and feet.

"The vigorous and strong may betbe early in the morning on an empty stomach,

"The young and those that are weak had better hathe three hours after a meal; the best time for such is from two to three hears after breakfast.

"Those who are subject to attacks of giddiness and faintness, and these who suffer from discusses of the heart, should not bathe without dret consulting their medical advisor."

A new and curious her has been discovered on the

A new and curious bog has been discovered on the leaves of the cotton plant in some sections of the South, which, it is feared, may prove a destructive agent. It is nearly an inch in length, black, with red stripes, and looks something like a grasshopper, though wingless.

When Dr. Musgrave made his speech on remaion, When Dr. Muserave made his speech on remain, in the Ohi School Assembly last May, he excussed himself for speaking so long. He was not, he said, like his Scotch brother who used notes. An old lady was told that the minister did so. She disbelieved it, Said one: "Go into the gallery and see," She did so and saw the written sermon. After the lackless preacher had concruded his reading on the last page he said, "But I wik not enlarge." The old woman cried out from her selly positions: "Ye canne, ye camen, for yer paper's give cout?"

A portraited President Grant, now nearly completed, is in a temporary studie at the White House upon the cased of Mr. A. B. Eliteli, an artist of New York. The akeness is very perfect. The President is dressed in plain black, and is represented as sitting at a table, upon which are writing materials.

The name Andahon is of French telgin; it is ex-The name Andahon is of French ceigms it is extremely rare, and white confined in America to the feeting of the naturalist, John James Andahon, has in France been traced only among his ancestry. His grandfather, John Andahon, was born at the small rillage of Sahle d'Olonne, in La Vendoe, forty-fice miles southwest from Nantes. The naturalist himself was born in New Orleans, May 4, 1746; but much this ceight life was ment in Nantes, where he made of his early life was spent in Nantes, where he made frequent exercions into the country, always return-ing laden with specimens of natural history. It was at Naptes that Andahon began to draw sketches of French birds. The first volume of Audubon's "Or-nithological Biography" was published at Edinburgh In 1934, and the subscription price was one hundred and eighty guineas for the complete work. Probably no naturalist has ever furnished so complete and per-Sect a work of ornithology. He died at his home on the banks of the Hudson in the year 1848, aged stuty-eight; and the "Life of Andubon," which has just been published, is a noble record of strength of purpose and perseverance, actuated by the highest motives.

A good old Massachusetts doctor met a sexten in the street one day. After the usual salutations, the doc-screet one day. After the sectal santanions, the doc-tor began to origh.

"Why, Doctor," said the sexton, "you have get a cold. How long have you had that?"

"Look here, Mr. Sexton," said the doctor, with a show of indignation, "what is your charge for inter-

"One doller," was the reply.

"Well," continued he, "just come lete my offer, and I will pay it. I don't want to have you round, and so anxious about my beath."

The sexton was soon even with him, however,

Throning round to the doctor, he replied,

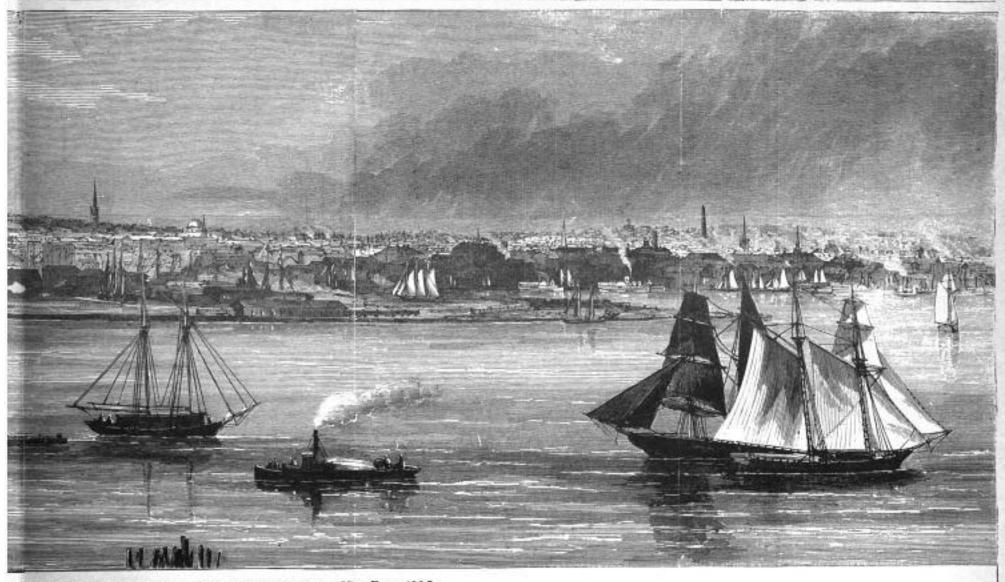

"Ah, doctor, I can not afford to bury you yet.
Business has never been so good as it has been since you began to peaction."

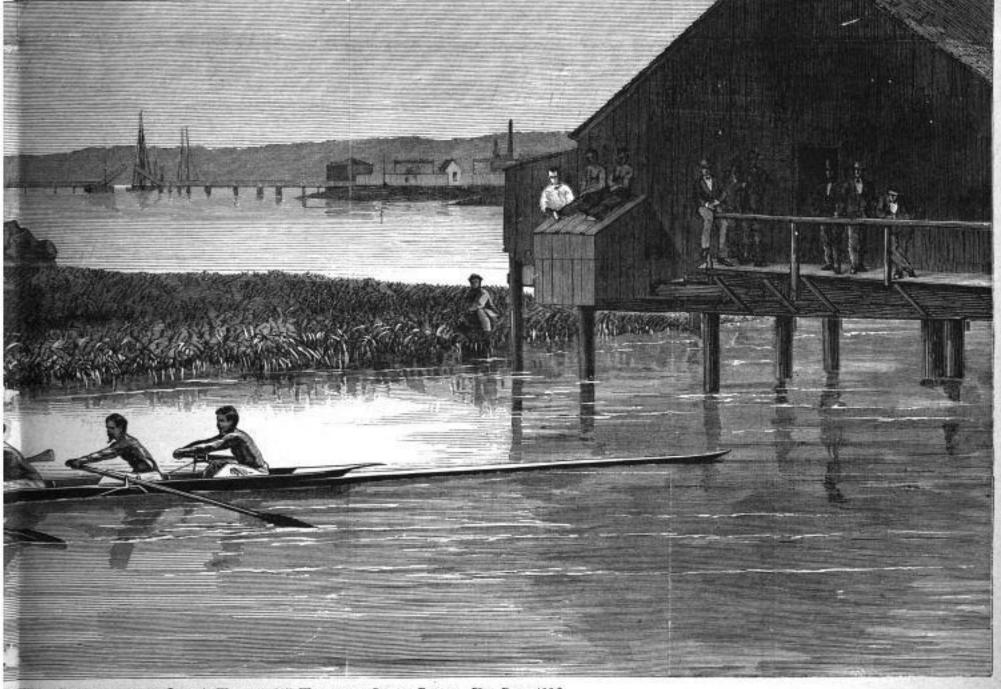

VIEW OF THE CITY OF BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS, I

INTERNATIONAL REGATTA-THE HARVARD CREW TRAINING ON THE CHARLI

M THE SOUTH.—PHOTOGRAPHED BY JOHN A. WHIPPLE.—[SEE PAGE 429.]

RIVER.—PHOTOGRAPHED BY JOHN A. WHIPPLE, 297 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON.—[SEE PAGE 422.]

PEACE.

"The mystic coeds of memory, stretching from every bartle-field and pearist grave to every living heart and hearth-stone all over this bound land, will yet swell the cherus of site Union, when busched, as they surely will be, by the better angels of our nature."—Askalian

Senese in her youthful beauty To-day Columbia stands, She has beckuned Peace to attend her, The sword has dropped from her hands. She sees her flag unsallied Wave proudly o'er Freedom's dome; All her weary toil is ended, She is calling her children home.

For the mystic cord of the Union Men strove to rend in twain, Long silent to all entreaty, Responds to the touch again! Responds, as if God's own Spirit Swept over the outstreached cord, And thrills the heart of the nation As 'twere the voice of the Lord.

Hands that were clasped in battle In friendship now are pressed; Lips that once breathed out slaughter Their error have confessed: Eves that flashed lute and vengetnee Their angry lustre cease, Feet shod swift for destruction Now tread the paths of peace. The ears of the deaf are opened, Unsealed the voice of the dumb, As millions arise together, And answer, "WE COME! WE COME!"

Oh! day of joy and gladness, When thus the States agree, From abore to abore uprising, To keep the Jubilee! Our fields with grain are ripening, Our harns with plenty stored; The wealth of a hundred nation From the dust of our hills is poured! Rivers glint in the sunlight, Insects chirp and hum, Trees bend 'neath their leafy verdure, And the Summer of Peace is come!

The laborer seeks his cahin, From his daily toil to rest; And the rich man has no power The poor man to molest. On the soil to Freedom given No slaves in bondage lag; And the Old World's despots tremble At sight of our Starry Flag!

The Northern Lights are blending With the rays of the Southern Cross And the gulf is bridged between them By a common sense of loss. By a common sense of loss.

Over the graves, already,
Where our loved ones were lain,
Who walked through the fatal valley,
Broathers by brothers slain,
Bloom the flowers, God's angels,
Speaking of better things—
Of endurance, wrought from sorrow;
Forgiveness, from death that springs.

Nover was wrong so hidden Never the dead so dear! Many a mound is watered By the stranger's loving tear. And the roses smell as aweetly That strangers' hands have grown; And the harvest never faileth Where Love the seed hath sown, Cling-ching! the bells are singing; Boom! 'tis the cannon's notes; The songs of peace are ringing From a hundred thousand throns! Glory to God in the highest! Amen! let the people say; Oh, the terr stones would rebuke us if we should be more to-day! Glary to God in the highest, Who hath formed the earth and sky; Who ruleth over the nations, And maketh his throne on high! Who keepeth our feet from falling, And sideth our weak endeator; Who saveth our life from destruction, For his mercy endures forever!

To Him, oh ye ransomed people, He praise and boner given, For the blessings He hath sent us, And the bonds His hand hath riven! For He looked upon our affliction, And both taken away the sword; He both ended our days of mourning, restored Bouros, June 15, 1960. SESAN J. ADAMS.

POPE PIUS IX.

It is not generally known, I believe, that Pope Pius the Ninth was in his youth prevented from entering the grand of honor of the Viceroy of Italy in consequence of his being subject to at-tacks of epilepsy. He came from Sinigaglia to loose, and entered the priesthood in 1814, belibrary, and entered the priesthood in 1814, being then in his twenty-accords year. The intensity to which he was subject and as great a but to his advancement in this perfeccion as in the military, and it is said that his admission was granted by Pias the Sectoud only on the condition that, when he celebrated the mass, he should be assisted by another priest. He officient for the first time in the church starched to the orphismsee in which he had for some library. to the orphansee in which he had for some time in-tructed the children, on Whit. Sunday in the year 1819. The attacks of cridepsy to which he had been subject became less and less frequent; and four years after cutoring the priest-bond he was appointed by the Pope attaché to an ecclesiastical and political mission sent to South America. On his return from this mis-sion to Rome he was appointed Archbishop of Spoleto, by Pope Leo the Twelfth, and was con-secrated in 1827. It is considered doubtful whether his real age is seventy-seven or seven-ty-nine, the register in which the date of his hirth was entered having been destroyed during the revolution. Though for several years pre-ceding the last three or four it was repeated almost daily in letters from Rome that he was suf-fering from some complaint or other which could not fail to kill him, it was affirmed by those who had good opportunities of judging of the matter that, both physically and mentally, he was as sound as a man could wish to be. He has not attained what are known in Rome as "Peter years;" that is to say, he has not occupied the papel throne twenty-five years two months and a week, as the tradition runs that Saint Perer did. Nevertheless, he comes nearer that limit than any other Pope who has ever reigned; for though many kings have ruled during more than a quarter of a century, no Pope ever has, unless we accept the Peter tradition. The nearest to the period before Pius the Ninth is Pius the Seventh, who died fifteen weeks and two days before the charmed day arrived,

SO RUNS THE WORLD AWAY.

CHAPTER XVII.

"IT IS NOT WORTH THE KERPING."

"IT is all over, then?" What was all over? Not the murmurous kiss of the waves slipping up the ridges of warm gold-en shingle; not the bright sun-flecks that played with the shadows on the sea's mutable breast; nor the beauty of the woman who sat learning against the sides of a justing rock, her sweet languid eyes cast downward to avoid the glare of the sun, her listless hands crumpling notches of dried sen-weed, and her heart beating not one whit fister than the cool pulses of the drowsy sea. That which was over was Captain Mowheny's hope of winning the woman he loved. He had taken his friend's advice, and now he had his answer—not a straightforward one, for Lady Diana rarely had cominge to be prompt and decided in these surgical operations of cut-ting away hearts she had sought to cling to her. She sought to temporize and to soothe. She was particularly tender and gentle in her manner when her victim was young and handsome.

When Captain Mowbray found that "No" was to be the end of all his longing hopes and angry fears, he felt faint and sick at heart. He could not look her in the face; for a while he could not speak to answer her soft words. They seemed to sway with the moving flow of the sea; and "No, no, no," was lisped to him in countless ripples as the waves surged up near his feet. He had written, as he had purposed, to ask her to decide his fate. "If your answer be unfa-vorable, I do not know how I shall bear it," he wrose. "Bemember how great is the stake I have thrown at your feet. Do not trample down my life. If I lose you I believe it would drive

"They all say that," Lady Diana thought, as she looked at the letter tenderly; "but dear me! most of them got over it much sooner than they think they will."

"I must take your answer from your own," he concluded. "Will you meet me on beach of the East Cliff this afternoon?"

"If I name five I shall get it over before

At four o'clock she strolled down to the senside, and seated herself in the broken shadow of the rock, having just time to assume a grace-ful posture when she heard the quick, impatient steps of her lover crashing through the shingle above. Now, as he lay by her feet, his head resting on his hand, and his eyes turned away from her, with his whole soul sickened by disappointment, she felt very sorrowful for him, and again wished that he had not forced her to this painful necessity. He had put his question so briefly and determinately that she had not much scope for evasion. Still she did her best, She surrounded her refusal with such a sweet She surrounded her remosal with such a sweat-confusion of regret, remorse, and reciprocal pas-sion, that any other less areate than a lover might have been beguiled by the garlands with which she bedecked the heurse of hope. But through all the music of her broken words, all the tears that dummed the sleepy depths of her gray eyes, Captain Mowbray read the word death; and as the sense of his failure grew upon him his face became white, and his eyes dark with pain and anger. Denth to love's thrall, love's fire, and love's hope—that was the portion the pink lips had dealt out on this slumbrous afternoon. When a ribbon fluttered from the woman's hair over Thurstan's hand, be caught it round his wrist, and kissing it passionately, wept a few hot, still tears, the sight of which filled Lady Diana with remorse and compunction. She had often seen men weep, and she always suffered pain at the On this occasion, as on many others, she vowed that she would never again repeat an ex-periment frought with so much grief of heart to "You will soon get over this," she said, gen-thy; "you will soon forget me."

"I do not believe now that I ever can forget either you ce this hour. Oh, Disna! my darling! my darling! why will you not man; me? would love you so, you could not help being happy with me.

looked at him with a sort of tender envy. "I wish I could be as enthusinetic," she thought.
Alond she answered, softly, "You forget, Thurston, that I am ten years of fer than yourself."

"What does that matter?" he said, simply. "You don't look it; and, besides, if a fellow loves a woman, what matters her age, if she's the only one woman that can make him hap-

Lady Diana glanced stealthily around. There was no one in sight but the distant figure of a man who stood on a far-off headland, peering through a telescope.

"I wonder if it is a good glass," Lady Diana said to herself. Then she looked at the handsome face near her, pale with pain of her caus-ing, and she decided to risk the telescope's having a long sight.

She drooped her head on to his shoulder, and the silky burden of hair which crowned it swept

"It can never be," she murmured; "but I do love you, Thurstan; never believe that I don't love you."

His face flushed as he felt her touch; his heart's-blood was a flame that blazed and ebbed as her breath.

as her breath.

"Then why not—?" he began.

"Do not go into that again: it can not be.

It harts me as much as it can you to refuse you!" she cried. "I can not tell you now all the reasons that make our union impossible.
You must know that I would marry you if I could, and that I do like you above all other

He looked at her face now, and saw that it as working with emotion. He seized her by was working with emotion. He seized her by her hands, and looked steadfastly into her eyes. "Oh!" he cried, with something like a groan,

"ean such a face lie?"
"I do not lie!" she went on, passionstely.
"I swear that I love you!"
"Then marry me!"

For a few seconds the lap of the wares was all that broke the brooding silence of the noun. Should she end it now?—all the degrading trickery by which she was ever shaming her na ture? Should she let all the small meannesse of coquetry be merged in one great honest love? Should she give up luxury and self-indulgence, and put away all those lusts of the flesh and the devil against which her godfather's and godmo-thers' liberal gifts of silver mags and infamile spoons had made so poor a defense?

She heard the slow rush of the waves as it were in a dream; saw in a dream the glow of the day, and her lover's face looking yearningly in hers, as the sun shone down on their clasped hands; heard as in a dream the whisper of a passing angel, who swept the pure light of his wings over her soul, as he counseled her to accept the good impulse as a gift from heaven,

Then she looked up at Lord Ovme's house, which was visible from where the two stood "If I part with my liberty at all, it must be for that, and such as that." The generous, half-formed, half-murmured yes, which had leaped to her lips, died away unspoken. The tremnious regret passed away from her eyes, and the beau-tiful face was once more inflexible with deniel.

"I see it all," Captain Mowbray said, gloomily, "You are weary of me. I have loved you too well, and shown it too plainly. You have played with me as a human toy to whom the Creator has given capability to suffer, which renders the amasement more poignant and ex-citing. You are tired of the game, and now I thing. Tot are three or the game, and now I may go to the devil,"

"I do not suppose you will go to the devil," Lody Diana replied, quietly; "men inclined to traverse that road rarely retard or accelerate their focusions on account of a woman's love.
You will be no worse for this brief sharp pain in force.

"I shall be no better."

"And if you ever feel inclined to judge me harshly," she pursued, "remember that you are not the only one who has suffered in this day's not the only one who has suffered in this day's parting. It costs me much to give you up, and I shall sicken at the thought of the future spent without you. Oh, my darling?" she added, with a sudden outburst of candid feeling, "I shall miss you terribly for a long time—for a long time!"

He looked at her longingly; but he did not speak. It is not easy even for the most consummate and experienced of coquettes to make a man believe that, while throwing him over, she is heart and soul his own.
"It is to be good-by, then?" he said, gloom-ily, "It must be so, I fear; don't make it harder

In truth she felt rather injured by the undue amount of pain this scene was causing her; it was very selfish of her lover to feel so much, and to make her feel that he did so.

"Good-by," he said; and he flung away her hands and turned to

She caught hold of his arm, pleadingly, and cast one more quick look round her.
"Kiss me once before you go."

It was weak of him to give way to the tempt-ntion, to grant her the benign triumph of feel-ing that he would be haunted by the memory of that kiss so long as he remembere: her, and how she had wronged him. She had never given him her lips before; and she did so now that his heart was sore with provocation, because the kind-hearred wanton would fain administer a listle honey with the sting; because she liked both him and herself so well that she wished to yield him belin for the wound, and to give heryield such comfort as Anne Boleyn's executioner felt when he recalled that he had handled the queen's neck "full tenderly."

"Wou't you kiss me?" she said, piteously.

"Won't you kass me?" site said, piteonsly.

He was only four-and-twenty, and as much of a philosopher as a dragoon at that age ordinarily is. He was insulted and angered by her conduct; he suspected her of treachery, and had felt inclined once or twice to-day to curse the lovely face which held him in such thrall.

But none the less did he feel the thrall; none the less was his heart drawn toward her every movement, her every trick of voice and gesture; and when he heard those faint beseeching tones, and saw the face he loved so near his own, he cought her in his arms, and kissed her in such fashion that she somewhat repented herself of her gentle advance,

"Go!" he said, at last, pushing her from him. "Go! I have got to feel very old in this hour; I feel pain and anger have taken all the youth out of me: perhaps one day you will be sorry that you threw away my love. Meanwhile you had better keep yourself out of my sight; for after having once touched your dear mouth I should find it hard not to repeat the offense, even though you should have married a worthier, and, what is better, a wealthier man."

But although be buried this last repreach at Lady Diana's blandishments were rarely thrown away on the weak, vain natures of men. Captain Mowbray half sequitted her as he recalled the rapture of that last carees.

They parted with one lingering clasp of hands at the foot of the slopes; and then Lady Diana trailed her cool-hand draperies away in the direction of her house.

" Poor darling! how he felt it!" she thought,

But she smiled through her tears at a good-looking officer from the cavalry barracks, who was calling at her door as she arrived there, and begged that he would come and "cheer her soli-tude" to-morrow.

Then she entered her drawing-room certain sheep-dog—a Miss Jones, a lady com-panion of Lady Disma's, generally only produced on state occasions, like the family plate—was knitting away time with various devices in

"Miss Jones," Lady Disna said, impressively,
"do be so kind as to give orders that they do not boil the sweet-bread to rags to-night."
"Yes, Lady Disna."

"And oh! I am going to start for Italy in a few days, and hope for the pleasure of your company."

Lady Diana walked pensively out of the room. "I shall find the Ormes at Spezzia," she said to herself, " and I shall sometimes row on that lovely lake with Lord Orme, and the eternal boatman who is always the only one who rowed Milor Byron up and down the gulf, and I will see Miss Slater and the girls at the bottom of that gulf before I permit them to join the expe-dition. Heigh-ho! there goes the dinner-bell."

CHAPTER XVIII. JUSTIFIABLE HOMICIDE.

MEANWRILE Captain Mowbray was still left standing by the rocks; and when the gloom of night crept over sea and land, and no faint tingo of sunset was left to flush the rugged-faced cliffs with exanescent glory, the young fool cast him-self down near the place where she had sat, and kissed the sharp-edged cliff as though it had pos-sessed the seftness of woman's lips.

Among the great and little mysteries of this world of ours, which may one day be made clear to man's perplexed eyes, I wonder if he will learn the secret of the fascination which a flame of death is permitted to have for the har moths of night.

When Capcain Mowbray returned to his lodg-ings in town Douglas quickly perceived that his friend's manner was that of a man who has been foiled in his desire. Thurstan swore at the bull-terrier because he stambled over it, and then gave the injured-looking, wrinkled face such ca-resses as people sometimes lavish on dumb creat-ures when their bearts are sching from the un-kindness of their own species—a kind of cynteal, Byronical "I never had but one" (friend) and

"bere he lies," sort of feeling.

Then Thurstan could not eat his dinner, but sat and stared moodily at the various delicacies on the table, and begged that Douglas would take care of himself and "not mind him." When the meai was over, and the two sat in the moonlit balcony, smokin, their cigars, Captain Mowbray could no longer keep the pain of his secret to himself, but barst out suddenly with—
"By G—, she's jilted mo!"
Douglas looked sadly at the boy's downcast face.

"It seems hard to bear now," he said, gently;
"young hearts bleed so freshly, but then they heal quickly. A few months hence, and the memory of this will be nothing more than a duil feeling of discomfort to you.'

"It is all very well to say that," Thursten cried, petulantly; you don't know what it is to love a woman as I did this one, or you would understand that such pain as mine can not be forgotten quickly."

forgotten quickly."
"And yet I once loved a devil in the guise of a woman so well that her loss made me a mur-derer and an outcast."

Good God, Douglas! what do you mean?" "Hear my story before you condemn me by my own words," Douglas said, quickly; "and when you have heard it, tell me if you don't think the love of a woman has laid a heavier burden on me than you are ever likely to be cursed with.

"When I was about five years older than you are now I was married to one of the prettiest creatures you over saw."

"You married!" echoed Mowbray, with astonishment.

"She was as lovely as that portrait you showed me yesterday," pursued Douglas; "more lovely, because she was younger.

"She was my cousin, and I had loved her ever since she was a child and I a great gawky school-boy. I used to spend my midsummer holidays at her father's place; and in the evenings, when he and his guests were at dinner, we wandered out by curselves through the cool shadows of the park, and conjectured of the glo-rious far-off future. Ana would wear royal robes, and a gold crown round her brighter hair: She would own hundreds of slaves, and I should She would own hundreds of slaves, and I should be her chief and most favored servicer. She would live surrounded by homage and adulation. She would have no nurses, but always jam tarts for dinner. She would wear red shoes, and build a room lined with mirrors. I used to think that she seemed very lovely as she sat with her little red mouth pursed up, and her eyes looking gravely bland at the contemplation of her future dignities. It for my part, intended to her future dignities. I, for my part, intended to travel. I wished to penetrate in the more deso-late portion of the far East; where I could see late portion of the far East; where I could see the wild observe-trees force their way through the old Asiatic temples, and hear the parrota chatter round the sacred fanes. Above all, I wished to kill a tiger, and to be gifted with strength that would enable me to thrash Tom Spenser, the big bully of our school. If at fifteen I had possessed half the intuition a girl has at ten, I should have half the intuition a girl has at ten, I should have already detected the coquettish propensities of my little Ana. She rarely moved without a sidelong glance to see who was observing and admir-ing her pretty face; and at eleven years old she could fix a bunch of ribbons or a flower in her hair much more becomingly than could the old nurses who had attended her from her birth. nurses who had attended her from her tirth. Time passed away quickly and pleasantly in those days. I was very successful at school, and used to bring piles of prize-books to Ana and write her name inside them; amounting in crooked characters that they were given 'to her as keepsakes by her affectionate friend.' Ana smiled pleasantly at the gifts; but she generally gave me to understand that a new such or a trinket would be more acceptable; and once she cried with rage and vexation when I presented her with my last school acquisition, a copy of the Odyssey, bound in morocco; for, as she said, 'Of what use was the nasty thing to her when she couldn't read it, and what business had I to be able to read it when she could not?"

"This is the pleasantest part of my story; the rest I will tell as briefly as possible. When Ana was seventeen and I eight-and-twenty we were married. I was always a grave, quiet man, and perhaps she never knew how gayly my heart used to beat at the sound of her laugh—how de-pressed I felt if the slightest cloud of discontent passed over her dear face. We were not very rich, and when my father's interest obtained me nch, and wheel my father's interest obtained me a lucrative appeintment in India I was glad to accept it. We lived in India two years, blessed to me by the peaceful fullness of gratified love, and by the society of the creature I prized most in the world. One day I was summoned bome to England. My father was in a failing state of bealth, and he was loth to die without once more seeing the faces of all his children. I could not resist such a summons, but I felt very sad at beart when my beautiful wife hung round my neck, giving me her farewell kiss,

She had resigned herself to not accompany ing me, she said, knowing that it was best so; but I must write often to ber, or her heart would break under the weight of her loneliness.

"As I was leaving the door she ran up and asked me for one more caress. I gave her not one but many, and then I went on my way, observing with satisfaction that she watched me from the threshold as long as I was in sight,
"When I had gone about an hour on my jour ney I was selzed with a terrible longing to see her again. I resisted the impulse for a few sec-onds, called myself a fool, and went on a few steps farther; then I thought of Ana's face, from th I was going further and further away in the blackness, and turning my horse's head round, I galloped back toward home, and in less than three-quarters of an hour I was again at my own door. I dismounted and walked softly toward the window of our sitting-room. 'How pleased she will be,' I thought; 'how the dear face will beam at the sight of mine!'

"My heart beat fast with pleasurable agitation as I pressed my face close to the window.

I was on the point of calling her by her name when I saw her—oh hell! I saw her sitting with her face turned away from me, her hands clasped in those of another man, her lovely head drooping languidly on his shoulder.

"I recognized the man at once; he was an officer of artillery who had been a frequent visit-or to my house, and whom I had always believed to be the soul of honor

There are certain flowers the remembered odors of which sicken me; for that still summer night was steeped with their fragrance. There are voices to recall which sting me with intoler able agony-the voices of my wife and her lover. murnaring low, through the twilight, their joy in each other's society, their delight in my presumed absence.

" I can not dwell on the wreck of that moment I dare not remember all the storm of horrible feelings that surged up in my breast.

"I did not passe to ask myself whether she were or were not guilty to the last extreme. From what I have since heard of her, I believe she was practically innocent; but were it so, I hold her to be more meanly criminal than if she had erred through an excess of illicit passion. Her beart was full of disbonor; her mind must have been most foul, if for mere vanity's sake she could so wrong me and herself.

"At that moment, when I saw her thus, I felt that I could sooner hold the vilest wretch that walked the streets to my bosom than the woman with whom I had lived for the last two years in happiness as beautiful as paradise.

"It was well for the grace of their parting that they did not perceive the pale face glaring against the window-pane. I can see now the smile with which he said, 'An exceir!' and her answering gesture, kissing her hand as he drew near the door and we, and her light laugh as he stooped to press his lips on her hand.

"I concealed myself in the shrubs until he had passed out of sight of the house, and then I followed him until he reached a secluded pertion of the road.

'And for bounte Annie Laurie I'd lay me down and die,' he sang as he went in a rich, clear voice. "Ged, how pretty she is! I'll light a cigar."

"He stopped by the side of a broken bit of rock to strike a light, and when he turned yound, whistling gayly, he met me face to face.

"I had my traveling pistols with me, for some of the wilder districts, through which on my journey I was bound to pass, were infested with robers. Without speaking, I showed these to him, indicating that he was to select one. He took the pistol mechanically, and then fell back with white sa death,

"I gave him a few seconds to recover him-self, and then I broke the silence. "'One of us must die!' I said, in a tone husky with the effort to repress my passion of rage and agony, 'so it shall only be six paces. You will fire first.'

"He had recovered the shock my unexpected appearance had caused him, and, to do him jus-tice, he did not shrink now as he had done at the sight of my face.

"He kept his cigar in his mouth, only moving it to say, ""It could not be in a fairer cause; God

"Probably he did not mean to hit me, but we were mad—I with wrath, he with terror. I did not pause to consider convenances. I called to him to aim straight at me, and as he raised his hand a sort of prayer rose to my lips that I might fall; that my pain might pass away under the dim light of the stars; that I might close my eyes and never again open them to look man or

"I stood, however, untouched as his bullet whirred past me; and in another second he fell whired past me; and in another second he left to the ground like a dog. He turned on his side, saying, 'O God, this is death!'

"Then he whispered something I could not hear. Whether he was muttering a farewell to some distant friend, or entreating vainly for as-sistance, I can not say. I knelt by his side and ""Speak!" I cried, 'speak!" for the silence was driving me mad.

"He looked at me blankly for a few moments, "He booked at me blankly for a few moments, not appearing to recognize me; then a flash of intelligence lighted up his face, and he said, in a tone of piteous repreach, "You should have given me more time." Then his eyes turned upward, his jaw dropped, and I knew that he would never speak any word again.

"I left him there, and mounting my horse, which was tethered close by, I rode away from the devilish stock hanned by the horors of my

the devilish spot, haunted by the horror of my own thoughts. The look I gave toward home was in itself a curse, could she have seen it. It was all the farewell I ever took of her.

"Yes, I left him there. I heard afterward that his body was found that very night; that it was carried away and wept over by his friends; that it lies in a marble tomb which is gay with flowers and sung over by birds; but to me, he always seems to be lying in the shadow of that road; his face drawn by the pang of coming death; his voice faint and pitcous, sending up a protest between me and my God against the sh haste of my anger.
"Mowbeay, I can't get away from those words:

"Mowbray, I can't get away from those words; they are ever returning to me with the terrible force of avenging truth. Walking in the sunshine of day, or brooding in the dim eve—awake or asleep—in feasting or weeping—in laughter or in tears, I am stung by the memory of the dying man's reproach—' You should have given me more time." me more time.

"What became of your-of her?" Captain Mowbray asked.

"She is well, and happy, I believe," Donglas said, grimly. "Had she known that her infer-nal coquetry was to cause that man's death while his hand was still warm with her parting clasp, I do not believe that she could have refrained from practicing the arts that led to that result. Not a single flower, not a gand nor a ribbon of hers would have been worn that night without scrupulous regard to effect, even had she foreher pretty trickeries would result in a life being lost and a soul damned. Had Diana been doomed as an aristocrat in the Reign of Terror she would have stack a rose over her ear as she went to the scaffold, and have looked unutterable things at the priest who confessed her.

Was her name Diana?" said Captain Mowbray, with surprise.

"No, Ana; did I say Diana?" Douglas answered, confusedly; "I suppose I was haunted by the name of your inamorata."

"Ah!" Captain Mowbray observed, with a sigh, "Lady Diana has her faults-what woman has not?—but to do her justice, she is incapable of any thing of that kind. Her kindness has been very sweet to me; her unkindness way biter; but I can not reproach her with levity. Her conduct toward other men in my presence has been simply perfect."

"The devil is never so dangerous as when he borrows an angel's face," Douglas observed, dryly.

"Devil or angel, I should love her equally," Thurstan said; "the worst of it is, that her having thrown me over don't make me love her a bit the less."
"What are your plans?" Douglas asked.

"I must join my regiment, I suppose. I have only a few days' leave."
"Much better go to Paris for a week."

"If I take more leave now I shall not get so much during the hunting-season," Thurstan said, disconsolately. "And why should I go to Paris?"

"I thought it would do you good," Donglas replied; "but," he added, with a slight smile, "I do not know that you require the panaces, since you can already look forward to the joy of next season's fox-honting."

CHAPTER XIX.

AZALEA'S PERPLEXITY.

"WHAT'S to be done about your learning, Azalea?

George Moore had recovered the power of speech, and the partial use of his limbs; but his language was often confused, and his face looked more troubled than it had done in the days before his seizure.
"What about it, dear?" Azelea said, any

"Max about it, dear?" Azalea said, anxiously; "I am sure I learn all you tell me to."
"But, do you know, Azalea?" the old man answered, somewhat piscously, "I'm not sure I always tell you right; my memory is gone, and sometimes I wake up in the night, and am tensed by the thought I may have put you wrong; and then I want you to know how to do needly and then I want you to know how to do needle work, music, arithmetic, and painting, and all those sort of things."

Azalea looked perturbed.
"I know a little arithmetic," she said, "from counting the apples. I do it all on my fingers."
The old man shook his bead. "That isn't the right may."

the right way.

Any way's right which you can do quickly best," Azalea observed, with unconscious sophy. "And I can draw much better than Rosa or Amelia Orme; but then they're

"What?" Moore said, with a puzzled expres-

"Oh! that's one of Conrad's words," Azalea

"I don't believe it's in the dictionary," the old man said, gravely: "I hope those little Ormes haven't taught you had words."

"I won't say it again," Azalea answered,

And Moore felt gratified both at her obedience and the reflection that he had snubbed the unconscious Conrad, of whom he was secretly unconscious Conrad, of whom he was secretly jealous; Conrad being the only person Azalea ever mentioned with affection when she referred to her visit to Brighton.

Moore looked with despair at the tattered

Virgil, feeling how uncertain a tenure his waver-ing mind held of its contents. "I want her to hold up her head with the best of them when she grows up, so that he can't tasent her with not having tastes and manners like his." That speech of Lord Orme's, implying that Azelea would be degraded by the life she had elected to lead, was ever rankling in the old man's mind,

How to secure the requisite accomplishments without parting from his treasure was the problem that occupied his thoughts day and night.

Azalea confided the difficulty to old Sally:

"I'm so sorry I can't learn more; it seems to vex daddy so much," she said.

"I'm sure you know as much as is good for you. I don't hold with too much larning; rending and writing only lead honest folks astray," Sally remarked, sententiously. "There's my eldest boy allays went to Sunday-schole, and was took so much count of he was made clerk in a bank, where he made use of his larming to forge his master's name, and write courtin' letters to his missus; and of course his master was much water. So take warning by Sam, my dear, in case you should be tempted and full like him." "Who teaches at the school now?" Azulea asked, disregarding the friendly warning;

is the school-mistress?"
"A stuck-up thing who don't know B from a ball's foot," Sally said, contemptsonsly; "only the little chaps go there whose mothers want to keep 'em out of mischief. Schule is handy in gleaning time if they ain't good for nothing else."

"Is there no one else who teaches?" Azalea said, disconsolately: "isn't there a school where I could learn singing and dancing, and those sort

They haven't got further than the Old Handredth in the Sunday-schule; they try Hallelajah sometimes, but it sounds very comical."

Axalea pressed her face against the pane, and looked dreamly at the red leaves whirring past. "What's to be done?" she said; "daddy frets so over my false quantities; and then when he tries to explain, he stammers, loses his words, and cries. I quite drend the lesson hours."

"Mr. Douglas teaches the Squire's son," suggested Sally. A gleam of hope lit up Azalea's face.

"Who is he?" she asked. "Where does he live?"

live?"
"Oh! he's a mighty unsociable sort of man, who has come to live in the little house in the lane at the back of the church. He never will take a comfortable cup of tea with a neighbor, and shuts his door to the gentlefolks as well as the farmers; but he must be a wonderful clever man, for the Squire and the person are going to send their lads there for a little while every holiday time, just to prevent their larning from slip-ping out of their heads like."
"If he teaches them, why shouldn't he teach me?" Azalea suggested.

Sally shook her head doubtfully. "I don't think he's much wropped up in gals; he won't have no one but an old woman to do for him, and they do say he's wonderful ugly temp red.

Azalen then fell upon Topax, and bettowed many caresses on his wrinkled chin and smooth head, all of which the terrier received with an air of blinking condescension. Having scothed her mind by this proceeding, she put on her hat, and took the path that led to Church Lane, as that grassy shadowed road was called on the borders of which Robert Douglas's cottage stood.

FAILURE.

By JEAN INGELOW.

Wx are much bound to them that do succeed; We are much bound to them that do succeed;
But in a more pathetic sense are bound.
To such as fail. They all our loss expound;
They comfort us for work that will not speed,
And life-insoil a failure. Ay, his deed,
Sweetest in story, who the dask profound
Of Hades Booded with entracing sound,
Masic's own tears, was failure. Doth it read Therefore the werse! Ah no! So much to dare, life fronts the regional Darkness on its throne.
So much to do: imperiouse even there. So much to do; impetuous even there, He pours out love's disconsolate sweet mos-He wins, but few for that his dood recall; Its power is in the look which costs him all,

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

Goino to Extreme. A friend of ours is so bumane hat he can not even bear to dine upon hing beef.

Hirrenomeat, Brascopes, ... Why is horse-racing a ecosity?... Bucause it is a matter of course.

"My dear," said an affectionate sponse to her hea-band, "am I not your only treasure?" "Yes," was the cool repty, "and I would willingly lay it up in heaven."

Not long since an elderly lady entered a railroad carriage at one of the Ohio stations, and disturbed the passengers a good deal with complaints about a "most dendful rheamatir" that she was troubled with. A petalenna persent, who had himself been a severe suffeces with the same complaint, said to her:

"Did you ever by electricity, Madan? I tried it, and in the course of a short line it exect use."

"Electricity," exclaimed the old haly: "yes, I're tried it to my satisfaction. I was street by indicates about a year ago, but it didn't do use a single mossel of good."

In a class of little girls in one of the schools of Bos-ton the question was saked, "What is a fort?" "A place to put mee in," was the ready answer. "What is a fortress then?" saked the tencher. This seemed a puraler, until one little girl of cight sammars an-swered, "A place to put the women."

Two distinguished philosophers took shelter under one tree during a heavy shower. After some time one of them complaining that he felt the rain..." Never mind," replied the other, "there are plenty of trees; when this is wet through we will go to another."

At the late meeting of the Pre-hytery, when the out-At the late meeting of the Pre-bytery, when the sub-ject of scripture was inder discussion, Broaber W.— said early in his reinbetry he and another brother were conducting a meeting in which there was much relig-ious interest. An old man gave expression to his joy by sheating, and continued it until it began to inder-rupt the services. Brother H— said to Brother W.—. "Go, stop that old man's noise." He went to him and spoke a few words, and the sheating man at once became quiet. Brother H.—— saked Brother W.—. "What did you say to the old man that quieter him so pramptly?" Brother W.—— replied, "I asked him for a dellar for forcion noisensa."

A wealthy gentleman who owns a country sect, nearly inst his wife, who fell into a river which fours through his estate. He amounted the sorrow escape to his friends, expecting their congratulations. One of them—an old backelor—write as follows: "I always told you that river was too shallow."

"My friends," said a returned missionary at a late "My framas," and a returned missionary at a large smalrerscay meeting, "let no avoid sectarian letter-ness. The inhabitants of Hindestan, where I have been Ishoring for many years, have a proverb that, "Though you bathe a dog's tail in 60, and blad it up in splints, you can not get the crock out of E." Now a man's sectarian hiss is simply the crock in the dog's tail, which can not be cradicated; and I hold that every man be allowed to wag his own peculiarity to peace."

"What breach of education do you have chiefly in your school?" "A willow breach, Sir; the master has seed up almost a whole tree."

It was an apt answer of a young lody who, being asked where was her native place, replied: "I have none; I am the daughter of a Methodist minister."

An extraordinary instance of the power of sleep on the animal contents of the power or steep on the animal content occurred the other day. A man, who was a great sleeper, was thought by his family to be lying too long, and upon their going to his room they found mothing in the bed but his night-cap. From certain circumstances connected with physiolo-gy a needical gentleman gave it as his opinion that he had slept bimedif out.

"If we go to war, father," said a bright-eyed boy, the other day, to his electral percent, "from what past of the libbs shall you get the text for a new segment?"
The good minister being taken by surprise at the question, thought a resinent, and then amosting the locks of the child with a sect of poternal pride, answered that he believed it would be from Januaris-fixed.

Den Marble tells a story about a Youkee tailor dom-ning a man for the amount of his bill. The mon-old he "was sorry, very sorry indeed, that he could not pay it." "Well," said the tailor, "I book you for a man that would be sorry, but if you are secrety than I see, I'll quit."

A lady, proudly conscious of her dignity, while de-A lady, promity conscious of her dignity, while descending on the superiority of nobility, remarked to a large company of visitors that the three charges of the remanualty, nobility, protery, and commonalty, might be well compared to chins, delf, and reskery. A few minutes elapsed, when she seen for her little girl so the nursery, John, the frections, was dispatched with orders to the nursery mald, to when he hawled from the bottom of the stairs, "Hallo" crockery, bring down little chins."

"Tim Dormen Every"-Twins!

Mr. C— was a man of great fashion, but he marred all his good quelities by an excess of extentation. Not content with being a gentleman, he was always aspiring to pass for a mobieman. He drove a carriage drawn by two miserable backmay-coach between, and he had a servant stock up behind in effect and made of bay and straw. Being at the Opera one evening, where all the carriages followed in a string, the herees behind the carriages followed in a string, the herees behind the carriage of Mr. C— are up the two legs of the servant, sud the body fell under the carriage. Upon inquiring where his servant had gone to the coachman of the following vehicle repiled:

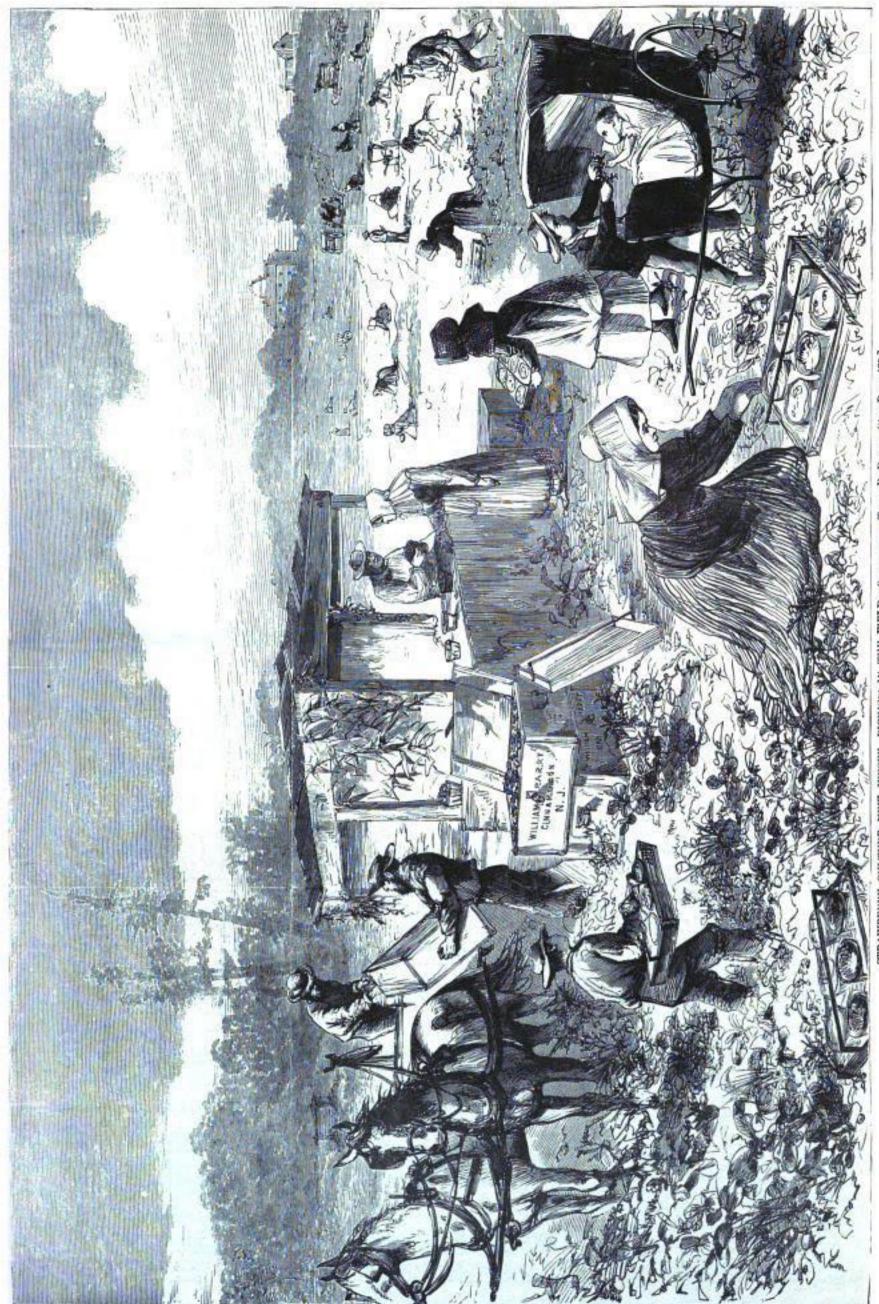

"Oh, he's just this minute gone, Sir, to feed the lorses."

horses."
The following morning a trues of straw was left at his house, with the message that "it was the new servant who had come to fill the vacant place!"

WAY OF THE WORLD.

Determined beforehand, we gravely pretend. To ask the options and thoughts of a friend; Should his differ from ours on any pretense, We pity his west of both judgment and sense; But if he fells into and detters our plan.

Why, really we think him a sensible man.

STRAWBERRY CULTURE, NEW JERSEY-PICKERS IN THE FIELD.-Skeptoing by Theo. R. Davis.-(See Page

BOSTON AND THE PEACE JUBILEE.

WE publish this week several illustrations con-metted with Boston, to which attention has late-ly been attracted by the mammoth Jubilee. Not the least interesting of these is the photographic view of the city reproduced in our double-page cut.

Boston, the capital of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and the chief city of New England, is situated at the western extremity of Massachusetts Bay. The first settlement was made there in 1630. Boston was named after an English town founded by the Saxon St. Boston, a.D. 654. The capital of Puritanism thus derives its name from a Roman Catholic saint. The progress of the city was slow. In 1638 it was called a hamlet, and had but 20 or 30 houses. In 1671 there were three meeting-houses, and the town was considered rich and 30 houses. In 1671 there were three meeting-houses, and the town was considered rich and populous, containing about 1500 families. In no part of the British empire was the revolution of 1688 more warmly supported than in Boston. In 1692 the witchcraft delusion raged as in other parts of New England. An Englishman who visited the city about that time spoke of the buildings being like the women, neat and handsome; and of the streets being of pebble, like the hearts of the men. In 1708 a list was made of all the streets, lanes, and alloys, which were found to be 110 in number. Long Wharf was commenced in 1710, running 800 feet into the harber. In 1740 Whitewestern preached in Bos-In 1740 WHITEFIELD preached in Boston to immense crowds; his farewell discourse was attended by 20,000 persons.

In the opening scenes of the Revolution Bos-ton took a more prominent part than any city in the Colonies. After the establishment of Inde-pendence Boston had a commerce extending to penciance Sosion has a commerce extending to nearly every part of the world. It was made a city in 1822. Its population them numbered about 45,000 souls. In 1850 it was 61,392; in 1840 it was 93,383; in 1830 it was 136,884; and in 1860 it had increased to 177,840. This number would be nearly doubled if we add the population of Charlestown, Chelsea, Roxbury, Cambridge, Dorchester, Somerville, North Chel-sea, and Winthrop.

The position of the city is highly favorable to commercial pursuits. The harbor contains 75 square miles, and receives the waters of the Ma-natticut, Nepouset, Mystic, and Charles rivers. The harbor affords ample advantage for 500 ships of the largest class.

The city is supplied with water from Lake Cochituate, 20 miles west. Boston has made more noise than any city of the Union. It is the first article of the creed of Boston thinkers that that city is the centre of human civilization—that Boston is the "hub of the Universe." Now that she has had the biggest the Universe." Now that she has had the biggest concert of all history—we refer to the recent Musical Jubilee—she will henceforth consider her-self as the centre of the "music of the spheres." We expected to hear the "anvil chorus" York, but were disappointed. Still, the Jubiloe was a great success. The programme was carried out without difficulty. The rendering of the symphonies and orntorio music was excellent, and the grand chorus was a remarkable success. We give portraits on this page of Carl Zerahes, conductor of the symphony and oratorio music, and also of Enex Tourses, the organizer of the choruses.

CARL ERRAHN, MUSICAL CONDUCTOR OF THE PEACE JURILEE. - [PHOT. BY FOSS, BOSTON.]

In connection with this Jubilee one thing is noticeable—and that is the death which occurred on the 17th. In the ancient theatres, where over 30,000 people were assembled, both births and deaths were of frequent occurrence. It is not wonderful, therefore, that in an assemblage of sixty thousand there should have been a single death.

Well, the Jubilee is over. It is now a part of the history of noise-making Boston. Our artist, Mr. Busis, has on page 420 illustrated the *ande of the whole affair.

EBEN TOURJEE, ORGANIZER OF THE CHORUSES. [PHOT. BT POSS, BOSTON.]

GOVERNMENT AMONG SWINE.

THERE IS no confusion in the wide domain of organic life, although the short-sighted in Phil-osophy may fancy that nature conducts her affairs as much by hap-hazard as by orderly displays of controlling wisdom

Domesticated hogs are proverbially stupod brutes. Their unsatisfied appetite, omnivorous taste and sluggishness when food is abundantly provided for them, are the secrets of their utility, because through these perverted instincts they can be fattened into monsters. Left to them-selves, however, excessive multiplication has a tendency to shorten their rations, so that wild hogs are usually tall, lank, lean, and ferocious. Under certain conditions wild boars become formidable animals. Their tusks project like sharp hooks, enameled at the points, and keen as chisels, which they use in defense of themselves or companions when menaced by man or beast, exhibiting in fight boldness and skill that often drives mounted sportsmen from the field. Undisturbed by foreign foe, ranging freely about at certain seasons, the boars have fearful battles with each other. One or two of a herd come out of the conflict victorious; and ever after, while their vigor remains, are undisputed masters of their subjugnted rivals, mingling among them without danger of further collision when the claim of supremacy has once been con-

By the operation of this universal law, nature secures the best standard of health and animal perfectability. She forbids the propagation of a neration from a feeble ancestry.

STRAWBERRY CULTURE IN NEW JERSEY.

The first supply of strawberries that reaches the New York market is sent from as far south as the Carolinas. As the senson advances, Norfolk is the point from which the frait is shipped for New York. It is not until the first week in June that the choice berries, grown upon the fruit-farms of New Jersey, are sufficiently ripe for shipment. At this senses numbers of women and children make their appearance in the vicin-ity of such fields as the one shown in our sketch; engagements are made to pick through the sen-son, which comprises the strawberry, raspberry, and blackberry crops.

The price paid to pickers is usually about two and a half cents per quart; the pickers bounding themselves, but receiving quarters and fuel from their employers. Many women earn as much as two dollars per day, the children not quite so much, owing to their lack of physical strength; for strawberry picking is not so easy a labor as might be supposed.

Many of the women bring their habies with them into the field, and the little covered earriages are to be seen in all directions. Each picker is supplied with a tray and a number of baskets. When these are filled they are en-ried to what is termed the picking-shanry, where a new supply of baskets are received; also tickets giving credit to the bearer for picking one quart of strawberries. As these "singles" accumulate they are changed for tickets representing twenty quarts; they may be coshed each evening or not, at the pleasure of the holder. As fast as the filled baskets come in they are packed in crates and loaded upon wagons for shipment to the nearest dépôt or market.

The scene shown is upon the fruit-form of Friend William Parky, located in the Township of Cinnaminson, Burlington County, New Jersey. It is said to be, and probably is, the most complete farm of this kind in the State. Mr. PARRY has fifty acres in blackberries, fifty in raspberries, and a large number in strawberries. The soil is sandy, and for com would be un-

SIX DAYS WITH THE DEVIL AND ONE WITH GOD. BUSINESS MAN TO CHRISTIANITY. "I am too Busy to see you Now. Wait till Sunday."

profitable; but the yearly revenue from the present crops is many thousands of dollars. The favorite varieties seem to be the "Wilson's Early," "Agriculturist," "Romeyue Seedling," "Jack Downing," etc. The "Romeyne" and "Jack Downing" (the latter a new variety from Kentucky) are late berries, and particularly admired by marketmen for their solid flesh and full flavor. These are the last berries that reach our New York market.

THE UNDERGROUND KING.

A Slabonic Legenb.

L-THE WHITE DUCK.

ONCE upon a time there lived in a certain country a great king named Tsar Berendi, who had such a long beard that it bung down to his very knees. He had been long married, but had nev-er had any children, and this vexed him very much; till one day he was so distressed at the thought of having no son to succeed to his throne that he determined to set out and travel over his whole kingdom, in the hope of diverting himself a little. Accordingly off he started, and having traveled about for a long time he turned his fore homeword, and was not far from his enjotal, when, one terribly hot day, he found himself in the middle of a great wide plain with not a drop of water left in his flask. The poor king, who was dreadfally thirsty, began to look about in all directions for a stream or spring whereat he might quench his thirst, and at last, to his great delight, espied a clear springing well. In a mo-ment be had 'umped off his borse, and was renning full speed toward the well, and when he reached it the first thing he saw was a golden gother floating on the surface.

"Not a bad idea!" thought the king, and he stretched out his hand to take it; but the goblet was too quick for him, and slipped through his fingers. He clutched at it apain and again, now with his right hand, now with his left, and then with both at once; but the goblet still glided with both at once; but the guidet still griden away, and at last dived, like a fish, right down to the bottom, and then came up again.

"Wait a bit," said the king, savugely; "I'll have a drink for all that, without asking your help!" and with that he threw himself on his kness beside the spring, bent his head down, and took a long draught, not observing that the whole of his long beard was honging down into the water. But when he had drunk enough, and wanted to rise again, he suddenly felt that something had caught him by the beard, and would not let him go. He pulled, and tugged, and struggled to get away—but all in vain; the thing, whatevor it was, held him fast. He was caught, and could not move, that was all about it. "What's that? Let go!" cried he. There was no answer; but all at once, as he looked down into the well, he saw in its depths a huge face, which grinned and put out its tongue at bim. At the same moment he caught sight of several enormous crab-like claws, which were clenched on his beard, and held him down.

"King Herendi," said the five, "if you wish me to let you go, you must promise to give me that thiny which you possess without being aware of it."

"What can that mean?" thought the king; "it seems to me that I know all my possessions -- he must be joking?" "Very good," cried be, -he must be joking!" " alond, "it's a bargon!"

'See that you remember your promise, then,' answered the face, and disappeared.

The king, rejoiced to find himself once more at liberty, mounted his horse and set off homeward at fiell gallop. When he reached the pal-ace the first thing he saw was the queen standing on the great staircase, looking eagerly for his coming; and beside her stood the Lord Chamberkin, holding a cradle covered with cloth of gold, in which key a beautiful baby. Then the king guessed the meaning of his strange bargain, and gave a deep group. "That, then, is the and gave a deep green. "That, then, is the possession which I had without knowing it!" thought he. "You have dostroyed me, you villainous sorcerer!" and he was sorely distressed; but, putting a cheerful face on the matter, he took the child in his arms, carried it into the palace, petted it for a while, and put it carefully back with his own hands into the cradle.

King Berendi said not a word about his ad-venture, but set himself to rule as before, concenting his grief as best be might; but the faral promise was ever in his mond, and he lived in constant dread of some one coming to earry his son away. However, time went by without any thing of the kind happening: the prince, to whom his father gave the name of John, grew up into a very fine, handsome roung man; and ever thing went on so well that at last the old king quite forgot what had befallen him.

chanced one day that Prince John, while out hunting, lost his way, and at last found himself in a circle of gloomy-looking pines, in the raidst of which stood a vast lime-tree, with a large, broad trunk, down the middle of which ran an immense cleft. As the prince stood gazing, out of this cleft came crooping a strange-looking, ugly old man, with a bright green beard, and eyes greener still.

"Goal-morning, Prince John," said the old man; *1 have already been waiting a long time

And who are you?" asked the prince, very much assumshed.

"You'll find out before long," answered the other; "but now go buck to your father, give blin my compliments, and tell him that it is high time to remember and fulfill his promise to me.

Back went Prince John, not a little puzzled at this misontere, and he rold his father the whole story. Then the poor old king, in his distress, forgot himself, and let out the whole secret; but the prince did not seem much troubled at what

"There's no great harm done yer," said he,
"but it's time to be doing. Give me a horse and let me set off, and mind you tell no one what has happened; but if I do not come back within a year, then be sure that I am no longer slive."

So Prince John got ready for his journey, and bade every one good-by. The king gave him a suit of golden armor, a sharp sword, and a raven-black horse; and away he went mertily enough. For three days he traveled onward, and on the evening of the fourth he came to a broad, smooth e clear water of which mirrored the green banks that overhung it. In the lake were swim-ming thirty white ducks, and on the grass lay thirty white dresses. The prince leaped from his horse, and, creeping softly to the bank, snatched up one of the dresses and hid himself behind a thick bush. Meanwhile the ducks went on swimming and diving and plashing about in the cool clear water, till at last they all swam up to the bank in a row. Twenty-nine of them came out upon the grass, and hurrying up to the dresses put them on; when they suddenly changed into pretty girls, and vanished. But the thirtieth duck remained in the water, flapping about the edge of the lake and crying out piteously, as if in search of something which it had lost. When the prince saw this he was sorry for the trick he had played, and came out of his hiding-place. had played, and came out of his hidrag-place. The duck lifted its head and said to him, with a humin voice, "Prince John, give me back my dress, and I will be of service to you;" and he had no sconer obeyed, when, lo! on the bank beside him stood a beautiful young lady, robed in pure white, and with long dark hair flowing over her shoulders. She gave him her hand, and said to him, "It is well for you, Prince John, that you have obeyed me; and you shall not find me ungrateful. Know that I am Princess Mary, one of the thirty daughters of the Underground King. My father has already waited a long time for you, and is very angry; but you need not be afraid of him, only mind what I tell you. As soon as you come into his presence, down on your knees and crawl right up to him. He will begin to scold and make a great to-do; but nev-er mind him, keep on crawling, and you will see what will happen then."

Princess Mary stamped on the ground, and suddenly the mouth of a cavern yawned before them, and they descended together into the Underground Kingdom, and stopped in front of a paince, which was all built of red garnets, and sparkled brilliantly.

IL-THE THREE TASKS.

Paisce John went boldly into the palsee and saw the Underground King sitting on his throne, with claws on his hands instead of fingers, and small green eyes that glittered like emeralds. Down went the prince on his knees forthwith. The king stamped, and screamed, and scolded at him; but he, remembering the counsed of Prin-cess Mary, kept crawling on all-fours. The Un-derground King made a terrible uproar, but Prince John still crawled and crawled; till at last the king himself was so tickled at the sight that he fairly burst out laughing.

"It's lucky for you that you've managed to make nu laugh," said be, "for now I'm not go-ing to quartel with you; but in return for the disobedience of your father, who was so long in scoding you here, you must perform three tasks. Be so good as to build me, this very night, a palace with marble walls, a golden roof, and windows of crystal; there must be a garden all round it, and ponds in the garden, and in the ponds, minnows. If you can do it, I'll give you my best thanks; but if you can't I'll cut your head off. Now be off with you, and good-night; it's already lets. it's already late."

Ah! the old wretch!" thought Prince John; "see what a plan he has hit upon!" and he went into the room which they had given him in the polace, and sat down very dismally, not knowing what to do. Suddenly a boe flew up to the win-dow, beat against the pane, and said, "Let me in!" Prince John did so; but instead of the bee, in floated Princess Mary.

"Why, Prince John, what are you looking so grave about?" asked she.

"It's not my fault if I'm grave," said be; "do you see what a piece of work your father has set me? And what is more, if I can't do it, he's going to cut my head off!"

"Don't put yourself out about that, my dear prince," said the young lady; "just go to sleep, and the polace shall be built all right. All you have to do is to get up pretty early, and give a tap on the wall with this little hammer."

And sure enough, every thing happened just as she had said. At the first tap of the hammer there stood the new palace all complete; and the Underground King, when he came back and saw it, was not a little astonished,

"Well, you're a clever fellow, without joking," said he. "Now let us see whether you are as sharp at guessing as you are skillful at work. Tomorrow I'll range my thirty daughters in a row, and you must walk past them three times, and the third time point out my youngest daughter, Princess Mary. If you can't do it, off goes your Prince John went to his room, and sat down to think. "Come," said he, "the old scare-crow has outwitted himself this time! what difficulty can there be in pointing ber out?" Then in fluttered the princess again, and said, "Just this difficulty, that the whole thirty of us are exactly alike; my father himself can only tell us by our dresses, and to morrow we shall be all dressed alike."

"And what am I to do, then?" asked Prince John, dolefally,
"I'll tell you; I shall be that one on whose cheek you see a small fly. Good-night-as retoir."

The next day, when Prince John was sent for, there stood the thirty princesses in a row, all dressed exactly alike. "Now, my clever friend," stood the time. "Now, my clever trees, and exactly alike. "Now, my clever trees, the king, "be so good as to walk past these and then pick me out cried the king, "be so good as to walk past these young ladies three times, and then pick me out

Princess Mary."
The prince stepped forward, and passed by them the first time; a curious promenade, upon my word! But no fly. He went by a second time—still no fly! Prince John's head began to feel very loose upon his shoulders; but he gathfeel very loose upon his shoulders; but he gathered all his courage, and passed for the third time. And behold! there was the fig sure enough, though he could only just see it. He pointed to the beauty with the fly, and said, "This is she—Princess Mary!"

"Oho! there's something wrong here!" grunted the king. "You have found her out, it's true; but I suspect foul play somewhere. Now be off, for you'll be wanted again before long. I'm going to set fire to some straw, and while it is burning you must stitch me a pair of boots with a braid, without stirring from the spot. If you can't do it, off comes your head!"

The prince went back to his room more dismal

The prince went back to his room more dismal than ever, but Princess Mary was already there, and inquired the cause of his trouble. "Cause enough," he replied; "your father has devised a new piece of work for me—I'm to stitch a pair of booss with a braid. But am I s cobbler, pray? I am a king's son, and would rather die than go stitching boots for him!"

"Dear Prince John," said the princess, "will you be my husband? I will try to save you—are you willing? We will escape together, or perish together!"

Prince John thought this a very good idea,

Prince John thought this a very good idea,

"We must fly instantly," said the princess; and leading Prince John out of the room she locked the door, and flung the key ever so far off. Then, taking the prince by both hands, she rose up in the air with him, and they found themselves beside the same lake whence they had descended into the Underground Kingdom. Prince John's horse was straying about the meadow; and as soon as it saw him it began to The prince wasted little time in thinking, but leaped on his horse, set the young lady behind him, and went off at full gallop.

Meanwhile, at the appointed bour, the king sent to call Prince John. The servants found his door locked; and when they tapped at it, a voice like the prince's answered from within, "I'm coming directly." They went to tell the king, and he waited and waited—but no prince. He sent again, and again there was the same an-swer; but still the prince did not appear; till at last the king got angry, and bade them drag him out by force. The servants broke open the door, and found nobody within; so they went and told the king that Prince John was nowhere to be found. The king was so much put out at this news that he all but died of vexation. "Quick, and pursue him!" roared he; "if he escapes, it shall be the worse for you all!" So his men started in pursuit.

The fugitives were still galloping along, when the princess said, softly, "I hear a trampling," The princes said, softly, "I hear a trampling," The prince leased down, put his ear to the ground, and cried, "Yes, here they come, and close after us!" "Then there's no time to be st," quoth she; and forthwith she turned berself into a river. Prince John into a bridge, and the horse into a raven; and beyond the the highway split into three roads. The king's men followed the fresh hoof-marks, making sure men followed the fresh hoof-marks, making sure of overtaking the prince; but at the bridge they stopped short, for there the traces suddenly end-ed, and the road split in three. There was no-thing for it but to ride back and tell the king of their ill success. The king flew into a worse rage than before. "Donkeys!" roared be, "don't you see that they were the bridge and the river? How was it that you didn't find that cut? Off with you—and bring him back, do the river? How was it that you didn't find that out? Off with you—and bring him back, do you hear?" So the pursuers started again.

"I hear a trampling," whispered the princess; and Prince John, after listening a moment, replied as before, "Yes, here they are close upon us!" Instantly the pair vanished, horse and all;
and in place of them appeared a dense forest, through which ran roads and paths innumerahis, and in the milet of the forest there was, as ble; and in the midst of the forest there was, as it were, the figure of a horse carrying two riders. it were, the figure of a horse carrying two riders. The king's men reached the wood, saw (as they thought) the two runaways, and made all speed to overtake them. On flew the pursuers, and you would have thought that in another moment they must seize the unincky pair; but no such thing. The horsemen looked about them and found themselves at the entrance of the Underground Kingdom, in the very place whence they had started in pursuit. In a mo thing had disappeared—horse, riders, thick wood and all.

The pursuers returned empty-b the king, when he heard what had happened, me sing, when he heard what had happened, went into a greater passion than ever. "I'll giv: it to you, you labbers!" screeched he. "My horse, quick! I'll go after him myself and see whether he can give me the slip!" So the Underground King himself started in pur-suit. suit.

A third time the princess whispered, "I hear a trampling;" and Prince John dismounted to listen

"They're coming," said he, "and pretty close, too; but somehow the trampling sounds much loader than it did before."

"Ol dear!" said she, "this must be the Un-derground King himself who is coming after us; but, at all events, yonder is the boundary of his kingdom, and beyond that he can not go. Once we get past it we are safe.

The moment they reached the boundary line Princess Mary changed herself into a cave, Prince John into a hermit, and the horse into a !

post, on which hung a little bell. At thet min-ute the Underground King and all his men came galloping up.

"Have you seen any one pass this way, my good old man?" asked the king of the pretended

"To be sure," answered the hermit; "just this minute a young man and woman came rid-ing by, both upon one horse. They came into my cave to rest, and when they went away told me to swear I hadn't seen them in case I hap-me to swear I men't seen mem in case I imp-pened to fall in with you."

"Well, there's nothing to be done," said the Underground King, seeing that by this time Prince John was fairly out of his reach; "my daughter may marry him if she likes. There's no danying it, he's a fine lad of a prince." And be turned his horse's head, and rode home again. In the mean time Prince John and Princess

In the mean time Prince John and Princess Mary, having no longer any pursuit to fear, went quietly on their way to the country of Tear Berendi, where they were received by the king and queen with such joy as neither had ever felt before. There was no time lost in deliberation; first came a grand feast, and after the feast a wedding. Prince John married the lovely Princes Mary, and they lived the optionward hamily cess Mary, and they lived thenceforward happily and prosperously. Prince John helped his fa-ther to govern the kingdom. Every thing went smoothly and well—and that is the end of the

FACTS FOR THE LADIES.

I HAVE one of the WHEBLER & WILSON Sewing Machines, which has been in constant use for the past fifteen (15) years. It has never been repaired, and to-day is in perfect order, and is equal for all kinds of work to any machine I have yet seen. It has been used in making beavy clothing, besides doing all manner of family sewing, and I think it gets better every day.

Toronto, Ontario. Mrs. Joan Scales.

THE PURIFICATION TREE.

Thus name may properly be given to the South American Soap-Tree, the bank of which, after maceration, neutralizes any kind of pollution that clings to the garments, and restores to them their original purity and beauty. As an ingredient of the celebrated Sozonowr, it produces the same effect upon all impurities of the teeth, and fortifies them against discoloration and decay.—[Com.]

To remove Moru Parcens, Presences, and Tas from the face, use Perry's Moru and Percent Lorico. Prepared only by Dr. B. C. Perry, 49 Bond St., N. Y. Sold by all Druggists.—(Core.)

Description Taxones core Indigestion, Hearthurn, and Sour Stemach. Fifty Cents per Box. Mailed for 60c. Sold by druggists. S. G. Wessen, 571 Broadway.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

A Jubilee Number!

See Pictorial PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL for Juny! Now Bendy. Besides portraits of distinguished characters—self-made men, scholars, philosophers, ortists, &c.—It has both elvinsed and savage, estacemen and cannibels. A Foress or July Country, Hall, Columbia: Star-Spangled Banner: My Country, the of Thee; and The Red, White, and Blue, with sorage all set to main. Only 30 cents, or $3 a year-with either of Harper's, $0. New Volume. Address S. R. WELLS, 889 Broadway, N. Y.

CATARRH.

Bad, leathsome disease. One third of the people suffer from Cetarrh until Dyspepsia, Livee Complaint, and Consumption bring them to the grave. Physicians do not understand the complaint, nor can they cure it: but WOLCOTT'S ANNIHILATOR, in plut bottles, eradicates this dithy complaint from the cunctitution. Sold at all Drug Stores, or six pluts sent free of express charges on receipt of $8, or one plat of WOLCOTT'S PAIN PAINT, for Pain or Lameness. Address R. L. WOLCOTT, 181 Chatham Square, N. Y.

THE CELEBRATED ENUINE ORCIDE GOLD WATCH CO., Genera, Switzerland,

MANUEL CO., Geneva, Switzerland,

Manufacture Watches with the atmost precision. They have all the beilliancy, durability, and appearance of the most rare and costly description of genuine Goud Howard-Casa Watches. Railvood Conducto ors, Espinsors, Expression, the most exacting of our customers, have thoroughly demonstrated the strength, durability, accuracy, and utility of the
FAC-SIMILE WALTHAM
WATCHES, and pronounced ty, accuracy, and stillity of the PACS-IMILE WALTHAM WATCHES, and pronounced them invaluable as reliable in the PACS-IMILE WALTHAM WATCHES, and pronounced them invaluable as reliable in the part of them invaluable as reliable in the part of the part of them invaluable as reliable in the part of the part o

SUPERIOR HOME EDUCATION

Near London (England). For Prospectus, apply to No. 45 South Washington Square, New York.

BOLLOWAY'S PILIS—Facts to be flowers, bered.—Low spirits, declining appetite, indigention, and drapepsia, are specifily exchanged for robust health by the use of these most excellent medicines.

FOR BOSTON

PALL RIVER, DIRECT.
THE WORLD-RENOWNED STEAMERS

BRISTOL and PROVIDENCE,

COMMANDER BRAYTON, COMMANDER SIMMONS, WILL LEAVE (Altermate Days) DAILY,

FROM PIER 30 NORTH RIVER,
(Foot of Chambers Street),
— AT 5 P.M.—
DODWORTH'S CKLEBRATED ORCHESTRA,
Including bress, string, and reed bands, will be attached to each steamer on his passage.

Grand Promenade Concert

EVERY EVENING.
THIS IS THE ONLY LINE RUNNING A SUNDAY NIGHT BOAT.

One of the above steamers will STOP at NEWPORT every SATURDAY night, and returning will leave NEWPORT SUNDAY night.

To facilitate up-town travel, on and after MONDAY, the First iost, the magnificent ferry-beat JAY GOULD will leave FOOT OF 23D STREET (North Riser), at 4:45 P.M., making direct connection with the above steamers. TICKETS SOLD AND BAGGAGE CHECKED THROUGH.

FOR THE BETTER ACCOMMODATION OF THE PUBLIC.

THE SPLENDID STEAMERS, NEWPORT and OLD COLONY COMMANDER MILLER COMMANDER LEWIS,

WILL LEAVE (Alternate Days) BAILT, (Sundays excepted),
FROM PIER—28—NORTH RIVER,
(Foot of Marray Street),
——AT 6130 P.M.,

BOSTON via NEWPORT.

PREIGHT received at Pier 80 up to 5 P.M., and at Pier 28 up to 6:00 P.M., each evening. JAMES PISE, Jr., President,

M. R. SIMONS, Managing Director, CHAS. H. VAILE, General Passenger Agent, H. H. MANGAM, Proight Agent, Nazandamser Syramship Company.

LITTLE WOMEN.

Sixteenth Thousand.

The following notice of Mise Alcott's "Little Women," from the Hartford Coward, is a candid expression of an opinion which is entertained by thousands of resders: "Startly one of the most charming living books

THAT HAVE PALLEN ENTO OUR HANDS FOR MANY A DAY. THERE IS FUT RECORD OF SAPRESS OF IT TO MAKE IT TRUE TO LIFE, WHILE IT IS SO PULL OF HOMEST WORK AND WHOLE-GOLLED FEW, PAINTS SO LIVELY A PIGTURE OF A HOME IN WHICH CONTENTMENT, EVERGY, HIGH EPIETTS, AND REAL GOODNESS MAKE UP FOR THE LACK OF MONEY, THAT IT WILL DO GOOD WEREEVER IT FINTE ITS

Sold every where. Malled, postpaid, by the

ROBERTS BROTHERS,

BOSTON.

CYPRESS HILLS CEMETERY. OPPICE, No. 124 BOWERY, N. Y., (Corner of Grand Street).

OFFICERS:

EDMUND DRIGGS, President,
A. S. JARVIS, Vice-President,
WILLIAM MILES, Tressurer, WILLIAM EDWARDS, Serretary,
HERVEY G. LAW, WM. J. PRASE, JOHN
I. VAN ALST, ALFRED M. WOOD, Trustees,
N. G. PALWEE, Surveyor, Serveyor,
Serveyor N. G. PALMER, Sup't and Surveyor.

$100 to $250 per Month purewished. Sure pos-every where selling our Patent Everlands White Wise Clothes Lines, Call at, or write for partituines to the Grard Wire Mills, 201 North Third St., Philadelphia, Pa.

For European Tourists.

HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK, Appl just ready?

SIGHTS AND SENSATIONS IN FRANCE, GER-MANY, AND SWITZERLAND; or, Experiences of in American Journalist in Europe. By Etwazn Green Berstus, Author of "Six Months in the Gold Mines," &c. 18mo, Cloth, $180.

THREE SEASONS IN EUROPEAN VINEYARDS.
Treating of Vine-Culture: Vine Disease and its Cure; Wine-Making and Wines, Red and White:

THE OLD WORLD IN ITS NEW PACE: Impre-sions of Europe to 1867–1868. By the Rev. Hanay W Bullown, D.D. In Two Volumes. Huns, Cloth, 28 M

HARPER'S HAND BOOK FOR TRAVELLERS IN EUROPE AND THE EAST. Being a Guide through France, Beigium, Holland, Germany, Ana-teis, Italy, Sielly, Egypt, Syria, Turkey, Greece, Switzerland, Tyrel, Riosia, Deamark, Sweden, Spoin, and Greet Britain and Ireland. By W. Pizz-rances Farmance, Large Same, Half Leather, Pocket-Book Form, $7 80.

HARPEES PHRASE-BOOK: or, Hand-Book of Travel Talk for Travellers and Schools. Being a Guide to Conversations in English, French, German, and Italian, on a New and Improved Method. In-invaded to accompany "Harper's Hand-Book for Travellers." By W. Fennance Frances. Assisted by Professors of Heidsbirg University. With con-cise and explicit Rules for the Pronunciation of the different Languages. Square 4to, Flexible Cioth, §1 20.

ESF HARPER & BROTHERS will send any of the above works by reall, poetage proposid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of the price.

Removed to 335 Broadway. THE COLLINS $15.

WATCH FACTORY.

THE PROPERTY

$20.

The Collins Metal and Jewelry Factory has re-moved from 37 Nassan Street to their spirudid New Offices,

No. 335 BROADWAY.

These superior Watches have now been in use over three years, and give universal saciefaction; and shibough sold at so moderate a prior, are not surpassed in appearance and for time by gold onas costing $300 and $200. They have been greatly improved, but the prior examins the same, $15. Those of extra fine faish, $20. Gents' and Ladina' sines. Jewelry of the richest styles, in every respect equal to the finest gold, at one-teach the prior. We have but

ONE OFFICE, NO AGENTS,

and are not responsible for the bogus and worth-less goods sold at cheap jewelry establishments. Our Pactory is the ONLY PLACE where the Gen-nine Collins Metal Watches and Jewelry can be

C. E. COLLINS & CO.,

No. 335 Broadway, cor. Worth Street,

BALLOUS MONTHLY. CHEAPEST MAGAZINE IN THE WORLD.

Our HUNDERD Pages of choice and entertaining STORIES, ADVENTURES, SCHLAIS, PORMS, and FINE IL-LOUTEATHONS IN every number, making

10 Tex 56

TWELVE HUNDRED PAGES BACH YEAR, for the low price of Aftern cents, or One Dollah and First Caste a year.

 Sold by all Newsdealers, or sent one year by the publishers upon receipt of $1.50, or seven copies for $5.00; thirteen copies, $15.00. A specimen sent upon receipt of 10 cents. Address

ELLIOTT, THOMES, & TALBOT,

MONTHLY NOVELETTE.

SPLENDIDLY ILLUSTRATED.

SPLENDIDLY ILLUSTRATED.

The most attractive series of Novess ever collected by one publisher. They embrace thesaty of Survana Coas, Jr.'s most thrilling Novels, also let by Dr. J. H. Hostnaso, together with the chainest productions of Denivace, Leet. Memary, Dr. J. B. Westnass, Hen. Gusav, &c., etc., each being complete in one number. A new Novelette is issued every mouth, and each book contains, besides the finely-illustrated Novel, from three to fire short stories and poems by the best magazine writers.

Sold by all Newsdealers, or sent by mail, postpaid, upon receipt of $6 cents each—5 copies, $1.90; or to subscribers at $5.00 per year—4 copies, $6.00.

Address ELLIOTT, THOMES, & TALBOT, Boston, Mass.

PIANOS and ORGANS.

Priors greatly reduced for Cast. New Seven-Octave Planos, of first-class makers, for $45 and upward. Secondand Planos, Melodeoms, and Organs from $40 to $12, at $61 Broadway, N. Y.

BORACE WATERS.

IMPROVED ALUMINIUM BRONZE HUNTING-CASED WATCHES.

The Improved Aluminium Bronne is a metal differing entirely from any ever offered to the public. He qualities and resemblance to Gold are such that even judges have been deceived. It has seriously occupied the attention of edestrice men, and has not only called forth the calogiums of the news in consequence of its called forth the enlogitums of the peess in consequence of its peculiar properties, but has also obtained a Gold Medal at the Paris Expectation.

The inovements are well financially regulated, and as all these goods are manufactured in my own factory, I am enabled to warrant them as excellent time-keepers.

Proce whose gift to $22.

Further details will be found in my pamphlet, which will be sent, postparid, on demand.
Goods sent by Express, C. O. D., with charges.
Address JULES D. HUGUENIN VUILLEMIN,
No. 46 Nasaan Street, New York.

IMMERSE SALE IN PROSPECT! -- NEW CHURCH MUSIC BOOK. THE CHORAL TRIBUTE:

By L. O. EMERSON, Author of "Harp of Judah," "Jubilate," &c. ENTIRELY NEW MUSIC. 466 pages. The best book of Church Mode ever offered to Choirs, Singing-Schooks, and Conventions. Frice $150: $1350 per dos. Sent postpoid. To be ready in July. Specimen sheets sent free to any address on application. O. BITSON & CO., Boston; C. H. BITSON & CO., New York.

CHILDREN'S CARRIAGES. - Prices A $90 Carriage for $85. LEWIS P. TIRBALA, 478 Broadway, below Broome St.

BOOKS FOR THE COUNTRY.

HARPER & BROTHERS, New York, Publish the following Works:

ROOSEVELT'S FIVE ACRES TOO MUCH. Five Acres Too Much. A Trainful Elucidation of the Attractions of the Country, and a Caroful Consideration of the Question of Profit and Lose as involved in Amateur Pairming, with much valuable Advice and Instruction to those about Purchasing Large or Small Pinces in the Rand Districts. By Resister B. Roosevers, Author of "Game Fish of North America," "Superior Fishing," "Game Birds," &c. With Connecteristic Illustrations, 18mo, Cloth, $1.50.

FLAGG'S EUROPEAN VINEYARDS. Three Seasons in European Vineyards. Treating of Vine-Culture: Vine Liferage and in Care; Wine-Making and Wines, Red and White; Wine-Drinking as affecting Health and Morals. By William J. Flags. 12mo, Cloth. 5126.

SCOTT'S PISHING-BOOK. Pishing in American Waters. By Gesse C. Scows. With 170 lilinstra-tions. Crown 8vo, Cloth, $2 50.

MEAD'S GRAPE CULTURE. An Elementary Treatise on American Grape Culture and Wine-Haking. By Perce B. Mean. Profusely Hinstrated. 6vo, Cloth, 55 64.

VAUX'S ARCHITECTURE. Villas and Colleges: A Series of Beeges prepared for Execution in the United States. By Carver Vaes, Architect date Downess & Vatn. New Edition, Berlied and Re-larged. Illustrated by nearly 500 Engravings. Syn, Cloth, $8.00.

THE AMERICAN HOME GARDEN. Being Principles and Rules for the Culture of Vegetables, Profits, Plowers, and Shrubbery. To which are added brief Notes on Farm Crops, with a Table of their average Product and Chemical Constituents. By American Warner, Several Hundred Illustrations. 18tho, Cloth, $6 00.

WOOD'S HOMES WITHOUT HANDS: being a Description of the Habitations of Animala, classed according to their Principles of Construction. By J. G. Wood, M.A., F.L.S., Author of "Hinstration Salural History." With short 140 Hinstrations engineed on Wood by G. Pearson, from Original Designs made by F. W. Kayl and E. A. Smith, ander the Anthor's Superincendence. See, Cloth, Beyeled Edges, 34 50.

EST HARTER & BROTHERS will send uses of the above works by mail, posture free, to any part of the United States, on receipt of the price.

C. C. PARKS & CO., Bankers and Brokers,

No. 38 Broad and 34 New Sts., New York.

$20 A DAY to Male and Female

Agents to introduce the BUCKEYE $10 SHUTTLE SEWING MACHINES. Scitch slike on both eides, and is the only Licensked SHUTTLE MACHINE in the market sold for less than 8th. All others are infringements, and the seiler and user are liable to prosecution and imprisonment. Full particulars free.

Address W. A. HENDERSON & CO.,
Cleveland, Ohio.

PARLOR STRAM ENGINE: made entire-by of Metal; Boller and Furnace complete; will work for hours if supplied with water, &c., free from danger; a child can work it. Sent frie, with instruc-tions, for $1.00. Address WALTER HOLT. No. 105 Nassau Street, New York.

CURL YOUR HAIR!

A SAMPLE of PROPESSOR ROBES NAGNETS: A CURLIQUE sent PREE, it carls straight bair (without injury) in roft, luxeriase, beautiful, fewering carls, or mar room arcularross. Address, with Strans, PROF. B. H. HOBB, PARNHAM, OUIO.

DO YOUR OWN PRINTING. Cheapest and Best Portable Presses.

MEN AND BOYS MAKING MONEY. Price of Presses, $8, $12, $15. Offices, $15, $20, $30. Send for a circular to LOWE PRESS CO., 15 Spring Lane, Boston, Mass.

VELOCIPEDIOLOGY-The Tale of a Travel v. A curious book for inquisitive people. 400 pages, elegantly bound in cioth and gift. Sew your buttons on fast before sending for the hook, enclosing postage stamp and address to the publisher, T. W. EVANS & CO., 41 So. Eighth St., Philadelphia.

G unpowder, Best quality of SPORTING and BLASTING POWDER manufactured by the SCHAGHTICOKE CO., Schaghtleoke, N. Y.

$15 A DAY, Samples Free, Address, with stamp, RAND & CO., Biddeford, Me.

FINE WATCHES AT IMPORTERS' PRICES.

HUNTENI-CASE LADIES' WATERES, First Quality, Lever Movement, Pull-Joweled, Adjusted Balance, Regulated and Warranted, 808. Lapine Novement, Gold Bal-nes, 808.

and Warrantee, 808. Leptic Movement, Gold Balsinc, $50. Fine Silver General Movement, First Quality, $14: Extra Quality, $16.
IMPERIAL, DUPLEX
Engraved Movement, Buby Jewels, Sweep Seconds, Bilver Henrison Cases, $16.

AMERICAN MOVEMENT
Son. Silver Cases, $10: Fail Jewels, $16.

Son. Solver Cases, $10; Full Jeweled, $16.

SOLIO GOLD

Gester Heavisso-Cast Wartenes, First Quality, Lever Mewement, Full Jeweled, Adjusted Balance, Regulated and Warranted, $20; Exten Quality, $28; and Watches of creey description, equality low, each by Express, to be paid for after they have been received and examined. Any Watchercerived from its may be returned or exchanged if not giving perfect satisfaction. Full Descriptive Price-Line seat free.

S. H. MOORE & CO., Importers, 52 & 54 JOHN ST., NEW YORK.

A GREAT HIT.

THE VELOCIPEDE SONG, stang with immense secrees by Miss Lylin Thompson, in "Slinbad," at Nilhlo's Garden — Price 40c. We publish all of the Movie from "Sloubed," including the CAN-CAN QUABRILLE of the Clodoche Truspe... Frice 60c.

WM. A. POND & CO., 5st Becodway.

SWEET
QUININE

Sweet Quining to increased equal—dose for dose—to the sulphate thitter) Quining, with the important edvantage of belag sweet, increased of bitter.

SVAPNIA

SVAPNIA

SVAPNIA

SVAPNIA to Orion Printerin of the sickwales and protectoria properties; it is the most perfect Assuming and protectoria Contart yet discovered.

STEARNS, FARR, & CO., Chemiste, New York.

$10 PER DAY GUARANTEED

Agents to sell the Hoset Suttrite Sewing Machine. It makes the now surreit, shake on both fitter, has the under-feed, and acquait in every respect to any Sewing Machine ever invested. Price 25°. Warranted to byears, Send for circular, Address Joneson, Chang, & Co., Boston, Mass., Pittsburgh, Pa., or St. Lozie, Mo.

DEAFNESS, CATARRII, SCROFTLA.

A lady who lad suffered for years from Deafstess, Catarth, and Scrofula, was cared by a simple remedy.
Her sympathy and gratitude prompts her to rend its receipts free of charge to any one similarly afficied, Address Mas. M. C. LEGGETT, Hobeken, N. J.

Agents! Read This! WE WILL PAY AGENTS A SALARY of $30 per week and expenses, or allow a large commission, to sed our new and wonderful investions. Address M. WAGNER & CO., Merchalt, Mi. b.

EMPLOYMENT And perm. For particulars, address S. M. SUENCER & CO., Bratilebore, Vo. $3500 Per Year to sell " Finder of the Field."
Address J. C. Tieres, Pittsburgh, Pa.

$3000 Salary. { U.S. PIÁNO CO., N. Y.

TERMS FOR 1869.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE, One Year $4 00 HARDER'S WRESLY, Our Year..... 4 00 Harder's Baran, Our Year..... 4 00

Harren's Baras. Our Year........ 4 09
Harren's Massation, Harren's Werklay, and Harren's Barax, he still address, for one year, $20 00; or any two her $7 00.

An Bates Ogo of either the Madazion, Werkley, or Barax will be supplied graits for two, class of Firm Sensormous at $4 00 onch, to one resultinger; or, the Capter for $20 00, or threat eather sept.

The Postage within the United States is for the Madazion 24 cents a voir, for the Weinley or Baran 20 cents a year, payable yearly, sensi-yearly, or discharly, at the office whom are received. Subscriptions from the Deminion of Canada meet be recommended with 24 cents additional for the Madazion, or 20 rends for the Weinley or Baran, to prepay the United States
postage.

The Volumes of the Manaziwe cremmence with the Numbers for Jupe and Beccasher of each year. Subscriptions may commence with say Number. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the subscribe wisher to begin with the first Number of the correct Volume, and back Numbers will be sent the correct Volume, and back Numbers will be veril accordingly.

The Volumes of the Waxen's creatorness with the year. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the voluer beauty which to commence with the Number next after the receipt of his order.

Schoenthers to the Mananess, Wickley, or Bazak will find on each wanger the Number with which their subscription expires. Each periodical is stooped when the term of subscription closes. It is not necessary to give indice of discontinuatere.

In remitting by mail, a Post-Office Order or Draft, parable to the order of Haura & Racaretas is preferable to Bank Notes, since, should the Order or Draft be lest or stolen, it can be reserved without loss to the sender.

the sender.
In ordering the Manazine, the Werker, or the Bazan, the name and address should be elearly written. When the direction is to be changed, both the old and the new one must be given.

Tenes you Appreciated in Barpen's Personneaus. Herper's Manarine, —Whole Page, $530; Half Proce, $130; Quarter Page, $50—arch Insertion; or, for a bos space, $1 50 per Line, each insertion.

Harper's Wookly.—Inside Pages, $1 50 per Line; Onside Pages, $1 60 per Line—arch Insertion.

Harper's Manar.—$1 60 per Line—arch Insertion.

$1 20 per Line—arch Insertion.

Address HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

COUNTRY HOTEL COMFORTS

or Close (Clothes') Quarters.

VISITOR. "Why, how Comfortable you must be with so much Room! We were not so fortunate.

FRIEND. "Yes; but we engaged these Six Months ago. These Choice Rooms are very Expensive, though."

GOING UP TOWN!

On the 1st of Angust we shall remove to 747 BROADWAY, near 8th St., and now offer our present stock of

CHINA, GLASS, AND FANCY GOODS at very low prices.

Davis Collamore & Co., 479 Broadway, near Broome St.

IMPORTANT FACT.

We see that persons of strong constitutions, and young, suffer for days with pains of the limbs, loss of appetite, and fever, who suddenly get well after a colic followed by slimy, billous stools. The relief produced by these evacuations were the original guide to the idea and practice of purgation, and which, when enforced by Brandreth's Pills, always benefits, usually cures, and often prevents disease, especially Scarlet. Fever and diseases of similar character.

I. L. Cook, publisher of the "State Banner," Bennington, Vt., says Brandreth's Pills cared him of Dys-pepsia, after being afflicted with it over five years. His friends and doctors considered his recovery impossible: but six boxes of Brandreth's Pills restored his health perfectly.

A young lady of Mount Pleasant was sorely troubled. with Tape-Worm. All advice and medicine failed to help her. She had no rest. This, carewors, and unhappy, she looked the picture of misery. At last she concluded to try Brandreth's Pills. In one year she took seventy-two boxes. They brought away, according to her computation, over two hundred yards of tape-worm. At length all her had symptoms left her; she elept and ste naturally, and her health became

TO SPORTSMEN!!

A very superior selection of fine Brosch-Louding SHOT-GUNS, BIFLES, and PISTOLS, SHOT-GUNS, HIPLES, and PISTOLS, of our own Manufacture and Importation. PISHING TACKLE, POCKET CUTLERY, and Sportsmen's Articles. Sole Agents for W. R. PAPE'S Celebrated Muzzle and Breech Londers. MERWIN & HULDERT, Circulars supplied.] 285 Brendway N.Y.

A BALSAMIC HAIR RENEWER.

Mr. Ws. Hasson, of Bergen City, Hudson County, New Jersey, says: "For a number of years my half has been falling out, but since using HARRY'S TRE-COPHEROUS the falling has crused, and the hair has become vigorous and strong."

9 9 9 9 9 9 9 9 9 $1 Given Away!

and steady employment for either st.4 paying $10 a day the year round. Address B. U. Chappell, Chicago.

$2000 A YEAR AND EXPENSES to Agents, to introduce the Wilson Sewing Machine. Seitch alike on both sides. Samples on two weeks' trial. Extra inducements to experienced agents, For further particulars, address the WILSON SEWING MACHINE CO., Cleveland, Ohio: Boston, Mass.; or St. Louis, Mo.

NAZARETH HALL, Moravian Board-log, 8t Nazareth, Northampion Co., Pa. For Cata-logues, apply to Rav. EUGENE LETHERT, Principal.

BEAUTIFUL WOMAN .-- If you would be beautiful, use HAGAN'S MAGNOLIA BALM.

It gives a pure, blooming complexion and restores youthful beauty. Its effects are gradual, natural, and perfect.

It removes Rèdness, Blotches, and Pimples, cures Tan, Sunburn, and Freckles, and makes a lady of thirty appear but twenty.

The MAGNOLIA BALM makes the skin smooth and pearly, the eye bright and clear, the cheek glow with the bloom of youth, and imparts a fresh, plump appearance to the countenance. No lady need complain of her complexion when 75 cents will purchase this delightful article.

The best article to dress hair is Lyon's Ka-THAIRON.

What is Life without Health? "It is wethires," any the pale dropouts. True; but health is within your reach. A few does of Tanasw's Expressivescent Service. Arometer restores your digestion, your appetite, your cheeffulness, and taken as an occasional alterniive it will keep the system in perfect order.

SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

STAMMERING cured by Eater Appliances. For Paraphlet, address Simpson & Co., Box 5016, N.Y.

The Reason why Every One can obtain a Haines Piano:

The price will come within the means of all classes, as they make several sizes and styles to suit all classes. Constantly on hand Pianos ranging in price from $300 to $1000, all of which contain all the modern improvements, and are warranted for Seven Years. For further proof of the popularity of these Pianos, see Revenue Returns for Year coding April 1st, 1869, in which HAINES BRO'S sold 1135 The selling of 1135 Piance in one year alone shows the partiality shown these favorite Pianos. Catalogues sent on application to

HAINES BROTHERS, 46 East 14th Street, New York.

MAGIC DIAMOND

A recent discovery that steel, when made to rotate upon gless and similar substances, will cut with more rapidity and case, and is

Cheaper, Better, and More Durable than the

BEST DIAMOND

Invaluable to every Family. NO TOOL-CHEST COMPLETE WITHOUT IT. Sent free by mail on receipt of price, $3 each. AGENTS WANTED, Address

J. Russell & Co.,

Green River Cutlery Works, 83 BERRMAN STREET, New York City.

NATURE'S GREAT RESTORER.

GREEN MOUNTAIN MINERAL SPRING WA-

TER, Mount Holly, Vt.

This calebrated water cures Dyspepsia, Rheumatiam, Piles, Scrobila, Urinary Diseases, and Female Weaknesses. "It is a toult and general builder-up of the system." Send for Descriptive Circular. Soil by Dyspepsia.

McKESSON & ROBBINS, No. 91 Pulton St., N.Y., GEO, C. GOODWIN & CO., Boston, Mass., Agents. F. FENN & CO., Propeletors, Hutland, Vt.

If you wish to obtain a Genuine Waltham Watch, at the Genuine Walthum Watch, at the lowest possible price and without any risk whatever, send for our descriptive Price List, which explains the different kinds, gives weight and quality of the Cases, with prices of each.

Silver Hunting Watches, $18.

Gold Hunting Watches, $19.

Every Watch warranted by special certificate. Single Watches sent by Express to any part of the country with the privilege to open the package and examine ilege to open the package and examine the Watch before paying. Send for a Price List, and please state in what Pa-per you saw this notice. Address, in full, HOWARD & CO., Jewelers and Silversmiths, No. 619 Broadway, N. Y.

MANN'S DOUBLE TROLLING SPOON.

Trolling Balt stands unequaled for catching lies, Pickerel, Bass, de. It is far superior to any single spoon ever invented. ISC. each. JOHN H. MANN, Syracuse, N. Y.

FOUNTAINS, VASES, and GARDEN OBNAMENTS. JANES, KIRTLAND, & CO., 8, 10, & 12 Read St., New York.

BORE BETTER IMPORTED.

£150,000,000

Sterling, Unclaimed Money and Estates Registry, commencing 1600. Fee to search for any name, $2. Gow & Co., 6 Prince of Wales Road, London, England.

ADDRESS TO SMOKERS.

In reply to the many inquiries made daily in regard to Meerschaum Pipes, we wish to state that we recommend, especially for home and affice see, the plain Munigariam and Egg Bowis, with Welchaed Stems. They hold the most tobeco, and are the most durable and particular loss, being the eariest to clean. Or the Hamburg Bowis, having the largest surface to show color. For travelling and street smoking, we recommend the London Straight and London Bend.

Being represented extensively throughout the country by our goods, we are desireus to have our Pipes—which are considered equaled by none—still more extensively used by those who relish a good smoke, and find Cigars too expensive. Therefore we have reduced our prices to the following:

We will sell a No. 3 Pipe for $5, and charge $1 additional for every number algher? therefore No. 4 roots $6; No. 8, $10; No. 13, $10, $4c. Pipes from No. 4 to No. 8 are considered fair-sized ones; from No. 9 upward, large ones. In the price is included a Case and Stem.

Nice Amber Monthpieces for Weicheel Stems we are selling from $10 to $5 a piece.

We send by Expects to collect on delivery, amount and charges; but suggest that the amount be sent in Registered Letter or Post-Office Money Order in advance, to save crusiques that the amount be sent in Registered Letter or Post-Office Money Order in advance, to save crusiques that the amount be sent and the process of the same of the same was exceptived by the respective commissions in Emmes, generales Moerachams, and to color, and will readily give every information in regard to it, based on thirty sours' experience in the trade, having received our Diploma in 1930 by the respective commissions in Emmes, and we will ever unbold the fair fame we have acquired in the introduction of the MANUFAC-TURE OF GENUIDE MEERSCHAUM GOODS into this country.

We cut Pipes and Cigar-Beiders of any shape or design, mount them, do repairing, brilling, and polishing. Also, Amber Work done. And, main of all, do not charges exerbitant prices. For reference

POLLAK & SON, Manufacturers of Genuine Meerschaum Goods. STORES: 519 Broadway, St. Nicholas Hotel, and 27 John St., 27 John. SEND FOR DIAGRAMS, CIRCULAR, AND PRICE-LIST TO LETTER BOX 5848.

Boys' Velocipedes,

5 Wheels, $15 to $25, for Boys from 6 to 15 years. Safe, Cheap, and Durable. Trade Discount, SMITH, MORSE, & CO., 508 Broadway, N. Y.

DRUNKENNESS—C. C. C. Bruns, M. D., Boston, Mass., cores
the most helphass cases. Send stamp for swidence.

Fresh Summer Books

PUBLISHED BY

HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK.

Est by Mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of the price.

SIGHTS AND SENSATIONS IN FRANCE, GER-MANY, AND SWITZERLAND; or, Experiences of an American Journalist in Europe. By Enwand Goold Berring, Author of "The Paristans," "Six Months in the Gold Mines," &c. 18ma, Cloth, $1 50,

FIVE ACRES TOO MUCH. A Truthful Elucida-tion of the Attractions of the Country, and a Care-ful Consideration of the Question of Frost and Loss as involved in Amster Farming, with much Valu-able Advice and Instruction to those about Furchas-ing Large or Small Places in the Rural Districts, By Rossaw B. Roccever, Author of "Game Fish of North America," Superior Fishing, "Game Birds," &c. With Characteristic Illustrations, 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

THREE SEASONS IN EUROPEAN VINEYARDS.
Treating of Vine-Culture; Vine Disease and its Cure; Wine-Making and Wines, Red and While; Wine-Drinking as affecting Health and Morala. By William J. Flaco. 18mo, Cloth, $1.50.

THE STUDENT'S SCRIPTURE HISTORY. The Old Testament History. From the Creation to the Return of the Jews from Capitvity. Edited by Wallace Serve, LLD. With Maps and Woodcrate. Large 18mc, Cloth, $2.00. Uniform with The Smident's New Testament History, a New Edition of which is test reads.

THE WEDDING DAY IN ALL AGES AND COUNTRIES. By Enward J. Woos, Author of "The Curjostites of Clocks and Watches from the Earlest Times," and "Glants and Dwarfs." 12mo, Cloth, $1 20.

THE MALAY ARCHIPELAGO: The Land of the Orang-Uran and the Bird of Paradise. A Narrative of Travel, with Studies of Man and Nature. By Alpan Russin Wallaco, Author of "Travels on the Amason and Rio Negro," "Palm Trees of the Amason," &c. With Ten Maps and Fifty-one elegant Illustrations. Crown Evo, Cloth, $3 50.

FISHING IN AMERICAN WATERS. By Gereo C. Scott. With 170 Historicas. Crown 8vo, Cloth, $3 50.

HARPER'S HAND BOOK FOR TRAVELLERS IN EUROPE AND THE EAST. Being a Guide through France, Beigium, Holland, Germany, Aus-tra, Italy, Egypt, Syria, Turkey, Greece, Switzer-land, Tyrol, Russia, Denmark, Sweden, Spain, and Great Britain and Ireland. With a Enlirost Man corrected up to 1869. By W. Pannsoke Fattungs, Bevised Edition: Seventh Year. Large 12mo, Leath-er, Pocket-Book Form, $7.59.

HARPER'S PHRASE-BOOK; or, Hand-Book of Travel Talk for Travellers and Schools. Being a Guide to Conversations in English, French, German, and Italian, on a New and Improved Method. In-tended to accompany "Hasper's Hand-Book for Travellera." By W. Prasanous Faranous. Assisted by Professors of Heidelberg University. With con-cise and explicit Ruises for the Pronunciation of the different Languages. Square 16mo, Flexible Cloth, 31 50.

The New Novels

PERSONAL PROPERTY.

HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK.

STRETTON. A Novel. I / Haway Kirsas. zr., Author of "Heity," "Geoffrey Hamlyn," "Ravenshoe," &c., &c. Svo, Paper, 40 cants.

THE SACRISTAN'S HOUSEHOLD. A Story of Lippe-Definoid. By the Author of "Mabel's Prog-ress," "Aunt Margaret's Trouble," &c. With Illus-trations by C. G. Bush. See, Paper, 75 cents.

THACKERAY'S NOVELS-

New Edition, beautifully printed, with the Author's own Illustrations.

VANITY FAIR. A Novel Without a Hero. Illustrated. Complete in One Volume, Svo, Paper. Price FIFTY CENTS.

THE VIRGINIANS. A Tale of the Last Century. Complete in One Volume, Svo, Paper, with nearly 100 Engravings. Price SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS. THE NEWCOMES. Memoirs of a Most Respecta-ble Family. Edited by Arthur Pendennis, Eeq. With 168 Illustrations. In One Volume, Paper, 8vo. Price SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS.

FOT HARREN & BROTHERS will insist immediate New Editions of Thackeray's other Nevels, Illustra by the Author, at correspondingly less prices.

CHARLES READE'S NOVELS:

HARD CASH. Illustrated. Svo, Paper, 35 cents. GRIFFITH GAUNT; or, Jeniousy. Blustrated. IT IS NEVER TOO LATE TO MEND. Sec, Pa-

To be followed by Charles Reads's other Novels.

ANTHONY TROLLOPE'S LAST NOVELS:
PHINEAS FINN, the Irish Member. Illustrated by Millale. 8to, Paper, $3 25: Cloth, $1 18.
HE KNEW HE WAS RIGHT. Complete. With 64
Illustrations by Marcus Stone. 8to, Paper, $1 00; Cloth, $1 50. Fart IL, separately, Paper, 50 cents.

EF HARRE & BROTTERS will send any of the above books by mest, postage free, to any part of the United States, on receipt of the price.

THE REISSUE OF

HARPERS WEEKLY. OURNAL OF CIVILIZATION:

Vol. XIII.—No. 654.]

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, JULY 10, 1869.

Satered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1400, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the United States, for the Southern District of New York

THE MEMORY OF SEVENTY-SIX.-DRAWS BY W. S. L. JEWETT.-[SEE PAGE 434.]

THE MEMORY OF SEVENTY-SIX.

Pagron an old man who was a soldier in his youth— Who fought in Seventy-six -if he thinks that he lived, in truth, In the Heroic Age of the Nation. For he knows no time so grand As that of the Revolution—the Seed time of the Land. In this thought no later heroes have such bright learning

That they should stand by the side of his peerless Washington.

No! The old battles were the greatest—the old heroes were the best! So be comes to his rusty rifle, and recalls the martial

That moved him and his cumrades, at Concord and Banker 100, To meet and fight the British with firm, undaunted will.

lik children have beard the story, and now their children best: One sits apon his knee; the others are gathered mar, two little muiden wearing the Continental hal, While thartie, thinking of "the Fourth," or inspired by Grandpo's chal, Fashious his wooden award—the feroclous little

He wonders if the British would stand another fight?

It is a long, long story that the old soldier tells Is the period spon which most lovingly he dwells be hot that of final victory, but those hard days of the war— liefers the French came over, and when hope seemed very for --lays of Seventy-six that tried the stamest men, The days of Seventy-six that tried the stamest men, When the Patrices retreated, beaten again and again, brises out from Long Island and beyond the Dela-

And recomped at Valley Forge in that winter of

"But what year the old war fie?" asks Charlie, wonderingly.

"I will tell you in a word," answers Grandpa:

"Linerty! Liberty and Ladependence bursh words to tyrants"

At head to King Gastree and his Lords they seemen ro. For 't appears That the lary old Lords wasted so much of the people's

That they had to opposes their poor and e'en to tax the Colonies.

They tried to sell stamped paper, but their agents

we sent hours.
They voted a tax on bear and the products of the

But the tests which they sent over wore in Boston Marker throws, And our citizens grew content with suits of plate buse-quin. the "Hed-coate" came, and were quartered in the between of the free-born, And the blood of New Eurland rose up, and ber face was finded with soon.

It was not money we cared for, lad, we fought for the sacred trade.
And what like brutish insolute can touch the strength.

of youth?
The English were not all against us in this field of bloody work: We found therepoons in heave Barry, in Chatham, and in Barke: These were leaders of the people, to whom Liberty

These were resource on the people, to which interry to dear:
And they be used to by their courage, speaking words of friendly closer.
Put Yoshorum and Farstoga, and other victories won, Taught Epitain more than her statemen, and so the work was done. We gained our Independence by deeds and not by Words --Not through compromise, but courage and the strength of our true swords

This is the old man's story; its moral is never too That of Laurers, Hoson, Courses we should never

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, JULY 10, 1869.

THE PARTIES.

FITTHE Peophlican Conventions of Maine, Ohio, and Pennsylvania have lately made their various State nominations, and their action was of the kind that shows great party unanimity. The present Governors of the three States were renominated, and the manifesto of each Convention is mainly a resolution to hold fast by the seats que. Upon the pending Fifteenth Amendment the Ohio and Pennsylvania Conventions are very emphatic, orging its ratification; while Maine having already ratified has sufficiently expressed its opinion. The other resolutions are very much what we suggested last week they were likely to be. The Maine Convention promounced especially for the Legislative care and development of the resources of the State, and particularly of the ship-building Interest, while Pennsylvania reaffirmed its adhesion to its protective resolution of 1866. The Ohio Convention forcibly arraigns the late General Assembly, in which the majority was Democratic. But none of them take any fooli-h position upon the English or Caban ques-Indeed, the platforms are very discreet, and rather cariously free from Buncombe, Simultaneously with the wise action of the Topublish Conventions we have the parhetic ye from the Democratic journals that the conagers of their party are about to show that exacity which for many years they have not nown, and the prayer that some things may be msidered settled even by a Democratic Convention. In the light of experience such a hope and prayer are wholly unreasonable. The instant that the Democratic party drops the appeal to ignorance and projudice which the agitation of the negro question furnishes, the simple inquiry for every voter will be whether the Democratic party is likely to offer a more faithful treatment of the reconstruction policy, and a more generally economical and discreadministration than the Republican party. This is a question to be decided by experience and comparison, and it is one from which the Republican party will certainly not shrink.

It is difficult to speak of Democratic principles and policy; for what are they? Kentucky is a thoroughly Democratic State, because of the disfranchisement of part of the population, which is indeed a Democratic policy. But is there any thing in the condition of Kentucky that is so superior to that of Ohio, for instance, that the people of Ohio should wish to exchange? New York is an overwhelmingly Democratic city, and Chicago is Republican. Is Chicago anxious to fall into Democratic care? Do the people of Ohio and the citizens of Chicago suppose that their taxes would be lighter if they were delivered over to the supervision of Tammany and of Mosers. Swammer, TWEED, and HALL? Has the Democratic party, as such, ever been renowned for superior honesty and economy? Is the character of the great mass of its supporters such as to promise a higher tone in politics? Are the antecedents and training of the party such as to inspire confidence in its devotion to the principles that have triumphed in the war and at the polls?

The very appeals of which we have spoken answer all such questions. The most strenuous and excited exhorter to a change of the tactics of the Democratic party is the New York World. Yet, for obvious reasons, that paper is not a fair representative of the party, and is therefore not trusted, except with great reservation. However clever and sparkling its treatment of political questions may be, it is fult not to express the average feeling of the party. But its position is stronger than it was a year ago. Then it advocated a concession of certain settled points and the nomination of Mr. Chase, with an anti-repudiating platform. In every point its advice was disregarded by the steady old managers, and the World had its rovenge by seriously urging the party to change front at the very moment of the final charge. That advice, of course, recoiled upon it in the curses of its party leaders and associates: but as the rout of its party at the polls was prodigious, despite of the diligent frauds in this State, by which its candidate for Governor was apparently elected, the World had clearly gained the advantage of the position of I-told-yon-so.

Notwithstanding this, however, the World this year goes no further than it went a year It advises its party to assent to the colago, ored vote since it can not prevent it, and to try to persuade some of the new voters to its own side. And it says that if the party can only gain power under the present system it can probably retain it; "so that, after a national victory, the party may not doesn it expedient to deprior the segroes of a franchise which is found to be not incompatible with Democratic ascendency." It then proceeds to speak of recruiting hosts of former Republicans. But is there any Republican who supposes that the country, under the present circumstances, can gain by the ascondency of a party which "may not deem it expedient" to undo the whole work of reconstruction? Is there any conceivable advantage in intrusting the Government of the country to a party which opposed the war and reconstruca upon the principle of equal rights, and which will take into consideration whether that principle shall be set aside or not? So uncertain is this Democratic guerrilla of the sentiment of its party that it merely hopes the managers will not harness dead horses the Democratic coach

But if this party can not even now be trusted not to reopen the whole question of reconstruction, is there any especial reason why it should be trusted even if it declares in its Convention that it regards the question as settled? Is it, as we asked, a more economical party? Is the character of the men whom it has trusted with office hitherto such as to inspire confidence in those whom it may choose to call to position hereafter? Is the political career of Mr. HOFFMAN, for instance, from his preclamation as Mayor of the city making election frauds easy, to his signature as Governor of the State to the Eric bill, such as to persuade any voter who has hitherto distrusted him that he is worthy of confidence and support, or that he has the least part of that firmness which can resist questionable counsels? Or what is the Democratic financial policy except an outery agninst taxation and incessort gibes at the Secretary of the Treasury? What is its position nyon Free Trade? Wait, and see if the Pennsylvania Democratic Convention declares for it; or whether its cry is not still substantially "POLK, DALLAS, and the tariff of" any convenient year.

If the most elaborate slanders against every word and act of the President; if the most aronsing air of affected pity for the weakness of the Cabinet, in which one member alone, the Attorney-General, outweighs in real force most of the latter Democratic Cabinets together: if the most industrious perversions and success could bring the Democratic party into power, its advent might be near. But it is only ! necessary for all honest voters to reflect that the leaders and the mass of that party are what they have been since 1860, and are the heirs of the old traditions, changing their expressions a little to suit the changed exigency of the times, to retain the dominant party in the ascendency which it has so honorably won, and which, upon the whole, it has thus far justified. Not in this generation can the great principles for which three hundred thousand brave men died upon the field of bartle be safely committed to the hands of those who denounced the war, encouraged the rebellion, and supported the dogmas by which it was excused. Parties have deeper roots than temporary policies. But since immediate issues and considerations are always persuasive, let every earnest Hepublican take care that the character of the party does not suffer by any connivance of his.

THE CUBAN CLOUD.

THE vigorous and decisive action of the Administration in dealing with the attempted violations of the laws of the United States meets with general approval. Indeed, the spectacle of the Government idly folding its hands and smiling at the fitting out of hostile expeditions against a friendly power while it was demanding compensation from England for doing the same thing would justly make us the scorn of the world. It is not a question of the justice or injustice of the relative position of Spain and Cuba. If we are to enter into every war upon the side which we consider just, we must withdraw from all treaties of amity and good neigh-borhood with other nations. But if, having neutrality laws, we propose to enforce them honestly until they are repealed, the Government is pursuing the course which is alone cousistent with the honor of the nation

One further step, however, should be taken. There are notorious and persistent efforts made in the city of New York and olsewhere to defy the authority and laws of the United States by fitting out hostile expeditions against a friendly nation. It is the duty, therefore, of the Press dent to issue his proclamation warning offenders that that authority can not be defied with impunity, and exhorting all good citisens to vigilance. To recognize the independence of Cuba would be at least manly. To connive at the revolution, while affecting regard for the faith of treaties and for international comity, would be contemptible. The Administration by its local officers is diligently maintaining the authority of the United States, but there should he no opportunity left for cavilers.

Meanwhile there are two facts to be remark ed: one is the continued haziness of all information from the island of Cuba, and the other is the evident want of active sympathy in the public mind of this country. That Cubs has been shockingly misgoverned, and that if she can secure her independence she may justly do so, is universally conceded; but that the condition and character of the people inspire any fervent expectation of great improvement in the island can not be asserted. Indeed, the original conviction that the movements of "sympathy" proceeded from the party of annexation, and that the consequence of Cuban independence will be annexation and a very needless and perplexing addition to our own cares and prospects, scriously chills the public sentiment in regard to the Cuban revolution. To this must be added the density of the cloud that envelops the island. An expedition arrives upon its shores, and we hope that intelli-gible communication is established, when, to? it vanishes, and we are left to rumors no more satisfactory than before.

There is some kind of Cuban military headquarters somewhere, at which there is apparently the form of a civil government. A large part of the island is undoubtedly in sympathy with the revolution; and in that part, outside of the larger cities and towns, there is probably no government. Taxes are not collected, probably, either by the Spaniards or the Cubans, except in the form of forced loans. Courts of law of either party probably do not administer justice. The country is practically without civil administration, overrun by bands of guerrillas and marauders, which scatter at the approach of regular forces. Both parties are, of course, bitterly exasperated, and the war is really to the death. The Provisional Govern-ment of the Volunteers will soon yield to that of the new Governor-General; and we presume that foreign governments will take no action until that officer arrives and develops his policy.

The demand for recognition of the revolution-nry government by the United States is plainly premature, for nobody will pretend that it exercises the functions of a government at any point accessible to us. Should the operations of the new Governor be buffled and the situation remain as it is, it would, however, become a question whether the concession of belligerent rights to the revolutionists might not be a duty as tending to a solution of the difficulty without involving our own neutrality. It is, however, a question. We have never thought it necessary to inquire into the merits of Mexican revolutions and to pronounce for one party against another; or even to recognise equal belligerent rights, although we were quite sure that a positive position might have enabled a result to be reached. The position in Cuba is, indeed, different, because it is not a civil war but a colonial revolution. But unless the United States intend to become a party to it, whatever their wishes and sympathies, they will properly await events. To concede belligerent rights to the revolutionists in Cuba would be, of course, the first step toward the recognition of Cuban independence. It is a concession which every nation reserves to its discretion and for the common welfare of nations. It is not to be made until the belliourent has acquired some kind of de facto sovereignty beyond mere control within its military lines. It is, indeed, a question of discretic in its truest sense, and will be so regarded, we may be sure, by the Administration.

COTTON SUPPLY.

THE returns which occasionally reach us from the Government of India impart information of the difficulties attending the cultivation of cotton which is of great interest to the growers of it in the United States. The dream has been included in abroad that portions of British India are capable of producing an inexhaustible supply of cotton at prices which defy competition. Recent experience has shown that the Southern States of the Union, with a climate favored by sufficient beat to bring the plant to maturity, and with cold enough to destroy the root, and in their freedom from a regular rainy season, and from long continued and excessive heat, as well as from violent monsoons, possess advantages far superior to those of India,

The cultivation of cotton in the northwestern provinces of India derived its chief stimulus from the recent war in this country. Agra, one of the most important cities of the region, never had a cotton-press until the winter of 1862-63. One, a wooden press, was then erect-ed; and the newness of the cultivation in that district may be inferred from the fact that a Parsee merchant of Indore, nearly four hundred miles off, carried his unpressed cotton to Agra, and after it was formed into bales, had not only to retraverse the road, but in order to reach Bombay, his port of shipment, carry it three hundred miles farther. Now, however, there are twenty-eight presses with iron screws in Agra alone, and they are scattered also in all important centres,

In 1862-68 the cotton grown in those provinces amounted to 114,000,000 pounds. In 1863-64, called the great cotton year, the quantity rose to 132,500,000, but in 1868-69 it fell to 44,187,840 pounds. The reason for this variation is thus given; "In 1867-68 prolonged and unrimely rain injured the plant and destroyed the pods. In 1868-69 an opposite, but more fatal influence, provailed...... the long suspension of rain." In 1867-68 the quantity of land thus cultivated in those provinces was 1,286,817 acres, and the yield only 58,115,120 pounds. In 1868-69 the number of acres under this cultivation was 890,383, and the yield only 44,137,840 pounds, or say 50 pounds per acre. The disparity between this yield and that of the cotton lands in the United States is very large, as our production from 6,600,000 acres, the supposed area under cultivation, is about 190 pounds per acre.

The cotton region of that portion of India of which Agra is now the commercial centre calls upon Great Britain for a railroad to connect Agra with Bombay, which is well situated on the western coast of the peninsula. With this aid successful competition with the United States is promised, notwithstanding the great difficulties of the Indian climate. The length of road to be built on an air line is about 670 miles, but as it deviates into Rajpootan and extends through a difficult country it will be long and expensive. A chief ground assigned for its construction is that most of the cotton ruised in the northwest provinces now goes to Calcutta, on the eastern side of the peniusula, and that it needs to be transported by a long voyage around Cape Comorin; whereas Bombay on the west coast, and has between it and the Red See but one expanse of water, which is traversed by a straight line and at half the expense that attends the transportation from Calcutta. The opening of the Sucz Canal, likely soon to take place, is urged as an additional motive for constructing the road to

We lately showed that the region which sands its cotton by way of Calcutta called also for more railroad accommodation; and it is very evident that an enormous outlay is required to enable Great Britain to procoed satisfactorily in the policy of setting up a serious competitor of America. But the most eurious recommendarian which was pressed upon the Government of India was that of constructing wind-mills for purposes of irrigation-the southwest monsoon to be relied on as the power. . It was expected that wells sixty feet deep would be dug on the high elevations intended for this purpose, and that water would be drawn from this depth and delivered into canals directed toward the cotton lands! This is part of the scheme for meeting the competition of the United States, which is favored with adequate rains, which knows no parching of the surface, and which is well tra-versed with reliroads. We are able to supply Great Britain with better cotton than India can produce, and at lower cost, and her efforts in that direction must result in failure, and particularly when the cotton district in the South comes into full harmony with the situation which the war produced,

Competition in the United States, except when peculiar circumstances exist, will ever keep the price of cotton sufficiently low to meet all the reasonable requirements of the English. Although the English manufacturer is now paying a high price for American cotton, it me recollected that last year much of the English supply was obtained at half the present price, and that when the price rose last year the advantage was not at all shared by the planter, but wholly by others. There is much justice in the remuneration which the planter now enjoys. It covers his losses on the crop of 1867-68, and enables him to supply all the material which is required for an increased cultivation this season. The true interest of England lies in abandoning the vain attempt to build up a powerful competitor against us in India, and in increasing the crop in the United States up to the full measure which the manufacturing industry of the world requires. The cotton region of the United States is fully equal to this necessity, and wants only encouragement to accomplish the object. It will undoubtedly ultimately grow to these proportions without

The cotton season, which will terminate on the 1st of September, has undoubtedly been thus far unsatisfactory to manufacturers at home and abroad, and although cloth has been lower in proportion than raw cotton, and the most determined efforts have been lately made abroad to lower the price of American cotton, the effort has entirely failed; and hence the English Cotton Supply Association has been stimulated to unusual activity.

But although the planting interest in the United States at the opening of the season was advised to hold back the crop, so as to avoid the losses of the preceding year, and this policy has been adhered to, the combination of circum stances which made it specessful will seldom occur. The crop, measured by the usual annual consumption of cloth, was small; but although the consumers are, as stated in a recent English circular, "careless and indifferent buyers," as they always are at high prices, "the producers of cotton, knowing the supply to be limited, are careless and indifferent sellers," and particularly as they knew that it was extremely difficult to stop the work of mills. The consumption of cloth has been limited on account of the drought abroad, which impaired the means of extensive populations, and partially in the West from diminished sales of grain in expectation of a foreign demand.

This limited consumption, coupled with a high price for raw cotton, has compelled many mills, both in England and in this country, to stop work or work on short time-a meas which could not be avoided; and hence the recent rise in cotton goods of this country. Bleached goods of low and medium grades advanced about 12; per cent.; unbleached standard sheetings and shirtings about 15 per cent.; while at the same time raw cotton has advanced here about 14 per cent. The question is deeply interesting how the future will operate upon these points. It involves the extent of the new crup of cotton abroad and at home; the effect of the stoppage of numerous mills upon the raw material and upon cloth; and the power of consumers to purchase which depends on the success of all great industries, and upon the condition of the money market. It is prudent to wait for events instead of attempting to indicate the future of this trade.

One reason for the inability of England to control the price of our cotton this season is undoubtedly due to the powerful efforts made by her to put down the price of grain—an ob-ject which, unceasingly pursued, had withdrawn attention from cotton in which, in previous years, her victories have been easy. The bene fit which the South derives from the advance in cotton will be in time shared by the whole country, which ought to rejoice in the return of that section to increased prosperity.

THE FOURTH OF JULY.

Is the Fourth of July is not celebrated in a more agreeable manner than usual the fault will not be that of Superintendent KENNEDT, who issued an order requiring every member of the police to be on duty for the day, and to enforce the laws forbidding the discharge of fire-arms and the use of "snakes," "chasers, and "double-headers" in the streets. We heard, indeed, one young gentleman remark upon reading the Superintendent's order, that presently there won't be any Fourth of July at all" if such prohibitions are to be allowed; but we suspect that the disappearance of the festival is more likely to be hastened than retarded by the free use of "double-headers." Instead of being the pleasantest, the Fourth of July is now in the city of New York the most intolerably disagreeable day in the year. It is the day which every body escapes who can, flying into the country to avoid the universal popand whiz of gunpowder. But it is also the day when every body would prefer to remain quietly at home and enjoy the festival after a fashion suited to the season; and the order of Mr. KENNEDY points to some such happy cousummation.

This year the anniversary should have an especial interest, for the country is more profoundly at peace than ever before; a peace founded upon the great principles of the Declaration. Last year the day was desecrated by the assembling of a Convention of those who hoped to paralyze those principles a little longer, and to postpone the practical acknowledgment of the equal rights which the Declaration proclaims. And one of the chief causes of national congratulation at this time is that the American people rejected those reactionary counsels, and tranquilly persisted in the path of justice and liberty. While Mr. Jourses was President the liberty. While Mr. Jourson was President the contest was not decided. Indeed, had be been a man of any ability, he would most seriously have perplexed the prospects of peace in the country; for it has been evident for many years that there could be no peace until the government was planted upon the acknowledgment of the truth of the Deciaration. Fortunately Mr. JOHNSON'S mischievous hopes and intentions were wholly baffied. His administration served to arouse the people thoroughly, and when his political allies met to contrive the success of his plans, the response of the people was so vigorous and conclusive as to vindicate beyond question their acceptance not only of the truth, but of the immediate practicability, of the great principles of the Declaration of Independence.

For the first time, therefore, since the Dec-laration was published, it can be truly said that the American Government is fulfilling its intention. That it has reached its full scope we do not say; but it has now accomplished what makes the rest merely a question of time. For the first time we may truly affirm what Mr. Et-WARD EVERST? tried to prove on the 4th of July, 1860-a year before Bull Run-the "success of our Republic," His cration is now but one of the illustrations and warnings with which our history is strewn. Mr. EVERETT proclaimed the success of the Republic at the very moment when the fundamental Republican principle was flagrantly violated, and on the very eve of a contest in which that success was to be vindicated at an appalling cost of life and money. In his whole discourse there was not a single word that indicated any consciousness of the actual situation; and in enumerating our weaknesses he does not even mention slavery. Mr. EVERETT lived to see the probable success of the Republic, and to help it during the tremendous struggle; but he died before the political victory had secured that of the battlefield.

But we who salute the rising sun of this Fourth of July have lived to behold the success of the Republic. We have lived to see it struggling at the same moment with military fory and party hate, and emerging reasonable and resolved. We have lived to see it establishing peace, not by proscription and vindictive severity, but by universal amnesty and the enlargement of liberty. And when the centennial anniversary of the Declaration dawns, may it be upon a land whose prosperity is as permanent as the justice upon which it is founded!

FRENCH CÆSARISM.

THE letter of M. DE PERSIGNY upon Casarism as the security of liberty is entirely French and very droll. Like every argument for despotism it assumes the question throughout. The late signs of disaffection to the empire are not due to the liberal concessions of the Emperor in allowing a questionable freedom of the press, but to the inconceivable weakness of the government, " which allowed a young lawyer to defy the empire." The tongue of a young lawyer, then, is powerful enough to shake the em-Is that not a dangerous admission for our Casar? To allow free speech is weakness. The empire is strong, then, only when criticism is repressed. But is that a strong empire in these days which endures only by imposing "Without the terrible severity of BRUTUS and the indomitable courage of Publicola Roman liberty would have been stifled in its germ," says M. De Persione, " and those who became the greatest people in the world would have remained forever ignored by History." This reminds us of our old Southern orators who, in the most absolute day of slavery, were constantly appealing to Roman and Greek procedents of liberty. M. Da Prastony's argu-ment is again fatal, for it implies that French freedom is to be a counterpart of that of Rome. The republican liberties of Rome were very different from modern republican liberty; but whatever they were they are certainly no precedent for an empire; and the imperial liberties of Rome are tolerably well understood. M. The Progressy thinks that Pronon is the easiest country in the world to govern upon one condition; namely, that authority is always ready to repress the license that endangers liberty. The criticism or defiance of a young lawyer, for instance, is license which must be instantly ! repressed by authority. That is to say, whatever the Government, in other words, Louis NAPOLEON, does not like, is license; and license endangers liberty.

This is the mere repetition of the Austrian story of the last generation. METTERSTOR had every advantage. There had been desolating wars, and Europe wanted peace. The Repub lican experiment in France had been a ghastly failure, and Republicanism had to bear the burden. The United States were obscure. England was in full reaction. The Austrians were atterly priest-ridden. The liberal sentiment in politics was never more depressed, and Mattenasion did what he would. With M. De PRESIGNY he remembered Bautus and Pun-LICOLA, and he firmly repressed the license that threatened the liberty of his doing what he chose. But it is another world in which Lorus NAPOLEON undertakes to play Mattension's game. There are those who call him a sogncious man. But do such persons suppose that his dynasty is secure, or that his son will peacefully succeed to the crown? For seventeen years Louis Narotness has contrived to helance himself upon the throne he erected. Has it any foundation in the faith or regard of the people? Marshal BAZAINE declares that the army is devoted to the interests of the Napoleonic dynasty. But does the Emperor's com-mission authorize him to speak for the army?

What is sugneity in a man who aspires in this age to govern a civilized people as their Emperor? Is it not such a comprehension of the character of the people and the circumstances of their condition as will enable him to endear himself to them or to a powerful party of them as the best security of the liberties and interests of their country? No one will pretend that Louis Narolnon has ever held such a view. He made himself Emperor by the His policy has been flutery of the army and amusement of the mob. This is the very essence of Casarism in its lower form-of Casarism without a Casar. His imperial tenure is as sure as that of any of the Emperors of the Roman Derline, and no more. It is not a proof of sagacity in a man to hold a throne with an army, and in such a way that at the end of seventeen years his most devoted friend must say with DE PERSIGNY: "Nothing in the actual situation should disquiet a government firm and resolute." Such words at such a time are the mese, sees, of the empire.

NON-AMERICAN CITIZENSHIP.

WE have received a memorial addressed to the State Legislature and the school authorities by the German-American citizens of the city of New York; and we observe that there is to be a Convention of Irish-American citizens at Chicago on the 4th of July. There are some very excellent suggestions in the memorial, and the Convention, we trust, will acquit itself creditably. But what are the English-American citizens, and the French-American citizens, and the Spanish-American citizens doing in the mean while? Have they no suggestions to make or conventions to hold? Mr. Jours M. MORIARTY, of Philadelphia, says that the independent Irish voters must look to the honor, the liberties, and the industries of America. But, pray, what have independent Irish voters to do with the liberties and industries of America? Those are the concern of American citizens: and nobody until he becomes an American citizen has any thing whatever to do with them. But when a man becomes an American citizen he is no longer an independent Irish voter-be is an independent American voter, and need not be ashamed of the name.

One of the most humilisting and ridiculous spectacles ever seen in this country was that of the Mayor of New York masquerading in a snit of green clothes upon St. Patrick's Day. was "wearing the green" to please the "independent Irish voters." It was the worst kind of demagogy. It was pandering to a feeling that should never be officially recognized. For when the natives of other countries have renounced their political relation to those countries and have become Americans, it is their duty to accept their new political nationality, and to merge their political feelings and interests in those of the country they have chosen. It is an insult to the American people to attempt to influence a part of them as Irish-Americans or German or English-Americans. What we most need is homogeneity; and if the American people are to be drawn up into various camps of those of English descent and of Irish descent, of German descent and of all other nationalities, that cohesion and identification which are essential to a genuine American national life will be indefinitely delayed.

Moreover, the distinction is meaningless for any good purpose. The fact that certain citizens are of one or of another nativity does not make them a class with peculiar interests in this country. A man is not of liberal or reactionary tendencies in American politics because he was born in Ireland or Germany. All men born in France and naturalized in the United States are not, for that reason, free traders or protectionists. The interests that miert American citizens are independent of their birth-scace. If an Irislanan is maturalized here, it is his dury no longer to regard Ireland from an Irish or English but from an American point of view, His trishism is an impertinence. If he volun-teers advice as an Irishman he should be summarily informed that Americans can maringe their own affairs. If he is not willing to be an American-very well, he may do as he will; but, although been in Ireland, he certainly can not be, like Mrs. Malaprop's Cerberus, three gentlemen at once. A convention of "inde-pendent Irish voters" sitting in Chicago and discussing American politics is preposterous. Why don't independent Irish voters discuss Irish politics in Irokund? When independent American voters wish to confer apon subjects of common political interest they do not asset ble in Europe, but in America; and we advisu Irish voters to reflect upon the great advantage of such a method, Indeed, until an Irishman or any body born in another country is not willing to cease to be an Irish voter and become an American voter, why is he naturalized in this country, and why does he become an American voter? For an rial and sentimental purposes he may very well retain the habits and associations of his mating land, as for charitalde purposes there is a Soelety of the Sons of New England in New York, and a Society of the Friendly Sons of St. Parrick, and a St. George's Society, and a St. Datid's Society in the same eity. But the Sout of New England are not known as New English-American citizene. If they were they would laugh at themselves. Politically they are American citizens only; and that is a mane which needs no qualification.

WE TWO By JEAN INGELOW.

It's we two, it's us two, it's we two for age, All the world and we two, and Heaven be our stay, Like a kerenck in the lift, sing, O berny Ends ! All the world was Adam once, with Enc by his side,

What's the would, my last, my love—what can it do? I am thins, and thou all mire, life is sweet and new. If the world have missed the mark, let it attaid by. For we two have gonest leave, and once more we'll try.

Like a lawench in the lift, sing, O boury bride! It's we two, it's we two, hopey side by side. Take a kim from me thy man; now the song begins, "All is made attrib for us, and the brave heart wins." When the darker days come, and no one will shine, Then sholt day say tears, has, and I'll day thine. I've we tree, it's we tree, while the world's away, Sitting by the golden sheares on our wedding-day.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

NEWS ITEMS,
Anotres Bour, the Secretary of the New, has resigned, and George M. Roberson, Athorsop-ticueral of New Jersey, has been appointed to dil his place in the Cabinet.

abtuet. General Butterfield has been appointed Assistant General Batterfield has been appointed Assistant Treasure of New York.

Governor Chemberlain, of Makes, was, Jane 21, renominated by the Republican Convention of that State for a fourth term.

Governor Georg, of Pennsylvania, has also been re-combinated.

nominated.

The maich game of base-half between the Amberst.

Williams Colleges was usen by the forcest by the

The worth game of base-hall between the Anaherst and Williams Collectes was used by the former by the to St. On the 26th Williams was also beaten by Harward, 45 to S.

The Statistical Record of the Government Reseas shows that in thirteen years, ending with 1864, over two 36d a half milliams of Europeans emigraced to this country, the greater number coming from the British Isles.

British islos.

The receipts for the five days of the Beston Peace Jubiler amounted to $413,000. As the expense was $332,300 the profits amounted to $110,700. Mr. Gillione has been preceded with a house and lot stock $25,000, and a pune of $60,000.

FOREIGN NEWS.

WARLING operations, at least on a large scale, seems to have been septembed in Cuba. The ranks of both armics have suffered extraordinary mortality from cholera and dyamtory. The Volumeers have of their sown around given up Mano Castle and Fortiers Cubanas to the naval forces, and propose to render allegiance to the new Captionicannel Be Rodae, who was expected at Havana on the 25th of June.

In this Spanish Contest, June 16, the Republican members were worsed that their processes in the Chamber was permitted as an act of patrionism, but they could not be tolerated as the accompliers in a scheme for building up a republic; that the pre-cut estellion of affairs could not four routines, as it would become seveneary to represe the people, or anarchy would result.

Count Von der Goltz, the Prussian Minister to

cont Von der Goltz, the Pressian Minister to France, died at Berlin, June 24, of causes in the moor! In the Royal Thurnes Yacht Club rare from Days Pier to Cherloung, the schooner Gonolese, of the Boy al Yacht Squadron, gained the victory. The coun-my was beautiles. It the Comp of Chabers rele-bested the matters at the Comp of Chabers rele-bested the matters of the lattle of Solferine on June 24. Marshal Brazine, in pro-certing to the Err-perse the soldiers who book past in the beatise of So-being and Macrotta, while: "Year soldiers recall the day van led them to victory. The glottens anniver-sary shall never be effected from our board. Under all chromatomes they remain decored to gover dyna-ty." The Asserted Spices, in its report of the Empa-or's speech, gives the following version of the con-trolling reseles: "Abuntime in the same course, and you will observe be worthy of so great a nation, it of will assistation the military spicit necessary for a great people."

will assistain the military special energy of a great a distant, and profes."

The Great Easters has had reinterrupted success in paring out the new Adantic color from lines. On June 38 it was reported 317 miles from lines, and see active of raids had been good one.

Advices from Postan-Trines, linys, report they on the 12th of June 12th Manage. It is beenkarding. And Cayes fortheright hours, butters we next and nosembed the forth whom. He contact the forth street, butter works, and killed at appared over half of subjects force.

Fourteen English authors have november stated to this country to color Council Tablesons. They were given a public breakful at Lember before their department. In the horizontal their departments of the country to color Council Medicolor, from the Subjects their department. In the Lintell States, and the Lintell States, and has been insented to some y to President Grain the Emperor's congestalisticals.

THE PACIFIC RAILROAD.

OUR full-page cartoon on the Pacific Railroad, by Mr. Thiouas Nast, is based upon a philippic recently uttered by Mr. WENDELL PHILLIPS. The best explanation which we can give of our illustration, perhaps, is to give a copy of this philippic:

THE PACIFIC RAILBOAD.

philippie:

THE PACIFIC RAILBOAD.

All Hell and Furerell to the Pacific Railboad! The telegraph tells as that the ludians have begins to tear up the rails, to shoot passengers and confactors on this road. We see great good in this. At hast the poor yields has found the valuerable spot in his ignat. "Thank God America has resisted," cried Lord Chaman. Our feeling is the same. For serventy years and more the Indian has begged this great nation to rate at to bis wrongs. His cries have been unbeard. Buildees and unbeading we have transpied him down. To day the worm turns and sillags as.

Last year Indians destroyed becompiles and shot conductors. Third Dunays forbade the telegraph wires to report the fact. He treashed for his road. To day filters thousand warriors on the war-path—a thousand miles of exposed road; the railway the pet physiking of the American people! World our words could reach every Indian chief. We would tell him, lay down you'r gun, but sillow no rail to lie between Omain and the mountains. "The accurred code" is O'Cossuma's best weapon, said Samt. The Pacific Railway is the Indians' Alabama. Every blow struck on those rails is heard round the globe. Haund their road with such dampers that near suili threes it.

Some men may think us needlessly aggressive. No, citizenship, they may say, would be a better remedy. Yes, by-and-by. At present citizenship means little. Heaven forbid we should beary the Indian to such protection as "citizenship" gives to the Georgin negro and loyalist. No, we are thankful the Indian has one defines that the negro never hall. He is no citizen and has the right to make war. Well may be use that last right, and sever yield it till "citizenship" mems more than it does now.

An Abditionist may real glory in these Red wees. When, in 1863, General Samous carried to the Seminales the rews of emancipation, they instantly set their shaves free. But, more just than we, they proceeded at once to divide their pession-money, and, last winter, in Washington, were specially exmest to

"LIBERTY BELL"-[SERTORS BY TORO, R. DAVIS.]

tion scourged to its duty. Long and wears were the years of blood and misfortune that finally broke as into willingness to emancipate the black. May our stabbounces yield scoors and easier in this institute of the Indians! It seems probable. By the time Congress assembles again we think its members will be ready—as they never have been—to fister on this topic. The sad and ponderous documents stored in the Copinel will at last be read; and we shall learn that a nation, by its sea confession always in the wrong, most seek some other path and of its fromble-than by sending between so waste irrasone and blood in the vain effort to "exterminate" a braver rase than ours. We spent a hundred millions really—fifty con-fessedly—to "exterminate and remove" the Scal-noles from Florida. But there are evergindes in Florida to day where no white more enters, and which the Seminole will holds. If this he the use in Florida with a thousand Seminoles, how likely are we to "exterminate" twenty thousand such, spread over the boundless West? Supersy is tracering the glories of Atlanta for debut, eiter and shameful and well-deserved, on the prairies.

"LIBERTY BELL."

Turs bell originally long in the belfry of Independence Hall, Philadelphia. It is still in that Hall, but not in the steepler; it rests upon a date, as shown in our cut. Halsens J. Lace (NG, in his "Field-Book of the Revolution," if us dein his "Field-Book of the Revolution," if its de-scribes this sacred relic:

"It is four feet in diameter at the lip, and three inches thick at the heaviest part. It tone is destroyed by a crack which extends from the lip to the crown, passing directly through the names of the persons who cast it. An attempt was made to restore the tone by saming the crack wider, but without success; the melody of the 'glory-breathed tone' that thrilled the bearts of the needed on the birthday of the nation could 'glory-breathed tone that thrilled the beauts of the people on the birthday of the nation could not be reawakened. The history of this bell is interesting. In 1752 a bell for the State House was imported from England. On the first trial-ringing after its arrival it was cracked. It was recast by Press & Srow, of Philadelphia, in 1773, under the direction of Js. W. Nasints. Esq., the then Speaker of the Colonial Assembly...... I pun-illets around its errorm, cost those tweaty three ways before the Communical Communication. years before the Continental Congress met in the State House, are the words of Hely Writ: 'Pro-State House, are the words of Hely Writ: 'Prochina likerty throughout all the land and unto all the inhabitants thereof.' How prophetic! Beneath this bell the representatives of the thirteen robonics 'proclaimed liberty.' Ay, and when the debutes were ended, and the result was announced, on the 4th of July, 1776, the iron toughe of that bell first 'proclaimed liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof,' by ringing out the joyful amanuciation for more than two hours; its glorious includy fleating clear and natical as the voice of an angel above the discordant cherns of bouring canuon, the roll of draws, and the mingled acclaimations of the people,"

We give, on the same juge with our illustra-

We give, on the same page with our illustra-tion of "Liberty Bell," a representation of the firing of the British troops upon the citizens of Boston, early in 1775. Our illustration is from a picture drawn and engraved by the illustrious Part. REVERK, who has been made immortal in LONGPERTON'S celebrated poem.

BRITISH TROOPS FIRING ON THE CITIZENS OF BOSTON, FEBRUARY, 1775. - [FAC-SIMILMOF AN OLD ENGRAVING BY PAUL REVERS.]

The scene occurred in what is now known as State Screet, Hoston. The British soldiers had conducted themselves with insolence, and had killed a number of citizens; and a mob had gathered together to aronge themselves upon the troops. In the conflict which followed ATTUCKS, a mulatto, was killed. Three other citizens were killed, also, five dangerously wounded, and a few slightly hurt. This was before the lievolution had fairly been entered upon; but it furnishes an indication of the excitement which prevailed in our large ciries on account of the uncalled for presence of fureign troops sent from England to avoid and oppress Americans.

AUNT MONEYPENNY'S WILL.

Over solvey August evening, not many summers ago, a young man leaped from the train at Scutterion, and started with a brick step for the house of his aunt Griselda Moneypenny, which stood upon the foll overlooking the village. He-ing compelled to cross a stile and take a short cut through a strip of woods, our young traveler nearly alighted upon a banch of arbutus, which in the feestness of this combre glade bloomed thus tarddy in the season. He instinctively gathered his long legs up and trod upon the other side, then, stooping, packed up the trailing branch and suiffed ir gratefully. Not that he was a bot-anist, or for that matter knew one plant from an-other; but he book a sensores delight in any thing beautiful. He enjoyed the balony air, the faint breeze that rustled the leaves over his head; and the hinls twittering melodiously about him delighted his eye with their color, his car with

And yet to look at him you would not believe he would care for flowers or hirds. He was tall and rather ungainly; his hards and feet were large and not particularly shapely; but his face, large and not particularly staged; but his face, in spice of his bushy red eyebrows, broad mouth, tanned and feekled skin, was a winsome one—for under the cycleows glosmed a pair of blue eyes, honest and merry, and at times shining teacherly like a woman's. Then the lips were well-cut, the teeth firm and white. Descriptions are lame in a case of this kind; but I still maintain that, even in outward appearance, there was some thing very wisning about John Moneypenny.

It was nicer in every way to walk through the old orchard on the loft of the house, and skirt pround the kitchen-garden to the path that led by the porch. By this means he could avoid the dust of the road, and retul in the sweet breath of the clover that grew knee-high in spots he had known from his earliest boyhood. Then it was something delightful to see the guarled old beanches, laden with their knotty but delicious fruit, and gather in with lange draughts all these delights to cheer his city-burdened soul.

But in taking this vagaloud pleasure he found himself anddenly under the bay window, and beard distinctly his name attered in a tone of contempt that arrested his footsteps,

"John Moneypenny!" said a fresh, girlish voice. "A red-baired monster! An aukward, forkled lout! You can not be in earnest, Aunt Gri-olda—you can not mean what you say!"

"Hut I do, my dear," replied a voice, harsh and sandonic, that John knew was that of his 11 has been a pet scheme of mine for However, I have always craved perfect liberty for myself-it would therefore be inconsistent to deny it to others. Art your pleasure, my dear; only if you'll take the advice of an old woman you'll 'make hay while the sun shines.' I feel premonitory symptoms in the back of my local at times, and a dall trembling in my limbs, and you know they said another stroke would fin

"But, aunt," eried the young girl, and John climbed upon the lower lemnth of a tree that commanded a view of the sitting-room, " is it possible you would thrust me upon the world pennileus because I refuse to marry a mun that is repulsive to me?"

his now could gaze into the more at his case. and remarked that his consin Isabel, who had grown out of all reason, and ripeued subleale into a wonderfully beautiful creature, was tearing juro atoms a Lice handkerrhief, beating upon the carpet impotiently with her little, arched and durting lightning glances from her brilliant eyes upon the composed figure of his annt, who, seated in her arm chair, pared with a silver knife on exceedingly ripe and luscious peach, and ended urbanely upon her agitated salve, ""Could you," repeated Isabel, "after rearing me for a life of luxury, condemn me to drag out my days in poverty, without a friend in the

"No. Isobel; if you were not so important you would recognize the justice and furthought of my decision. I would secure you such a friend, girl, as is seldom giren to a weak, vain creature like yourself."

But suppose I refused such a Liend; suppose I even hated the sound of his name?"

"Well, considering his name is the same as mine and your own, my dear, I think your re-marks are, to say the least, offensive."

I do hate the name of Meneypenny, despise it, loothe is! To marry a creature like that, without even changing one's name—oh, annt, she added, pleadingly, "I will not believe you—you surely care a little for me!"

"I have told you," replied her nunt, coldly,
"it is my care for you impels me to this derission; besides, I have a little fundness for the name you mentioned, and naturally desire that what little I have shall be used for its benefit. But you must do as you please, Isabel. I am used to disappointments—only improve the present."

"Hut how?" asked Isabel, raveling the very threads of her handkerchief. "I know what I can not and will not do; but after that I am Well," replied her annt, draining the nectar from her peach, "as far as an old woman's as-sistence can be of any avail, you may count upon mine. Perhaps, under the circumstances, you might make a more agreeable connection; there is young Lascelles!"

A vivid blush burned upon Isabel's check.

"Aunt Moneypenny," she cried, suddenly,
"how can you torment me so? You know he is perfectly indifferent to me."

I know the few times I have been able to get to the church young Lascelles has devoured you with his eyes. God forgive me for noticing these things at such a time; but old Newell is so dreadfelly prosy I was compelled to do some-thing. Every time I got a crick in my neck and turned it to get a little case I found Lascelles's eyes riveted upon you!"
"But, aunt, he hase't been here for a month."

"You mean inside the doors. He has fairly haunted the grounds; and really, Isabel, I think afraid to come in; my manner to strangers is a little repelling, and you are not outwardly the timid, gentle creature we know so well at

You think, then," said Isabel, "that if-"

She hesitated.
"I think," interrupted her aunt, abruptly, "that if you manage your cards properly you may be mistress of the De Vigny estate. Why, how your eyes sparkle! What a mercenary creature you are, Isabel!"

"It is not his fault if he's rich," said Isabel, demarely. "I will confess that his delicacy and refinement are pleasing to me. I have a fastidious herror of any thing rough or rude."

"They do say," remarked her ann, "that he puts his hair up in papers every night. You see, he can't have it frizzed or curled wish an iron, because it injures the hair; and after all the young man is right, for baldness is in the family. Perhaps that was one reason old Lascelles's brains were so completely addled. I do not say, leabed, that idiocy is bereditary in the family; what I alluded to was baldness."

At that moment a heavy step was heard upon the porch, and the door shook in the grasp of a large and awkward hand.

"There's John," said the old lady, eagerly extending both hands to the new-comer. "Why, you are late for this train. Do you recognize your cousin Isabel ye

John grasped warmly the whole hand of his cousin, who had merely extended to him the tips of her fingers, and with one fleeting glance devoured the face of the young girl. Hair, eyes, roured the face of the young girl. Hair, eyes, now, lips, all was comprehended in that beam from his blue eyes. Then he turned to his aunt.

"I came through the orchard," he said, " and stopped to have a look at the old pippins. Do storges to have a sook at the old pippins. Do you remember how many pantaloons came to grief in my climbing that old tree?"

"Ay, indeed," replied his aunt, while Isabel, dismayed at this valgarity, glided out of the room. "But you haven't dired, have you?
I gave you up at half past six."

"If you'll let me help you eat a few of those penches, aunt, I can got along till bedtime."

"Help varieted?" said Miss Moneymens, push.

"Help yourself," said Miss Moneypenny, pushing the fruit toward her nephew, and looking beamingly upon him. "How well you look! My idea of what a man should look like," she added, with an emphasis that John well understood.

"Chacun a son gout," said John, burying half of a peach in his huge mouth; "it's not every one that's so easily suited."

"No," replied Miss Moneypenny, with a frown; "I suppose you haven't the least idea what I wanted of you, John?"

"Well," to tell the truth, anat, I thought that in your dear old heart you felt that I needed a holiday; and just now the place was looking sedoring enough to keep me here for a while, if you could only get me away from the city."

"You thought nothing of the kind, John Moneypenny! You know I never thilly-shally about any thing. I felt a few of the old symptoms ercejong over me, and thought there might be such a thing as my giving out."

"God forbid!" cried the young man, earnestly. "And I wanted you to come out and make lore to Isolel, so that you could marry her immediately if any thing should occur.

"Why, Aunt Griselda, do you remember a conversation we had before Isabel came back from her step-mother's? I told you if I could custore the affection of my employer's daughter my fortune would be made.

Miss Moneypeony burst into a sardonic laugh.

"I may us well keep quiet," she said, "and die as soon as possible. You wouldn't suppose now, John, would you, that a poor old paralytic like me could cling with such tenacity to a few notions of honor and sincerity?"

"I know," replied John, coming around to her chair, and taking her withered hand in his, "that you will trust your boy to do what is right, and not believe him capable of a mean-

"You love this woman, then, John?

"I fear I do, sunt."
"Fear! What do you mean by that?"

"I mean that I love her against my reason; I love her, though I know it is simple madness to "Well, or all events," said the old lady, with a contented sigh, "I'm glad you love her-glad to hear semething in the foolish, old-fashioned way before I die. You'll get her, never fear, if you've made up your mind to it."

"But I don't know that I have made up my mand to it, cont."

"Then do so, at once. Poor Isahel! I'm sorry for her, I am indeed. That Lascelles is such an empty-headed ass; but she's preju-diced."

"Against red hair and freckles, aunt?" Yes; but how did you know?

"I thought so from the way she looked at ie." John looked a little sad and grave, but s Moneypenny answered, abruptly:

"What matters it, if you love the other wo-A clear, eweet note fell upon their ears, then a few chords upon the piano-Isabel had commenced to sing in the drawing-room.

"You can wheel me through the hall into the drawing-room, John, if you will. I always list-en to Belie a while at night. I find I sleep the better for it. Stay, you are sure you love this "Yes, aunt; but why?"

"Well, I had decided to send you away by the early train in the morning—but in that case the early train in the morning—but in that case you may as well stay."

If Miss Moneypenny slept the better for Isabel's singing, it seemed that her nephew slept the worse; for long after his aunt was snoring, and Isabel wandering in dream-land, poor John tossed and tumbled, and finally arose, dressed himself, and looked out of the window at the stars. Star-gazing and John Moneypenny! Singular conjunction!

A FEW weeks after John's arrival at his aunt's house at Scatterton Isabel arose rather early and assisted her aunt in her morning toilet.

"Isabet, my dear," said the old lady, continu-ing a conversation which had evidently ruffled a little the temper of her nice, "don't tear the few wisps of hair I have left out by the roots; you can not drag the realization of your hopes from my poor scalp. I tell you the man is simply lazy

"And I tell you," replied the girl, touching more lightly the gray bairs of her aunt, "that he is an idiot!"

"Oh, I hope not!" interrupted her aunt, seri-

How literal you are, aunt," said Isabel, shing again vigorously. "I don't mean, of brushing again vigorously. "I don't mean, of course, that he is an absolute fool; but yesterday we went out to the summer-house, and he begged me to bring a book and read to him, speakir the most delicate manner of my talent in that way. I commenced 'Elaine,' and he threw himself at my feet in the most graceful attitude, fixing his great dark eyes upon mine, as if drinking in every syllable that I uttered. I became interested in my reading as I usually do, and in the knights' interview with the quoen I raised my roice; a movement at my feet arrested my attention. De Vigny was just opening his eyes— he had been asleep?"

"Well, in this case," said the old lady, "I can't say I blame him. Your voice when sing-ing or reading is the most soothing thing in the world-there is a sort of magnetic power about "An excellent soporific!" said Isabel, sarcastically.

"A very good quality for a voice," replied her aunt. "When you have learned the value of sleep you will appreciate the compliment. I know a voice so shrill and rasping it sets my teeth upon edge to think of it."

"You mean De Vigny's, aunt; and as I am compelled to endure him you might make it as casant for me as you can." The old lady cast an appealing glance upward.

"How ungrateful you are, Isabel! Haven't I been a martyr to your interests? Haven't I sat hour after hour and Estened to his description of his guinen-pags? Haven't I even endured the twong of his guitar? and upon that night you and John pretended to get lost I fell asleep out of sheer exhaustion several times; and just when my poor tired brain began to get quiet, young Lascelles would break into a shrill remark, aimost causing me to leap out of my chair. hast I begged of him to go in search of you, pro-testing I was fearfully meansy. The moment he was gone I fell back, completely worn out, and never moved till you returned. Soperific! It's well you've no nerves, child, or you'd be in your grave a twelvementh after you were married to Lascelles!"

What a delicious night that was!" murmured Isabel, a soft dreamy light stealing into her eyes. "John and I had been walking-miles, I think-just to get a glimpse of the water. Climb ing over rocks and hollows, through bushes and briers, we made our way. When we reached a spot that I could not cross, John fairly picked me on in his arms and carried me over up in his arms and carried me over " Ham-m!" marmared the old lady.

"He is the dearest cousin in the world!" said Isabel, boldly; then added, plaintively, "You know, nont, I never had a brother."

"Nor sister," said her aunt. "I don't believe you remember your mother; why not mourn the loss of your female relatives?"

"Heaven and the said of th

"Because, aunt," replied Isabel, conxingly, "you have sufficed me for all of these; and John, too, poor fellow, he told me that night you John, too, poer tenow, he took me man night you were the only one that loved him in the world. I think," added leabel, scornfully, "that young lady must be very difficult to please."

"Hecause she don't get enamored of 'a red-haired monster,' an 'awkward freekled lout!"

"You know when I spoke in that hateful way I hadn't seen John for years."

I hadn't seen John for years. "Oh, then, he ripened into an Apollo while you were separated?

"No, but he is so beave and yet so gentle—so winning and genial. There is such a touching, chivalric courtesy in his manner, like one of the old knights we rend about. And then when his face is lighted up by that rare smile of his, it be-comes almost handsome—"

"Hum-m!" murmured the old lady. Isabel started; a bright color mounted to her brow, and baving finished her aunt's toilet, she went out of

The evening of that day John returned from a fishing excursion; and as he passed the drawingroom window the tableau within caused him to pause and glance again. Isabel, dressed simply in white with a single rose in her hair, played a little symphony upon the piano. By her side, and bending a little over her, was the slight fig-ure of Lascelles. Dressed elaborately, his hair parted carefully down the middle, a soft flush mantling in his cheek, he would have made quite a pretry woman. His foot, beating the measure upon the floor, scarcely looked larger than Isa-bel's, and his little white hand fluttered over the music unceasingly. Presently Isabel threw her head back and gave a little preparatory cough; then young Lascelles, taking a languishing attitude, and gathering his face into a mincing ex-pression, which caused a wrinkle of merriment to linger about John's lips, sang in a shrill tenor, which soured far above Isabel's contralto:

"My bounde lass she smileth
When she my heart beguileth,
Fa, la, la.
Smile less, dear love, thèrefore,
And you chall love me more.
Fa, la, la.

At the conclusion of this verse of the madrigal John cast his eyes upon the figure of his aunt, and the wrinkle of merriment expanded into a smile. The old lady sat perfectly erect in her chair by the window, and held, with untiring tenacity, a hand upon each ear, while an expression of examerated exhaustion shadowed her

John leaped upon the portico, and softly mis-ing the French window, looked in. Miss Moneying the French window, notice in.

penny's eyes lighted up when she saw her nephew, and she held out her hands entreatingly,
"Wheel me out upon the balcony," she whis-

John did as he was requested, and gave but one little glance at the further end of the drawing-room, where Isabel, unconscious of John's arrival, sat upon the plane-steel and listened, with bowed head and fingers busily engaged in picking the rose to pieces, to the shrill whisper

"Cruel charmer! Had you given the ruse to me, I would have cherished it forever." "Shot the window, in Heaven's name," cried

Miss Moneypenny; and John pulled down the sash, eatching one lightning glance from Isabel's eye.

"I can't stand it," said the old lady. "I'm not so strong as I thought; and that Lascelles will be the death of me! I feel it in my bones!"

be the death of me! I feel it in my bones!"

"He seems a good-natured little chap," said John, condescessdingly.

"Oh, I've no doubt he means well," replied Miss Moneypenny; "and for Isabel's sake I have endeavored to do my best; but endurance has its limits, John; and Lascelles's voice is one of the things that I can not stand. It's had enough when he talks; but when he sings it really is the most penetrating, rasping thing imaginable! They are quiet now, thank God, or that glass window would no more keep out the sound than a sheet of paper. Then, it's ex-asperating to me to look at him! He's commenced to wear a cambric handkerchief around his neck—he'll soon wear a ribbon about his curls

"I'm afraid you'll take cold out here in the night-air," said John; and taking off his linen coat, he wrapped it around his aunt. "And you never take cold!" she said, grasping his hand and pulling him down by her side. "You know nothing of sickness, great, strong giant that you are."

"A little heart-sick sometimes," said John, with an involuntary glance at the window.
"Your skin used to be fair as a haby's when you were quite a lad," murmured the old lady, stroking his brow.

"Are you thinking of the observious freekles, aunt?" inquired John, a little bitterly. aunt?" inquired John, a little bitterly.

"If I could only have prevailed upon you to wear a sun-bonnet," she replied; then added, abruptly, "If you'll wheel me in, I'll go to bed!"

"And so will I," said John, wheeling his auns through the hall and into her sitting-room.

"Now, if you'll call Abigail," said the old lady, taking John's hands again in her own, and pressing them warmly, "you may go where you where."

"God bless you, dear sunt!" said John, going out upon the balcony. He was just in time to see Lascelles kiss Isabel's hand, and declare that she had rendered him very happy. Turning sud-denly, he found Isabel by his side, and raising an animated, beautiful face to his.

"Where did you get all those splendid fish?" she said. "I wish I had gone with you."
"Weren't you better employed?" said John, with a sareastic smile.

The color deepened in Isabel's check.

"I suppose it would be troublesome to take a woman with you," she replied, with dignity; "and I wouldn't, of course, wish to intrude in that case."

"We might take Lascelles along," replied

John, without looking up.
"That would be as bad as another woman," said Isabel, and turning abruptly upon her little said isseet, and turning abruptly upon her nittle heel, she went into her aunt's sitting-room and astonished that old lady by throwing herself down by her side and bursting into a passion of tears.

"God bless me!" said Miss Moneypenny, "what's the matter, heabel? Has any thing happened to John? I told him to call Abi-call, and I've been waiting ever since to be em-gail, and I've been waiting ever since to be un-"It's nothing about John," sobbed Isabel;

"or if it is, he don't care—he's too selfish to care about any thing or any body." "Hush, child!" said the old indy, smoothing the beautiful hair of her niece; "you know I'm very fond of John."

"And so am I!" eried the young girl; "and yet I've promised to marry Lascelles, and I hate him! I routhe him!"

"Isabel," replied her annt, "you are very inconsistent. A little while ago you hated and loathed John, now you are fond of your consin ned hate the other man. Wait a little while, and it 'il come right again : girls are like weather cocks at your age."

"Annt," persisted Isabel, "I can not marry Lascelles! I will not!"

"Well, you see, Isabel, I don't know how to advise you in this case. John confessed to me he was med about this other woman."

A hot flush mounted to Issbel's forehead.

"If he saked me this very night to marry him," she interrupted, proudly, "I would refuse him!"

John proposed upon one Wednesday evening a fishing excursion for the following day. Les-celles agreed to the proposition with enthusiasm. "I never catch any fish, but I like the fun," he said, enigmatically.

he said, enigmatically.

Thursday morning dawned bright and clear, and our fishing party were up betimes, and on their way to the little branch of the river that ran at the foot of the De Vigny pasture grounds. At every step of the way the young proprietor reguled his companions with interesting accounts of the vastness of his property, the fertility of his land, the fine condition of his live-stock, and seemed in an excellent humor with the world and all it contained. He were a fishing costs of light tweed and carried a silver-mounted rod in his hand, while upon his arm bung a curiously wrought fishing-backet. Upon his fair curis rest-ed a hat of the finest straw, with a prodigiously wide brim; a brown veil was fastened securely about his neck, and his hands were covered with about his neck, and his hands were covered with a pair of ornamented buckskin gloves.

"You wouldn't believe," he remarked, as, reaching the river, he seated himself under a tree, "that I shall be burned to a crisp if I go out of the shade. Positive fact, I assure you—but I don't care," he added, bravely; "it don't matter if I am."

Ret Mr. Lasselles however woundless of the shade.

don't matter if I am."

But Mr. Lescelles, however regardless of securing himself from the sun's rays, insisted that Isabel should remain under the shadow of the tree, and, adjusting her line gallantly, he led her to a seat under a projecting limb; then arranging with great precision his rod, they commenced to fish under very comfortable circumstances.

John declared he would try the stream further them, and disregarding an appealing giance from down, and disregarding an appealing glance from Isabel, proceeded upon his way. Scaling himself upon a rock that completely hid him from his companions, John went excuestly to work. By the absorbed expression of his countenance, and the rapt attention with which he gazed upon the water, we would have supposed he was devoted to the piscatory art; but presently a shining sub-stance shot out of the stream, and John's line whirled fleetly from the recl—our fisherman drew in his prize, but seemed not at all interested, and his face wore the same raps, care-worn look when he again throw out his line.

An hour or two west by, and the sun was elimbing high over his head, when John fan-cied he beard his name called in a loud, agenix-ing tone. He dropped his line, started to his feet, and listened.

"John, John!" cried a voice he well knew even when it was strained with agony. "Oh,

With one bound he cleared the rock, and lesping over stones and brambles, soon reached the spot where he had left his cousin and her com-panion. Isabel was sinking in about eight feet of water under the projecting branch, and Las-celles, in an agony of serror and dismay, stood wringing his hands upon the bank.

"She would set proper the line"

"She would get upon the limb," he stam-mered, "and she fell in. I can't swim a stroke, or I'd jump in; I would indeed!" John pashed him aside before he had said two

John pushed him aside before he had said two words, and throwing himself in the stream, suc-ceeded in reaching his consin as she was again borns down by the water. It was the work of a mement to saim with her to the shore, and leaving Lescelles to follow as he could, he with the insensible form of Isabel homeward,

When he saw the house his heart gave a leap of relief, and he dashed through the hall where his annt sat dozing in her chair. The old wo-man fixed a petrified gaze upon John as he hastened with the lifeless form of his cousin up the stairs, and watched him harry off again, drenched as he was, for the doctor. When John returned with the village Æsculapius, Abigail and restored her to com-

Then John went to change his dripping gar-cents. Presently Mr. Lascelles came panting up the garden-path, and the doctor took his leave. But passing through the hall the attention of the physician was arrested by a motionless figure that lay buddled upon the floor. "God bless my soul," he cried, "it's Miss Moneypenny!"

"O Lord!" said Lascelles, fanning himself with his bat, "she's got a fit! What a day of

"Oh, sunt! dear aunt!" cried John, leaping from the stairs, "what is this?" He took the helpless form in his arms and carried it tenderly to his sunt's room.

to his sunt's room.

"Another stroke of paralysis," said the physician, "and I fear it will go bard with her this time. My horse is at the door, I'll go procure something for her relief."

"I'm completely done up!" said young Lascelles. "I think I'll retire also. I'm glad to hear Mise Isabel's better. Call in the evening."

And John was left alone with his sant.

"Live!" he cried, kissing and caressing her cold and withered hand; "for without you I am alone in the world!" She opened her eyes, and, gazing upon John, strove in vain to speak, while drops of futile agony stood upon her wrinkled brow.

A light step descended the staircase, and Isabel approached slowly the door of her sunt's ro but John, overpowered with remorse and grief, thought of nothing at that moment but his auni He fancied her eager gaze was filled with re-prouch, and he burst into a passion of regret.

"I might have known it would have killed you to see Isabel half dead in my arms; but I could not speak, for my heart was full. Oh, aant, Isabel sank back, half fainting.

A ray of absolute joy shone in the old woman's eyes, and her brow became instantly calm and "I know it is madness, deer aunt. I was there, outside the window, that night she called me a clamsy lout, and declared she hated my very name; and yet, despicable wretch that I am, I love her!"

A look of great content crept into the eyes of Miss Moneypenny when she heard this old-fash-ioned burst of passion from John. She closed her eyes, and fearing to disturb her he remained

Isabel crept softly up the stairs, bolding her hands tightly over her beating heart, and bat-tling against the happiness that she felt surging ting against the nappiness that she left surging within her.

"And my sunt dying, perhaps!" she murmured, indignantly. "Ungrateful wretch that I am!" Steadily keeping this thought before her, she succeeded in banishing the joy from her eyes, and when she joined John by her sunt's bedside she was as sorrowful almost as he.

All that night and the next day the old lady All that night and the next day the out may remained the same—motionless, seemingly life-less, but for the vigor of the dark eyes, that seemed almost to speak in the intensity of their expression. Isabel, now fully recovered, watched with John, and one vied with the other in lavishing and and sincere careases upon the dearest friend they possessed upon earth until Friday evening, when the old lady died.

The funeral was over, the will was read, and it was discovered that "Griselda Moneypenny, being in full possession of all her faculties, willed and devised every thing she possessed to her nephew, John Moneypenny, and her niece, Isabel Moneypenny, share and share alike, in consideration that the said John and Isabel Moneypenmy should become man and wife thirty days from the time of her, Griselds Moneypenny's decease; failing this, her property, personal and other-wise, was to be divided among a host of gready relatives, and as her lawyer had always managed to make his connection with her a profitable to make his connection with her a profitable thing, she hoped he would do the same by her beirs." And there the will ended; not another word, one way or the other. So Isabel count-ed the days as they went by, as the Eastern gen-tleman did his beans, and in spite of the singe of melancholy that shadowed her face, ahe be-came more and more beautiful every day. John scarcely dared linger near her, and reamed about the greatly wavel and so her the country. e grounds, guant and pale as a spectra.

bel's persuasive tenderness he mistook for pity, and rejected her timid advances indignantly. What was the poor girl to do? The days were passing, and soon he would be robbed of his inheritance. She would willingly have been dutiful and obedient to her aunt's desire; she would almost velcome it as a pleasure, so as-cred did she consider these last requests; but John was so—so—stubborn; and here her rhet-oric became sadly mixed up, and a tear or two fell upon her black dress, the first of a shower that rent her heart without consoling it. In the midst of it all came Lascelles; and one morning midst of it all came Lascelles; and one morning John Moneypenny, walking up and down the garden-path, heard the sweet voice of his coosin raised in remonstrance.

"It is quite impossible!" cried Isabel; "I am very unhappy, Mr. Lascelles. I beg of you to relieve me from my engagement. I can not marry you!"

"Of course you can't now!" said the shrill voice of De Vigny. "I didn't expect such a thing, but you can not surely mean to throw me over altogether; why you can't be in earnest! rung, our you can not serely mean to throw me over altogether; why you can't be in earnest I Just think of it, Miss Moneypenny! I am madly in love with you. I worship the very ground you walk upon, and there isn't a girl for miles wouldn't be proud of such an offer."

"Then you are at liberty to throw your hand-kerchief to any of them," replied Isabel; "you are perfectly free as far as I am concorned."

When John saw the slender form of the young landed proprietor retreating rapidly toward the De Vigny by-path, he turned his steps home-ward, and turning suddeuly a corner of the hal-cony, found Isabel sitting upon the step in such a pretty antitude of despondency that he could not, for his life, page on not, for his life, pass on,

"What is it, Isabel?" he said, seating him-

"What is it, Issues?" he said, senting imm-self by her side, and finding a tunultuous pas-sion raging within him as he touched her little hand. "Why are you so said?" "I am so wretched and unkappy," sobbed Issuel. "I haven't a friend in the work!" "How can you say that to me?" stammered John and knowing assettle what he was saying.

hn, not knowing exactly what he was saying. "Why do you avoid me then?" continued

Isabel.

John besitated a moment—his lips trembled, and he grew pale. Then he cried, boldly,

"Because I love you!" dropping her hand and shrinking back a little from the rebuff he should forget that you have not be near you lest I should forget that you have and despise me."

"But I don't, John; I love you dearly," said Isabel, lifting her head shyly, and raising two beseeching eyes to his; the tears lay upon her long lashes, and a sweet, almost infantile ex-pression of joy shone in her fore. John caught her in his arms, believing it all to be a deceifful, fallacious dream; but determining to enjoy it as long as possible, he did not speak for fear of awakening.

The house upon the hill at Scatterton is the cheuriest domain for miles around; and spend-ing a few happy works there last fall, I determined to let the host of relatives (who consider themselves defranded, and stiguntise my old friend John and his charming wife as merce-nary wretches) know what a disinterested thing marriage was, in spite of Aust Moneypen

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

Quartum in Astronomy.... People speak of the sun's reaking out. Will this account for the spots on its FAIR FROM: —As you are strong be merciful. Best your carpons if you like, but don't hit'en when they're down!

At school one day, when the lesson was the table of "sile and beer measure," a little boy, remarkable for the correct manner to which he areally said all his lessons, was quite unprepared.

"How is this, John?" said this tencher.

"I thought it was of no use, Sir," said John,
"No use," interrupted the master.

"No, Sir; it's ale and beer measure," said John,
"I know it is," said the master.
"Well, Sir," said the Bittle boy, "father and I both think it is of no use to learn about ale and beer, as we mean never to buy, sell, or drink them."

Swary Cuttanes-Lavender kids.

I have a lingering love, I own,
For an old decirine, held by come,
That woman's truck aphere is found.
Within the hallowed walls of hence;
But when the babe slaruned the house.
By reiting headlong down the stair—
"Where's Mrs. Jonese" I crick to Ann,
With hands opraised in blank despair.
"Ble's at the risk," replied the maid,
"A-cidia" the velocypade;"

A resident of one of the suburban towns found the services at church very quieting, and fell asleep. He was finally distarted by the touch of a contribution-box in the hands of one of the deacors, who was taking up a collection; but, without opening his eyes, the eleeper ejaculated "Beason," and sunk back to resume his nap. It is unnecessary to say that he was a season-ticket passenger on a railroad.

A complyment who had agree and a season-ticket passenger on a railroad.

A countryman who had never paid more than tweety-five cents to see an exhibition went to view the "Forty Thieres." The ticket-seller charged him serventy-five cents for a ticket. Passing the paste-board back he quietly remarked: "Keep it, mister, I don't want to see the other thirty-nine," and out he marched.

Recently a lady residing in Boston had occasion to correct her little girl, and was somewhat astonished and amneed a few hours afterward, when putting her daughter to bed. After her usual prayer she added, "God bless good page, and God bless mamma, and make her a good memora."

JOHN CHINAMAN IN SAN FRANCISCO.

Chinese adapt themselves to our F shall we take the Queue from them development of the "Hack" under Highly probable

What will firlight say when this person looks after our Lines?

They make excellent Numes.

Mg. C.—., of Roston, has justly a great reputation for wit. At a supper given after the success of "The Spirit of 75" the subject of play writing come up. A concetted, would be suther reassacted that in his opticion it wasn't difficult to write a play. He himself would write on—a farre, that has well take beet, perhaps. There was somewhat of a smile of incredibly among his hearts.

"Oh, I mean it, was needn't lanch."

ty among his heartra. "Oh, I mean it; you needn't langh." "I don't expect to," rejoined C...., good-natum dly.

Men of mark—chalk manufacturers. Men of chrek—the well-normaled. Men of conscience—these who don't say any thing about it. Men of parts—tables, liets of possideration—those who are trying to sharp others. Men of will—lawyers when inditing the rance, Men of means—a great many mean ones. Men of the period of means—a great many mean ones. Men of interest—nort-brokers, when signific on the principal. Men who go it strong—those of weak minds.

"Where Are my Source!"—A certain Princes is now brying to obtain, in Paris, a separative from her lard and master on a most extraordinary protext. It appears that the Prince, on arriving, after two years service in Mexico, telegraphed to the partner of his beasen no food words of delight at coming back to be again, but simply the iscoule and normanite cores, "Where are my shirte? I can not find them?" Hence the application for a separation. Should the Princes succeed in obtaining one, her husband with, for the finare, not only have to look after his shirts, but also to shift for himself in other matters as well?

A traveler in Pennsylvania asked the landlerd if they had any cases of sur-stroke in that town. "No, No," said the landlerd; "if a man gets drunk hore we say he is drunk, and never call it by any other name."

political changes altered the face of established laws; national serrow and national triumph made sore or glad the hearts of multitudes; but the echoes of the world's sympathies did not pene-trate to Auriel. Azalea learned to speak pure English and tolerable French. She grew attached to her tutor, and with feminine tact she did her little best to lighten the cloud on his life. He was not happy, she was sure of that; for, although he rarely spoke barefuly now, or frowned at her as he did on the day they first met, still be never sang as she did—never laughed, like her, at the predatory amics of the maggie or the blithe gambols of the kitten.

blithe gambols of the kitten.

It was not that Douglas made any affectation of melancholy; but he was like a prisoner whose arms have been bound for so long they know not what use to make of freedom. It is not easy for a man of forty-five, crushed in spirit, and embittered by life-long failure, to lift up his voice in the little aimless songs of joy that bubble up on youth's lips. He could direct Azalen's studies, and sympathize with her earnest enthusiasms when directed toward the acquisition of knowledge. when directed toward the acquisition of knowledge; but he found it hard to restrain his impatience when the girl would suddenly upset the Euripides and fling Sophoeles to the ground, in her impetoous pursuit of Topax, as the latter disappeared, in a quiver of doggish agitation, to make vindictive war on the kitten.

Meanwhile old Moore was slowly dying, and they saw it not; neither did they see Asalea was growing into a beautiful young woman. At the end of four years, when she was sevencem, Lord Orme and his family returned to once more take on their permanent residence in England, as the up their permanent residence in England, as the health of the Hon. Rosa Orme was now thor-oughly re-established.

CHAPTER XXII.

THE ORMES AGAIN.

I HAVE spoken before of Lord Orme's house in Brighton. I have now to introduce you to the old baronial residence of the Ormes, which was also situated in Sussex; but it stood far away from the gay glare of the town, on a wild-looking range of downs. From the upper wisdows you could detect a gleam of sea shining be-youd the furthest float of hills; but except this, and the sheep that made so many dappled lights down the shadowed valleys, there was little else to break the flowing monotony of the view.

When the house was unoccupied by the fam-ily the sheep would crowd up round the walls, and poke their innocent nows against the nail-studded doors; there was no fence-work to separate the front part of the house from the downs -no trees to cast flickered shadows down the —no trees to cast flickered shadows down the sides of the stately towers. In lenely grandeur the massive pile breasted hot suns and rushing winds, and beyond the rude magnificance of its proportions there was little to admire in the exterior of Orme Castle.

"A dreadful dull place," the Misses Orme pronounced the home of their forefathers to be. "Heminded her of pirates," Miss Slater averred, with an affected shiver.

Upon which Conrad punished her by asking her if she would not like to become "the windy bride of a corsair;" which remarkable form of invitation he had discovered in an old drama of Lord Thurlow's.

Conrad's holidays had not begun when the Ormes returned from abroad, "Thank Heaven for that!" Miss Slater said, fervently: he was to the poor governess what the fly was to Io. When she read morning prayers, and prayed for bealth and happiness for all the members of the household, she could not help glaring evilly at that terrible boy, whose curly head, looking like the crest of a pert cockatoo, hobbed solemnly up and down, keeping time with her somewhat singsong intonation;  And look kindly on our evil doings," she chanted, looking fixedly at the obnoxious movement; but she could not herself yield the forgiveness she petitioned for.

It was on an evening in October when the family returned home; after the bustle of arrival had subsided, the inmates wandered helplessly about the house, like strange cats that are not sufficiently at home to clean their feet and go through all the licking and purrings incidental to cattish toilets.

The luggage had not arrived, so the ladies' maids could not commence their office. The house looked desolate and strange; no comiliar occupations were about with which the girls could occupy themselves. Lord Orme wished to write some letters, but his inketands were serving as cometeries for deceased flies, and his ens and paper were locked up in his dispatch-

Miss Slater longed for tea; but the female domestics had only just obtained some for them-selves, and utterly declined to pay any attention to the angry vibrations of the bells until their own requirements were satisfied.

After dinner the girls strolled out on the slop-ing lawn at the back of the house, and there held council over their plans for the future. Miss Slater sat down in the drawing-room and looked entally at Lord Orme, and Lord Orme went to sleep

Rosa and Amelia had improved in appearance since the day when they walked like little angu-lar automata under the presiding jerks of Miss Slater's hand

Rosa was black-eyed and tall: she had one of Hose was black-eyed and tall: she had one of those figures over which milliners rejoico—nice and straight, no trouble at all to fit. Her dress-maker and her lady friends called her "so very distinguished-looking." I have observed that when a young lady, wealthy and high-born, lacks the feminine loveliness to which her rank and other advantages justly entitle her, the female jackals of her court generally disarm criticism by the emphasis with which they proclaim her to be "distinguished;" that is, supposing the object of their admiration is sufficiently large and lanky-looking to merit the appellation; if she be short and fat they are reduced to the suggestion that she is "so sweet."

Amelia Orme would have come into the latter category. She was rather below the middle beight, had a turned-up nose and a benvy face and throat; her eyes were hazel, and were ordinarily placid in expression; but when she was angured a wicked low cunning look gleamed up in their sullen depths. She was full and thick in figure; her hair was a burnished brow she had a great quantity of it.

Amelia was sullen and phlegmetic. Rosa was lively and imitative. When the two sisters quarreled Rosa had the advantage on her side at the commencement of the warfare, but ultimately the victory remained with Amelia. Rosa exhausted her rage in angry exclamations, with-oring sarcasm, and quick, hot tears; on these occasions her eyes danced, her voice shook, and her nose got red.

Amelia stiffened into the most impenetrable sullenness; her face was calm as an Egyptian idol's, and beavy in its anger like a storm-lurid cloud. In many respects she was amiable. She loved Rosa after her own fashion. She never gratuitously irritated Miss Slater, and she was solemnly respectful to her father.

But of the two I rather think he preferred Rosa, who was waspish and impertinent. In her most agreeable moods Amelia was monoto-nous, and she was as unresponsive to demands for sympathy as a stone-wall is to the electric for sympathy as a stone-wall is to the electric flash that plays over it in times of storm.

The sisters looked almost pretty as they stood together in the soft gloom of this autumn even-ing, attired in flowing white dresses, and with Roman scarfs twisted about their shoulders. Around them was a bold expanse of grass downs flashed by sunset. A fresh sea wind blew over the high peaks, and all the hills were musical with the gentle tribulation of sheep-bells. Amewith the gentle tribulation of sheep-bells. Amelia looked pensively on the innocent creatures whose lives are one harmless continual nibble, and sighed.

"I haven't tasted South-Down mutton for ages," she said.

Then the two talked of the grand ball pape was to give soon, and of the dresses they determined to wear, and of the partners they hoped to secure. It was to be their first appearance in society as grown-up young ladies, and their ex-pectations of the result were somewhat extrava-

"Do you think the Marquis of Grandacres will propose for me that night?" sharp-eyed Rosa said, alluding to an unmarried country magnate. "Not that night, perhaps," Amelia said, slow-ly. "Perhaps be'll do it when he calls next

ly. "Perhaps he'll do it when he calls next day. For my pert, I shouldn't think of marry-ing any thing less than twenty thousand a year. I don't so much care for landed estates; there are often so many mortgages round the corner."

Then they discussed the number and class of people who were to receive invitations,

"I suppose we must ask that Lady Diana," Rosa said, viciously. "What men can see to admire in a woman of her age I can not im-

"She is two or three and thirty, isn't she?

yawned Amelia. "Forty, if she's a day," the other answered. emphatically; and Amelia, who was acute enough in some respects, wondered what admirer of Rosa's had wandered from her, lured away by the attractions of that "splendid mirage," as a clever Frenchman once designated Lady Diana Mer-

"My dears," called Lord Orme from the drawing-room window, "come in; you will

Lord Orme had a vague theory that every one who went out of doors after dinner must neces-sarily catch cold. He always sat indoors through all the long mellow summer evenings. He call-ed the dew damp, and preferred listening to the thresh through closed windows and drawn cur-

The Misses Orme obeyed the summons, and shortly afterward announced themselves to be futigued, and retired to their bedchamber. Hosa went to bed first, and was just dropping off to sleep, when she happened to glance toward Amelia, who was sitting by the mirror, her hands moving rapidly through her hair, and holding some mysterious instruments which, from the distance, resembled mest-skewers. ment Rosa was wide awake. Her black eyes looked suspiciously at her sister's proceedings, and she murmured, with emphasis, "Crimps!" Then she sat up in the bed, and stared at Ame-

"Why are you crimping?" she asked, recrely.

Both sisters were their hair frizzled over the eyes, in the disheveled Bacchante-like style with which our English virgins nowadays disfigure the fair smooth brows of youth. As a rule, in the privacy of home-life, the Misses Orme's waving locks were allowed to return to their normal state of flatness. The hair resented constant torture, and if twisted too often and too much, under the fiery pressure of the tongs, it was apt to come out in handfuls. There were various degrees of fritziness according as the occasion demanded. If a desirable match was to be fascinated, the lady's-maid, under Miss Slater's directions, wrought her young mistress's tresses into a state of marvelous confusion; if only a commoner, with barren prospects, was to be en-countered, the governess disdained to assist at her charges' toilets, and merely a gentle wave redeemed the hair from its ordinary limpness. If any male visitor were expected, the hair was certain to wave to a certain extent; but when the girls believed themselves to be secured against intruders, they rejoiced to escape the nightly irri-tation of feeling hard-twisted knobs intervene loc-tween their heads and the pillow.

"Whom do you expect to see to morrow?"
Rosa said, with increased severity. And Ame-lia, looking very conscious, dropped the benid-she was manipulating, and mattered:

"I head same see that if he need into Brich.

"I heard papa say that if he went into Brigh-ton to-morrow, and found that the — Dragoons had arrived, he should ask Captain Mowbray and some of the other officers to dinner."

The treachery stood revealed now the motive for the frizziness was exposed.

"And you would have let me go to sleep without telling me!" Rosa cried, in an access of deep repron

"The maid has gone to bed with a faceache, Amelia answered, abashed; "so she couldn't do

"It must be a good chance for which you would care to take any trouble," Hosa responded, spicefully. She jumped out of bed, and sat down before her mirror with a look of determin-ation in her little sharp face. As she was far more energetic and active than her sister she was avenged by producing a more brilliant re-

But on the morrow they found that their labor had been wasted; for when Lord Orme come back from the barracks and encountered his daughters waiting for him at the porch, whither they had flown to meet him in an unusual accession of filini devotion, he told them that the -Dragoons had not yet arrived. They were expected to leave Norwich to-morrow, and as they were going to march by road through Essex to London, they could not arrive at Brighton for some days yet.

"Captain Mowbray's home is in Essex, is it not, pape?" asked Russ.
"Yes; but I do not suppose he has ever seen it since he was a child," Lord Orme answered.
"It is about as valuable a house to him as an other state.

old year's nest to swallows in the spring,"
"Why does he not let it?" asked the practical Amelia.

"They will never let it," Lord Orme said, de-cisively. "They are as proud as Spaniards, and as impecunious. In the court-yards of the Escurial at Madrid the grass springs up thick enough to feed a team of mules; but I imagine that if a heretic hand wished to remove the signs of nog-lect and disorder, he would be rebuked with, *Let it be; our grass is better than your hay.' No doubt the Mowbenys think the Auriel owls are worthier occupants of their chimneys than the smoke from a stronger's fire."

"Auriel!" exclaimed Rosa, with a flash of recollection, "that is the name of the place that funny little girl came from. Do you remember ber, Amelia? I mean that disagreeable creature papa brought to Brighton just before we went

"I remember her," Amelia answered, shortly.
"She was horrid."

"She must be quite a woman now: I wonder what she is like," pursued Rosa,

"Worse than ever, I should think," the other said, decisively. "At what time do we dine, papa?"

Not for the next two hours. I wish you the Times, Amelia; I shall not sleep happy to-night if I do not know what they are about; and I have such a pain in my eyes I can not read them myself."

Amelia looked depressed; it was her way of expressing disapprobation of any proposal that did not please her. Amolia's depression was as sure an index as the weather-hand that points to "cloudy." Lord Orme turned from her with

"I'll read them, papa!" eried the shrill voice of Rosa. Her father thanked her, doubtfully : be could not well decline the proffer; but as be anticipated, Rosa, after wading through half a column, gave various impatient twitches to the newspaper, and asked if "dear paps would not excuse her reading any more for the present, as she felt headache coming on."

Lord Orme said "Go, go!" and dismissed her.
Then, unable to amuse himself, he sat and watched the shadows deepen on the hills, and thought of that other girl of whom Rosa and Amelia were of that other girt or woom, accordingly, just now speaking so contemptuously. I wonder "She must be quite a woman now. what she is like.

Memory told Lord Orme that if the girl resembled her dead mother she must be very fair to look on.

"I'll do her justice one day," he declared to himself; he had been chafed by the selfish dis-regard of him shown by the Misses Orme; and we never think so tenderly of those we have wronged as when we are ourselves writhing under similar hurts.

HOME AND FOREIGN GOSSIP.

The old accommodations for rapid riding by rail dwindle into insignificance when compared with the comforts which may now surround one during a long journey. Even a trip across the continent does not seem an undertaking which would involve any great fatigns, when one has realized the lexury of the "Drawing-room Coaches," in a sixteen hours' ride on the Eric Railway. There are three of these conches or cars which run between New York and Buffulothe Atlantic, Pacific, and Metropolis—and they containly afford delightful accommodations to passengers. They are divided into elegantly uphnistered compartments, designed for four, eight, or twelve persons, where the traveler, surrounded by the at-tractions of a well-farnished parlor, may be as cozy and comfortable as possible. Single reats cost $1.50 for the trip; but one traveling alone, or a couple destring to be by themselves, can secure a compartment price of the smallest size and thus enjoy rest and sectusion. The doors of the compari-ments are open or shut at pleasure; when open a good view is obtained of the country on both sides of the track, though the large plate-glass window in each room affords an absorbingly fine view. One great convenience of the Brawing-room Care is that a traveler may step out for dinner or supper, and feel confident that hag, bundle, and umbrella are safe. Yet one need not be confined to his own compart ment, the reception-room giving ample opportunity for change of place.

A gentlemanty conductor and an attentive porter have special and exclusive charge of each car, and en-ery want of passengers is supplied. On a recent trip in the Pacific, we found both conductor and porter contracted statement of computer and porter contracted statements. notest details; giving with great cordiality informa-tion about the route; often coming to the door of our comperiment to point our places of interest, or taking us to some other section of the car to obtain the heat view of some romantic spet. For on the line of the Eric Railway is some of the roset charming scenery in the world. River and menutain views combined render it delightfully pomantic.

The Harsom Cab Company, incorporated at the last ession of the Legislature, hope soon to provide the public with a cheaper and more convenient mode of onveyance through the city these carringes afford.
he charter provides that the face shall be as follows: For any distance within and not exceeding one mile, for a single passenger, 30 cents; and for two persons, 40 cents. For any distance additional to one mile, for each mile and fractional part of a mile, for a single passenger, 20 cents; and for two persons, 40 cents. For any time within and not exceeding one hear, for a single passenger, 15 cents; for two persons, §1, and for any time additional, for each hour and fractional part of an hour, for a single person, 15 cents; and for two passengers, $1. As soon as practicable these force. will be reduced.

A cortain Dr. Kohn has examined the eyes of a bundred and thirty-two typographers in Breston, and re-ports that not more than half a desen have perfect right, a large proportion being short-sighted. If compositions expectally are thus afflicted it is a wonder that typegraphical errors are not more common.

A new journal called the Report has appeared in Paris; it is conducted by the two sons and the section law of Victor Hugo. Victor Hugo himself is a contributor. The sale of the Roper in the streets has been probabited. M. Hearl Rochefort, who is so well in connection with his Lantones, is also ennexted with this new paper.

An exchange gives a new wrinkle about the are of horses, which may oblige the horse deutist to give up his trade. It is said that after a horse is nine years ais trade. It is said that after a horse is nine years old a wrinkle comes on the cyclid at the upper corner of the lower lid, and every year after he has a well-deduced wrinkle to each year. If, for instance, a horse has three wrinkles, he is trealve; if four, he is thir-Add the number of wrinkles to nine, and you will always get it.

A curious affair took place at Niagara Falls a week or two ago. A Spaniard, with a party of friends, arrived one Saturday evening and took mome at the Cutaract House; the same ovening a Cuban, with his party, put up at the International. On Sanday mora-ing at five o'clock both parties took carriages and went over the Old Suspension Bridge into Catada. On arriving at a rural spot the drivers were told to tarry, and the foreign gentlemen disappeased from view. Refere long pisco shots were heard, and one of the Cuben party was assisted to his carriage, and all returned to their hotels. It was soon noised about that there had been a deal, and the parties were accessed, but arranged to secure their liberty until the next day, when an examination took place. The evidence, offered chiefly by the parties themselves, was peculiar-going to show that the Spaniards and Cahens Suppress to meet at Niagara Falls; that each party Asppraed to have a medical gentlemon with him: that having but little time, they started early him; that naving our other time, any names carry, to see the nights; that they were find of shooting, and always traveled with pistols; that they were only amasing themselves firing at a mark, when the un-fortunate Cuban wounded binneid! The prisoners were discharged, and the show caded. From other sources, however, it appeared that Coulo, the Spanhard, had spoken conferoptionardy of the fighting qual-ities of the Cubens, and that a challenge followed from Pundoes, the Cuben, which was accepted.

The backmen at Niagara Falls are quite subfined. They are obvious into a very limited space at the mil-road diport; and when the cars arrive, bringing innocent stranges, all they can do is to hall them gently from their cage, and see if, by chance, any body waves to ride. The arrangement is really very conformable. And though, of course, if you go outside of your basel a backman pops up at every street corner, and half a dezen between whiles, with " Have a carriage, Sir? Only a dollar as hour; they will ask you two dollars at the hotel;" yet, on the whole, they are tolerably well-behaved, and do not camely travelers half as much as they well to do.

About the first of July an expedition under the command of Sir Samuel Baker will set out to attempt the ranguest of the Upper Nile country. The force consists of two hundred Arab cavalry, and one thousand three hundred Nublan infantry. Three stramers, built of stool, are to be transported in pieces to the place of leading, and then put together before launch-ing. Sir Samuel will carry with him a good supply of hardware and fancy goods, adapted to trade in the interior of Africa

Another horrible story comes from New Orleans of a young lady of that city being buried alice. Her iserment seems to have taken place in a very below time after her supposed death—not more than seven-teen hours. An hour after her burial a son of the sexion bened mounings coming from her tomb; but he was an overcome with fear that he find from the and did not make known the fact till the next morning. The temb and coffin were then opened, and the condition of the body indicated that she suffered fear-fully after burial before life was extinct.

The most indicronsly incomic notice we have seen lately is printed in large letters over some insignifi-cant private property on Gont Island, Niagara Falls, not far from the bridge connecting the Island with the main hand. It is simply "Star Out!" Nobedy would ever think of intenting upon such an unattractive buof ground, so the prohibition affords no little fun to

St. Louis is behind the times. St. Louis does not believe in woman's "equal rights." At a recent wedding in that city the officiating clergyman, in his address to the groom, said, "You are the man, and the man must be the raier. Any idea looking to woman as being the ruler is a pervension of Scripture."

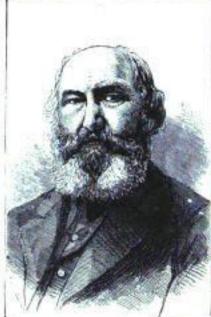

II LIUS ERCHHERS.-(Paur, av Pous, Boston.)

LAST OF THE PEACE JUBILEE.

Propervisor in their connection with the Bost Pence Jubilee, as condintors of Mr. P. S. 1.0. C., as orchestral lenders, and as musical a succes, we reduce that leaders, and as museral injectors, were Mr. Jernes Kreimanne and Mr. Critis Kreimanne and Mr. Critis Kraima. The latter is well known as a composer of the "American Hymn," which a sun a during the first slay of the Juddley. A sketch of Mr. Kritikar, published two years to in a manifeld paper, says of him: "Forming lides of Mr. Kritikar from his many formulant tracker metallic from his many formal and market.

il and popular mebolics, one would natural-suppose bias to be a young-hearted, grayided, good interest, enthusiastic, American-d German; and so in very truth is he. Being of German; and so in very truth is be. Being nost the only representative in this country of it peculiar German style in song, so tender it genefal, yet classic withol, which has along mode Aur and Korkes so favorably our, Mr. Keataca's songs have not yet existed to that outer circle of popularity where i hand organs chain them as their own; but ang the loters of German song—and they are ny—they have never failed in obtaining the recintion and recognition so well deserved, is now twenty-one years since Mr. Keller undoned his own father-land for ours, and during all that time he has zealously endeavored to ing all that time to his zealously endeavored to amalgumate the American and German elements in his compositions, but, try as he will, the latter still predominates; and even his latest songs, thesesh written to New England words, might couly pass as of foreign birth." Mr. Kellen was horn at Ulm, in the Kingdom of Würtemberg, March 29, 1813, and came to America in 1846. He studied music under Lennevanyren and Mo-pours at Stattmert, and the celebrated Exerc-To studied masse under LANDSVINTER and Mo-Liquin at Stuttgart, and the celebrated Errran Vox Seventies at Vienna. For seven years he was band-master in the Third Royal Brigade. After coming to this country he became an or-chestral lender in Philadelphia, and conducted chestral lender in Philadelphia, and conducted both English and German opera in that city successfully. Shortly after the breaking out of the war a prize of five hundred dollars was offered by a committee of gentlemen for the best national hymn. Here was an opportunity for our German-American. His love of liberty had grown with his growth since his arrival in his chosen land, and at this time his patriotism knew no bounds; so it was but natural that he should have felt himself called upon to compete for the prize, or, what was far more precious to him, the Assar of having written the Hymn of the American Italion. Thus it was that the American Hymn had its birth.

MATHIAS KELLER. -[Poor. by Poss, Boston.]

Mr. Julius Elennanc was born in the year 1825, and mani-fested in early life such remarkable musical tal-ent that, through Mus-DELISORN'S recommend-ation, he was admitted to the Conservatory at Brussels, where, in 1843, he obtained the first prizes in violin and com-position. He held afterward the position of musical director in several of the most prominent German opera-houses. His later years, previous to coming to this country, were spent in Gene-va, Switzerland, where he officiated as Director of Sacred Music, under appointment of the Consistory of the Church of Geneva. He came to this country in 1856, and has since been liv-ing in Boston most of the time, where he has founded the Boston Conservatory of Music, now generally considered the leading Boston music school. Mr. EICHBERG has been very successful has been very successful as a composer of comic operas, and may safely claim the title of the first American operatic composer. His operas, "The Doctor of Alcantarn," "A Night in Rome, "and the "Rose of Tyrol," have been successfully performed in all the great American cities, and seem to be as far removed from Offennator's buffoonery as from the pretentiousness of the modern German school.

Mr. Excursage is also the head teacher of music in the Boston High School, and was last year sent by the city to Europe on a mission to in-year sent by the city to Europe on a mission to in-spect and report every thing connected with musical education in the German schools.

FRANCISCO SERRANO, REGENT OF SPAIN.

Francisco Serrano, one of the prominent leaders of the late Spanish Revolution, and who at its close became the head of the Provisional Government, has been, by the Cortes, made Re-gent of Spain. He is a man of over threescore and ten years. He fought in the war of Spanish Independence, and there acquired his early milli-

FRANCISCO SERRANO, REGENT OF SPAIN.

tary education. He was opposed to ESPARTERO, and in 1843 contributed to the overthrew of his administration. His influence over the mind of Queen ISABELLA, shortly after her marriage with the DUKE OF CADIZ, occasioned some serious difference between himself and the King-Consort.

After the fall of M. DE SALAMANCA he became a Liberal; was exiled in 1854; but soon returned to Spain, and supported with considerable ardor the O'DONNELL and ESPARTERO administration. the O'DONNELL and ESPARTERO administration. When these two entered into conflict he sided with O'DONNELS, and was by the latter created DUKE DE LA TORRE in 1856. Ever since 1865, when he was made Captain-General of Madrid, he has acted with the party of progress. It is to this party that he owes his present position as Regent of Spain.

Regent of Spain.

The establishment of the Regency in Spain seems to be a kind of compromise entered into between the Monarchists and Republicans. The influence of the latter faction, while it is feeble in the Cortes, is so strong among the people that it was not safe to disregard it. Thus the Provisional Government yields to the Regency, and Spain still waits for her king.

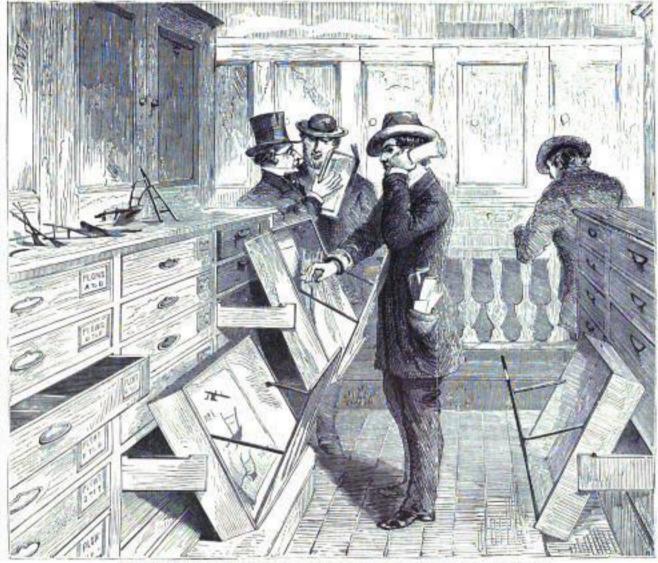

MINOT'S LEDGE LIGHT-HOUSE, OFF BOSTON HARBOR.-DRAWN BY A. R. WAUD .- [SEE PAGE 445.]

THE PATENT-OFFICE,

THE Patent-Office, Washington, D. C., was established in 1790. The old office was destroyed December, 1836, by fire, together with all the records, files, models, de-signs, and documents. Many of these lost records were restored through the exertions of patentees. Since 1836 from the new offire there have issued $5,000 patents, and about 75,000 models of patents are to be found in the salcons of the office, and are open to inspection. During the years just following upon the fire a small space sufficed for the uses of the Patent-Of-fice: but now the asfice there have issued fice; but now the au-loons occupying the up-per story of the building are required for models; the draughtsman occu-ples two large rooms; the library two more; and the files of the patents two more, and will require another soon. Twenty examiners, with forty assistants, are now required to perform the duties formerly attended to by one man. About 320 persons altogether are employed in the of-fice. The receipts are about $700,000 per annum, and far more than cover the expenses of this important depart-ment. The number of applications for patents last year was 20,000; of patents issued, 14,000; of careats, 3800. Our of careats, 3800. Illustration shows the in-terior of the room containing the plans of pat-

The Commissioner of Patents makes a yearly report to the Secretary of the Interior, which, with its accompanying documents, is published at the public expense.

PATENT-OFFICE, WASHINGTON, D.C.-EXAMINERS AT WORK .- (SECTIONS BY THEO. R. DAVIE.)

MINOT'S LEDGE LIGHT-HOUSE.

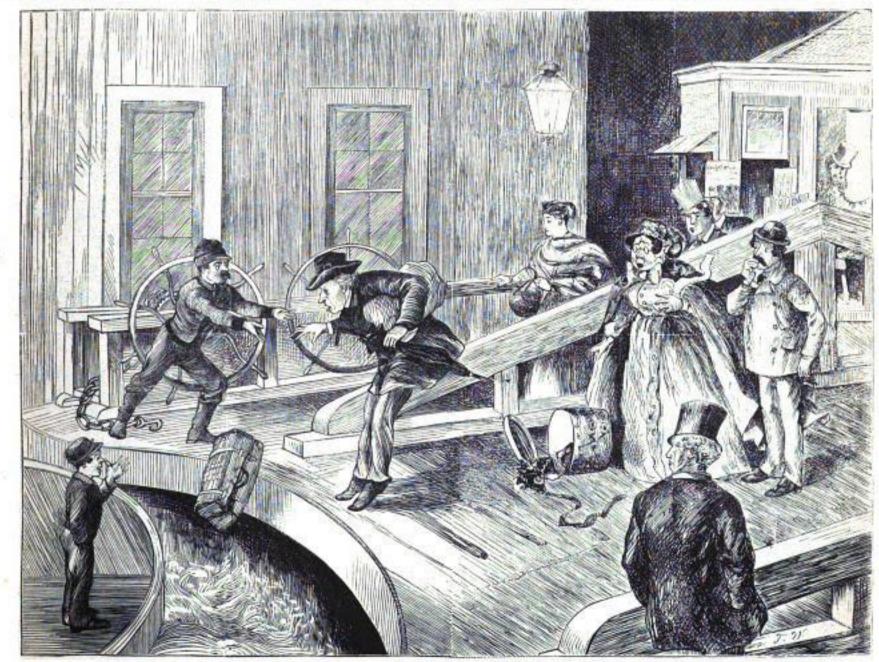

WE give on page 444 a representation of the Minot's Ledge Light-house, near Cohasset. It is a dangerous locality to vessels making Boston harbor in an easterly storm. The ledge was named after one of the early settlers. The light-houses and light-ships placed there have four stones were had in 1857.

been successively washed away, before the present spacture was built. The last one, destroyed April 16, 1851, was built of iron. It was then de-termined to build one of stone, like the for-mous Faldy-tone Lighthouse, on the English coast. The work was placed in charge of Cap-tain, new General, At-EXAMOR — a distin-guished officer in the United States Engineer

The entire masonry, which up to a certain height from the unter is a solid ands of stone, was litted and put to-gether at the yard of the constructor, and then freighted out to the ledge for permanent enertien, a matter of no slight difficulty, when it is re-membered that the men had to work up to their arm-pits in the water, and scarrely more than a handred working hours could be secured in a year, the workmen being constantly lifted off their feet by incoming waves and afterward having to ho replaced by the locats in attendance. Dut it was completed, and stands an enduring assesument of engineering skill, A more lonely habitation could hardly be imagined, and yet before it was built there were a thousand applithe office of light-keep-er, of whom two are coneantly on duty in the

The light-house is a mile and a half from the nearest had, and at lowwater the highest part of the nock is bare. The

JUST IN TIME TO BE TOO LATE-A DAILY SCENE AT ANY OF OUR FERRIES.-[Drawn by Thomas Worth.]

THE SUMMIT OF MOUNT WASH-INGTON.

MOUNT WASHINGTON is the highest mountain in New England, rising $295 feet above the level of the sea. It is one of the eastern group of the White Mountains. Our illustration, on page 441, represents the summit of this peak, and is a pic-turesque representation of the scene which it portrays. As one ascends the mountain vegeta-tion gradually disappears. Soon only dwarf pines are visible; at length even these disappear, and the only indiration of vegetable life is the lichen; upon the top of the mountain the rocks lay absolutely naked to the sky, as shown in our ANCIENT MAGIC.

MEDICINAL plants and herbs were in as much request among the sorecrers of antiquity as they are at this day among the pagess of Asia and Africa. Whospur has not read Monte Cristo can have but a feeble idea of the bright elysium into which a preparation of the Egyptian hemp can transport its consumer. Anciently the jugan priests of Syria would subject the senses of temde visitors to ecstatic visions, furnished by the forms of drugs, and by presenting to their sight pictures or groups artistically disposed would give their thoughts and aspirations whatever direction they pleased. There is every prob-ability that they performed meaneric operations on them. There are very few processes in charlatanism practiced in our days either in Europe or America which were not known in ancient Egypt, ancient Greece, and ancient Italy.

When the imagination was sufficiently exalted by means of nurcoties, it was not difficult to pro-sent before the excited and bewildered sense of the patient the image of a departed perent or relative, and being about communication by means of ventriloquism or the agency of assistants. Saviges to this day will bring themselves nester the management of their sorcerers, and by means of narcotics, and ghostly music, and vio-lent stances, to the sight and hearing of their dead relatives. The officiating magicians of all these peoples endeator to preserve their prestige by living apart from the tribe, and showing themselves only on urgent occasions. They are sup-posed to possess the power of rendering them-selves invisible. Oversionally, in the cases of predictions unfulfilled, or cures not effected, punishment is inflicted on the wise man; but if he esempes with life, he regulus his former influence sonner or later,

The magicians did not entirely trust to the workings of the imaginations of their clients. They made use, in the language of play-bills, of scenery, machinery, and decorations; and very ingenious and well adapted to their particular purposes these must have been, especially in the exterembs under the Egyptian temples, if Moore's "Fairmests" did not exaggerate what he experienced. The deception by the board was thus managed: The postulant was introduced into a norm, the ceiling of which was sky-blue. Under-seath this room was another, and in the centre of the floor of the upper one was cut a pretty wide aperture. A marble vessel filled with water and provided with a glass bottom was laid over this trap, and when the dupe's awe and terror nere sufficiently excited he was desired to look into this vessel. In the lower apartment was ticolds such god or goddess as he longed yet dreaded to see, under a well-disposed light, and the reflection of the same eviling from the surface of the water, gave the idea of the heavenly figure appearing from above.

Glorious or frightful appearances were pro-duced on the nalls of darkened chambers by means of phosphorus and chemical preparations, and voices were easily brought to add to the consternation of the consulter, and to his confidence in the wise man's skill and power. The favorite mode of getting up the fearful apparition con-sisted in making the sketch with inflammable substances, and when the visitor's eyes were ex-panding in naful expertance, the train was skill-fully fired, and the dazzling vision flashed on him. Of course he had been trained to prostrate himself in the presence of the supernatural thing. and the interview was brought to a successful termination through his own awe and the skillful management of the magic showman.

A striking and most imposing scene was sometimes enceted in this wise: In a darkened chamber, in which the applicant was told be would be favored by the sight of a divisity in the guise of a darting flame, the Archimagus thundered out his most awful incuntations, and at the decisive tustment his accomplice let go a kite carrying a lock of tow well included with an inflammable institle fire being admirly smiled The poor bird, frightened by the have, event in every direction, while the still more frightened dope, with face to the earth, was mpt in awe and terror.

It is worthy of mention here that the superstitions and magical rises of the anciests have been practiced even in modern times.

In Morbilian, in Brittany, not very long since, a piece of money would be put into the hand of a corpse before committing it to the earth. In the neighborhood of Mount Jurn they endeavored to smetify the custom by fastening the even to a was placed under the head. Thus was Charun's perpetuated. Wells, rivers, and trees, once on favorite abodes of goddesses, still possess the personns' reverence. Offerings long continued to be thrown into rivers, and in some instances nouges of saints were reverently dipped in them to obtain rain. Pins would be thrown into wells, and at the forestein of St. Elian, in Britting, a wise woman, after some previous incantations, would perform this ceremony at the request of any one who wished to injure an enemy. 18' course she did not do this spectra thing grace.

The early converted being unable to separate the iden of the local divinity from this or that well, the missionaries were obliged to be content with half measures, and so placed it under the protec-tion of a national or local saint, and appoint-ed devotional exercises to be performed there. These would be at first diligently and piously executed; but in time, and with the decay of piety, the old heathen license would begin to crop up, and it required energy and great influ-ence on the part of the spiritual rulers to revive the spirit of devotion which at one time distinguished the solumnities.

HEAT FROM THE STARS.

Bargarr starlight nights and a cold frosty air are so generally associated that there may be those who will find it hard to believe that the stars really tend to warm us. Yet they do, to their degree. If, as we are taught, they are re-mote sums, they must be great centres of fiery action, and a tittle of their heat must be beene to us with their light-beams. The distances of some of the nearest stars are known; if their temperature in terms of that of our sun could be found, it would be possible to compute the rela-tive amounts of warmth which they and the san impurt to the earth. Conversely, if we could measure the warmth of a star's rays, the tem-perature of their source could be approximately severtained, the distance being known; for the diminution by distance follows a simple law. To measure the heat of stars has just now suggested itself as an interesting problem. Of course ordi-nary thermometers are useless for such a delicate purpose; but the thermo-electric pile, which can be made sensitive enough to exhibit the minutest for made sensitive enough to exhibit the astrom-fluctuations of temperature, comes to the astrom-cters' aid, and promises them all they want in the matter of instrumental accuracy. By allowthe matter of instrumental accuracy. By allow-ing the image of a star formed in the focus of a large telescope-which for the time being becomes merely a great burning-glass—to fall upon the face of a thermo-pile, any beating power in the star's rays will be converted into electricity, and a current will be set up which will deflect the needle of a delicate galvanometer connected with the pile. Some preliminary experiments of this character have been tried independently by Mr. Huggins and Mr. Stone, and each observer has concluded that a measurable quantum of bent reaches us from the brighter stars. How much—what fraction of a Fahrenheit's degree has not yet been determined, but we shall know it in time. From the smallness of the amount to be measured the operation requires almost inconceivable niceties: the equability of atmospheric temperature requisite to make it certain that the observed effects are due to the suspected start the observed effects are due to the suspected cause, and not to variable air currents passing before or within the telescope, can exist very soldom; so the progress of the research will be very slow. Clear nights, by-the-way, are cold, because the absence of cloud permits the earth's warmth to radiate into space. Clouds are blank-cts that here in the lear. ets that keep in the heat.

THE DHURUMSALLAH AT SURAT.

THE idea of instituting a hospital for animals, however worthy of praise, is not original with the benevolent gentlemen who are said to enter-tain it for the benefit of the mammalia of this in the city of Surat, on the western coast of the peninsula of Hindostan, such an institution has been in existence for some centuries, and is now very richly endowed by the manificance of the Jain sect, who were its original founders. The Jains are the sharpest, shrewdest, and, it may be added, in trade the most unscrapalous of all the Asiatic tribes; they are the Quakers of India, and are essentially a trading people; like their Western prototypes, never adopting a salitary cureer, their religion forbidding the shedding of blood—indeed, it forbids the slaying of any thing that has once been been the of any thing that has once breathed the breath of life. The Jains are therefore vegetarians in the strictest sense of the word. To such an ab-sual extent is this prejudice carried that a Jain will not destroy the most noxious of reptiles or

These people have built at Surat an asylum of great extest for decrepts and diseased animals, and to this refuge the inhabitants of the whole district in which it stands are invited to send all the worn-out horses, bullocks, dogs, etc., which would otherwise be killed by their owners when the days of their utility had passed.

The Dharemsellah is of great extent, covering many acres of ground, surrounded by a lofty wall. Here are trees, through the branches of which and tumbés insumerable monkeys, with pess-ford and parroes of gorgeous plumage scream-ing answer to the monkey chatter.

A lugo elephant, gray with years, and decrepit from wounds received in buttle, stands under the shade of a mango-tree on the margin of a tank whisking the flies from his sides with the branch of a plantain-tree from which he has eaten the more succulent of the leaves. A long, ungainly, wicked-backing brate is the camel standing at his side getting the benefit of the elephantine fly-brush, while under the bedies of both repose, in the double shade, half a dozen dogs of as many different breeds. The Brahminee bull, however, is the animal that receives the greatest amount of consideration in the establishment, each old fellow having his own stall, to which he ratires from the heat of day or the dew of night.

It is quite impossible to estimate the number of animals within the walls; in 1848 there were several hundred horses, as many cows and goats, dogs innumerable, many deer, about twenty els, and seven elephants. All these animals were fed daily, and, strange to say, although there might be occasional quarrels among those of the I same species over the food, as a rule each accapted his allotted share without attempting a raid on his neighbor's portion. Dogs, although carnivorous animals, in the Surat Dhurumsallah were never allowed mest, being fed on the na-tive grains, dhal and bajeres, moistened with buffalo butter. Pigs were the only creatures ex-cluded from the benefits of the hospital, and this not by any particular law, but simply by ignor-ing the existence of any and aritmal ing the existence of any such animals.

As nothing can be killed inside the walls of the place, it may be believed that insect life greatly shounds, and it is said that hence arose, "once arounds, and it is said that hence arose, "once upon a time," a source of much tribulation to the amishle superintendent, who, with the enormous revenues of the place, could easily find food for the larger animals, but was corely troubled at the prospect of the inevitable starvation of the millions upon millions of creeping things that would persist in maltiplying so rapidly.

Ram Jut, however, was a man of great re-ource, as of great benevolence. He hit on a source, as on great combining charity to man brilliant expedient, combining charity to man and beast. He hired stout, sturdy beggars, at so much per night, to sleep within the hospital walls and surrender their bodies as foraging-ground for the starving cavalry, brown and gray.

THE BRITISH HOUSE OF LORDS.

The Bistricki House of Lords, as at present consti-tuted, consists of about 460 members, of whom 15 are minors. Deducting the Irish and the Scotch representative peers and the prelates, the number of bereditary peerages is 389, and of these the large majority are the creations of the present century. Of the barons who respond-ed to the writs of summons issued by Simon de Montfort, Earl of Leisenter, six hundred years Montfort, Earl of Leicester, six hundred years Montfort, Earl of Leicester, six hundred years ago, the descendants of three only now sit in the Upper House. They are Lords Hastings, De Res, and Audley, the baronies of the two former dating from 1264, and that of the latter from 1296. The surviving peerages which are creations of the fourteenth century are four-viz., the baronies of Camoys, Clinton, Dacre, and Willoughby de Eresby. The peerages of the fifteenth century now represented are seven; of the sixteenth, 12; of the seventeenth, 35; of the eight-centh, 35; and of the nineteenth, 233, On an average more than twenty never die an On an average more than twenty peers die an-nually, and three or four peerages become ex-

CANALS IN HINDOSTAN.

Tux Mohammedan conquerors of India left enduring monuments in gigantic works of irriga-tion. The Ganges Canal consists of 653 miles of main canal and 3000 miles of distributing channels, irrigating 700,000 acres. The East Jamna Canal is 130 miles, with 600 miles of distribution channels.

distributing channels.

There are many other canals either completed or now being constructed by the British Govern-ment, but none approaching to the size of the Ganges Canal, which in its main channel is 100 feet broad and 20 feet deep.

FATAL TO THE TEETH

Are all acrid preparatious. They may bleach the enamel, but they as surely dissolve and de-stroy it. The mild, genial, balsamic, and pre-servative Sozooosv, impregnated with the Sopo-nia of the famous tropical Soop-Tree of Chill, is the only absolutely safe article of its kind in the market, and protects the teeth from all descructive influences, as well as keeps them free from tartar.—[Com.]

To remove More Parties, Frenches, and Tan from the Sec. use Persy's More and Paronas Lorion, Proposed only by Dr. B. C. Persy, 49 Bond St., N. Y. Soid by all Druggists.—(Gow.)

Dvarureta Tanters cure Indigestion, Heartburn, and Sour Stomach. Fifty Cents per Box. Mailed for 60c. Sold by druggists. S. G. Wanasse, 571 Broadway.

Our readers can obtain a fac-simile Gold Watch $19 to $10 each, at 79 Nassau Street, N. Y.—(Core.)

ADVERTISEMENTS.

"Examine Yourself!"

"when and whom to marry," by reading the new Book entitled "HOW TO READ CHARACTER," a "self-examiner," containing 170 engravings, and a Chart for recording the sizes of all the organs of the bruis. Price $1 25. Booksellers and Newsmen have it. Sent first post by S. R. WELLS, 880 Broadway, N.Y.

DOSEY'S MUSICAL CABINET.—A Complete Liberary of Modern Mode for Voice and Plano-forter Choraca Valence accomplete.

Choraca Valence complete.

Choraca Basinson and Basis Sonos.

Side.
Beltmovies's 40 Ordeleval Walther.

Dide.
Complete Ordele Plano, each.

Dide.
Mailed on receipt of price.

Cavalouses Page.

BOCKEY & CO., 644 Broadway, N. Y.

CATARRH.

Bad, leathsome discose. One third of the people suffer from Catarch antil Dyspopsia, Liver Complaint, and Consumption bring them to the grave. Physicians do not understand the computation nor can they care it; but WOLCOTTS ANNIHILATOR, in plut bettles, cradicates this fifthy reouplaint from the constitution. Sold at all Drug Stores, or six plants sent free of express charges on receipt of S5, or one plat of WOLCOTTS PAIN, for Pain or Lancetees. Address R. L. WOLCOTT, 1st Chattages Square, N. Y.

FOR BOSTON

PALL RIVER, DIRECT.
THE
WORLD-RENOWNED STEAMERS BRISTOL and PROVIDENCE,

COMMANDER BRAYTON, COMMANDER SIMMONS, WILL LEAVE (Alternate Baye) DAILY, FROM PIER—30—NORTH RIVER, (Foot of Chambers Street),

(Foot of Chambers Street),

(Foot of Chambers Street),

—AT 5 P.M.—

DODWORTH'S CHIEBRATED ORCHESTRA, including brass, string, and reed bands, will be attached to each atcamer on its passage.

Grand Promenade Concert THIS IS THE ONLY LINE RUNNING A SUNDAY NIGHT BOAT.

PROVIDENCE Passengers by the above steamers will leave Pail River at 5.50 A.M., ARRIV-ING at 6.50 A.M. arrivers of the state of the sta

POR THE BETTER ACCOMMODATION OF THE PUBLIC,

THE SPLENDID STEAMERS. NEWPORT and OLD COLONY

COMMANDE LEWIS, COMMANDES MILLER, WILL LEAVE (Alternate Days) DAILY, (Sundays excepted), FROM PIER-28-NORTH RIVER, (Post of Murray Street),

BOSTON via NEWPORT.

FREIGHT received at Pier 30 up to 5 P.M., and at Pier 38 up to 6:30 P.M., each evening.

JAMES PISK, Jr., President, M. R. SIMONS, Managing Director, CHAS. H. VAILE, General Passenger Agent, H. H. MANGAM, Freight Agent, NARRAGANERTY STRANSMIT COMPANY.

THE CELEBRATED GENUINE OBOIDE GOLD WATCH CO., Geneva, Switzerland,

Manufacture Watches with the unnest precision. They have all the brilliancy, durability, and appearance of the most rare and costly description of gennine Goar Herrimo-Case Watches. Respression, the most exacting of our customers, have thoroughly demenstrated the atrength, durability, actually a strength of the process of the most exacting of our customers, have thoroughly demenstrated the atrength, durability, actually a LT H A M WATCHES, and pronounced them invaluable as reliable Time-Keepers. Ladies' and Gentlemen's Fire Swiss Movements, $12 and $15. Magnificant Fall-Jeweled Parent Leves-Pac-Simile Watcharas—42.0. Chronometer Balance, $25. Each Westeh warranted to be in perfect ranning order, and so retain the color of 18. Calling, $10 csf. Bent by express every where. Customers must pay all charges to Express, who will exhibit Watch, &c., previous to payment of the bill, or receipt of charges only. Greiers must be accompanied with astisfactory reference from the Express Apent.

If you want the Gennine Orolde Gold Watches, be sure and order of our only office in the United States. To Clubs, ordering a Watches, we will send one extra fee of charge.—John y DOGGAN, President Orolde Gold Watches, be sure and order of our only office in the United States. To Clubs, ordering & Watches, we will send one extra fee of charge.—John y DOGGAN, President Orolde Gold Watches, be sure and order of our only office in the United States. To Clubs, ordering & Watches, we will send one extra fee of charge.—John y DOGGAN, President Orolde Gold Watches, be sure and order of our only office in the United States. To Clubs, ordering & Watches, we will send one extra fee of charge.—John y DOGGAN, President Orolde Gold Watches, be sure and order of our only office in the United States.

THE CELEBRATED METAL WATCH, ONLY $10.—BEST IN THE MARKET.

SUPERIOR HOME EDUCATION

Near London (Sugland). For Prospectos, apply to No. 45 South Washington Square, New York.

CYPRESS HILLS CEMETERY. OFFICE, No. 124 BOWERY, N. Y., (Corner of Grand Street).

OPPICERS: OPPICERS: EDMUND DERGOS, President. A. S. JARVIS, Vice-President. WILLIAM MILES, Treasurer. WILLIAM EDWARDS, Secretary HERVEY G. LAW, WM. J. PEASE, JOHN I. VAN ALST, ALFRED M. WOOD, Trustees. N. O. PALMER, Sop't an' Surveyor.

SIGHTS and SENSATIONS

FRANCE, GERMANY, and SWITZERLAND;

OR, EXPERIENCES OF

AN AMERICAN JOURNALIST IN EUROPE.

BY EDWARD GOULD BUFFUM,

12mo, Cloth, $1 50.

* * A book at once entertaining and instructive.
 * * Pashiomable tourists who are leaving this port for a trip to Europe will find Mr. Buffour's "Sights and Sensetions in France, Germany, and Switnerland" a delightful and serviceable traveling companion. At the same time the thousands who are to append the sameor at home, either is town, in the country, or on the eee-shore, may, by the help of this little book, culoy many of the pleasures of foreign travel while they secape its anneyances. * * * It will doubtless be more harrily welcomed by the public than any similar work which has appeared.—N. Y. Hevald.

It treats in a pleasure and popular matner some of the most striking topics of the European world.—N. Y. Evendon Past.

A refreshing and entertaining book, which will in-

A refreshing and entertaining book, which will in-terest every body.—N. F. Evening Mail.

PERSONNEL BY HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK,

EF Harry & Burrays will send the above work by wait, posture perposed, to any part of the United States, on receipt of $1.50.

GUNPOWDER, Best quality of SPORTING and BLASTING POWDER assonfactured by the SCHAGHTICOKE CO., Schaghticoke, N.Y.

Every Freemason should have it.

GENERAL AHIMAN REZON AND PREEMASON'S GUIDE:

Being a complete Monitor of the Degrees E.A., F.C., and M.M., with Explanatory Notes and Lectures; also Ceremonies—Consecration, Dedication, Installation, Laying Foundation Stones, Burial Services, &c. To which is added a Effinal of Lodge of Service, and the Ceremonies of Consecrating Masonic Cemeteries, Masonic Trials, &c.

By DANIEL SICKELS, 334. Embellished with nearly 200 Engravings and Steel Fortrait of the Author. Beens in Fine Extra Chorn, 1800, $2 00.

Becam in First Extra Cuoru, 1980, $2 00.

* This Monitor is the most complete work of the kind now published, embracing all matters connected with and required by the Blue or Symbolic Lodge, and is particularly consistent with the Work and Lodge, and is particularly consistent with the Work and Lodge, and is particularly consistent with the Work and Lodge, and the country. The notes, of which the subme has an abundant supply, are elaborated distractions upon every section of the kitual and Ceremony of the Order. This is the only work which contains the universality-adopted Burtal Services, 19 main for Lodge of Surrow, and the Ceremonius for Consecrating Massanic Conseleries.

Sent, free of pastage, on receipt of price.

GENERAL AGENTS WANTED in all prominent localities, with whom special areasgements will be made. Address

MASONIC PUBLISHING COMPANY,

432 BROOME STREET, N.Y.

DIRECTIONS FOR SELF-MEASUREMENT.

SUMMER DRESSES AND SUITS MADE TO ORDER IN THE LATEST STYLE.

Samples of New Materials, with full directions for feif-Measurement, sent on receipt of three stamps. LADIES WEDDING ON TRAVELING OUTFITS

INPANTS' AND CHILDREN'S WARDROBES

furnished at short notice and at reasonable prices. All inquiries by letter promptly answered. Lists of articles necessary for Trousseaux, Wardrobes, &c., with prices, sent on application.

LORD & TAYLOR. Outfitting Department, BROADWAY, Cor. GRAND ST.

FINE WATCHES AT IMPORTERS' PRICES.

SOLID GOLD
HUNTING-CASE LARGES WATCHES, First Quality, Lever Movement, Full Jeweled, Adjusted Balance, Regulated and Warranted, 596. Lepine Movement, Gold Balance, 893. FINE SILVER
GASTS' HUNTING CASE WATCHES, Lever Movement, First Quality, 814; Extra Quality, 816.

IMPERIAL DUPLEX
Engraved Movement, Erby Jewels, Sweep Seconds, Stives Heartwo Cases, $15.

AMERICAN MOVEMENT
3-os. Silver Cases, $35: Pall Jeweled, $16.

Solute God, D.

SOLID GOLD

Gente' Huntine-Case Wavenes, First Quality, Lever Movement, Full Jeweled, Adjusted Balance, Regulated and Warranted, 240. Extra Quality, 240; and Watches of every description, equally low, sent by Express, to be paid for after they have been reserved and examined. Any Watch received from us may be returned or exchanged if sol giving perfect satisfaction. Full Descriptive Price-Lists seat free.

8. H. MOORE & CO., Importers, 52 & 54 JOHN ST., NEW YORK.

BEECHER'S

MEMORABLE SERMON AT WEST POLKT.

Subject: " The Perfect Manhood." PLYMOUTH PULPIT, No. 14.

Price 10 cenus. Sold by all Newsdealers. Yearly obscription, beginning with any number, 23. J. B. PORD & CO., 39 PARK ROW, N.Y.

PIANOS and ORGANS.

Prior grantly reduced for Cash. New Seven-Octave Pinnes, of Sevi-clure makers, for $205 and upward. New Cabinet Organs for $40 and upward. Second-hard Pinnes, Melodecons, and Organs from $40 to $175, at 431 Broadway, N. Y.

BORACE WATERS.

SWEET
QUININE

Sweet Quintent to unevented equal—done for done—to the sulpasse (bitter) Quintine, with the important advantage of being sweet, instead of bitter.

SVAPNIA

SVAPNIA

Sold by druggists, prescribed by best physicians, STEARNS, FARR, & CO., Chemista, New York.

$20 A DAY to Male and Female

Agents to introduce the BUCKE FYE 400 SHUTTLE SEWING MACHINER, Sitch affice on both sides, and is the only Licensed Shutter Machines in the marks sold for low than $40. All others are in the marks sold for low than $40. All others are for ingements, and the seller and user are liable to proceed and impristances. Foll particulars free.

Address W. A. HENDERSON & CO.,

Gleveland, Ohio.

$3000 Salary. { v.s. plano co., n. y.

Removed to 335 Broadway. THE COLLINS $15.

WATCH FACTORY.

$20.

The Cullius Metal and Jewelry Factory has re-moved from 31 Nassau Street to their splendid New Offices,

No. 335 BROADWAY. These superior Watches have now been in use over three years, and give universal scalification; and although sold at as moderate a price, are not surphised in appearance and for time by guide orrecording siles and $200. They have been greatly improved, but the price retentias the rame, $15. Those of extra fice faith, $20. Gents' and Ladder' sizes. Jewelry of the ichest siyles, is merry respect equal to the fixest gaid, at one-tenth the price. We have but ONE OFFICE, NO AGENTS, and are not responsible for the begin and worth-less goods suid at these levelry establishments, Our Factory is the ONLY PLACE where the Gen-nice Collins Metal Watches and Jewelry can be had.

C. E. COLLINS & CO.,

No. 335 Broadway, our. Worth Street,

"As natural as Thackeray, and more real than Bickens."

HARPER & BROTHERS, New York, have just published:

CONTRACTOR OF THE

My Daughter Elinor.

A NOVEL

8vo, PAPER, $1 25.

From the N. Y. Evening Post.

A good American nevel, presenting life and society in the United States—the life that we live and the society of which we are a constituent part—has long been the desideratum of publishers and the desquir of novel-readers. " " A story in which the characters are types of the American people at large, differing from the same social representatives of other countries, is rarely leaved from the press. Such a story is "My Daughter Ethor," which is destined to sixin a wide popularity, because delineating with naturalness and vertainstitude the life that is around us. It is from each bests that the historian gathers the habitades of the age of which he writes. In Mr. Grey we have the portraiture of the accomplished politician; in "My Daughter Ethore" we have a real woman of feeth and blood, such as many a reader has made loss to in the days of premiers fearnesse. The style is easy and mafferled, at times straining overment at epigram, and again running a little into slipshod; and the dialogue is regid and effective, never tecturing with obvious comment or teaching with inevitable inference. Mrs. Backett is a fresh and delightful Mrs. Malaprop, and Tad Tilman is an original drawn from nature. The reader must learn the plot of "My Daughter Ethore" from the novel block! The authorship is kept from the public. We bussed nothing, however, in saying that the success of the book will seen reveal the secret. From the N. Y. Roening Post.

From the N. Y. Herald.

A work far above the S. F. Bernick.

A work far above the general order of American nevels. * * * The characters are fall of life. * * * The style is clear and vigorous, the dialogues are animated and interesting, and the characters are, with but one or two exceptions, admirably drawn. The author, whosever he is, displays a marked ability for novel writing.

EF Harren & Barrenn will send the above work by mail, poster prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of $1.50.

Savage's Ursina,

PURE GREASE of the CANADA BEAR.

Superior to every other Pomade for softening, giving a brilliant gloss, and increasing the growth of the Hoir. EVANS, MERCEE, & Co. (LATE LAMPLOCOIS & CAMP-BELL), MONTENAL, Proprietors, AND SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

Musket SHOT - GUNS, Warranted to shoot close and kill at 60 yards. Price, $2 50. Warran.—Army Guns and Revolvers. Send stamp for price-list of Rifes. Shot-Sons. Evvolvers, to JOHNSTON'S GUN WORKS, Pitteburgh, Pa.

A GREAT HIT.

THE VELOCIPEDE SONG, sing with immens success by Miss Lydia Thompson, in "Simbad," at Nibbo's Garden ... Price 46c, We publish all of the Music from "Sin-bad," including the CAN-CAN QUADRILLE of the Clodeche Troupe—Price 68c. WM. A. POND & CO., 547 Broadway.

C. C. PARKS & CO., Bankers and Brokers,

No. 38 Broad and 34 New Sts., New York.

CURL YOUR HAIR!

A SAMPLE of PROFESSOR BOBB'S MAGNETIC A. CURLIQUE sent PREE. It couls straight bair (without injury) in soft, luxurisat, beautist, foreign curis, or the riser application. Address, with Scaur, PROF. B. H. HOBB, PARRIAN, OUTO.

VELOCIPEDIOLOGY—The Fale of a Trussel-or. A curious book for inquisitive people. 400 pages, elegantly bound in cloth and gilt. Sew your buttons on fast before sending for the book, enclosing postage stamp and address to the publisher. T.W. EVANS & CO., 41 So. Eighth St., Philadelphia.

PARLOR STRAM ENGINE: made entirely of Metal; Boller and Fernare complete; will work for hours if supplied with water, &c.: free from danger; a child can work it. Seat free, with instructions, for $1.00. Address. WALTER HEAT,
No. 102 Nassan Street, New York.

210 PER DAY GUARANTEED

Agents to sell the Hoan Surrent Surren Macaine. It makes the took street, attack on norm store, how the under-feed, and is equal in every respect to any Severing Machine stee towards. Price 230. Warranted for 5 years. Send for circular. Address Journeys, Chara, & Co., Boston, Mass., Pittsburgh, Pa., ee St. Louis, Mo.

$3500 Per Year to sell " Bonder of the Book!"

Miss Louisa M. Alcott's New Story, An Old Fashioned Girl

Le begun in the July Number of Merry's Muse.

MERRY'S MUSEUM, (NEW SERIES),

AN ILLUSTRATED MONTHLY, Edited by Louisa M. Alover, Author of "Little Worn-ea." The Puzzle Drawer by Aper Son.

The changest and best Magazine for Young Folks published. Send 2 three-cont postage stamps for a Specimen Number, and judge for yaptwelf. §150 per year, with liberal premiums and terms to claus, Accents wanted.

HORACE B. PULLER, Publisher, 14 Bromfield Street, Besten.

IMPROVED ALUMINIUM BRONZE HUNTING-CASED WATCHES.

The Improved Aluminism Broase is a metal differing on-ticely from any ever offered to the public. The qualities and resemblance to Gold are such that even indiges have been decrived. It has seriously excepted the attention of selection area, and has not only called furth the subgitums of the present corresponder of its present corresponder of its present properties, but has not obtained a Gold Medal at the Paris Exposition.

The movements are well finthed, perfectly regulated, and as all these goods are warrant them as excellent time-keeping.

Parks: France $14.

First deals with the execution of the beauty of the first state of the Firster decides with the demand.
If the sent, postpect, rea demand.
Grode cent by Express, C. O. D., with charges.
Address JULES D. HUGGURNIN VUILLEMIN,
No. 46 Nanua Street, New York.

A Valuable Literary Curiosity. A Fac-Simile of the N. Y. Ulessa County Gazerte, published January 4, 1994, on manifil paper, draped in mourning, and containing a full account of the Death and Funeral Services of General George Washington, Will be sent to any sidiress free on receipt of Ffey Cents.

Address J. E. WHITNEY & CO., Publishers, South Place, Section, Micro.

DEAFNESS, CATARBH, SCHOPULA.

A lady who had suffered for years from Beafness, Catarch, and Scrofula, was cured by a simple remedy. Her sympathy and graituate prompts her to send the receipts from of charge to any one similarly afflicted.

Address Mas. M. C. LEGGETT, Hobokes, N. J.

HARPER'S PERIODICALS.

TERMS FOR 1869.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE, One Year $4 100 Harren's Wrenty, One Year..... 4 00 Harren's Barar, One Year..... 4 00

Harren's Magazine, Hauren's Werselv, and Hauren's Basas, to one address, for one year, $10.00; or any two for $7.00.

An Matro Oppy of either the Magazine, Wesselv, or Basas will be reguled pratts for every Clob of Five Sensements of $4.00 and, in one resultance; or, Six Oppins for $30.00, without extra copy.

The Postage within the United States is for the Magazine $1 costs a year, for the Wesselv or Basas.

$0 cents a year, payable yearly, sembyearly, or quar-

80 cents a year, payable yearly, semi-yearly, or constarty, at the office where received. Subscriptions from the Breninium of Canada must be accompanied with 24 cents shiftitional for the Magazina, or 50 cents for the Wiscard or Banas, to propay the United States restarts.

postage.
The Volumes of the Manazawa cremmens with the Numbers for June and Detember of each year. Subscriptions may cremmence with any Number. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to begin with the first Number of the current Volume, and back Numbers will be sent the carrent Volume, and back Numbers will be sent accordingly.

The Volumes of the Wesserv commence with theyear. When no time is specified, it will be medicalled that the galescriber wholes to commence with the Number next after the certified of his order. In conflicting by mail, a Part-define driver or Braft, payable to the order of Banesa & Baccause is preferable to Bank Notes, where, should the driver or braft, be lost or studen, it can be consend with our large to the sender.

Tunes you Appreciated as Hastrat's Parameter. Taxos was Astronomic to Harrist Parinted A.

Harper's Manarita.—Whole Petr, 1986; Notil Parint, $155; Ganter Pare, $70—each insertion; or, for a lose space, $1.50 per Line, each insertion.

Harper's Notion—based Parint, $1.50 per Line,
Cetrick Pare, $1.50 per Line—each insertion.

Harper's Manar.—$1.50 per Line; Cuts and Display,
$1.50 per Line—each insertion.

Address HARPER & DISTRICE, Now York.

Fresh Summer Books

PERLIPORT EX

HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK.

23" Sent by Mail, postage property to any part of the Culful states, on record of the price.

SIGITTS AND SENSATIONS IN FRANCE, GER-MANY, AND SWITZERLAND: or, Experience of an American Journalist to Europe. By Enward Gover Buryon. Page, Cloth, 23 Sec.

FIVE ACRES TOO SUCH. A Trathful Election of the Attractions of the Country, and a Careful Country and a Careful Country and a clareful Country and much Valuation for the Question of Fredt and Local seventher in American Institute Function in the Karal Prochaming Large or Small Frieces in the Karal Prochaming Large or Small Frieces in the Karal Prochaming Large or Small Frieces. With Characteristic linestrations. 12me, Cloth, $2.50.

THERE SEASONS IN EUROPEAN VINEYARDS.
Vocating of Vine-Culture, Yine Discree and its Cure: Wine-Making and Wines, Red and White;
Wine-Drinking as affecting Health and Honds. By WHALLEY J. FLAGE. 12810, Cloth, $2.50.

THE STUDENT'S SCRIPTURE HISTORY. The Old Testatoria History. From the Creation to the Hessen of the Jews from Capitalty. Edited by Wintings Soon, Li. B. With Hope and Woodcute. Large 18ths, Chath, 4th 10. La Jers, with The Student's New Yorksand History, a New Edition of which is not ready.

THE WEDDING DAY IN ALL AGES AND COUNTRIES. By Edward J. Words, 1980, Cloth, $1.75.

THE MALAY ABCHIEFLAGO: The Land of the Strong-lives and the lifted of Paradise. A Narra-tive of Traxet, with Statios of Man and Nation. By Alarine Resear. Mattact, Author of "Travels and the Assertion and Rev Negro," "Palm Trees of the America," So. With Yen Naps and Physone ele-gant Bluetrations. Covers Sec., Costs, 52 20.

PISHING IN AMPHICAN WATERS. By Gavio C. Scorr. With 170 Highrathons. Crown Sto., Cartle, ELEMENTS OF ASTRONOMY. Destruct for Academics and (Eg) Schools. By Evan Lemma, Li.D., Prote-ser of Natural Philosophy and Astronomy in Yair College, and Anthropolic for Course of Matagements." James, Sheep, $1.50.

The New Novels

Pittelienike my

HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

MY DAUGHTER ELINOR. A Novel of American

ANTHONY TROLLOPE'S LAST NOVELS: NYTHONY TROULDINGS LAST NOVERS: PHINEAS FINN, the first Member. Historited by Millate, Hot, Paper, $1.35; Cloth, $1.75. HE KNEW HE WAS RIGHT, Complete. With 64 Bustraliant by Morias Steec. See, Paper, $1.00; Cloth, $1.50. Part II., separately, Paper, 50 center.

STREITON. A Novel. By Hanny Kansanav, Author of "Henry," "Geoffery Hamlyn," "Baccashoo," de., de. tro, Paper, Herris.

THE SACRISTAN'S BOUSEHOLD. A Shery of Lippe Bennedt. By the Austor of "Mabel's Friegrass," &c. With Illustrations by C. G. Bush. Sec.

THACKERAY'S NOVELS:

New Edition, beautifully printed, with the Author's own librations.

VANETY FAIR. A Novel Without a Hero. Blos-brased. Complete in One Volume, bro, Paper. Price PIFTY CENTS.

THE VIRGINIANS. A Tale of the Last Century, Complete in One Volume, No. Paper, with nearly 100 Engravings. Price SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS. THE NEWCOMES. Memoirs of a Most Despecta-ble Panifly. Edited by Arther Pendyanis, Esq. With 107 illustrations. In the Volume, Paper, Sco., Price SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS.

12" Howers & Berguna will time immediately New Billians of Thackers's other New in, Himstered by the Author, at correspondingly her prices.

CHARLES READE'S NOVELS:

HARD CASH. Blustested. See, Paper, 25 cents. GRIFFITH GAUNT; or, Jerdonsy. Himmatel.

IT IS NEVER TOO LATE TO MEND. Svo, Pa-23" To be followed by Charles Beatif's other Newle.

THE DODGE CLUB: or, Itely in 1808. By James Be Mulls, Author of "Cord and Creene," Ac. With One Hundred Diamerations. See, Paper, 75 cents.

POR HER SAKE. By Furnishing W. Resigners, Author of "Chrey's Confession," "Malife: a Stray," "Christic's Faith," "No Man's Priced," "Poor Ha-monity," &c. With Thing Blustrations. 6vo, Pa-per, 75 censs.

BREAKING A BUTTERFLY; se, Blanche Ellerslie's Ending. By the Anthor of "Gov Dyingstone," "Swend and Gover," "Brakespaure," "Sanz Merel," "Maurice Dering," Act. Inhabitated, Svo, Poper, THAT BOY OF NORCOTYS. By Case, Lavre, Author of "The Brambighs of Richop's Kally," "Rarringson," "Marries Termay," "The Balloon," "Charles O'Malley," &c. With Illustrations. See, Pages Words.

Paper, 25 cents. per Hanner & Reservings will send may of the above with his most, positive free, to song part of the United States, on morigit of the policy. DO FT NOW. Ben't delay, but send 35 cents at maga and receive MAPLE LEAVES for twelve meaths. It is the triangest, the less, and the mast popular Monthly published. Specimen expire sent or receipt of a strong. Address O. A. EGOSTUACH, No. 98 Nossaut St., N. Y.

Agents! Read This! WE WILL PAY AGENTS A SALARY of $30 per week and expanses, or allow things consules in, to will our next and so solerful inter-VV of H30 per week and express, or allow a limit commission, to sell our next and sculerful intes-tions. Address M. WAGNER & CO., Marshall, Mah.

A GIGNTS WANTED, Can make 215 of The day within the BLAKE CHAIR SPHINGS Sand for Circular, force, G. K. GOODWIN, Mark Could Co., sid Broadway, N. Y.

Hollange's Cal. Assest, compared with other olutionists of salves, is as good to the common metals. Ashers may a tenture over, but this Obstanta never fails, Old sarge and above west disappear under its influence.

G15 A PAY. Samples Proc. Address, with

THE GLORIOUS FOURTH.

Bonnex (newalty patriotic, entirely forgets kinself on this occasion). "The Spirit of '76lumph! The Spirit of 76,000 Infernal Wild Cats, I say!"

SUMMER CLOTHING.

FREEMAN & BURR,

CLOTHING WAREHOUSES.

REMOTED TO

Nos. 138 & 140 Fulton St., New York.

CHEVIOT SUITS, all C.dors and Mixtures, at Photoman & BURE'S, Nos. 68 and 46 Pulbon St.

L INEN SUITS, in White and Facey Colors, at PRESMAN & INTRIES, New, 128 and 140 Pullon St.

C ASSIMERE SUTTS, great variety of Styles, at PREGUAN & BURES, Nos. 128 and 149 Fullon St.

DRAP DE ETE Suits, in Black, for Summer, at PHREMAN & fillings, Nov. 138 and 149 Fulton St.

TWEED AND MELTON Suits of all Styles, at FREEMAN & Edules, No., 65 and 140 Fulton St.

DUSTERS, ALEXCA and LENES, dust proof, at PRICEMAN & BURNES, New 128 and 140 Pulson St.

SACKS, Alpara, Linna, Secrete ker, largestock, at PRHEMAN & STURES, Nov. 138 and 140 Fulian St.

SHITS for Travellog, Yachting, Sesside, &c., at FILEMAN & BUILDS, Nos. 128 and 140 Fulton 81.

BATHENG Suits and Underwear of all kinds, at FRECMAN & BURRES, N. S. 128 and 140 Falton St.

GENTS' Funda-bing Goods, every description, or FIREWAN & BURGES, Now, 128 and 1st Fullon St.

GARMENTS to MEASURE at short motion, No. 125 and 140 Public St.

WHITE Vests & Pants, pile & Breket Ducks, et FIREGIAN & BURGES, Nos. 188 and 146 Palten St.

WHITE Vests, Marseilles & Turkish Towels, at PHESMAN & BURRES, New US and 116 Palise St.

BOYS' AND YOUTHIS' SUITS for all ages, he FREEMAN & BURRES, Nos. 188 and 149 Fulton St.

BOYS AND YOUTHS Dress & School Smits, at PEREMAN & SURES, New, 138 and 149 Fulton St.

BOYS' AND YOUTHS' SCORE, buest Styles, at PICEUMAN & BURGES, Nov. 105 and 140 Pullon, St.

FREEMAN & BUBB RECEIVE ORDERS for CLOTHING from all tens of the country, and guarantee perfect father in all cases, by their New Rules for Self-Measurement. Few littles for Self-Measurement, Patterns of Goods, and Price-List, mailed five on application. In 181516 MAN & BURRES

CLOYBING WAREHOUSES, Nos. 138 & 140 FULTON ST., N. Y.

Ponsas & See, Martell' resolutions for Meeroschaster possile. Staros: 522 Herselwart possile. Staros: 522 Herselwart possile. Staros: 522 Herselwart possile of these. Seed for new whodesale of retail circular to Letter-llox 530. Repairing and Bolilog also done.

STAMMERING cured by Entry Applicants. For Pamphlet, address Simpson & Co., Box 5076, N.Y.

BEAUTIFUL WOMAN.-If you would be beautiful, use HAGAN'S MAGNORIA BARM.

It gives a pure, blooming complexion and restores youthful beauty.

Its effects are gradual, natural, and perfect. It removes Redness, Blotches, and Pimples, euros Tan, Susburn, and Freekles, and makes a lady of thirty appear but twenty.

The Magnorea Balm makes the skin smooth and pearly, the eye bright and clear, the cheek glow with the bloom of youth, and imparts a fresh, plamp appearance to the countenance. No lady need complain of her complexion when 75 cents will purchase this delightful article.

The best article to dress hair is Lyon's Ka-

Let the Buil Byes of the Billous spatkle with hope as they read this particuple. Tarnass's Brancisceau Servers Areasais regulates the flow of the bile and resters the natural action of the bowels. There is nothing like it in billionsussa complicated with constitution.

KEPT BY ALL APOTHECARIES.

HARPER'S HAND-BOOK OF FOREIGN TRAVEL.

HARPER'S HAND-BOOK FOR TRAVELLERS IN BURGUE AND THE EAST, Being a Guide through France, Belaina, Holland, Germany, Austria, Haly, Keyst, Setta, Tarkey, Greec, Switzerland, Tyrot, Russia, Dominik, Sweden, Spain, and Gerst Bithnin and Ireland. With a Bathword Map corrected up to 1848. To W. Plannings Examina. Revised Edition: Seventh Year. Large Plan, Leather, Pocket-Book Form, $750.

HARPER'S PHRASE-BOOK.

HARPER'S PHRASE BOOK; or, Brand-Book of Trivel Talk for Travellers and Schools, Being a Gride to Convergationala English, Franch, Genasis, and Italien, on a new and Improved Michael. In-tended to accompany "Barper's Hamiliands for Travellers," if W. Prameson Protestal. Assisted by Professors of Britishillers, Printerior, With con-cise and explicit Bules for the Promuseriories of the different Languages. Square 4to, Flexible Clath, $4.55.

PUBLISHED BY HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK.

Hanren & Recruses will send the above works by mail, protage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of the price.

NAZARETH HALL, Moravian Beod-Boys, of Nameth, Northempton Co. Fo., For Cata-logues, apply to Riev. EUGENE LEIBERT, Principal.

The Reason why Every One can obtain a Haines Piano:

The price will come within the means of all classes, as they make several sizes and styles to soit all classes. Constantly on hand Planos ranging in price from $300 to $1000, all of which contain all the modern improvements, and are warranted for Seven Years. For further proof of the popularity of these Pianos, see Bevenue Returns for Year ending April 1st, 1869, in which HAINES BRO'S sold 1135 Plance. The selling of 1135 Plance in one year alone shows the partiality shown these favorite Pianos. Catalogues sent on application to

HAINES BROTHERS, 46 East 14th Street, New York.

MAGIC DIAMOND

A recent discovery that steel, when made to rotate upon glass and similar substances, will cut with more rapidity and case, and is

Cheaper, Better, and More Durable

than the BEST DIAMOND

Invaluable to every Family. NO TOOL-CHEST COMPLETE WITHOUT IT. Sent free by mail on receipt of price, $2 each. AGENTS WANTED. Address

J. Russell & Co.,

Green River Cutlery Works, 83 BEERMAN STREET, New York City.

NATURE'S GREAT RESTORER.

GREEN MOUNTAIN MINERAL SPRING WA-TER, Mount Holly, VL

This celebrated water cures Dyspepals, Rheumathem, Piles, Scrofnia, Urimary Discases, and Fernals Weaknesses. "It is a tonic and general builder-up of the system." Send for Descriptive Circular. Sold by Irraguats.

McRESSON & ROBBINS, No. 91 Fulton St., N.Y., GEO. C. GOODWIN & CO., Boston, Mass., Agrais. F. FENN & CO., Proprietors, Butland, Vt.

825 to 850 per by main by Acents selling the AMERICAN POCKET POLICEMAN, a besistiful allver-placed combination Lock and Chain, of universal application, combining mility, norestry, and beauty Capable of 16,660 changes of combination. Send One Dollar for Sample and Terms to Agents. Address
AMERICAN POCKET POLICEMAN MFG, CO.,
P. O. Box 518, Chicago, III. P. O. Box 518, Chicago, Ill.

ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS.

Sore and Dry Throat cured by half a Plaster; uspally in two or three hours.

Dr. Green, No. 863 Broadway, New York, Informs us he sold on Monday, Jane 21, 1862, two Plusters to a young woman suffering very severely from lumbago, On Thursday she called to get two more for a friend, and then stated how the two she had purchased on Monday had relieved her immediately after putting them on, and cured her in two days of a most distress ing pain in her back and loins.

Allorek's Porous Pinsters have been found specifies for libraruation of the Wrists.

COMPOSITE IRON WORKS.

Exclusive Manufactures of PATENT COMPOSITE WROUGHT-IRON GATES, HAILINGS, and GUARDS, mproved Wire Book Counter and Office Railing, Lawn, Cuttage, and Farm Fence. VASES, FOUNTAINS, STATUARY, &c.

Iron Furniture, Stable Fittings, &c. CHASE & CO., No. 169 Morear St., near Prince. (Formerly No. 325 Broadway.)

AGENTS WANTED to rell the REQUA PATENT SAFETY CONCAVE REBOSENE BURNER & CHIMNEY.

Generates no gas to cause explosion. The base of chimpey, burner, and oil is always cool. It gives twice the light of any other burner.

Send for Sample and Circular to JOHN D. AYRAH, General Agent,
40 John St., New York.

TO SPORTSMEN!!

$2000 A YEAR AND EXPENSES $2000 to Arents, to fatroduce the Wilson Newling Machine. Stitch olike on both sides. Samples on two weeks tried. Extra indorrenants to expectanced agreeds. For further particulars, address the WILSON SEWING MACHINE CO., Cleveland, Ohio; Boston, Mass.; et St. Louis, Mo.

So & 85 PRINTING OFFICES, for Boys, Druggists, Physicians, Amsteurs, Good Office for little roosey. Print Cards, Labels, Envelopes, &c. Send stamp for Circular, EUREKA PRESS CO., Suffield, Coun.

DRUNKENNESS—C. C. Renns, M. D., Boston, Mass., cures the most helpless cases. Send stamp for evidence.

GOING UP TOWN!

On the let of Angust we shall remove to 747 BROADWAY, near 8th St., and now offer our present stock of

CHINA, GLASS, AND FANCY GOODS at very low prices.

Davis Collamore & Co.,

479 Broadway, near Brooms St. A NEW AND VALUABLE BOOK:

"THE BOOK-KEEPER'S GUIDE,"

THE BOOK-KEEPER'S GUIDE, "
The first and only work of the finit ear published.

Highly commended by Burkers, Business Men, Teachers, and others. It gives the most rupoi methods of rectaoning in use at the present gar, heridas being A KEY to Rock-keping and a Guife to Business. To be obtained of sevendesiers, or by addressing the Author, E. A. HALL, Assex, Com'l College, Logansport, Rod.—Price 50 cents.

Tastucostat, From U. S. Seraton D. D. Peatt.
"Mr. E. A. Hall.—I have expanded the advanced.

"Mr. E. A. Hall,... I have cancined the advanced sheets of the 'Book-keeper's Guide,' about being principles of the 'Book-keeper's Guide,' about being principles of the 'Book-keeper's Guide,' about the plan of your work. The definitions are admirable, and the work contains a mass of information of great practical value, nowhere else to be found in the same compass.

D. D. PRATT,"

N. B.—Sent to suy address on receipt of 50 conts.

MONE BETTER IMPORTED.

MIGH COMPLIMENT. "The very sweetest piece of music we ever heard,"
So says the Ottawa Symmetry of the charming new song and cheene, Hounde Athiliene. All mixed dealers sell it. Sent Me, and pet a cope by word. It will please you. Address.

T. W. MARTIN, Chicago, Ille.

MANN'S DOUBLE TROLLING SPOON.

This Teelling light stands incompated for catching Pike, Pickwed, Bass, &c. It is far superior to any simple spread over farented. Price Tee, each. JOHN B. MANN, Syracher, N. V.

Silver Watches, M. J. PAILLARD & CO.,

Reissue of Thackeray's Novels

BY HARPER & BROTHERS,

With Thackerny's Own Hustentians,

VANITY FAIR. A Novel without a Hero, With 32 Hinstrations. In One Volume, 800, Paper, 50 cents.

THE VIRGINIANS. A Tale of the Last Century. With nearly 100 filmstrations. Syo, Paper, 15 conts.

THE NEWCOMES. Memoirs of a Most Respectable Family. Edited by Arthur Pendennis, Esq. With 102 Blustrations. Sen, Pa-per, 75 cents.

THE ADVENTURES OF PHILIP ON HIS WAY THROUGH THE WORLD; Showing who Robbed him, who Helped him, and who Passed him by. With Portrait of Anthor and 64 Illustrations, 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

To be followed by New Editions of Tanckerny's vels, illustrated by the Author, at correspondingly low prices.

From the Buffalo Advertises

From the Buffele Adporting.

The Mosers, Harper are supplying a great deal of good reading just sow, "day-theap"—at less than cost in fact. They have bessed all the nords of Gantass Rasss at ridiculously low prices, end now they are festing the same with Transcraus's works. "" "Vanish Fair" is chemper by fir than any book of the same size, which, and quality of numerial could be sold at before the war, though paper was so much charges then than now. It is for below the actual meanfactioning cost. "" We like to see every thing, looks especially, and good books like the one in question, sold at the smallest peoff.

From the X.Y. Woolly Region.

The Harpers have done many services to letters, but home more substantial than this—in chaing their utimest to make Thackerry familiar in every Lousehold.

From the New England Homestead. The gifts and graces of Thickersy's pencil were hardly less than those of his pea, and no edition of his works could be complete which lacked thom, No opportunity has before been aftered the American public to secure so good an edition of Thickersy for so little money.

HARRER & BROTHERS will send either of the above books by tutil, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of the Price.

THE REISSUE OF

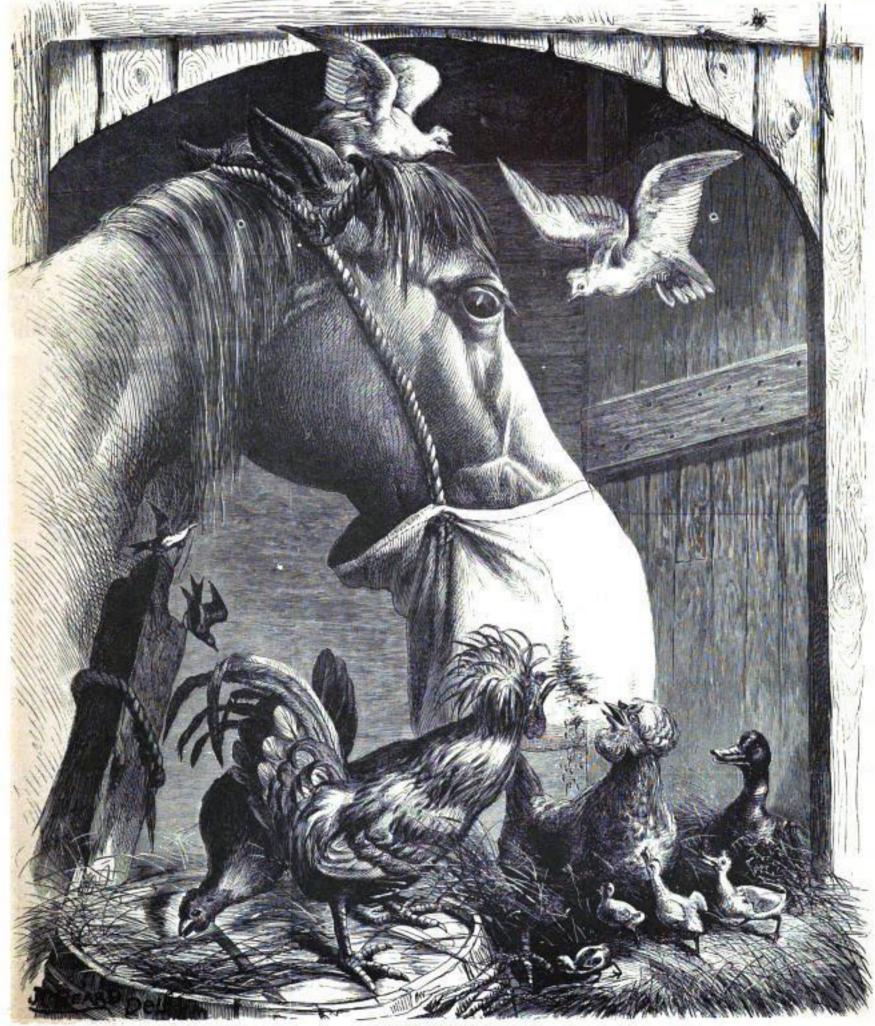

HARPERS WEEKLY. POURNAL OF CIVILIZATION

Vol. XIII.—No. 655.]

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, JULY 17, 1869.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1860, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the United States, for the Southern District of New York.

UNINVITED GUESTS.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, JULY 17, 1869.

AMERICAN AND ENGLISH NEUTRALITY.

THE London Star, the paper of the most radical American sympathies in England, says that America stands in relation to Cuba exactly as England did in relation to the Southern Confederacy; and it insists that the departure of an armed expedition from New York against Spain is as flagrant a violation of the neutrality laws of the United States as the sailing of the Alabama from Liverpool against those of Great Britain. But the Star forgets that the United States authorities moved upon the first intimation of the Spanish representatives, and that their vigilance has been unrelaxing over since, The British Government, on the contrary, was deaf to the most urgent warnings and requests of our Minister until it was too late-deaf in such a way that, under the circumstances, the theory of bad faith was instantly adopted by the public opinion of this country as the planation. But the Spanish Minister is satis-fied with the conduct of the officers of the United States at this port; and public opinion in Spain will not accuse of duplicity the Government whose officers are so efficient,

Nor ought the Star nor any English friend of America to forget that the general attitude of the two Governments, under similar circum-stances, is entirely different. The British Govcrument conceded belligerent rights to the rebels in this country before a battle had been fought -and, unless we are much mistaken, before it could have heard of the proclamation declaring n blockade of the Southern ports. This haste to recognize as a belligerent a party which was up to that moment merely insurrectionary, with the contemporary circumstances so fully reveal-ed in the correspondence of Mr. SEWARD and Mr. ADAMS, and the vehement hostility of the press, showed an unfriendly spirit which is an essential element of all consideration of the sub-ject. But the case of the United States and Cuba is wholly different, Public sympathy is undoubtedly with Cuba as an island striking for independence of a harsh, foreign rule; and there is very little doubt that the President and many of his Cabinet share this abstract approval of the Cuban revolution. Nevertheless, the Government bas not yet conceded belligerent rights to the Cubans, although the struggle has listed eight months, and the conduct of its of ficers at this port, which is the base of the openations of Cubar sympathy, is heartily approved, as we have stated, by the Spanish representatives. The circumstances of the two cases are thus, as the Stor will see, materially different,

If, indeed, the Star can find any proof of the collusion of this Government with the insurgents in Cuba-if it can show that the sympathy of the President and of the Cabinet, and the natural good-wishes of the American people for every other people struggling for independence and popular government, lead to open acquiescence in fingrant definite of the law and the authority of the United States, by such persons as usually compose a filibustering expedition—if, in a word, the Saw can prove that the Governmens of the United States is consuring the British Government for lack of zeal in enforcing its neutrality laws, while it is conniving at the evasion of its own, then, we admit, the Star will justly convict this Government of conduct which would destroy all the moral force of its position upon the English question.

That the cause of Cuba may be noble and praiseworthy while that of the rebels was unspeakably mean and inhuman does not affect the question. Our own neutrality laws are not to be enforced against countries that we dislike and to be evaded in favor of those that we like. If we think that the cause of Cuba is so good that we ought to favor it, there is a way to do so without meanness or skulking. In that case let us frankly recognize Cuban independence and treat with what is called the Cuban Reand tell Spain th Ther England can not complain of our neutral unduct, for we shall have become a belligerent prepared for all the consequences. But until we are ready to take that position there is but one other course that we can honorably pursue and that is to execute our laws vicerously. If we mean to treat such gentlemen as Captain RYAN and his two or three hundred recruits of various nationalities-ardent devotees of liberty and equal rigids as of course they must be-as friends of humanity and justice and good order, let us frankly say so, and ahandon the attempt to stop their departure. But if they are to be regarded as defying the law, let the authority of the Government continue to be asserted as it is by its officers at this port; and to make our position unmistakable to the world, let the Government, as in the days of Wasti-INGTOR, and even of POLK and FILLMORE, issue its proclamation of warning.

Thus far, indeed, with the exception of such a proclamation, the conduct of the officers of the Government in regard to Cuba has maintained the ancient renown of the United States. The authorities have executed the laws-laws made not for oppression, like the Fugitive Slave Law, but for the general welfare, and to prevent one war being the occasion of a general struggle. Meanwhile if the prompt execution of the laws seriously threaten liberty or good order, the Government has the discretion making their enforcement unnecessary by taking part with threatened liberty. It can not, even if it wished, carry water upon both shoulders. It can not with one hand menace England for doing what the other hand is doing to Spain. Let the Stor watch as closely as it can; and we say again that if it can convict this Government of dishonorable conduct in the Cuban question, it will have gone far to de-stroy the moral force of the Alabama claims. But we warn it that it will have its labor for its pains,

NEW ISSUES.

In the unprecedented political calm which has fallen upon the country it is only natural that issues should present themselves of a different kind from those that have engaged the public mind during a generation. And it is upon this situation that the Democratic party founds its hope of returning to partial power. For the new issues arise, of course, in the Republican party, which comprises the great body of independent and progressive men, and of those who are inspired by other purposes than the possession of the spoils merely. The Antislavery movement was not supported by the Democratic party. The Temperance movement, for the same reason, is not supported by it, and will never divide that party. The reason is not that the Democratic party holds that government has nothing to do with such questions, as some Democrats, and many who are not Democrats, honestly believe, but because the great body of the ignorant voters belong to that party, and the party policy must be shaped accordingly; and equal rights and temperance are not agreeable to ignorant minds.

The new issues, therefore, will spring from the Republican party, and the first one, apparently, is to be that of temperance. A National Temperance Convention, with political objects, is to meet at Chicago on the 1st of September. A Temperance Convention will presently assemble at Syracuse, in this State. The Maine Temperance Convention has lately met, almost unanimously laid upon the table the temperance resolution of the Republican Convention, and nominated a temperance candidate for Governor. In Massachusetts it is announced that the election will turn mainly upon the liquor issue. If Governor CLAPLIN should prefer to go to Congress, it is supposed that Mr. GRORGE B. LORING, a positive prohibitionist, will be nominated by the Republican party, to avoid a schism upon the question, while the freedom of whisky will be represented by Mr. John Quincy ADAMS.

It would certainly seem to be very possible that in so languid a political year a vigorous campaign of the Temperance men, who must be drawn almost exclusively from the Republicans, would offer the Democratic party in Maine a better chance of success than it has known for many years; while the nomination of Mr. Loring upon a strictly prohibitory plat-form in Massachusetts would for many reasons make the vote for Mr. ADAMS much more respectable than his former votes. Mr. Lorino is an old Democrat; opposed to the war, we believe, until the second year; a friend and ally of General BUTLER, who is representative for Mr. Longue's district, and a gentleman not agreeable to those who are not BUTLER Republicans, and who prefer the older confessors of the faith. The Senatorial election for the successor of Mr. Wilson will occur during the session of the next Legislature; and should a decided majority of the members prove to be strict prohibitionists, General BUTLER, who is a candidate for Mr. Wilson's seat, will undoubtedly appear with excellent effect as a more tectotal tectotaler than the late lamented Father MATHEW.

No one who has watched closely since the e surprised l nence which the Temperance question has assumed in the public mind of this country. The progress of intemperance is such as to challenge the most thoughtful inquiry as to the proper method of arresting it. The Temperance politicious rest their cause upon experience and public order. They point to statistics and humanity. They appeal to the tax levy and to domestic peacs. Their argument is powerful and persuasive. The right and propriety of license are, they contend, every where conceded; but the principle of license or regulation involves prohibition; and the degree of the restraint is merely a question of expediency to be decided upon careful consideration. The rejoinder is that sumptuary laws of every kind nlways fail, and that the reform sought by the Temperance party must be achieved by moral sussion; that if government may decree what we shall sell and ent and drink, it becomes the most intolerable of despotisms, because in the nature of things there can be no guarantee that its prohibitions will be always, or indeed often, wise; that beginning with prohibiting beer and wine and spirits, it will proceed to prohibit coffee and tea; and that there will be no security for rocking-chairs and feather-beds; that it reverses the order of civilization by tending to sacrifice the individual to the State, and increases instead of lessening the functions of government.

But to these arguments the practical experience of communities in which there has been a trial of the two systems will furnish a conclusive answer. If it has been found, for instance, in Massachusetts, during the rule of the most stringent law, that the taxes were reduced, that the good order of villages was palpauly improved, that the character of the public interest was heightened, that hundreds of young men were saved by the increased difficulties of gratifying the appetite for liquor, and hundreds of homes restored, for the same reason, to cheerfulness and peace, these facts will be mighty allies of the new issue, and parilous adversaries to the theory of the limitation of government. But there are other considerations which should be carefully weighed by every Republican who is urged to vote exclusively upon this issue. To divide the party is to being the Democrats into power. Is the exigency such that the public welfare, including the interest of Temperance, will be more benefited by the ascendency of that party? The platform of the Maine Republicans declares "that we emphatically renew our adhesion to the principles of prohibition and a vigorous enforcement of laws to that end." Ought a Temperance man, under the circumstances, to abandon a party which takes such a position, and thereby help to give the victory to one that denounces all such laws? Could an honest member of the Liberty party in New York twenty-three years ago have sistently refused to support the Whig or the Democratic party if either of them had ex pressed themselves in corresponding terms upon the Slavery question? As it was, it was evidently doubtful whether Liberty would gain by the success of either party; but can the same be said of the Temperance movement now?

OUR SUPPLY OF WATER.

Doubt having been expressed as to the capacity of the Croton Valley to supply our future population with water, the question is an interesting one whether it is well founded, and what means are required to secure the city against such a contingency. It may be necessary to imitate the example of Boston, which has lately admitted several adjacent towns and villages, and annex the lower portion of Westchester to New York, in which case a very large population will need to be provided for. That it will very soon equal if not surpass that of London is very certain.

No city in the world presesses the advantages of New York. When the obstructions to navigation at Hell Gate are removed, which can easily be doue, as was demonstrated by the aspacious operations of Henry Grinnett, we shall have access to the ocean by an improved channel for the largest ships. Our means of communication by way of Sandy Hook are sufficient for all present purposes, and are superior to those elsewhere enjoyed. The commerce of the whole world may have easy access to our wharves.

Our communications with the vast interior of our country and with Canada are equally convenient. High mountains are interposed be tween the interior and other Atlantic cities, except Savannah, but by two united valleys, that of the Mohawk, which breaks through the Alleghany at Little Falls, and that of the Hudson, which breaks through the range at West Point our trade with the interior is unobstructed. With Canada we have easy communication, as the highest elevation is only about 110 feet, We shall presently avail ourselves of these great advantages by widening and deepening the Eric Canal and the canal connecting with Lake Champlain, and in time by a ship canal from Lake Champlain to the St. Lawrence, and thus provided none but territorial limits can be assigned to the growth of population which will inhabit New York, Brooklyn, Jersey City, Hoboken, and Westchester. The supply of this city and of the lower part of Westchester must engage the attention of our Legislature, whother they become united under one municipality or remain under separate local govern-

The Commissioners who introduced the Croton into the city made an examination of the Bronx, and wisely decided not to use it. If it were dammed at Bronxville the reservoir at that place would have an elevation of about seventy feet above tide, from which much of the lower part of Westchester could be supplied. The village of White Plains, which is growing rapidly, endeavored to obtain the right to take water from the Browx for the use of the village; but Rve Pond, one of the most important feeders of the Bronx, will doubtless be used for that purpose, as it is supplied chiefly by springs, is cated at a sufficient elevation above White Plains, and is only about three miles distant. It is probable that the Bronx will furnish enough water for as many residents as will congregate in the lower part of the county for perbaps fifty years.

The Croton aqueduct, which commences in Westchester, and runs for nearly thirty miles along and near the banks of the Hudson in that county, has not been tapped except at the State prison. The only case in which permission to do so was given was that of a gentleman who had performed services in respect to the sewerage of the city, but on reflection he declined to avail himself of the permission, as he feared that, if repeated, irreparable damage might result from it.

Mr. Corves was at the time President of the Board. The aquedoct is constructed to deliver, as its maximum, sixty millions of gallons per day, which it regularly does, furnishing to each of a million of inhabitants sixty gallons of water per diem. The Croton River not only supplies this quantity, but throws a large excess over the dam for nine months in the year. During the heats of summer it occasionally happens that a much smaller quantity runs into the dam than the aqueduct requires. But at Boyd's Corners on the west branch of the Croton a storage reservoir is being constructed competent to hold enough, added to the minimum supply from all the branches, to deliver into the aqueduct all that it can take.

The drainage area of this reservoir is about 20 miles, and constitutes the extreme northwestern portion of Croton Valley. The reservoir is over 60 miles from the city, at an elevation of 600 feet above tide, and is in an extremely wild district, spersely populated. It will cover 308 acres of land, and will store 3,369,206,859 gallons of water. On its completion, which will be in about two years, this reservoir alone will supply the whole quantity required for forty-five days, if it all reaches the main dam, not reckoning other sources of supply; but, as the new reservoir is 28 miles from the dam, some of the water will be absorbed. but the quantity will be but little in excess of what the stream will at the same time furnish to the reservoir. No apprehension need be entertained that the aqueduct will not furnish the city throughout every year, after this new work is completed, the full complement of sixty millions of gallons daily.

Many parts of London are supplied by their aqueducts with only twelve gallous per day to each inhabitant; but as there is but little waste the quantity suffices. What we receive would be deemed luxurious by any but the most wasteful people. In winter, to prevent injury to the pipes by the freezing of the water, it is allowed to run both night and day—a contingency against which the English are not required to guard; and much of the water here is used for manufacturing purposes—an object which ought to be encouraged up to the point beyond which inconvenience of a domestic character would result. No city is complete without an abundant supply of water, delivered into houses from such an elevation that it becomes after use the power or carrier for removing the refuse through sewers. The primary system of New England, which fortunately extends to the coast here, where it runs out, enables us to obtain and introduce water at a high elevation and of a pure quality. And it will contribute to the growth of the city to keep up a luxurious supply. London is now discussing the question what means shall be used to introduce water from a river in Wales, over a hundred miles distant, and will decide to introduce it at vast expense, inasmuch as the health and prosperity of the city depend upon it.

Many of the diseases which prevail owe their origin, and frequently their malignant type, to the water we drink, and there should be no besitation to make whatever outlay may be required within our means to maintain forever a proper supply. The bounteousness of nature to our city is conspicuous in the means which are afforded for obtaining water for an enormous population. The valley of the Croton has a drainage area of three hundred and twenty square miles, containing chiefly the soil and the rocks of the primary system. The mount-ain range which crosses the Hudson from Peekskill to near West Point constitutes the bulk of this region, which axtends very little beyond the by the east, west, and middle branches of the Croton and their affinents there are no less than fifteen convenient spots in which storing reservoirs may be built, the joint capacity of which exceeds sixty-two billions of gallons. trict is already studded with numerous lakes and ponds, the outlets of which run very evenly, form-ing, with the artificial means which may be provided at moderate expense, such conveniences for storing water as our growth in population may bereafter require.

In time it will undoubtedly be necessary to add to the capacity of the aqueduct, or build a new one. Whatever quantity might be introduced, advantage would result from it even if much too large for domestic purposes. Skill will employ itself to devise some cheap mode of using the Croton as a power in domestic industry; and the time may not be distant when, in addition to the luxurious supply of pure water with which we are now blessed, the women of the city, in their own dwellings, may use the Croton as the power to work their sewing-machines at a trifling expense, and without inconvenience. Among the benefits conferred by the Croton the ease which it contributes to the performance of household labors is of great importance, and of itself justifies the outlay, The men who had charge of the work, among whom STEFREN ALLEN was conspicuous, deserve the warmest thanks for what they did, as they conducted it with a purity which has not been known in recent years, fitly represented by what they introduced, and with such inestimable advantage.

The alarm which has recently been stirred up about polluting the water is due in great part to the exigencies of a personal lawsuit. The situation of the district is favorable to exemption from this danger, but yet it will be wise to ask from the legislative power the means to prevent-while the population is not full-the introduction of those industries which render streams impure. There are enough which may be pursued in harmony with the interests of the people there and the vital interests of New York in the Croton Valley.

Plans for supplying White Plains and the lower part of Westchester will no doubt be placed before the Legislature next winter, and as they concern the highest interests of their respective localities, it is to be hoped that they will be devised in the spirit which animated STEPHEN ALLEN and his coadjutors, and be acted upon by the Legislature without the necessity of purchasing a vote.

New York will soon need to follow; but we shudder to think what a difference we shall ex-perience now in the objects and influences which shall govern our present managers in constructing a new aqueduct, as compared with those which directed the old and justly honored sachems of Tammany.

THE PERSONAL INFALLIBILITY OF THE POPE.

Rooms are already engaged in Rome by persons thousands of miles away who hope to reach the city in time for the Œcumenical Council next winter. This Council, or assembly of the whole body of the faithful, speaks for the Church and proclaims dogmas; and the absorbing interest of the proposed Council is, that if it should meet, the Pope is understood to wish it to pronounce the absolute personal infallibility of the incumbent of the Holy See. This claim is so portentous that the French Churchmen especially, and even the Jesuits, are alarmed, foreseeing the inevitable danger of such a proclamation. Their ground of course is that, so long as the Church claims infallibility in spiritual subjects alone, its infallibility can never be put to the proof. If it declares, for instance, that a certain act is a mortal sin and will damn a soul eternally, its position is purely theoretical, because nobody can prove that a soul is not damned eternally. Consequently any Church or ony man may claim absolute infallibility upon such subjects, conscious that the claim can never be disproved.

Moreover, so long as the whole Church must pronounce, it is always easy to delay or to confuse the decision. But the case is very different when perfect infallibility is claimed for any individual man. His word upon every subject would then be identical with truth. He could declare the essential conditions of salvation. It would be in vain that his infallibility would be proclaimed to be limited. When a universal Council once announced the personal infallibility of the Pope, his word would be to the faithful the word of God. He would need only to declare this or that the condition of acceptance with God, and his "children" would obediently listen. But while this would be the result within the pule of his ecclesiastical familv, it would be very different beyond its bor-The Pope is by no means always selected for his wisdom or his virtue. The history of the Holy Conclave is the history of as much envy and hatred and wretched intrigue as are to be found in any secular convention, and an old, ignorant, fanatical ecclesiastic might become the most fatal enemy of his Church just in the degree of his sincere and narrow devotion to her A man like the late Pope GREG ORY THE SIXTEESTH, enthroned in the chair of St. Peter as absolutely infallible Head of the Church, might readily do what all the "infidels" have never been able to accomplish.

If, for instance, he should declare as truth essential to salvation something which science should presently and plainly disprove, the plight would be so ridiculous that no Church could endure it. If, with absolute personal infallibility, he should abandon himself to such foolish and truculent denunciations of the freedom of the press, for instance, or of scientific investigation. as appeared in the encyclical letter of the present Pope two years ago, the effect would be immense and pernicious to his own cause. What sort of a Church is it whose infallible Head decrees that the sun goes round the earth, or that the Mosaic cosmogony is literally and limitedly exact? would be the perilous question which could not be satisfactorily answered. And this is the dilemma which the Jesuits and the Frenchmen foresee, and which, if possible, they would avoid. The Papal opportunity of asserting as true what could be conclusively shown to be false must not, in their judgment he allowed.

The power of the Pope for good results would, of course, be increased by the decree which Pres THE NEXTH is understood to favor, He might make the cardinal virtues instead of theological dogmas the essentials to salvation. He might require education. He might insist upon a real liberty. Indeed, he might do all that the supporters of vast arbitrary power seem to imagine such potentates will do. But the probabilities are always against the wise use of such a prerogative as is now sought; and there is no method whatever of securing the continuance of such a use. Decree the absolute infallibility of the Pope, and any ignorant prices, crowned with the triple tiars, could ando the work of the wisest pontiff. Indeed, the present Pope, who is approaching the re-markable term of a quarter of a century in the pontificate, is not a man of such sagacity that his own career and reputation are likely to strengthen his demand. If the Council should assemble and decree as he desires, the sincerest enemies of his Church ought to be satisfied.

INSULTS TO GENERAL GRANT.

Mn. Andrew Jourson, if the report of a conversation with him be correct - and the World publishes the matter as if it were of importance to somebody—is of opinion that Gen-eral Grant is "a farce," and "a little fellow," and "treacherous," and that he "lied flagrantand that his presence in the White House "degrading" to the Presidency. In the words of the Declaration, which are very familiar to us all at this season, it would seem that "a decent respect to the opinions of mankind" would make Mr. ANDREW JOHNSON extremely careful of allusions to treachery and degrada tion in connection with the Presidency of the United States.

It is the fate of the greatest benefactors of their country to be subject to slander. The old Aurora said as foul things of WASHINGTON as ever the rebel and Democratic newspapers said of Lencoln, or as Mr. Andrew Johnson and the World can say of General GRANT. But somehow the people thought that the Aurora's ribuldry or the Copperhead hiss could hardly lessen the lustre of the inestimable nations services of Washington and Lincoln; and when they read the feeble insults of Mr. Ax-DREW JOHNSON and the World upon a man whose career is what General GRANT'S has been, in the words of the amusing college song, "they don't seem to take no kind of interest in it."

THE EMPIRE.

THERE is a paper published in New York which is called the Imperiolist. It is so enamored of the happiness of France, and so dismayed by the ruin of this republic, that it can see no hope of relief from the misery and slavery in which we are involved but in an empire. That indeed is peace. That is happiness and freedom and prosperity. If that great and good Caran, Louis Narolson, to whom no-thing is so dear as liberty and individual rights, would only graciously consent to bestow his imperial son upon us for a ruler-that son of whose mother General Drx has recently said such prodigiously amiable things in Pariswhat a happy day it would be! what a fortunate nation!

See the immense advantages of imperialism. In this wretched country, where we not only labor under the incubus of a republic, but a republic which secures liberty of speech and of the press-which a foolish and unimperial philosophy supposes to be essential to a good and p.ogressive government—a paper like the Im-periolist may denounce and deride the Government and its officers at its own sweet will, and with senreely a smile of interest from any body. If it can, it may persuade the people of the country to install a wise and virtuous WIGFALL or Narolson, or a "Christian gentleman" like LEE or FORKEST, as its august emperor-and nobody, least of all the Government, will interfere with its endeavors. But in France, in the empire which is peace and liberty and prosperity, we read that Mr. HENRY ROCHEFORT, the editor of a newspaper, has been sentenced to three years' imprisonment, and to pay a fine of three thousand francs, and is deprived for three years of the right to vote or to sit in the Legislative Assembly; and all this because he derides and denounces the benign and peaceable empire.

This is the kind of system which is to restore to us the liberties of which a ruthless mob has deprived us, and its advantages are only too evident. So, too, we observe that the great and good French Casan has graciously re-marked to the Bishop of Beauvais that "the addresses of bishops, couched in the language of piety, are always received with deference. -feeling makes us wondrous kind. The rule of the Pope in his Church is the image of that which the French Casan desires in his State, or it will be so, if the Pope can only perseads the Œcumenical Council next winter to declare the absolute personal infallibility of the Holy Father. The next step in the progress of our liberties and prosperity is thus made With an emperor to regulate our personal freedom, including that of speech and the press, and a Pope to determine our religious faith and the limits of our mental activity, the republic, not to speak lightly, may hang up its fiddle and its bow, and every happy subject of the empire receive his opinious and his rule of conduct from imperial and papel headquarters.

That astute statesman, Mr. F. P. BLAIR, Jun., of Missouri, who sees as far into a millstone as any body, warned his country last year that he was the path of safety, while the darkly designing despot GRANT would never leave th White House if he once entered it, but would remain there an emperor. The ghastly truth now appears! "I smell a rat; I'll crush him in the bud!" exclaimed a fervent orator. Is it not plain to every body whom Mr. F. P. BLAIR, Jun., convinced of GRANT's neferious designs that the Imperialist is his first stealthy movement toward an imperial throne, and that the crown which it bears upon its front is the one that he proposes to transfer to his brow?

FRIENDLY WORDS.

THE speech of GOLDWIN SMITH at Toronto, which was curiously distorted in the telegraphic report, has been published in the Cornell Era at Ithaca. The two following extracts will not harm him with those who know how truly and in the best sense be is an English friend of America. In speaking of Mr. Summun's speech he says :

"I was perhaps the only Englishman resident in the States, except those connected with the diplomatic service and whose tongues were tied, who had fol-lowed the controversy through all its different phases; and, moreover, Mr. Stessas in quoting some words of mins, as he did, against my country, made an ap-peal to an English heart, to which, if he knew the En-glish heart, he must have been aware that it would not fall to respond. I received in return, as you saw, a profuse abover of compliments from the American news; and here, hereath the nephecture of the British news; and here, hereath the nephecture of the British "I was perhaps the only Englishman resident in rees: and here, beneath the protection of the British ag, and in this confidential circle, one may whisper flag, and in this confidential circus, one may wronger that the American press in bestowing its compliments on the objects of its apprehation and sympathy is not in the habit of erring on the side of excessive delicacy. I observed one journal which in my case was some-thing more than personal; and I had observed a short time before in the same journal a lively editorial at-tacking a rival editor's hat and boots."

GOLDWIN SMITH is not the only Englishman or American who makes a broad distinction between people and politicians, as in this passage:

"It is not of the American people that I am afmid. The more I see of the American people the more I acknowledge and respect their worth, and the more confident do I feel that they will decide in accordance with the dictates of good scuse and mornily any question submitted to their deliberate judgment and fairly presented to their minds. I am not afraid, I say, of the people; that of which I am afraid is an excess of the people; that of which I am afraid is an excess of the people; that of which I am afraid is an excess of the people; that of which I am afraid is an excess of the people; that of which I am afraid is an excess of the people; that of which I am afraid is an excess of the people; that of which I am afraid is an excess of the people; that of which I am afraid is an excess of the people; the other people is the people of the people o patriotism or virtue on the part of the politicisms. I think it probable that in certain contingencies, and under certain feducements, the politicisms might be led by their spirit of self-sacrifice to do something too disinterested and subline. The other day they were going pently fast, as it seemed to me, in a direction in which if they had persisted in going, seit concequences would have almost certainly ensued. The attitude of England in this matter, I appealed, is atitizate of England in this matter, I apperbend, is perfectly intelligible, and her language perfectly distinct. If any wrong has been unintentionally done by her Government, or by any of the officers employed noder it, to a friendly nation, we are ready and willing to make full reparation for it. We are ready and willing, also, in addition to any permisary damage which we may become liable to pay, to make such an acknowledgment as, in a case of unintentional injury, one man of honce is always prepared to make to another in private Big. provided only we are accorded in the style in which one man of honor secosts another, and not in the style of Mr. Souszas's speech."

THE CASE OF Mr. WARREN.

Ir is telegraphed from Paris that Mr. J. Q. WARREN, an American citizen, has made a form al complaint to our Minister of arrest and illtreatment by the French authorities during the late riots in that city, and demands compensation. This is a claim which we presume Mr. WASHINGENE will urgently press upon the Imperial Government. Those Americans who remember the manner in which the most innocent and even unwilling spectators or participators in street revolutionary troubles are to paternal governments in Europe will readily believe that Mr. WARREN does not exaggerate the brutality of the treatment to which he was exposed. He saw the police pursuing a crowd. He stepped into a side-street to avoid trouble. But he was followed by the police, seized, knocked down, arrested, imprisoned, and nod-treated for two days. Of course in a revolutionary city like Paris a man expects to take risks and to be annoyed. But a peaceable man, retiring so as not to increase disorder, does not expect to have his head broken and to be abased.

We presume that the French Government will instantly apologize and offer to atom for Indeed we shall not be surprised the offense, if it is all done before these lines are read. Americans are universal travelers. It is estimated that at least fifty thousand are now traveling in Europe for enjoyment and instruction. They are bound, of course, to respect carefully the laws of the countries into which they choose to go; but that being done, those countries are to respect the rights of foreign citizens. We shall expect to see, also, that in making representations to the French Government, our Minister takes that tone of firmness and courtesy which is always becoming, and which now is peculiarly representative of the high character and good name of the Administration,

NOTES.

In "Five Acres Too Much," by Robert B. Roosevally, just published by the Harvers, the render will find a good-humored smile, if not high, upon every page. It is a most pleasant little surire upon the country experience of many an urbon route. an urban rustic, and is an excellent pendant to that volume of Mr. Spannowquass which no gentleman's library should be without, and which is to be found in every well-regulated collection. There is no little book published during the seawhich should be so surely laid away for immediate summer reading as this.

THE HARPERS have also issued "My Daughter Elinor," a novel of American hie, by a hand that we do not recognize as familiar. There are enpital scenes in the book; and the interest is skillfully maintained by the play of not very original characters. It is the work of an author who has a sensitive eye for incident and character, but whose training and sympathy we should suppose to be not distinctively American. The style is lively and agreeable.

THE crayon drawings of Joses W. EHNINGER, representing the two famous incidents in the war, the ride of SHERIDAN and the lashing of FAR-RAGUT to the rigging, which were bought by the Union Lengue Club, and are now in their gallory, have been most admirably photographed by WILLIAM KUSTZ, and the prints may be found at Mr. PILKINGTON JACKSON'S, 58 East Thirteenth Street. The spirit and simplicity of these drawings, and the essential poetry of the sub-jects, which the artist has not lost, make them especially interesting souvenirs both of our military and naval renown. We can heartily com-mend them to our readers.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

Tim diminution of the public debt in June is esti-sated at sixteen millions.

Mr. Goorge Peabody, who is now in this country, has added a million of dollars, in railroad and other heads, mostly Seathern, to the "Peabody Education Fund," also $284,000 in Fiorida six per cent, bombs Find," also 3084,000 in Florida six per cent. bombs and overdue coupons.

A sad accident securred at the central shaft of the Hossac Tannel on June 29. Five of the miners on the lower platform wishing to ascend the shaft, entered the backet for the purpose of securidae. Three of the men shock hold of the cross-bar, as they were in the habit of doing, and two shoot up in the borket. The engineer who had charge of the heleting machinery let the betchet fall with greater colocity than mend, and it striking the lower platform, three of the men who were clinging to the store, he and one in the backet, were parely even to the bottom of the shaft, killing two men and wrever! ..., using two the con-

FOREIGN NEWS.

Jones Macouroon, captain of the famous cauce Rob Roc, has challenged the Harvard crew to another race after their couries with the English universities.

In the United States of Colombia the coming elections have tracely occupied the public attention. The character of Mosqueen were regarded as favorable.

The essection of the Frunch Corps Legislatif opened on Jene 28. The Emperor not being persons, M. Bauter made the opening speech.

Benri Rochefort, editor of the Lanterse, has been convicted of the charge of introducing that Journal illegally into France. He has been sentenced to three years Imprisonment and to pay a fine of 3000 france. To these parallels are added the forfeiture of his rights of citizanship for three years, including the right to vote in new election, or to occupy a sent in the Corps Legislatif.

M. M. Simonson and Jordan, editors of the Saids, have been fixed each 500 fraces, and each editor of the Opinion Nationale has been condensed to one monthly imprisonment with a fine of 500 fraces, all for violations of the press law.

for violations of the press law.

A report, which comes from a Brazilian source, states that Pre-bient Lopez, of Paraguer, has offered, though General M'Mahan, the American Minister, to currender his array on the condition that he be granted his leground fixedom and be permitted to leave the Gusarry without molestation.

From Bloer-Kong, China we learn that a great and derisive buttle has been fought between the Imperiates and the Mohammedan robots. The Institut were deficiated, with the leas of 20,000 men.

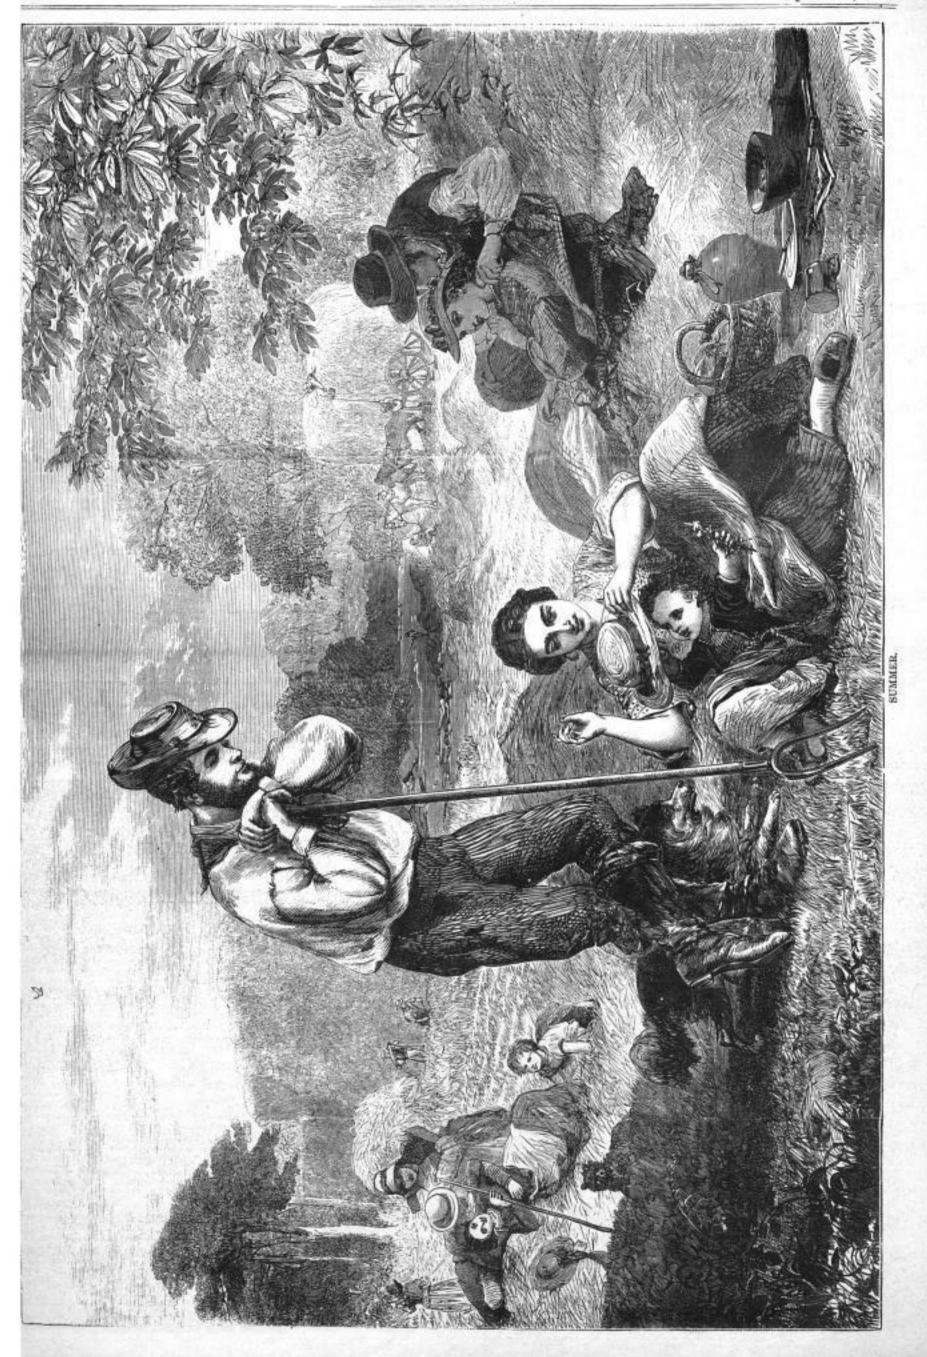

The Charge of Front offer his visit to Kurdand.

The Vicency of Egypt, after his visit to England, whose he was recrived by the Queen with extraonit-nary courtesy, departed for Brussels, where he ac-rived July 2.

recoil duty 2.

The Geomenical Council at Rome has been postponed a year.

Our late advices from Cuba report a sections involved incident among the Catalonian volunteers. Genreal Leteria imprisoned their Colored, and they have seized the Georal and threaten to kill him. It is reported that a number of Ancorteans, engined by the Spanish General Leter, have been executed. CapitaloGeneral De Rodes, in a pridde speech, has advised journation to show more molecular, endowing an conclinate all chooses, and cross policiahing ministing articles, especially in regard to tadles.

HON. GEORGE M. ROBESON, SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

THE Hon. GEORGE M. ROUSSON, lately appointed Secretary of the Navy, in the place of Hon. A. H. Boree, resigned, is a native of New Jersey, and a son of Judge William P. Robesson, of Warren County, who was formerly a leading Whig, and prominently connected with the politics of his State. Mr. Robesson is a graduate of Princeton College of the class of 1847. He studied law in the office of Chief-Justice Honnelower in Newark. In 1859 he was appointed Prosecutor of Pleas for Camden County. On the election of Mr. Freelsohuvsen as Senator, in 1867, Mr. Robesson was appointed by Governor Ward Attorney-General, which position he resigned for his new duties. He is about forty-five years of age, and justly holds high rank in his profession. Mr. Robesson is a strong and decided Republican. It is somewhat curious that the only position ever held in the Cabinet by a citizen of New Jersey has been that of Secretary of the Navy.

CAPTURE OF COLONEL BYRON'S CUBAN EXPEDITION.

Secretary Fessi evidently intends to exerute our neutrality laws. Learning from the United States Marshal and the United States District Attorney that a fillbustering expedition was on the point of starting from this port, carrying men, arms, and other war supplies for the aid of the Cubans, he ordered the revenue cutters Makossiag and M'Codloch, on the 29th of June, to proceed up Long Island Sound in pursuit of the Cuban expedition which was reported to have left this city for Gardiner's Island, on the Long Island coast, and within a short distance of the ocean. The information upon which the Secretary acted was farmished by a recruit who had deserted. He said that three tug-boats key off the island named the H. D. Cook, Janethia Chase, and Wim. H. Webb, which carried troops who were about to sail for the invasion of Cuba, and that they were waiting for the suppearance of the steamer Cuthariae Whiting, which was to take them to sea. Shortly after six o'clock in the evening the revenue cutters came in sight of the tug-boats Cook and Webb, which were quickly recognized as the objects of the search. They were about five miles from Fort Schnyler, and were coming down the Sound, but stopped when two shots from the cutters made known to those on board that it was dangeress to attempt to escape. Both tugs were boarded, and were found to contain upward of one hundred men, the majority being on the Cook, which was the largest boat. The M'Calloch took charge of the Cook, and the Makonaing of the Webb. After signaling with rockets, the revenue officers decided to anchor off Fort Schnyler for the night, with the captured vessels under their stern and in range of their guns, which were ready for use in case the prizes should endenvor to run away.

No resistance was offered by the filibusters, who were in an almost famished condition. The captured boats were conveyed to the Brooklyn

HON, GEORGE M. ROBESON, SECRETARY OF THE NAVY .- [PROT. BY BRADY, WASHINGTON.]

Navy-yard on the morning of the 30th, and the prisoners were then transferred to the United States Receiving Ship Vermont.

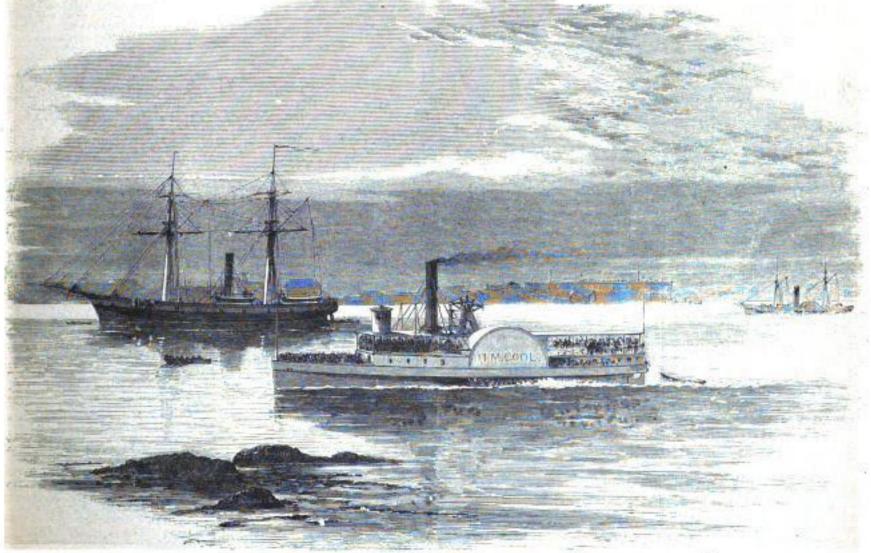

The men who were caught formed a portion of Colonel Joux Whitehead Byron's command, that officer being one of the prisoners. He was on board the Coole at the time of her arrival at the Navy-yard, but subsequently made his escape in a most daring manner. He made two attempts, the last of which was successful. On the first he managed to get off the tug-boat without detection, after which he passed through the Navy-yard to the outer gate on York Street, when he was brought to a halt by a sentinel. He was then identified and taken back among his comrades. About ten o'clock on the meaning of the 30th he disappeared a second time, and was not recaptured. It was supposed that he left in disguise. Among those who were found on board the Coole were Sefor ALFARO, the Secretary of War of the Colon Junta, and Dr. Bassona, also belonging to the Junta.

Since the 30th the remainder of the expedition has been captured,

THE "WELCOME STRANGER."

Tue other day the telegraphic wires tlashed The other day the telegraphic wires thashed throughout Australia the startling autouncement that a nugget had been unearthed, the largest ever seen, that it was beary lifting for two men to put it on a dray, that it weighed about two thouses a ounces, and was worth ten thousand pounds seering. However startling it may appear, the autouncement was perfectly true. The mouster nugget was found at a place called Molingui, about eight miles from Dueselly. A local paper, the Dunselly Ergerss, gives the A local paper, the Dansh's Expenses, gives the following particulars of the erecut: The Dansolly district, after having turned out a multipode of magnets that puts every other gold-field in the colony in the shade, has at length, in the words of the Mellowere instead. colony in the shade, has at length, in the words of the Melbourne journals, 'beat the world' in producing the largest mass of gold on record. The 'Welcome Stranger' was found by two men, named Jones Danson and Recurren Ouris, on named Jons Diessox and Richard Oates, on Friday, 5th February, 1869, near the Black Reef, Bull-dog Gully, Molingul, a short dis-tance from Wayman's Reef, and only about a mile from the celebrated Gipey Diggings. Dies-sox and his mate larve been working in the ground for several years past, and, as is well known, had got, in digging parlance, so 'hard-up' as to larve been refused credit for a lug of flour a week or so ago, and we believe the very stay before the discovery new reminded by a trade-man that they were indebted to him a few shillings. Still they pergraved until on the does shillings. Still they persevered, muil on the day named Daysox, in working round the roots of a tree, it about two inches before the surface, struck something hard with a pock, and exclaimed, 'D—n it. I wish it was a muget, and had broken the pick!' On stooping down to examine the obstacle he found that the object of his slearest trishes was lying at his feet, and it seemed as if the mouster was so large as to be immovable. It was, however, at length released from its ringin soil and carefully removed. The ques-tion then arose as to what was to be done with it, and the first intention was to convey it to Melbourne. When the men got to Dundly with their prize they were advised to take it to the bank, and forthwith carried it to the Loudon Chartered. The news of the discovery sonn sprend, and the lank was crowded with eager spectators, among whom were a number of Unita-men; and a con-table was sent for to grand the prize. The weight in the gross was then found prize. The weight in the gross was then found to be 210 pounds troy, and proparations were at once made to break the mass to pieces and smelt it. The appearance of the 'Webonic Stringer' in its pristine state was something wonderful, and it seemed impossible to realize the fact that so great a mass of gold could be collected in one lump. But so it was. Many efforts were made to life it, and many exclamations of surprise ex-pressed at its immenee weight and comportness. A sledge-hammer and cold chisels were brought into requisition, and several of the latter broken in the attempt to reduce into fragments the Welcome Stranger. It was found to be as solid as it looked, and as chip after chip and piece after piece was dissevered from it, its apcamnoe was as clean as a well-cut Cheshire cheese. At length, after no less than five hours hammering, the monster was pounded up and smelted, the result being 2258 cances 10 dwts. 14 grains of solid gold, exclusive of at least I pound weight, which was given by the delighted finders to their numerous friends, who were each unxions to recam a piece of the largest mass of gold the world has yet seen. Over £0000 were advanced see the magget by the bank, the final value awaiting the result of assay.

CAPTURE OF THE CUBAN EXPEDITION IN LONG ISLAND SOUND .- [FROM A SKETCH BY W. M. CART.]

THE "WELCOME STRANGER"-THE LARGEST GOLD NUGGET

SO RUNS THE WORLD AWAY.

CHAPTER XXIII.

EVE EATS HER APPLE.

Ir was daybreak at Auriel, and country-bred Axalea namke as naturally with the dawn as did the quick-eyed swallows who lived in the carea above her window. She lay still a while, watch-ing the man sun-strenks lengthen over the brown forrowed upland, and listening to the clump of the form boxes' feet as they trotted down toward the misty water brink to drink. It was that pule mysterious hour when the bush of night passing nony from the earth gives place to gray gloom which is as obscure and indistinct in its nature as a dying man's wanderings ere the babble of his torgue has ceased, and his soul dawned be-fore the brightness of God. The night clouds had rulled away, but day had not yet breathed out its full sense of life and joy; feeles twitters broke from the leaves, and desidary flutters disturbed their dew-steeped shadows. The steel-gray waters of the lake; the dark form of cattle moving stilly down the meadow; the mist that clammed the outline of sky mid earth together-all was chill uncertainty of aspect,

A few hours later and the ascense was alive with the cheerful clamor of birds; the wild-fowl dashed its breast down a sendit stream; the unterfalls sparkled their mad delight over glistening pelddes; the warm wind dried the wet-faced roses; the cut crept out to make her toilet of clean pays and smoothed cars; and Azu-lea stood at her window, the freshest and fairest object the morning sun shore on.

"Oh, what a lovely morning it is?" she said, as she stood there drinking in breaths of sweet ounshing sår.

When she was dressed she walked softly down the stairs so as not to disturb Moore, and con-sulted the worn face of the old clock that stood in the hall. It was too early to busy herself in the sitting-room yet; to go through her little duties of dusting and arranging the massive fur-niture and preparing breakfast. Her father slept ererhead, and the light, doubtful slumbers of age are easily disturbed; so Azalez took the large garden basket off its pog and decided to go out and gather some flowers with which to make the dusty old chambers bright when she returned.

She song to herself as she walked down the path under the cross lights and shadows of the avenne. She was seventeen, her heart sarraffed by trouble, her eyes bright with unconcern. She was as free and unfettered of spirit as the wild hirds that enroled noisily above her head, and like them she involuntarily sang out her appreciation of the fresh beauty of the morning,

It was a pity that human sadness shoul abase such a bright face. It was a pity that this girl, as happy and sinless as the domb compan-ions of her solitude, could not die as she was living now, with God's sun-hine blossing her bend, and with a soul so pure that she might have gone straight to her mother's breast in paradise without drending the tender questioning of those ealestial eyes.

After a while Azalea pursol to contemplate the consents of her basket; there were lilies-ofthe-valley shaking down small dew-drops among the cool green leaves that sheathed their fragrant white bells; roses of all descriptions, from the baxurious damask to the delicate rose de mot, were heaped promisencessly together, piercing each other's tender pecula with their thorns; bunches of wistoria, sweetest and most graceful of all the pensile blossoms, bong languidly over the basket's wicker edge; the flour-de-lis drooped its stately head across the beavy breadth of the peony; and the homely-looking buds of calicanthus shed the influence of their rare perfame over all.

"Oh!" said Azalea, plunging her little face into the dewy masses of blossom with an expression of ecstatic enjoy-ment, "I love them."

Then she looked wistfully at the hedge-row which divided the shrubberies from that lane which led to the little village of Auriel.

"If I get over there I can gather some

Getting over there implied climbing to the summit of a steep bank, forcing berself through a barricade of short, dense not-boughs, and then clinging to the rough wet sides of an oak-tree while she slip-ped down into the ditch on the opposite

She hesitated a moment, fearing the con-tingencies of scratched hands and torn clothes, She scrambled up a few steps and peoped over at the temptation below.

That ditch contained beauties scarcely inferior to the gay-hued, rich-scented garden plants which it bounded, and Azalea looked longingly at the thick masses of fern, waving crossways at the foot of the bank with a wild grace all their own.

"I must have some," she thought, "to droop over the sides of the vases.

over the sides of the vases."

She fixed her laden basket between two boughs of the oak, and then classing one hand round another branch, commenced her descent. She felt her way with her feet until they found a secure rost on which to support them, and then the results.

cure rost on which to support them, and then she paused.

"If I jomp I shall jar my legs, if I slip down
I shall scratch them; I don't much saind that, but the dress is sure to get caught by something or other, and then daddy will say, "There you go again, Azalen, always in rage;" and I so detest mending them. If any one were here to give me a hand I could jump easily."

She looked up and down the misty lane, but saw nothing but a jackdaw looking very wise as it dissected its early breakfast.

"If there were but an old weenam or a boy."

There was the hem of a dress fluttering in the wind, a stone-picker, some fields distant, and the wind, a stone picker, some fields distant, and the red neckerchief of a bird-boy, making a bright s; eck in a far-off hodgerow; but Azalea could not make them hear, nor if they had heard would they have heested her. She was in that position in which poor undecided mertality so often finds isself, afraid to go on, both to draw buck, and so fain to stay where she was.

"I'll risk it," she said, suddenly; and she was in the act of withdrawing her arm from the friendly branch when a strange sound struck ayon ber ears. Something quite different from trill of bird or burn of fusect was that quick clang of notes that rose up between the sweet honey-suckle borders of that quiet lane. There was something plaintive in it too-something barsh, like buman pain. There was none of the full content of the black-

"What can it be?" wondered Azalea, post-poning her jump into the fern bed; "I never heard it before." bird's note is it.

If the little girl had gathered up herself, legs, basket, and all, and ran book in the woods, where , it might have been she could hear it no

She had not é to wait before a solution of See the not go want beaver a second the myster' sounds came in sight, and the solution at case more wondrous than the mystery. I caming through the green frings of the hedgerows, passing in a quick stream of light by misty clusters of woodbine, came a glitter of helmets and a toss of red and white plumes.

From some unexplainable impulse Azales made a desperate effort to regain the top of the bank, but she was too late; it would have re-quired three or four scrambles to reach her old place; and not liking to continue the useless struggle she remained motionless while the pro-ression streamed nearer, and the whole length of path resounded with the tramp of horses feet.

The green shadows, the deny lights, all were broken up and patched by vivid red-coats, the dark rapidly-moving farms of the horses, the champ of their bits, the harried jingle of spors, the sharp bright lines of steel that hung from the men's left sides, the plumos waving as hearseake yet fostal symbo of dent faces that showed beneath the sharp-pointed belms—all passed as a brilliant but yet awful porture before Azalea's amazed oyes,

The whole of this peaceful, grass-grown elm-shadowed road was stirred by the warlike com-motion. The sheep in the opposite field bud-dled away up the pasture, and then turned and looked at the intruders with calm dewy-eyed wonder; the daisles under foot, which had lived unscathed under the slow trend of lazy carthorses, were crushed to the ground by the merciless precision of those servied lines of tramping the jackdaw hopped out of the path and looked wise on the safe side of the hedge. All the little harmless flutters of life that were wont to make innocent music in this quiet spot were overpowered by the gay clanger of the martial cavalende that swept like a flame of fire through the densely-shodowed lane.

As the tramp and the jingle drew nearer Azalea involuntarily tightened her hold on the branch overhead, and in so doing dislodged the hasket of flowers, already top-heavy with its fra-grant burden. Over it turned, and roses and lilies, flour-de-lis and wistaris, showered down on to Azalea's head, shoulders, and feet. One plump rose descended on her shoes, and then fell to pieces—one hunch of the fragile wistaria lin-gered lovingly near her ear. The fleur-de-lis gered lovingly near her ear. The fleur-de-lis shock yellow powder on to her hands, and then alipped down to the ditch; indeed, the ferus be-low were oppressed by a perfect avalanche of blossoms.

Azalea scarcely heeded the catastrophe; her violet eyes were filled with wonder at the ad-vancing spectacle; yet when the troop of horsemen came near her she shrank as far as she could behind the shadow of the oak, and fervently wished that she could escape up its branch-es as quickly as that deft squirrel that was curl-ing up its tall at a breezy altiende of some dozen boughs nearer the sky.

The reader will understand that a cavalry regiment was moving through Essex so routs to another county, and that a troop which had been anomer county, and a tribage during the night were now on the march again, passing by the Auriel estate as the shortest cut to the high-roads. A bustle on arriving and departing—a friendly smoke overnight with the inn-keeper—a champing of many horses' mouths in the stables —a swing into the saddle when the early rime still clung to the wall-flower and cottage latch—a kiss to the inn-keeper's daughter watching them miss to the inn-keeper's daughter watching them wistfully over the gate—such is the general re-sult of a troop of soldiers' swallow-like descent into rustic Arcadias; "only this and nothing more." The girl at the gate may feel soft-eyed when she thinks of that big mustache that has just now brushed her cheek; may feel her heart best at the next flutter of red she espies in the bedgerow; but a few hours later will find her romping with Joe on the green, or quarreling with her inmates over the wash-tub. Poverty is so practical it does not admit of wasting time in sentiment; at least the injurious self-t engendered by luxury is spared to the hewers of wood and drawers of water. There is no space for it when mouths have to be filled and limbs clothed by dint of sheer exertion.

The reader will understand all this; but he or she may also comprehend that to the eyes of a girl like Azalea this was far from being any thing so commonplace as a troop of horse mov-ing from one barrack to another. To her it was a magnificent poem, and those red coats and dancing plumes were the emblems of valor and death. She had never seen living soldiers be-fore, but she had read of their deeds and learned to reverence the names of those our country's records have delighted to honor. There must have been inherited chivalry in her blood, or it would not have finshed her cheek so brightly as she followed the rush of plames with her eyes, and thought that she too would like to die amidst the red light of battle and toe somorous roll of drums. She was only seventeen, so do not de-spise her; you or I might feel that death would be as pupilessant to most the death would be as unpleasant to meet in the uproar of battle as in the drear solitude of a wind-blown moor; but youth may be permitted to have its delusions -to fancy that height colors and Joyous music may elevate the soul above mortal pangs and disinthrall it from mortal terrors. Such delu-sions are the blessoms of life. They will fall sions are the blessoms of life. They will fall soon enough; so we will not shake the tree. Azales's empracticed eyes (confused as they were by the novelty of the scene) did not detect that one of the troop was more richly dressed than the others; that it was real gold-lare that gleamed on his coat; and that the delicacy of gentle breeding showed in a fairer skin and silk-ier mustache than was owned by the rest of his companions.

This was the officer in command, Captain Thursten Movbruy; and this geutleman had never ceased yawning from the time of his leav-ing the village hostelry until he came opposite the Auriel woods. Then the languor in his face gave way to interest as he let his eyes rove over the variously-tinted waves of foliage, and noted the old red gables of the house visible through the breaks in the woodland. Sometimes he could see the shimmer of a sunlit casement, or followed with his gaze the herds of deer passing in line over the misty breadths of pasture.

"A beautiful old place!" he murmured. "To think that there should be no smoke from those chimneys. I dare say they have been staffed with martins' nests for these last dozen years. Oh, if one had but money!"

The horses tramped on, the little girl in her niche following them with adoring eyes. If she could only have heard what the commander of that grand-looking party was sighing out between his mustache, her exalted estimate of one of the brilliant throug would have been slightly lowered.

"Oh, if one had but money!" No reference to splendid deed of beroism—to old banners won in Spain—to ares willingly and gloriously yielded 'midst rolls of smoke and clang of arms came from that perplexed looking young officer, whose greatest enemy was his tailor, and who had never led a forlors hope against any fortress more impregnable than a certain office in Craig's Court.

The color, the noise, the bronzed faces had passed Azalea's dazzled eyes, and were growing dimmer and indistinct far down the lane, when Captain Mowbray took it into his head to turn round in his saidle and give a last look at his father's descrited home. In scanning the broken palings overrum with ivy, and wondering how much money it would take to uplift and straight-en their time-warped sides, his eyes fell on the onk, and then on the living creature clinging to Even at this distance be saw the gleam of fair bair; and if there was one thing in woman more attractive than another to Captain Mowbray, it was fairness.

His hold dark eyes flashed, and his handsome face woke into new life in un instant. A quick glance at the immorable faces of his companious showed him that he was alone in his discovery, The men had taken a cursory glance at the pres-ty wild flowers that bloomed down the bank, but it was reserved for their officer to detect the rare specimens that were still clinging to Azalea's feet and shoulders.

"I believe—I am almost sure—she is pretty.
I'll go and have a look at her."

I'll go and have a look at ner.

What else could you expect from a young gentleman who had been wearying away so many uninteresting hours on country roads and among ugly rustic faces since he left his last gay quarter. ugly rustic faces since he left his last gay quar-ters? He builed this apparition as an especial kindly interposition of Fortune on his behalf. He was as pleased as the boy diverted from the tedium of a walk to school by the sudden rap-ture of starting and pursuing a wild rabbit. Castain Mowbray waited until his troop had passed from under the last elm that shaded the land, and then, turning his horse, he galloped back in the direction of the oak.

CHAPTER XXIV.

WHAT IS THE HARM?

MEN and horses were gone; but the stir of their presence lingered a while in the vacant path. The hirds had not recovered their con-fidence in the lower twigs of their homes; and Azalea's ears were still full of the music of their movement. The last planne had modded away into the clear sunshine of the high-road ere the cirl hathought herself of remining her flowers. girl bethought herself of regaining her flowers and returning home. She had bared her presty round arms, the better to preserve her sleeves, and was about to drop down into the soft herbage below, when the sound of horses hoofs made her pause and tremble.

Was the beautiful dream coming back again? Was the beautiful dream coming back again? Was she once more to gaze on that scintillating line of gorgeous gold and crimson? She looked down the lane, and, to her surprise, saw not all, only one of the number, coming toward her, making, even by himself, a blaze of color in those cool green shadows. In an instant he was opposite to her. The horse was checked and turned uncorrementously loose. The latter made no retempt at flight, but quietly dropped his heavily-exparisoned head into the luscious his heavily-capacisoned head into the luscious depths of devy grass, while the rider stood motionless, surprised into momentary stillness by the charm of the picture before him.

"A dryad, by Jove!" the Captain remarked, afterward, with hazy reminiscences of his schoolboy studies in Lemprière. "One of those creatboy studies in Lemprière. "One of those creatures that live always up a tree."

Azulea sood with scared eyes and beating heart, surveying the introder. She had become aware of semesthing more than a red coa, and gleaming helmet. She felt, rather than saw, the big brown eyes that looked up at her face with somewhat of entreaty in their bold fire. In one brief second the pleading eyes, the mustached face, the bright appared, the dim joy of the early morning—all were blended and burned indelibly into her memory. She knew then that she could never forget it—that even in the gray willight that forerum death, that face and that hour weeld live distinctly in her heart.

hour would live distinctly in her heart. Captain Mowbeny was, as we have said, awed Captain Movemy was, as we have said, awed into inaction for an instant by the girl's exceeding grace of face and outline. Then, his time being short, and the sounds of his treopers' houses already sounding fainter down the distant highway, he caught hold of a projecting branch, and swinging himself up to Azakan's side, suddenly classed her close to his breast, swept his brown mustache over her delicate checks, kissed her mouth twice, and then dropped down as quickly on to the sward below, jumped into his saddle, with the sting of a delicate hand and arm thish-ing his fice, and a gay laugh on his red lips.

She had had no time for outery or remonstrance. She had struck her little hand with all her force against the audacious face that dured to press so near her own. There was no time for set speech or any other display of maid-enly dignity. She struck out her hands from a enly dignity. She struck out her hands from a purely animal instinct of self-defense; but her captor hardly felt the blow, excepting as a pleas-ant reminder of the kiss which had preceded it. It was as if a poor wood pigeon was flattering and pecking its soft bill against Captain Mows hand.

"I will come again," he called out, as he capt past her. "I'll have another kiss of you, urling, before lone." swept past ber.

darling, before long.

Still laughing and waving his hand, he vanished out of sight.

Poor Azulea did not gather up her fallen flowers; they withered away in the dank disch be-low many days after the fair morning on which they were plucked. She sat down among the

they were picked. See six down smoog the nut-boughs, and cried hitterly. A brand of shame seemed to be scorehing her lips.

"I can sever, never tell daddy or Mr. Doug-las," she thought. Then she wept afresh, and looked reproachfully at her conten dress.

"If I were only better dressed, and sat in a drawing-room, like Rosa Orme, this would nev-er have happened. I will never look at a soldier again. How dored he to treat me so? I will have served him as long as I live. It would have served him rightly if I had killed him." Her eyes flashed through her tears, and her face looked quite vindictive at the idea of venge-ance. In her heart she classed the stranger with some of the worst villains among her ac-quaintances in fiction. She decided that his of-fense was unperdonable, and with her face dark and steen she retraced her steps toward the

A thousand schemes for abasing her enemy fitted through her busy brain as she moved hast-By through the paths, the fire in her thoughts lending nuconscious impetus to her movements. If he came again, she would pass him with hanghty unconcern; but then he might ignore the haughtiness, and repeat the offense. She would meet him in that blue merino dress her daddy had lasely purchased for her, and greet him with a cold bow, and a scornful, averted face; or she would go out with an old-fashioned dagger (she rejected the idea of the garden-knife, which was practically sharper, as being too pro-saic an implement of vengeance), and strike him to the heart through all that bulwark of red and

A woman of the world would have made al lowances for Captain Mowbray—have taken into consideration his temptation, the dearth of pret-ty faces between Norwich and Auriel, and, above all, his unavoidable haste, which precluded his waiting to express apology or regret; but Anales only felt that an enemy had struck a blow at the native modesty in which her thoughts had hitherto rested in as sacred security as flowers in a Madonna's shrine. She had been sovereign of undivided empire in Dream-land. The aspiring ambition of youth made her ever assume the highest place among those ideal personages who througed round her in imagination. Practically, too, she was a little queen—the adored of old Moore's failing eyes—the worshiped of his heart—the empress of hundreds of living things who fluttered to her at the beck of her finger, and the coo of her soft woice! Had she not reason the coo or her soft voice? Had she not reason to rebel at finding out this morning that she was but an ordinary little mortal who had been picked up and kissed by a strange soldier. She did not get away from that morning hour all day. All the noon was morning to her. There was ever the gray film of dawn in the air, and the brown area norming by wherever her was a little or the same and the same and the same area. pursuing her wherever she turned. They her secret shame and disgrace. Her cheek eyes parsing her wherever are tursed. They were her secret shame and diagrace. Her cheek flushed and her eyes lowered at their memory. Yet when she fell asleep that night she repeated softly to herself, "I shall come again;" and in her voice was a thrill of something which was not all anger.

CHAPTER XXV.

CAPTAIN AWORD VISITS CAPTAIN PRO.

LATE that evening Robert Douglas's solitude was broken in on by the unwonted appearance of a visitor at his cottage door—a man who, judging by his externals, was by no means the description of guest to be expected in such a homely dwelling. From his glossy, closely-corried head to his well-fitting boots, he was a perfect representative of a handsome, high-bred-looking Englishman. He was fashionably dress-ed, but with a fashion that was refined by taste, and there was not a violent or inharmonious time in his whole attire. He moved his cigar from his lips as he stood in the doorway; and called out, in a cheery voice:

"Hollon! old fellow, is that you? What a jolly night it is!"

voice was familiar, and Douglas found

The voice was familiar, and Donglas found himself confronted by the bright eyes and genial smile of Thurstan Mowbery.

"I'm on the march," Thurstan explained; "I came past Auriel this morning; but I couldn't come and see you then, as there was no one else with the men. At the county town I was joined by a brother officer. As soon as I could, I got into mufti, and leaving him in command, I came to the railway station. I found that I could get down here so as to spend a couple of hours with the I was so edd to find you were cost. Camero. I was so edd to find you were cost. you. I was so sold to find you were out. Can you give me something to eat?"

Douglas looked perplexed.

"I do not know how much bread there may be left," he said, smiling. "I have an excellent barrel of Maçon wine sent to me by a friend in the Scatt of Eastern horses in the South of France, but as to eating- Stay,

I will make you some convent eggs."
"What are they?" Thurstan asked, doubt fully.

"They are better than nothing. You have often said you would make any sacrifice for me, Mowbray, and you have kept your word—you have sacrificed your dinner. What greater proof of devotion can an Englishman give?"

"I didn't sacrifice much," Captain Mowbray admitted, candidly. "The chops at the town inn are marvels of toughness. I am so glad to see you again, old fellow. You are looking better than you used to do."

"I can not return the compliment." Douglas

"I can not return the compliment," Douglas said, looking up from his culinary occupation. "You are looking more than three years older than when I last saw you."

"I have drunk many more bottles of wine, have incurred four times the number of debta and have fallen in and out of love so often—of course it all tells on a man."

debts or the love affairs?" Douglas asked, smiling.

"Oh, the debts! Women forget, but creditors never do. Women are forgotten; but how can you obliterate from your mind the daily necan you oblished from your mind the daily ne-cessity of obtaining more things on credit? I really think I shall have to change into the Line." And Captain Mowbray looked as M. Curtius may have looked as he surveyed the unfathomable horror of the Forum gulf. "Dinner is served," Douglas announced, gravely, as he placed a steaming savory mess of eggs and herbs on the deal table.

Daintiness was not among Captain Mowbray's faults. He are heartily of the dish, and then looked gratefully at his host.

"You always were a clever fellow, by Jove!" he said, with profound admiration. "And this rine has a wondrously delicate flavor. Where did you get it from?"

"From Maçon."
"Oh! I remember—the place where the women wear those rummy hats. I have been abroad since I saw you, Douglas. I followed your advice, and went first to Paris."

"And did Paris have a consolatory effect?"

"Well, I certainly felt much better after I had been there a fortnight. As Mile, C—said, 'Life is too short for regret, and loo long for constancy.' Not but what I would have followed that woman (Lady Di I mean) to the Antipodes if she had beckoned to me with her little finger.

But she did not beckon?

* No! she went to Italy and joined the Ormes' arty. I believe her intention was to become party. I believe her intention was to become Lady Orme; but Orme is so obtuse he didn't see it. I don't suppose he would have ever un-derstood her drift unless she had asked him point-blank to marry, and then he'd have said, 'I'll think about it.' There is no victim so difficult to capture as the one who vacillates. would have missed the mark there from the un-steadiness of the object aimed at."

"And where is she now?"

"Back in England. I have only seen her

"Then she looked at me with such a sweet unconscious expression, that she all but deluded me into the belief that there had never been any thing between us worth remembering. Clair-veaux was in attendance; and although I had fancied I had entirely ceased to care for her, I was sufficiently irritated by her conduct to plunge into an cetentations flirtation with Ame lia Orme."

lia Orne."

"And what said Lady Diana?"

"She merely smiled to herself. I think she guessed my motives," Thurstan said, gloomily.

"She did show favor to the youth in your sight cally to exasperate you," quoted Douglas.

"Yes; I suppose she did it to get a rise out of me," Capesin Mowbray observed, innocent of the quotation. "But this was nearly two years ago. I should know better how to act indifference now. I have consorted more with indifference now. I have consorted more with all classes of women, and have learned some of "Your experience does not seem to have in-creased your respect for the sex," Douglas re-marked, dryly.

"Why should it?" the young man said, in-differently. "Virtue is at obsolete as peg-to-trowsers; innocence is out of fashion, and for my part I have no wish to see it revived. It makes life much easier for us, matters being as they are."

Life might be easier, especially in hot weath er, if we all followed the primitive customs of our forefathers, and went about wearing no other sacrifice to decency than a suit of blue woad," Douglas answered, impatiently. "I wish you wouldn't talk in this sort of way about women. wouldn't talk in this sort of way shout women, Mowbray: I assure you it is not at all in good tasts. Men should never speak ill of their coun-try, nor disparage the women of their race; both are much as we make them."

"Why, you used to be more severe against the sex than any one," his friend said, surprised.

"One would think you were in love."

It has been said that Captain Mowbray was showed.

"Hush!" Douglas cried, sharply. "Do no talk of love and me together. What has an age embittered by the memories of the past, a wrink-led face, and an uncouth form, to do with the morning-blocm of youth? I am too tired—too sore with long wretchedness—to wrestle with the cruel atrength of the passion of love. Its heav-enly exultation, its hellish despair, would destroy me. My life has been for years one long waste; but it, at least, has been calm. It I felt my beart's repose troubled, it would be well for me

He spoke with what appeared to be undue energy; his large eyes flashed light from their cav-ernous recesses, and his lips quivered like those of one who i, hurt and dreads to show his pain. Captain Mowbray looked at him with as much wonder as a well-bred man permits himself to

"I do not see why you need talk of wrinkles and uncouthness," he said, presently. "You looked like a head of Jupiter Tonars just now when you were excited. There are no end of woman who would like you a thousand times women who women has you better than me."

Douglas shook his head impatiently.
"What has become of Clairveaux?" he asked, by way of changing the conversation.
"Oh! Clairveaux has placed his hand, a considerable portion of his fortune, and all his volities in the care of a wife. Ledy Clairveaux is tion in the care of a wife. Lady Clairveaux is not strictly pretty, but she is 'svelte.' She has a man's art of making the best of herself and her opportunities. Clairveaux believes her to be a Susanna, while she boasts herself a

" And De Smith?"

"De Smith is Lady Clairveaux's favored admirer and Clairveaux's most intimate friend. But what a memory you have, Douglas! Pancy your recollecting all these fellows!"

"It is one of my misfortunes." Douglas said, "that I can never forget any thing. Memories are sorrow's fetters: they hold down our pain round us with cruel tenacity long after the wounds have been dealt. How much happier some of us would be if we might take nightly draughts from the Lethean river!"

"I don't know where that river may be. I'd go and 'liquor up' there like a shot if I thought it would help me to forget the total of my tail-or's hill, "Captain Mowbray said, simply. "Oh, Douglas! you can't think how it fores one to be

"You mean how it bores one to s be poor: you young fellows expend so much more on pretension than you do on pleasure. If you did not lavish your money in doing what is called the 'right thing' you would have more to spend in real lexury."

"What is your idea of real luxury?" "You do not think I am likely so be a good judge of what the word means," Douglas said, I observing his friend's eyes glancing round the barely-furnished room; "but he sure that no lover of fruit has ever appreciated its beauty as Tantalus did. Twenty years ago I reveled in what I called luxury. I sought for and found the most lovely aspects of Nature. I witnessed, the most lovely aspects of Nature. I witnessed, and in some cases possessed, some of man's most perfect handicraft. I had rure paintings on my walls—Magdaleus, by Guido, with mellow faces that looked as if they were dropping to sleep in the sunset, oppressed by the wealth of their own warm tresses. I had Cupids, by Rubens, tumbling their fair limbs in deep gorgeous-colored piles of fruit. I delighted in those dear little sensitive assessed force by Granzes and I reconsensitive, sensual faces by Grouze; and I mortgaged a portion of my future heritage for the sake of a deep-toned Murillo. I specify these to show you that I revel in color, and that my eyes do not for choice rest on these bare white walls, which are never adorned by aught gay and brilliant, excepting when a butterfly takes it into its wanton head to perch there for an instant, furling and unfurling its velvety wings in the warmth of a stray sunbeam. I won't bore you by dilating on my appreciation of form; but the refined artist who moulds beauty in marble, carving from the uncouth mass dimpling feet that seem to move through the air as lightly as down-who creates mutable beauty with an im-mutable substance-who carves tremulous smiles round ever-still lips, and produces from the hus-less stone limbs which stir the heart to a quickless stone limbs which stir the heart to a quicker pulse with their voluptions representation of perfect human loveliness—he (were he a modern Phidias) could not estimate grace of outline more highly than myself. When I was a lad of eighteen most of my leisure time was spent in my father's library—a room full of grave shadows, and formal, sombre-colored furniture. In a niche by the window stood the one grace to the room—an exquisite copy in markle of the Florroom—an exquisite copy in marble of the Flor-entine Venus Anadyomess. I can not describe to you the subtle emotion which the contemplation of this crouching lovely creature awoke in me. Her virginal face haunted me in my dreams. I imaged the shell on which she rest-ed floating in tideless seas. I pictured her, with her perfect limbs, rossed by the moving well of cool waters, no. filleted head gleaming like a sparkling star in the blue depths. I would fain have fallen down and kissed the little round feet into the one charm they wanted—that of living blushing loveliness. I caressee with reverent fingers the arms modestly crossed on her b fingers the arms modestly crossed on her breast. Her curved wrist, her dimpled, undulating shoulders, her pear-shaped bosom, half concealed by the shrinking posture, inspired me even then with an appreciation, which was almost raptureus in its intensity, of beauty in its highest form. Judge then, Mowbray, whether my taste is grutified by the sight of hideons, crook-backed old women who stumble through these lanes on study on their way to such their afternoon. Sunday on their way to seek their afternoon dose in church, or by the contemplation of their younger descendants—girls whose limbs are en-larged by labor, whose aspects are harsh from continual toil, whose faces are rough as those of mes, and whose hair is as course as that of Captain Mowbray thought of the girl he had left trembling amidst the ferns on the previous morning, and mentally decided that his friend was unfortunate in his rural experiences.

"According to your own definition your pres-ent mode of life is joyless and atterly unattract-ive to your senses. How is it that you seem content?" he asked, stiffing a yawn with an in-halation of cigarette smoke.

"Pain is sharper than pleasure is sweet," the der man said, pithily. "I am content to reelder man said, pithily. "I am content to re-sign the manifold satisfactions of wealth that I may escape an attendant bitterness which would more than neutralize their enjoyment. I have at least known one great luxury during these latter years of poverty and solitude, which I lacked in the old days when I was in and of the world,

"And that is-?" "The companionship of a pure and sinless life." "A woman," Captain Mowbray muttered to himself. "I thought as much." Aloud he said, "Who keeps the old house at Auriel?"

Douglas did not answer for a moment; then he spoke hesitatingly. "An old man called Moore, who was, I believe, placed there by your

"Oh! is there no one else?"

"Oh! is there so one case:
"Yet an equally old woman—a cottager, who,
as the Essex people say, 'does for him."
Captain Mowbray looked disappointed. "I wonder if there is any game there," he said; "because I might run down for a few days in the shooting season. I am ashamed of myself for knowing so tittle about the old place. I haven't visited it since I was a boy."

"There isn't a head of game on the place," Douglas replied, hastily.
"Well, good-night, dear old fellow!" Thurstan said, rising and buttoning up his greatcoat. "I have no end of things to talk to you about; but I haven't time now, as I must back to the men. I hope to see you again later in the year, for Lord Airdale, the Master of tack to the men. I hope to see you again later in the year, for Lord Airdale, the Master of hounds (his place is only ten miles from you), always asks me down in the hunting season. We will go over Auriel together some day then. I dare say you already know more about the books and pictures than I do. Good-by."

"I will walk with you to the railway," Douglas said; and the two went together to As they shook hands at the station Douglas gave his friend a parting counsel.

"This is an awfully bad country for hunting. It is thickly inclosed with new-made fences."

the banks are sharp as knives, and not nearly so firm; what grass there is is cut up by mardykes. I can not imagine any one who is acc a flying country coming for this creep and crawl this pitch and toss style of thing."

"What a fellow that is!" Thurston said to himself, as the train moved out of the station.

"Here I have known him all those years, and never found out before that he had an inkling of what the word hunting meant. I suspect his is an odd history. I wonder if he will ever enlighten me as to who he is or was. Not that it matters. His saving my life is quite antecedent matters. His saving my life is quite antecedent enough for me. The country is all he sava. I shall bring down Blackberry and Bramble to Airdale's. They are quite clever enough. What a pretty girl that was! I feel quite sorry to think that by to-morrow night I shall have left her sixty miles behind me. I dare say Amelia Orase will be very glad to see me. And, after all, women are very much alike, only that girl in the hedgerow didn't wear a lump of false hair, and the color didn't come off her check when I kirsed her; on the contrary, it grew redder. In ed her; on the contrary, it grew redder. In these respects she is decidedly dissimilar to other

MY FIRST PROPOSAL.

Ar last, the long day's having done, I turned to leave the fragmant meadow, Where, on the grass, the setting sun Before me cast my lengthened shadow.

struck a narrow path that ran By Lorell's farm, a crooked by-way Which somewhere theresbout began, And ended on the dusty highway.

It reached their barn-yard first of all, Then wandered through a wooded hollow, And darted past an old stone-wall, As if inviting you to follow;

It climbed a hill where all the day The crows rehearsed a mimic Habel; It crossed a brook which flowed that way, Then slid beneath our tern's brown gable.

A shorter cut it was that led To our own homestend from the mendow, And so I followed it instead, And on before me went my shadow, glanced beyond the barn-yard wall, And there sat Katy milking "Spockle," The favorite cow among them all, Her fine coat flecked with many a freekle.

Then nearing Lovell's farm I heard The white-horned cattle faintly lowing. While, hubbling, in the bright pails stirred The milk from well-filled udders flowing.

Then up got Katy—so by that I knew her miking done—and straightway,
While my own heart went pit-a-pat,
Came toward me through the open gateway.

The sun dropped down from out the sky, And left the west with rich gold laden; An awkward country lad was I, And Katy but a simple maiden.

Her eyes met mine, as if by chance, Not knowing who it was; then shyly, 'Neath drooping lids, withdrew their glance, Then back again to mine stole slyly.

With that last look my courage grew; I said—at may have been I swere it— She was the sweetest girl I knew, And told her how I loved her for it.

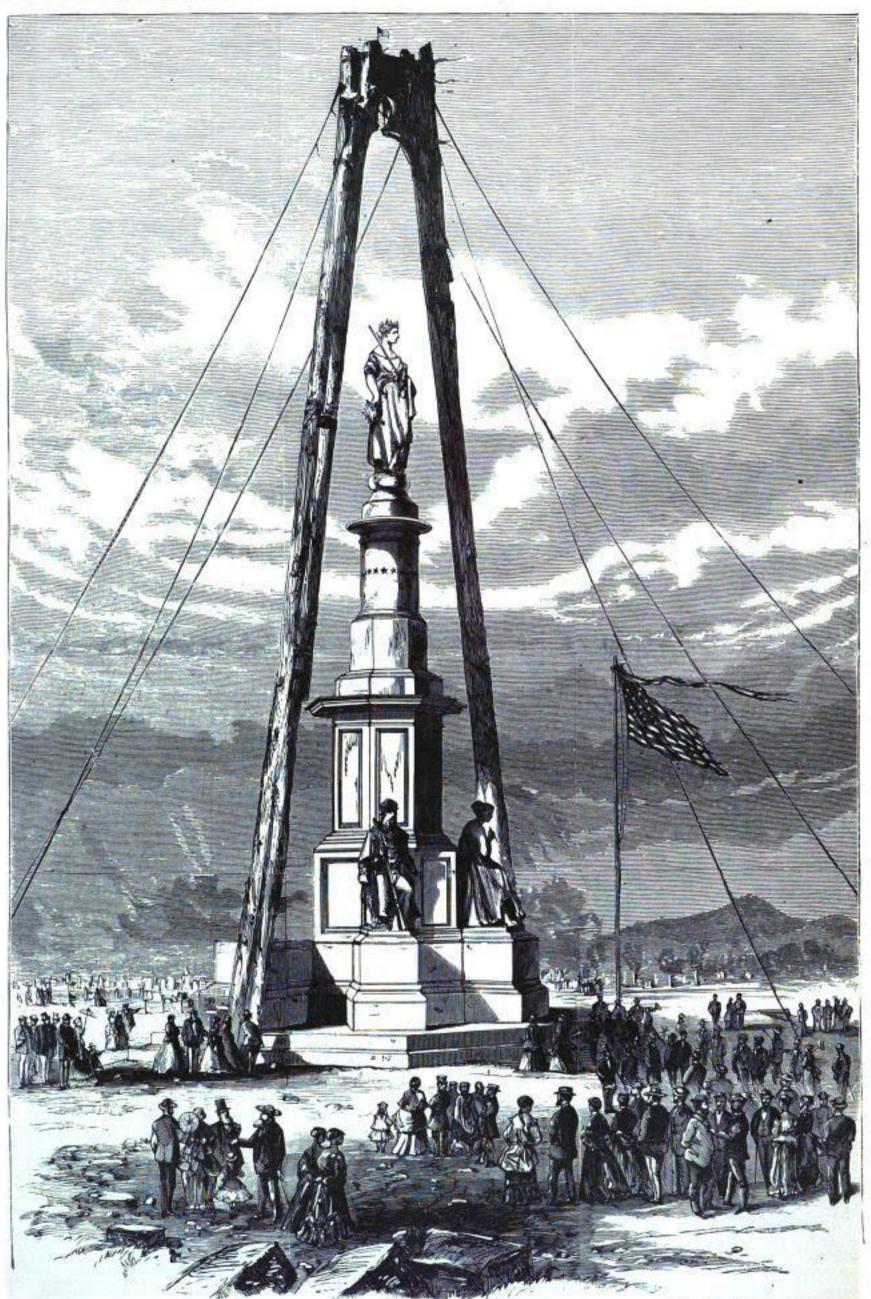

Perhaps she gave me no roply,
Perhaps it was the night's gray curtain,
Slow-falling from the twilight sky,
Which left her answer so uncertain.

Then winding bomeward, torn with doubt, The tree-toads trilled their firm conviction; The patriarch frogt, with deep base shout, Grew hourse and loud in contradiction.

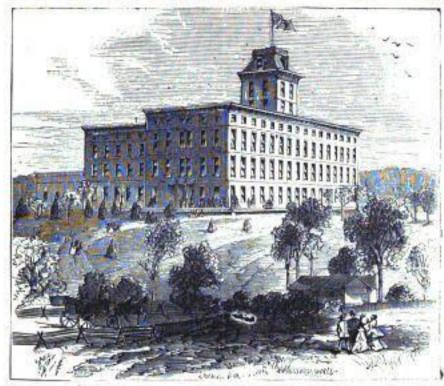

The katydids pronounced both ways But ere the moon was one bour older sat beneath its silvery rays With Kary's head upon my shoulder.

GEOLOGICAL CHANGES.

THERE is no such thing as perfect rest in nature. If no alterations occurred there would be no progress. It does not require a scientific ed-ecation to convince any one of common understanding that the bills and dales were once under On the highest mountain peaks in Syria. water. between Jerusalem and Damascus, the travelor sees marine shells which belonged to a primitive Far inland, on the Atlantic borders of the Southern States, immense beds and reefs of coral show clearly that the sea once occupied the reof dry land where these tokens of geological changes are found. How plain it is that the mighty seas and oceans which cover very nearly two-thirds of the earth's surface are slowly but dily shifting their borders! So gradual are the movements of the waters that centuries of careful observation would be required to define the exact rate of encroachment is some countries. But snail-paced as it is, the water grad-ually creeps over the land. While gaining in one direction new land is coming into view in another, bringing on its uprising crest the remains of animals and plants peculiar to the watery element! Like a Spanish findingo, while one side goes up the other goes down. Thus every atom entering into the organization of this magnificent globe moves and shares in the never-ending motion on which the stability of this and the whole material universe depends.

THE GETTYSBURG MONUMENT, DEDICATED JULY 1, 1869. - PROT. BY TIPTON AND MYERS, GETTYSBURG. - [SEE PAGE 457.]

GETTYSBURG SPRING.

GETTYSBURG SPRINGS HOTEL.

THE GETTYSBURG MONUMENT.

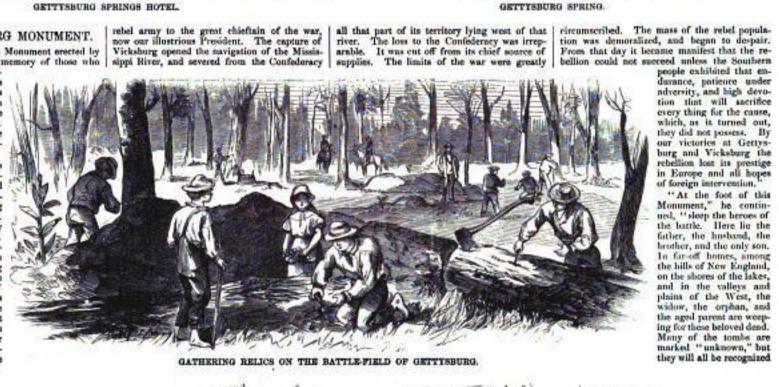

Ow the last of July the Monument erected by the loyal States to the memory of those who perished on the battle-field of Gettysburg was formally dedicated. It is erected in the cemetery in which the soldiers were buried where they fell. Fifteen thousand people were present at this dedication.

The Rev. HENRY WAND

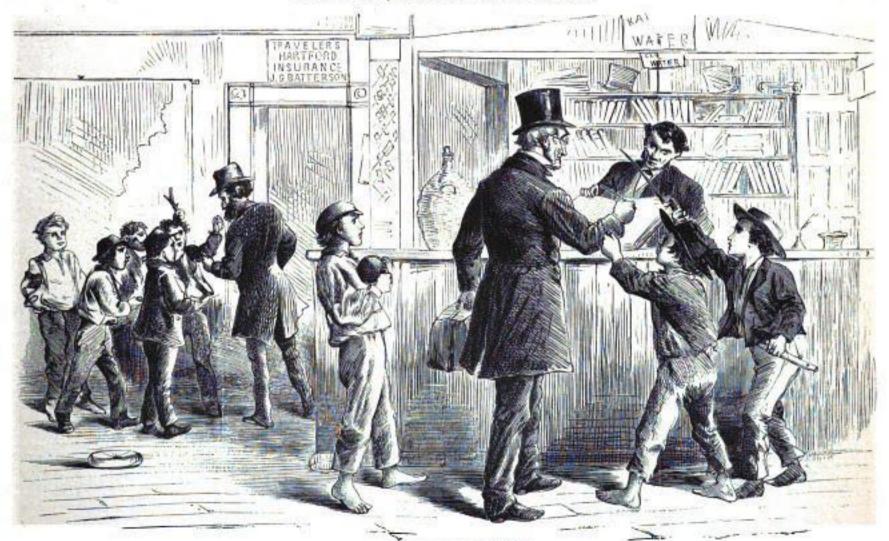

The Rev. HENRY WARD The Rev. HENRY WARD
BERCHER made the opening prayer. General MEADE made an appropriate speech, recalling the history of the battle.
An address was read by Senator O. P. MOSTON.
He gave an eloquent review of the progress which Freedom has made during the last decade on both Freedom has made during the last decade on both continents. He spoke of that 4th of July, 1863, as the most memorable since that of 1776. It was not only a day of victory in the East. "On another field it witnessed the sur-render of another large rebel army to the great chieftain of the war, now our illustrious President. The capture of Vicksburg opened the navigation of the Missis-sippi River, and severed from the Confederacy all that part of its territory lying west of that river. The loss to the Confederacy was irrep-arable. It was cut off from its chief source of supplies. The limits of the war were greatly on the morning of the resurrection. The unand breaking hearts. None die so humble but leave some one to moorn. 'Purished at Gettysburg, in defense of their country, 979 men, of whose names, homes, or lineage, there is no truce left on earth. Doubtless the Rocording Angel has preserved the record, and when the banks are opened on the last day their names will be found in letters of living light, on the im-mortal page of heroes who died that their country might live.

GATHERING RELICS ON THE BATTLE-FIELD OF GETTYSBURG.

RELIC-SELLERS, GETTYSBURG.

"In the fields before us are the graves of the rebel dead, now sunk to the level of the plain, 'nomarked, unbenored, and unknown.' They were our countrymen, of our blood, language, and history. They displayed a courage worthy of their country and of a botter cause, and we may drop a tear to their memory. The news of this fatal field curried agony to thousands of Southern homes, and the unit of despair was boned in the everglades and orange-groves of Would to God that these men had died for their country, and not in fratricidal strife for its destruction. Oh, who can describe the wickedness of rebellion, or paint the horrors of vivil war?"

The monument is sixty feet in height. It consists of a massive potental twenty-five feet square at the lase, crowned with a colossal statue representing the Genius of Liberty. Steading uses a three-quarters close, she helds Standing upon a three-quarters globe, she hole in her right hand the victor's wreath of laurel, while with her left hand she clasps the sheathed sword through whose uncovered power the vic-tory was won. Projecting from the angles of the periestal are four buttresses supporting an equal number of allegorical statues, representing respectively War, History, Pearse, and Plenty. War is personified by a statue of the American soldier, who, resting from the conflict, relates to History the story of the bande, which the monument is intended to commemorate. History, in a listening attitude, records, with stylus and tablet, the achievement of the field and the names of the honored dead. Peace is symbolized by a statue of the American mechanic characterized by appropriate accessories. Plenty is represented by a female figure with a sheaf of wheat and fruits of the earth, typifying peace and abundance as the sublier's crowning triumph. The monument was designed by James G. Battenson, of Hartford, Connecticut. The statues are of Carrara mar-ble, and were executed in Italy.

It is impossible, in connection with this dedication, to forget the 19th of November, 1863, when President Lancoux, standing upon the hattle-field, delivered that short but memorable address, which will forever be associated with the greatest victory of the war. "In a larger sense," he said, "we can not dedicate, we can not consecrate, we can not hallow this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here have consecrated it far above our power to add or detract. The world will little note nor long remember what we say here, but it can nev-er forget what they did here. It is for us, the living, rather to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us, that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they here gave the last full measure of devotion; that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain: that this nation shall, under God, have a new birth of freedom; and that goveroment of the people, by the people and for the people, shall not perish from the earth."

BAYARD TAYLOR, in the opening passage of his poem repeated by him on the occasion of the dedication, beautifully allodes to this address:

dedication, beautifully alludes to this address:

After the eyes that looked, the lips that spake
Here, from the shadows of impending death,
These words of solemn breath,
What voice may filly break
The silence, deathy hallowed, left by blast
We can but how the bead, with eyes grown dim,
And, as a Nation's litany, repeat.
The phrase his matrydom hath made complete,
Notice as then, but now more sadly sweet:
"Let us, the living, rather dedicate Ourselves to the unfinished work, which they Thue far advanced so nobly on its way,
And save the pecilied State!
Let us, upon this field where they, the brave,
Their last full measure of devotion gave,
Highly resolve they inve not died in vain!—
That, noder God, he Nation's later birth
Of Feredum, and the Feeple's gain
Of their own Severeignts, shall nover wane
And perish from the circle of the earth?'
From such a perfect text, chall long aspire
To light to thied dire,—
And into wandering music turn
Is virtus, simple, corrowful, and stern?
His voice all ciccles satisfaced;
For, whatsoe'er the strain,
We hear that one certain,
"The consecrate occorives to them, the Consecrated!"

THE BATTLE-FIELD.

A correspondent of the Boston Traveller has recently visited the battle-field of Gettysburg, and writes as follows:

and writes as follows:

On Seminary Ridge the trees and fences are shattered and riddled, showing plainly how fierce was the coatest where the fight began. Here we found two bulless, one driven into the other so far that they could not be pulled apart. The supposition is that a Union and a robot sharp-shooter aimed so accurately for each other, and fired at an near the same time, that the bullets reet, and one being a little more dense than the other, piercrel the one coming from the opposite direction. Both fell, of course, to the ground, and thus provented the death of both the markenen, which must have been the result had the bullets merely grazed each other.

When we specke of the curtosity at the hotel a whole army of relic speculators wished to purchase it. Doubtless the sam which we received for it was trebled when need to the memeato services with frequent the town. These speculators do a thriving business in the relicine, and have every thing to self from a 100-pound shell to the smallest warea of the top-shop, all in some way consected with the battle.

Cause cut from Culy's Hill or Little Round Top are far asis is many shop-winderss, and if the purchaser far asis is many shop-winderss, and if the purchaser is a little incredulous and inclined to death that the tarses came from those places, they will march out with him, take any appling he may select, and make

A STATE OF THE PARTY OF THE PAR

It into a case in a remarkably short space of time. This business has become our of great importance to feetgeling, and it is proposed to introduce machinery for the manufacture of toys from the battle-field wood. The traces which we found of the fight slong the front of Hancock's and Sedgwick's line—except in the blasted peach orchard—were not very distinct, owing to the growing fields of grain and the repairs which have been put upon the few farm-houses. But the graves of the relact dead are there, dotting the fields for miles around. In one or two places the bones were sticking out, but generally their graves were covered with chorer, and had more of that barbarously methods appearance they have to the South.

At Little Round' Toy the bullet cars are still visible on the rocks, while reversal large dat stones near which officers were killed have been engrived with their narroes and the date of their death. The stone-wall which the troops throw up as a breast-work is still colleg, and the trees have not yet outgrown their wounds.

Our illustrations on pages 456 and 457 are mainly from sketches by THEODORE R. DAVIS.

One of our pictures represents the Gettysburg Spring. The curative properties of this spring were first brought prominently into notice in con-nection with the battle. The rebels were encamped about it, and their sick drank of its wacamped about it, and their sick drank of its water and experienced relief. Adjoining the illustration of the spring we give another representing the Gettysburg Springs Hotel. This hotel is situated on the hetrle-field, one and one-half miles west of Gettysburg, near the spot where General Revisolus fell. This hotel has been built since the middle of February last, by a company com-posed of the members of the Gestysburg Springs Company and the most prominent citizens of the town. It is in every respect commodious, well appointed, and furnished with all the modern improvements. The scenery about it is of unrivaled beauty.

MY NAMESAKE AND I.

My name is Murray Menteith, and I wish it My name is Murray Mencetth, and I wish it wasn't, because it is a pretty name, and a good name, which is more important. Common people, who are uncertain, or only too certain, about their grandfathers, are not likely to have such a name among them as Murray Menteith. My brother's name is Douglas, and even that circumstance, wherein a more in the such a name is to be a such a name in the such a such otherwise gratifying, has proved inconvenient to me in connection with the borrid fatality which has pursued and come up with me on several occasions already, and may have ever so many shocks in store for me yet; so that, while I don't exactly wish that Murray Menteith was not my name, and Douglas Menteith my broth-er's, I do wish very sincerely that we were the only Murray and Douglas Menteith in the world, only narray and Doughas members in the world, or at any rate in this part of it.

Doughas has not been pursued by the above-indicated fatality, and I had rather not mention the matter to him; for his nature is somewhat rugged, and he has an edious habit of laughing at any thing which he considers a good joke, perfectly indifferent to the sensitive feelings which may be becaused by the witticism. Perhaps his turn may come, and then he will wel-come the sympathy of a brother whom he has hitherto regarded rather in the light of a "meff," just because I have a turn for sentiment and am not ashamed of it, and because I don't devote myself to fatiguing bodily exercises, for cruel purposes, which he calls field-sports.

I am studious, well-informed, and decidedly well-looking, though not precisely what your patrons of prize-fighting, or women who look upon a heavy dragoon as the ideal of manly beauty, would call a "fine man." I am not tall enough to be awkward, nor short enough to be insignificant, and my personal appearance is indicative of intellectual superiority and a thoughtful habit of mind. My namesake may possibly resemble Douglas, who is a big follow, given to cultivate his muscles at the expense of his brains, and who subscribes heartily to that creed which has been pithily summarized as "fearing God, and walking a thousand miles in a thousand hours." The other Murray Menteith, who is the bodily presentment of my "fatality," may be like him; indeed, I have no doubt he is, for as he has been described to me he is a coarse sort of person, of practical tastes—as it is the fashion to call those horrid energetic people who put themselves into perpetual perspirations, and make every one else uncomfortable; but he can not possibly resemble me. But that I regard the expression in a Shakspearian and therefore unobjectionable sense, I should not like to say that a "cursed spite" caused my namesake and his brother, who is my brother's namesake, to arrive at St. Andrews—an institution, as every one in and out of Scotland knows, unrivaled in the world as a seat of learning—just before my brother and I quitted the classic halls, to whose shelter I look back with reverence, and he, I regret to say, does not look back at all. I never happened to see the gentlemen—our "dou-bles," as Douglas called them; but he did the very day we left, I believe, and langhed in his big, obstreperous sort of way over some execrable joke about our being also "quits." Of course I took no notice; to rebake him would be unbroth-erly, and I endeavor to amend his taste and cor-rect his failings by silence. I merely remarked, when the similarity of names turned up again in conversation, that it was very fortunate we were leaving the university, so that no absurd mis-takes could be made, or sturied, ill-bred, practinever happened to see the gentlemen-our "dou takes could be made, or stupid, ill-bred, practi-cal jokes attempted. I made the remark somewhat severely—Douglas has a shockingly unre-fined taste for practical joking—and I never gave the subject another thought.

My pursuits are literary—chiefly poetical, with a dash of the philosophical, and a tendency toward the scientific. I am fond of geology, and ward the scientific. I am tond of geology, and I may say devoted to philology, and its cognate science ethnology. I am an enthusiastic admirer of Mr. Tennyson, Professor Huxley, Max Müller, Captain Grant, and Arminins Vambéry. I should like to go to Central Asia if it were not for the heat, the fatigue, and the necessary hypocrisy with respect to my religious opinions. That, and the smell of the camels, I never could endure. Douglas has no tastes, as I understand the usm; he is a "very fair farmer," according to the barbarous phrase in use in Dumfriesshire, and has the cruel propensities I have before men-tioned. So be and I parted company after we left St. Andrews, and I remained some time in Edinburgh, while he sought the secluded scenes and congenial cattle of Gientacket, as a place as flat as the Bog of Allen was absurdly named. I shell ever recall that brief period—even though, as the poet (who understood human nature well that he made a lover talk to his mistress of his "calm light love") beautifully sings,

"Bleak as the blast of December my life may prove," for then I reveled in the fresh delights of literary for then I reveled in the fresh delights of library society; I met numbers of persons of my own way of thinking; though perhaps the majority were a little superficial; and I frequently danced with Susan Price, whose only defect was her name. I allude to this frivolous, and indeed fa-tiguing, amusyment thus emphatically because if I had not danced with Susan Price I could not possibly have enjoyed her society so much as I did; for dance she would, and dance she did, whenever and wherever she had the opportunity, of which there was no scarcity in Edinburgh, dur-ing that unusually gay and delightful season, Susan Price was the daughter of a London law-Susan Price was the daughter of a London law-yer, the eldest daughter, report said the pretriest, and she was staying on a tolerably long visit with her mother's sister, Mrs. Sandilands, whose house was one of the pleasantest in Edinburgh, and who declared, with charming candor, and in a broad Lowland accent, that she hoped her niceo would not "go south" single, but marry and set-tle within easy reach of Princes Street. Susan Price was a very pretty girl when I met her-at a scientific lecture, by-the-way, which gave me a high opinion of her intellect, and laid me open to surprise when I discovered the catholicity of her tastes, and her peculiar predilection for the fastest kind of dancing. Nay, I will be magnanfastest kind of dancing. Nay, I will be magnan-imous, and acknowledge that she is a very pretty girl still; though the dream is ended, the sleep-er is awakened; and I am—well, not exactly desolate, but certainly disconcerted. She had bright brown eyes, and bright brown hair, and a bright brown complexion, I think—but no doubt I ought to use some other word to de-scribe it—and her cheeks glowed with a rich color which looked like the very hue of health, and which the east wind itself could not either wither or harden into coarseness or blowsiness. She had a bright brown look about her altogether, and the whitest teeth—with such a milky, inno-cent whiteness, though; no suggestion of snap, snarl, or moral cannibalism about them—and the sauciest smile, to be perfectly modest, and becoming a well-bred little lady, I ever saw. I don't mean to say I fell in love with Susan Price, but I walked into love with her, intentionally and deliberately. She suited me exactly, according to all my theories. She was pretty and bright, and sweet enough for me, in my capacity of poet in taste and feeling, though not yet "valgarized in verse," as I have seen it beautifully expressed. in verse," as I have seen it desautining expressed.

She was clever enough to understand me perfectly without attempting any absurd equality; indeed, she was much too sensible for any thing of that sort, and recognized the grand truth that a brasband's place is that of Gaznaliel. She had quite an ardent taste for science, attended all the lectures which abounded just then with exemplary constraints. punctuality, and was so enthusiastic about the "pioneers of civilization," as she called my favorite travelers, that I began to think wheth mild exploration, in some not very dangerous region of the tropical zone, might not be a pos-sible method of adding color to a honey-moon trip. Susan Price was very energetic; I could not avoid seeing that; and, though it jarred upon me a little, I remembered that one energetic per-son in a household was rather an advantage, and that, at all events, when we were married, she that, at all events, when we were married, she would probably give up dancing.

I have said her name was her sele defect, but I seen ceased to mind it; indeed, I rather liked the idea of changing it for her, especially as I discovered one evening, while the "sides" were blundering through the invariably impracticable fourth figure of a quadrille, and looking foolish and miserable in the attempt, that she particularly admired my patronymic. I had been thinking about the proposal, and all the other formalities which must be encountered before I could call Susan my own, and "Miss Price" no could call Susan my own, and "Miss Price" no longer, and, though I flatter myself I am not a man who could possibly look or feel ridiculous under any circumstances, I confess I felt anxious that these preliminaries should be conducted with becoming dignity, and at the same time with a certain touch of originality befitting my poetical and refined temperament.

and refined temperament.

We had been talking of the new novels, and the names (and indeed the colors, for "red" was coming into fishion just then) of their heroines, and then of Highland and Scotch names in general.

"I like almost all the Macs," said Miss Price, in her decided lively way.

Then I explained to her the significance of the Mac and the O, so puzzling and meaningless to all but the Celtic ear. Her attention wandered, I thought, as I got farther into the mases of the clans and the tartans, and I recalled it by saying, abruptly:

We are rather proud of our name, Miss Price; do you like it? Time out of mind we have borne the same Christian names, and have always been Douglas and Murray Menteith.

"Murray Menteith," she repeated, softly-"Murray Menteith." I had never thought the name so musical, so refined; I had never liked it so much before. A swift, rosy blash spread itself over her face, and there was a look in her married,

CONTRACTOR DESCRIPTION

brown eyes I had never seen in them till then.
"I do indeed like it; I think it a beautiful name."
What happiness! What a delightful opportunity! What a capital suggestion! It might have been rather commonplace to ask her to ac-cept the name she admired had it come about any other way, but in this it was exquisitely opportune.

Ah yes, of course, it was always my luck! The "sides" left off their imbecile ospering, the music changed, and we had to begin the fifth figure, danced, too, in the deadly-lively style at present in vogne, in which one is debarred from the brief but delightful familiarity of the "galop use ories out designtful familiarity of the "galop round." When we were at liberty to stand still again Miss Price, whose fatal activity of mind made it horselys to all the standard activity of mind made it hopeless to attempt to renew a conversa-tion of which the thread had been broken, plunged into a discussion about the imperial quadrilles, and the value à deux temps, or "walts, ah, don't attempt it," as Douglas called it, not once, which might have been pardoned as a youthful indis-cretion, but every time he could drag the joke (!) into the conversation. That was my last dance with Susan that night; but I did not mind that much, because I knew I should see her the next day at a "literary tea," where I had promised to read some "selections" from the poets, and I thought, after brief reflection, that such an occasion would be even more suitable than the pres-ent. I did not even hand her down stairs, but I ent. I did not even hand her down stairs, but I followed in her wake, and as she tied the cords of her pretty scarlet cloak in the hall I saw the end of a piece of paper remarkably like an envelope protroding from what I believe I caght to call the tucker of her dress. This little discovery filled me with joy—security I can not say I needed—for I had copied for and sent to her in the afternoon some delightfully soothing lines on perpetual grief, which I had found in an old annual, and of course they formed the contents of the cuvelope thus prized and honcred.

I was not a little provoked to find, when I reached my chambers that night, an urgent let-

I was not a little provoked to find, when I reached my chambers that night, an urgent letter from Douglas, requesting me to go to Glentacket at once on business of importance. He did not mention its nature, but said he would send a gig—a horrid conveyance, which to my mind combines the utmost possible discomfort with the greatest possible risk—to meet me at mind combines the utmost possible discomfort with the greatest possible risk—to meet me at the nearest station at four o'clock on the following day. This was a pleasant arrangement, and there was no appeal from it, as he had been careful not to tell me what I was wanted for; and suppose there had been a death in the family, and I had not gone, nobody would believe I had not known it. No, I must go; duty said so, and natural enriosity echoed it; and so I made up my mind, sent an anology and an explanaand natural currously echood it; and so I made up my mind, sent an apology and an explanation to Miss Mac Murdo for my non-appearance at the literary tea, and started for Gientacket, where I found Douglas in his usual oppressively robust health and intolerably boisterous spirits, and my aunt and the girls as uninterestingly well as women who live in the country, dine early, have no pecuniary troubles, and nothing on their minds but tracts and bead-work, are accustomed to be. The business on which Douglas had sent me so inconsiderate a summons was the sale of a farm, which it appeared he could not effect without my concurrence. I am sure he might have taken it for granted; I neither know nor care any thing about business, so long as I get my rights; and to do Douglas justice, I am quite my regars; and so so Lougas justice, I am quite sure of getting them, in any matter in which he is equally concerned. The business had one recommendation: it was soon over; and I de-termined to return to Edinburgh on the next day but one, and had before me the delightful moments of meeting Miss Prince at a legislative. prospect of meeting Miss Price at a lecture on the latest developments of conchological science; an occasion upon which I thoughs it probable she might be sufficiently at leisure to regard me with interest and attention. With my poetical temperament I am naturally a great smoker, and I am also naturally fond of gazing upon the smoonlis heavens, free from the vulgarizing obstructions of domestic architecture. The indulgence of these tastes in combination, on the second evening of my stay at Gientacket (the first was wet, as usual), my stay at Gientacket (the first was wet, as usual), led to my strolling unsuspectingly along the terrace in front of the house, falling down a short flight of steps, one of Doug. s' horrid "in.provements"—really, his restless activity of mind in matters of no importance grows more and more offensive—and finding myself struggling in the mod of an artificial pool, with an inartistic and ineffective little fountain in the middle of it, assinst which I cut both my shins severely. against which I cut both my shins severely.

I caught a very had cold, I was much broised, and dead lame. Hence confinement to my bed for two days, to the house for a week, and also hence these presents, the plaint of a victim of circumstances and of a coincidence. Of course I thought incessantly of Susan Price and my de-ferred proposal; and of course I planned a num-ber of schemes for making it, when the time should come, duly effective and elegant. I pined to learn something of her during the lengthsome days of absence. Had she danced as much as days of absence. Had she danced as much as usual, while I was unable to move, except in a kind of hop at once painful and ungraceful? Perhaps to her also the hours had been "leaden-footed," and she had found no solace in society or science. Had she communed with her own heart and been still? had she read the verses and wept over them? had she, perchance, taken them to be my own composition? Delightful thought! for though I must needs undeceive her, the tender, woeful wailings of so pathetic a plaint would marvelously tend to attune her heart to all the softer emotions. I wearied for some news of her, and I almost cursed the inaction to which I was condemned, and the absurd process of wet-rag and oil-silk bandages, and weak-tea and dry-toest diet to which I was subjected. At length news of her came in a most pected manner—no other than a letter from her-self—which my sister Lucinda handed to me with a grave expression of curiosity becoming a young person of serious tendencies.

"Is that pink paper the fishion among world-lings, Murray?" she asked. (I suppose there's a particular kind of stationery for the "converted.") "Your correspondent writes rather a careless hand; and I can't say I admire the seal."

I did not know the hand (it was big and spluttering—as willful, wayward kind of acrib-bling—but characteristic, I thought afterward, and nice in its way), and I looked close at it and the seal. It bore a well-cut impression of a Cupid, in the customary full undress, carrying a lantern, his finger on his lip, and the legend was "Hush, hush!" I did not read the letter until Lucinds had left the room, which she did tossing her head with virtuous and pious indignation, her head with virtuous and pious indignation, and I have no doubt, entertaining the gravest suspicions of my correspondent. Imagine my feelings when the following lines met my enraptured game : "Parrons STREET, Tweedey,

"My DEARRST MURRAY, —As I have not yet heard your present address, and I can't put off writing to you on the chance of a letter which may not come for two or three days—it's well may not come for two or three days—it's went you explained that business engages you, Sir, or I wouldn't bear your silence patiently—I send this to Ss. Andrews, always, I suppose, a safe address. You will be savage when you hear that all our plans are knocked on the head; and now, after all your anxiety to get to Edinburgh, and all your impatience at the delay, you will not find our there. Perce hear written to Mes. not find me there. Papa has written to Mrs. S, to say I wast return to London at once, though Julia is not to be married for three weeks yet, because that horrid old unisance, Dr. Tuthill, is going up to London on Friday, and papa will going up to London on Friday, and papa with have me go with him, to prevent my traveling alone, or his having the trouble of coming for me; indeed, he couldn't do that because of business. Bother business! I hope—if we get through all our troubles well, and papa can be brought round to see that, as we love each other so devotedly, and are determined never to love any other person, he had better let us marry quietly—you will never have any business; I feel sure it is the greatest barrier to domestic happiness. However, I haven't time to write about that now. I must go, that's certain; and I only wish it were as certain that I shall come back; but that depends on many things; and I think it would be better for you to come up to London and have it out with pape at once. He will be softened by Julia's wedding; and I think will be softened by Julia's weading; and I think we may depend on mamma, when we tell her, to worry him. Of one thing, at least, you need never feel a doubt—I mean of my constancy. We may be parted by the rathless will of an inexorable parent, by our own remorseless destiny, by any thing short of death-but in vain; I shall ever remain your own

My own Susan! Enchanting, heavenly, delicious; but still puzzling. There was the letter directed to St. Andrews, and forwarded to me at Glentacket; there was the signature; there was the delightful assurance. My own Susan! But who was Julia? She must suppose me far more familiar with her family and their concerns than I really was; she must have intended to tell me several things and left her intention unfulfilled; and yet "My dearest Murray," and "Your own Susan," and the whole tone of the letter—the comfortably engaged tone, the perfectly enem-berrassed sentences? Had I proposed to her, and forgotten it? Had I preposed to her in a fit of somnambulism, or in a "spiritual trance?" I didn't believe in spiritualism, and openly scoffed at it-had the spirits taken this revenge upon It was dreadfully puzzling, and every moment's reflection decreased my first astonished pleasure. Where was the delightful embarrassment, where was the poetical emotion now? Really, Miss Price had wonderful quickness of comprehension, and Lad taken a hint with mar-velous celerity, for I could not distinctly remember having ever given her one. I was beginning to feel very uncomfortable indeed, when I happened to turn over the sheet of paper on which the letter was written, and then I saw a postscript scrawled on the other side. Remembering the proverbial value of such an addendum, I read it rather eagerly:

"I must spare a minute, darling, to tell you bow good I think you for not objecting to my dancing. I really am fond of it for its own sake, and I don't care a bit for my partner, whoever he may be. And then, I have always your last letter next my heart, which dances too, and I think of you all the time. There's a queer little man I meet almost every where, and I really like dancing with him. You'll laugh when I tell you why-because he has nice little feet, and never tears my dress; because he is so silly and romantic and conceited that he goes on talking forever about himself, and the books he reads, and the things he likes, so that one need scarcely talk at all, and I can think of you without being interrupted; and last, and most of all, because his name is-Murray Menteith.

An explanatory postscript with a vengeance! I pass over my feelings in silence. Poor girl! She had indeed chosen the wrong casket; but I could not aid her now. How happy, how intel-lectual, how refined a life might have been hers! I proceed to my actions. To write upon the lea-ter, "Opened by, but not for me, Murray Men-teith," to hand it to the postman, and abandon it to the dreary vicissitudes of official destiny, would have been the simplest course. To have inclosed it in an indignant letter to the misguided Susan, and sent a copy to her pape, warning him that the wife of his bosom was about to "worry" him, would have been the course adopted by ere volcar vindictiveness. I trust I am not vindictive; I know I am incapable of vulgarity.

with a grave expression of curiosity becoming a | Noblesse oblige, and I am confident that even the other Murray Menteich is a gentleman. I placed the lotter in a large envelope, I sealed it with the imposing armorial seal of the Meu-teiths, I addressed it to "Murray Menteith, Esq., St. Andrews. If absent, to await arrival." And I determined to forget Susan Price there and then, a resolution to which circumstances have not permitted me to adhere.

I have alluded to a "fatality. Can I do less when at least a dozen letters of congratulation addressed to the other Murray Monteith, on the occusion of his marriage with the misguided girl, reached me instead? Is it less a "fatality" that I am constantly railied on my state matrimonial; that people are always requesting an intro-duction to my wife; that I am subjected to con-stant expense and trouble in sending back par-cels that don't belong to me, and do belong to Miss Price's busband; and that I have good rea-con to believe much missing presents of miss is son to believe much missing property of mine is at this moment in their possession? Lastly, is it any thing less than a fatality that the scientific and literary world—the world of taste, sey world, in short—are always making extraordinary mis-takes, of which he invariably reaps the benefit, between my namesake and me?

HOME AND FOREIGN GOSSIP.

CLINTON, a remarkably pretty village in the town-Chiron, a remarkably pretty village in the town-ship of Kirkland, nine miles south of Utica, is per-vaded by that pleasant literary atmosphere which marks the seat of a popular educational institution. And now, at this season, when College Commence-ments are occurring in all parts of the country, Ham-liton College is a point of interest in many home cir-cies, and demands a share of public attention. This year Commencement at Hamilton takes place next week on Thursday, Jair 13, regions other exercises. week, on Thursday, July 15, various other exercises connected therewith occupying several previous days. The Senior Class, which numbers forty-one, bears a good reputation for echolarly ability, and one of its members is said to take a higher rank than any previone graduate.

The College buildings are situated on an eminence about a mile from the village—a location which af-fords the students abundance of exercise, as many of them board in the village. The Astronomical Observatory contains a valuable telescope and other instru-ments. Since 1841 eight asteroids have been there first discovered; and under the charge of Dr. Peters the enthusiasm of this department is well sustained.

Hon, William Cartis Noyes, of New York city, who died a few years ago, bequeathed his valuable Law li-brary, consisting of about five thousand volumes, to Hamilton College. Although it is to be regrested that so choice a collection of books should not have heen located in a more central place, where a greater number of professional men could have had access to jt, yet the Hamilton students are thus afforded unusji, yet the Hamilton stadents are thus afforded unusual advantages. A handscone Library building is now meanly completed, which will furnish a place for about sixty thousand volumes. The College grounds are spacious and tastefully laid out, a great variety of trees and shrube adding beauty to "College Hill," as it is called. A fine view of the village and of the city of Utica is obtained from this point.

In addition to Hamilton College, Clinton contains several library institutions of well-known ment.

several literary institutions of well-known merit. Houghton Female Seminary bears a good repute, as also the Clinton Liberal Institute, which has both a male and female department. About fifteen young girls form a select school, occupying the cory-look-ing Cottage Home Seminary; and the Roral High School, under the charge of Professor A. P. Kelsey, affects a pleasant home to boys, with careful train-ing and thorough preparation for college or for busi-tages. The seminary in the professional schools are supported to the con-tage of the seminary in the seminary in the careful training and thorough preparation for college or for busi-ness. Among the various literary societies, which exist in Clinion as in many other places, is one worthy of imitation. The "Irving Pamphlet Club," composed of about fifteen gentlemes, not only hold their regular meetings for social discussion, but sub-scribe for a large number of the best English and American periodicals, which are circulated among the members, thus giving to each, at comparatively little expense, a variety of valuable reading.

It is stated that a year ago Mr. David A. Wells was the author of what has proved to be a remarkable document. It was a carefully prepared estimate that the Government receipts for the year would be $226, 700,000, and the expenditures $256,300,000. It now turns out that the receipts have been, in round numbers, $560,000,000, and the expenditures $225,000,000. Such an exact estimate is wonderful.

A late writer on Woman Suffrage says that the reform proposed by the most progressive advocates of this movement is "an attempt to make trumpets out of flutes, and sun-flowers out of violets!"

The Prince of Wales has just laid the first stone of a new asylum for idiots. The Independent remarks "there is something rather appropriate about that performance P

At New Hampton, England, some houses, designed At New Hampton, England, some houses, designed for inborers, have been built in a novel style. Straw is compressed into slabs, soaked in a solution of fint, to render them fire-proof, both sides coated with a kind of census, and of these slabs the cottages are built. By ingenious contrivances the quantity of joiner's work is much reduced, and the chimney is so constructed as to secure warmth with the smallest consumption of fuel, and at the same time to heat a drying-closet. The cost of a single cottage of this de-scription, combining "all the requirements of health, decency, and comfort," is 486.

There are one hundred and thirty compositors em ployed to set the types of the London Times, sixty by day and seventy at night; while oleven foremen and assistants direct their movements. Twenty-four persons are required to read proofs, and three are em-ployed merely to "pull" the proofs.

An outside accompaniment of the Peace Jubilee was a baby-show. A reporter remarked: "On entering Tremont Temple you hear a sound as of the articulate 'aw-w-p! sw-p! ew-p!' repeated many times and all at once, interspecied with voices as of chuckling and laughter. That is only kissing the bables—three hondred, they say; and you may as well believe it, for you can't count that wriggling, multitudiscus mass of young bumanity. There are bables fat and bables slender; fair, rosy, dark, and actually apopletic in visage; plump and stout, and placid and driveling. There are twins, with projecting foreheads and very curly hair. There is the one-pound baby, done up in a dozen thicknesses of financi, and the forty-pounder, rampant and overflowing his low-necked dress in folds and ripples of too abundant flesh."

A painful catastrophe is recorded of a beautiful New York damsel, who had all the charms of maidenbood, excepting—she had black hair! Vanity and Nible's had taught her that blande would be more attractive had taught her that blonds would be more attractive— so the artist was engaged for one hundred dedine, half paid in advance. One side of the terbulent dark hair was smoothed into golden ripples, when the hair-drages. The effect was disastrons. Purple, and streak-ed, and gray, and burned, and, lodeed, atterly ruleons was the last half of the professor's work. There re-mained for the broken-hearted semi-blonds only the near consistion of sains for domarcs. poor consolation of suing for damages.

The following curious announcement lately appeared in a French paper: "M. Bernadotte, cousin to the King of Sweden, and dyer at Surewes, presents himself as an independent and liberal candidate in the eighth district. His dest meeting with his electors will take place at Combevoie, in the public house of M. Iturbide, who is heir to the Iturbide, sometime Emperor of Mexico."

The Atlanta (Georgia) University is now being erected upon one of the most commanding sites of the city. This institution will give the advantages of a thorough education to all classes without distinc-tion of race, color, or sex. A normal class of about forty promising pupils, gathered from various parts of the State, has already been formed.

An exchange remarks that many a man keeps him-self poor by indulging in two glasses of ale a day at ten cents each, seventy-three dollars; three eigner, one innedred and nine dollars and fifty cents; board for a big dog, thirty dollars; in all, two hundred and twoive dollars and fifty cents—sufficient to buy six harrols of flour, one barrel of sugar, one sack of coffee a good cut, a respectable down, a fook for coffee, a good cout, a respectable dress, a frock for the buby, and half a dozen pairs of shoes.

According to Chambers's Journal, Mesers Black-wood, the publishers, paid George Ellot (Mrs. Lewes) $12,000 for "Siles Marner," $20,000 for "The Mill on the Flose," and $25,000 for "Romola."

A somewhat inexperienced merchant in West Troy received a good-stool box from an expreseman. "What do them ere letters mean?" said he, pointing to the "C. O. D." on the corner. "Them means pay," exclaimed the emphatic expressman. "Them don't spell pay," rejoined the other. "You go along; this ere box is paid for, I know." "I tell you what," reere now in past for, I know." "I toll you what," re-turned the expressman, the bright thought abnest knocking him off the wagon seat, "them ere letters mean "Come Omniedlately Down," at which condu-elve suggestion the man paid for the box, and the happy expressman went back over the river with a new idea in his head.

An Illinois pener is edited by a certain Mr. Steele. A man bearing the same of Doolittle desired to go into partnership with him. The proposition was declised on the ground that the firm would read had-Steal and Do Little, or Do Little and Steal. What's

Many farmers are sadly puzzled to know what methods to adopt to keep the bugs from netton and encumber viace. The following preventive was re-cently communicated to the New York Farmers' Club by a gentleman of Forest Grove, New Jersey: "The safest and surest remedy is fresh charcoal, pulverined. Dust it on the hill when the seed is put in, and again when the plants come up. If washed off by rain repeat the operation. Plants thus treated are perfectly safe, and even when covered with bugs they will often disappear on the first application." Another remedy is to saturate corn-cobe with coal-tar, and place them in the hill, near the vine, but not touching it, and it is said the bugs will soon disappear.

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

George. "I was sorry to bear that you had broken your arm. I suppose it pained you awfully, dion't it?"

Passa (with much feeling). "It wasn't the pain, old fellow-ob no! It was being deprived of carrying my hands in my pockets which broke me down."

FEMININE TACT.

MARKA. "Sydney, I Insist not your eating that ploce of meat. You should not have asked for it if you did not want it."
Synters, "life so hig, ma."
Sussey, "But if you fold it up it won't look so big."

"Jim" has a precedious nephew, a lad just three years old. Playing with his kitten yeaterday, Miss kitten "got her back up" about something tkittens as well as folks often get their backs up, and sampered over the floor. Little rephers was delicitude, and saug out, "Leok, ran, kitten's got 'o Grotian bend!"

To THE WEATHER-WHY. - In a weather eye the same

RULES APPLICABLE TO BUSINESS MEN. Rule 1.—Get up late in the morning and ent a harty breakfast.

Rule 2.—Rush at once to the care to avoid extens

Rule 3.—Rush at once to the care to avoid extens of air and exercise.

Entle 2.—Wear a pair of tight boots.
Rule 4.—Eat pen-nuts, smake cigars, drink brandy or whisky between breakfast and dinner.

Rule 5.—Lanch at a restaurant on baker's bread, segry potences, and mince-pic.
Rule 6.—Bo all year business in a hurry.
Rule 7.—Eat a hearty disner at six o'clock of all sects of sudjectible compounds.

Rule 8.—Hotire late. Follow these directions, and it will be easy to be miserable.

A member of the Louisiana Legislature, who carries a pair of gigantic feet, which he silings about as he walks like a pair of finite, recently accessed a well-known member of the her with, "Mr. M.—, you know me, don't you?" M.—, surprised at the question, drew himself up at fall length, and ecanolog his interiocutor from head to foot, remarked, "Well, Sir, your face is a familiar one to me, but assuredly your feet have onigrown my recollection."

ANKLES.

ANKLES.

There's magic in a lady's foot,
And well the ladies know it:
And she who has a pretty one is pretty sure to show it.
At times you, too, are martyred by
The sicost little ankle,
That shouts an arrow through your eye,
Within your heart to rankle.

But when it trips along the street,
Through wind, and mind, and vapor,
By sheerest excident you see
How beautiful the taper;
And as it steps upon the walk,
Amid the crowd to mingle,
Two negatish cyes look up and say,
"I wonder if he's single."

Little Johnny was being catechised by his brother, who asked him what he was made of. Johnny re-plied, "You and me and pape are made of dast, and mamma and above are made of rock's with."

A poor old woman having been removed to the A peor old woman having been removed to the almo-boase was very importunate to have an article of household farmiture size had left behind. Her unceraing request was at length compiled with, and men were dispatched to transfer her household property to bet new shods. Imagine their surprise, or arriving at her former residence, when they found nothing but a cepta, which, however, they forthwith brought to the old woman, much to her joy and estimation, who pleasantly observed she found it very handy to keep her goests in!

Heinrich Heine sold: "How fortunate the Romana were that they had not to learn Latin grammar! Be-cause, if they had done so, they could never have found time to conquer the world."

An irregular apprentice, frequently keeping late bones, his master at length took occasion to apply some website arguments to convince him of the "cr-cor of his ways." Buring the chastisement the mas-ter exclaimed: "How long will you serve the death?" The boy regiled, whimpering: "You know best, Sir; I believe my indentures will be out in three months."

At a recent Subbath-school conert, in a suburban church, the ordinance of taptism was administered. The derayman in charge expressed gratification that the occasion offered him so good an opportunity to explain to the children the nature of the service. By way or abstraction, he said: "In Old Testament times blood was offered as ma atoming sacrifice; hence it was spoken of as a parieter; but what is used as an embens of parity towardays—what element conveys the idea of perfect cleanliness?" A moment's ellence, and then a dozen little voices squeaked out, "Soup!"

"Boys, what is all this noise in school?"
"It's fill! Siless indiating a becommive."
"Come up here, William: if you have turned into a locumotive, it is time you were switched of."

FROM GRAVE TO GAY.

FROM GRAVE TO GAY.

"Every man his own tombetone" would seem to be the motto of the ingenious Grenoble man mentioned in the following paragraph:

As add decreasy has just benchmade by a man of Grenoble, by which it is relocated that remotative and protection and will be supported as all the standard of an individual discharge is jumped with a fact threatest of an individual for the parameter of an individual for the parameter of an individual for the standard protection. The corn that is a thin-standard protection in the discrete. He corn that is a thin-standard protection of the parameter. He corn that is a thin-standard protection of the discrete. The corn that is a thin-standard protection of the first than in the standard protection of the standard protection of the standard protection. It is the three being a non-record account. In a standard protection of the standar

It will then be in any man's power to be the founda-tion of a noble house. We four, however, it will tempt some people, who have little toward respect for the living, to chisel their deceased relatives.

SPIRITUAL PHOTOGRAPHY.

Ingrumo Strutturist. "Do you ever take spirits

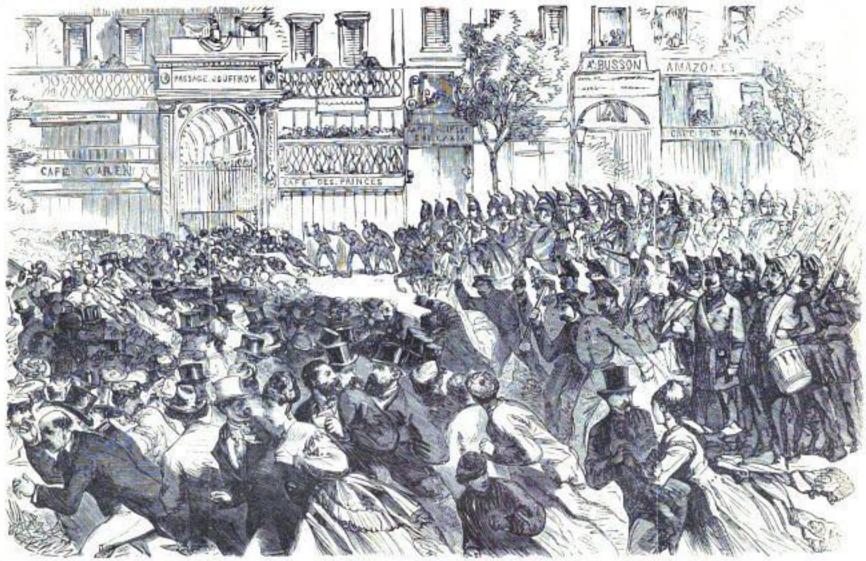

Ingresses of the second of the

"Hallo, Jake, where did you buy those fish?"
"I didn't buy 'em."
"Well, where did you get them?"
"I hooked them."

Digitized by Google

DISTURBANCES IN PARIS-CAVALRY CLEARING THE BOULEVARDS ON THE NIGHT OF JUNE 10.

THE DISTURBANCES IN PARIS.

The elections in France have been attended with unusual turbulence in Paris and in some other of the more populous cities. That is, there have been street riots, repeated for successive nights. The Government could not regard these disturbances as insignificant, following, as they have, a general election in which the Opposition has polled not far from half the votes of all adult Frenchmen. The Emperor, when be heard the result of the elections, is reported to have said: "Well, at last we are fare to face with the revolution, and I know how to deal with it!" Still there has really been no revolution.

To put down these disturbances the authorities of Paris employed the civil force until it was overtasked, when they gave it an impregnable military base, upon which the sergents de ville might re-treat in case of need, and whence they might is-sue, as a cloud of skirmishers, to effect arrests. The cavalry swept the people out of the most crowded of the boulerards and streets, but with-out using their weapons. The consequence was that every body who shrank from a fresh revolu-tion, but whose restless curiosity had impelled him to mingle with the multitude, took heart to encourage law and order by acclamations of loy-alty and active assistance. The culmosiers, as-they patrolled the streets, were greeted with choers: and tries of "Down with the rioters!" succeeded those of "Down with the Empire!" The Paris correspondent of the London Issilg News says that, had the seggents de ville allowed the natural effervescence resulting from the elec-tion to find vent in a few cries, all Paris would have gone quietly to bed by one o'clock. In-stead of this they continually charged the utterstead of this they continually charged the utterly inoffensive crowds on the Boalcourds, knockel over the people who were sitting outside the enfes, and showed no consideration for women and children. The Temps says that the courtyard in which its office and that of the Hopped and Frence are situated, having attracted a large number of persons, drawn there by a very natural curiosity, was suddenly invaded by a swarm of police agents, though the place was private property, and every body was turned out with extreme bratality. An old man was knocked down, it adds, by one of these "rioters in uniform," and narrowly escaped being crushed to death under the wheels of a cart.

"THE ARAB STORY-TELLER."-FROM A PAINTING BY J. E. HODGSON.-[SEE PAGE 462.]

The riots continued during the week com-

The riots continued during the week communing June 7. On the night of the 9th it is estimated that about 20,000 persons were assembled in the streets. Our illustration on page sention in the streets. For instraining the Boulevards on the night of the 10th. Five hundred arrests were made. Our late advices from Paris report the arrest of M. Hasat Rocancroux, of Lo Lesterae notoriety, and who has been most active in exciting popular turnols.

On the 11th order was so far restored that the Emperor and Empress drove in an open carriage along the entire length of the Borlevards without e-cert of any kind. So much may be accom-plished by force. But how long?

"THE ARAB STORY-TELLER."

It is needless to say that the art of more or It is needless to say that the art of more or less fictitious narrative is every where cultivated throughout the East, and among the allied nations of the northern sen-board of Africa. Even in Southern Italy and Spain the improvisatore may not unfrequently be heard declaiming to an excited andience. It is natural this should be so among people to the mass of whom literature and the newspaper are unknown. The wandering life of the Arab tribes, and the fervid Arabian faces, are emiscable conductor to success in the fancy, are eminently conducive to success in the art, and the "Thousand and One Nights" remains for all time as a splendid monument of the genius of Arabian fictitious narrative. From the reader's asquaintance with that exhaustless storehouse of favey he may readily imagine the kind of take which the Arab story-teller in our illustration on page 461 is relating with so much ani-mation, and with occasional emphasis of a tap on his tambourine or tom-tom. The subject of on his tambourine or tom-tom. The subject of this picture is derived from observations made by this picture is derived from observations made by Mr. Housewas during a residence last uinter in North Africa. The scene is laid outside the walls of Tangiers, and the distinctive costumes and strong individuality which characterize the different types of nationality represented in the circle of listeners testify to study "on the spot." Then the expressions are discriminated with opial nivety, arcenting to age and character. The nged sheik listens quite impussively; some of the sterner of the men of middle age also preserve their gravity, or are swayed seniously by the dounnie, possionate descriptions of the speaker; while others, more homorously dis-posed, smile at his assumption of sincerity or in anticipation of the sequel to the story. In like moment, some of the boys are enthralled or mystitied, while others laugh outright, as though deterting the fan of a farce.

DEATH, THE GATE OF LIFE.

Aur death's dark emblems suited for the grave or him who dwells in beaver's medended light? of him who dwiths in between medical sight?
For souls arrayed in robots of duzaling white.
Small blackest public and planes functed wasc?
Shall three desegoing with antimetry blight,
Torches retered intesed flame is quentied in night,
And columns challened our composition error.
For these whom Christ by death did fully some.
Who may take profess over each all the debt Who now, made perfect, serve, and in 11th eight. Drink of the fountain of supreme delight? Bear high the shaft, now life thereon engrave! Turn up the town, it never burnt so bright! A richer has and seent the Bly gives... Not till the Christian dies he fully lisced Nawsaw Hana

SOR PATROCINIO.

This strange woman, whose name has become famous, or rather infamous, over the civilized world, is now verging on seventy years of age. In very early youth Maria Raphaele Quiroga was admitted as a pensioner into the convent of Calcillaro de Granius in Madrid, the most dissolute of all those viie abudes. So detestable did this convent become in the eves of the Madrelatos that, in 1845, they demolished the building, the graves were opened, the corpses torn from their coffins, and the muss sent to another convent,

In November of the same year, 1835, proceedings were instituted against Senorita Quiniga, also was then for the first time brought to pubhe notice under the conventual name of Sor Pa-She was charged with found in pretending to perform miracles; and, stronge as it reads now of the devoted adherent of Isabella the ex-Queen, the judge who immediately con-menced the pro-secution demanded by the Government reported soon after, as the result of the preliminary examination, "that she had claimed have been taken out of her e-avent by the detil, who conducted her to the road leading to Aranjugz, and told her that Maria Christina was a ted woman in every respect, and that her daughter must not rule over Spain." The gist of the crime consisting in her assertion, in the name of God, that Isabella would never rule over

In the course of the trial other charges were brought against the nun. One, that she had wounded her own side and claimed that the wounds were supernaturally inflicted while kneeling at her prayers. The authorities commissioned two distinguished physicians to examine these singular wounds. They found, of course, that they had been caused by artificial means, and that as soon as these artificial means were removed the wounds healed speedily.

The Court found her guilty, and sentenced her to be removed, "with all due consideration to her colling and position," to another numery sit-unted "at least" forty leagues from the capital. After her removal from Madrid Sor Patrocinio devoted herself entirely to the cause of Don Car-los, and continued her fraudulent practices. Foolide and fanatical, like so many members of the Bourbon family, Dun Carlos attached more im-portance to the letters the non wrote to him, and to the advice which she gave him, than to the strategic plans of his Commander-in-chief, Zu-

But the Carlists were unsuccessful, and Sor Patrocinio passed over to the theocratic party at the Court of Isabella.

The nun was astute and far-sighted. She, with the assistance of the Bishop of Pampeluna, at-tached herself to the cause of Don Francisco, the aspirant and subsequently the successful can-didate for the hand of the young Queen Isabella. She persuaded the King that she could bring his mother out of purgatory to advise and guide him; indeed she presented to have herself made several trips to that uncomfortable place to bring word from his lamented parent. At one of the frequently recurring revolutions in the palace, Narvaez being in power, both King and nun were exiled; but they soon returned, when the latter obtained more influence than ever.

latter obtained more influence than ever.

Hitherto Sor Patrocinio had taken pains only to influence the King Consort, but henceforth she attached herself more closely to the Queen; and, emboldened by her success in frauds, she attempted higher flighta. She succeeded in causing the statue of Christ in St. Francis's Church to be covered with bloody sweat as a mark of His disapprobation of the policy pursued by Spain.
Such things had often been accomplished before.
But how can we account for the Overn carrying But how can we account for the Queen carrying ber faith so far in the supernatural powers of Sor l'atrocinio as to allow the designing nun to per-suade her to wear only such consista as Sor Pa-trocinio had already had on her body for twenty-

Sor l'atrocinio was still nominally a nun, but the over resided permanently in a cloister after the Queen's marriage. She came and went like any other untrammeled lady from Rome to Spain, and back from Spain to Rome. She de-fied the law that had united her forever from Madrid; in that city she always rode through the streets in a royal equipage drawn by four mules, two other carriages following it, and an escort of honor accompanying her. When she did reside at the Convent of St. Pascal, half a dozen carts, bearing the royal cost of arms, could be seen every Monday unloading at the cloister gute the meet expensive delicacies of Sprin and foreign countries. It was the weekly royal contribution to the nun's kitchen.

This nunnery of St. Pascal at Aranjuez is a large building without any pretensions to archi-tectural beauty. The ceils, originally intended for monks, and furnished in the plainest manner, had been transformed into elegant boudoirs for the prorégés of the Queen's favorite; and St. Pasent was the model for all the numeries which, by the expenditure of millions, she founded in Ibiefenso, Pardo, Son Lorenzo, and Into these choice retrents no novice could be admitted who had passed her sixteenth year; and it was observable that the patroness admitted none but very good-looking girls.

The figure of Nor Patrocinia is not very striking, but her features are not uninteresting. She has a large but shapely mouth, a powerful nose, and deep-seated but highly expressive intellectnd eyes. Her costume is similar to that of the nuns in the convents she instituted, consisting of a white tunic, surmounted by a cape, and fis-tened round the waist by means of the so-called serudin string, to which a rosary is attached. Another reserv adores the breast, and contains a medal made of gilt brass. The clock is blue and adorned with another medal, which is worn on white silken ground, on the shoulder. The head-dress is very large, with a long wil attached to it. Her feet are here, or only prosected by homen sandals. She resembles an apparation from past ages, with energy and fanaticism stamped on her face.

She accompanied Isabella to France, and is now engaged in introducing the beautiful feather flower-work into the convents of Paris and the neighborhood. As Sor Pattocinio is reported to be a great favorite of Pope Pies, it is not improbable that, some day, her death may add one more to the lengthy entalogue of Saiats in the Romish Church. Quica Sabe /

ORE FISHERIES OF SWEDEN.

Among the various industrial pursuits of Northern Europe none are more singular than the lake fisheries of Sweden that take place usually in Jamusey, or about mid-winter, and in which the fishers are miners and the fish a species of from ore known as leke ore. This mineral, which is held in great estimation in Sweden and Prussia, and extensively used in these countries in the arts, is the direct product of a small insert inhabiting various takes and water-courses of Sweden, but principally in the somb, or the Province of Smaland. deposited upon clay or sandy bottoms, in deep and still waters, either in the lakes or at the bend of rivers, where the water outside of the current is still or eddies slowly. Upon being re-moved it is quickly reproduced, and always upon the same bods, in layers, sometimes 650 feet long. It to 30 feet wide, and 8 to 10 inches deep. Its formation, which is as curious as the mode of gathering it is singular, was discovered but a few years ago by a Swedish naturalist, M. Spogreen, who has written a very interesting paper upon the subject. The waters of a lake near which the subject. The waters of a lake near which he was residing became very low, and he was enabled to follow with the eye the formation of a layer of ore that was thus exposed. The bed, or bettom of the lake, was indeed almost entirely dry, but there still remained depressions from six inches to a yard in diameter, filled with water, and awarming with the infusory producers of the iron, some of them visible to the naked eye, and others so small they could only be discovered with the aid of the microscope. All were busily at work inclosing themselves in metallic tombe, somewhat in the manner the caterpillar wraps at work inclosing themselves in metallic tombs, somewhat in the manner the caterpillar wraps himself up in his cocoon. The work appeared to be systematically performed as follows: The little insect designed the form of the metallic grain in which he was about to entomb himself in a not-work of fine black filaments, an open space being left in the centre for him to operate in. Then, from his position in the centre, he fastened rapidly to the filaments of the shell rays of a brownish color, closing them about him with a wonderful dexterity, until his work assumed the appearance of a freg's egg, except that the color was brown. These globules were formed with great rapidity, and thousands of them grew under the curious beholder's eye. If one of them, before it was completed, was taken in them, before it was completed, was taken in the hand with a little water, the insect could be seen working very distinctly; but if the water were shaken or drained slowly off, the partially formed grain fell down in a flat mass, in which were seen a few feeble movements, and then all was still and without life. These flat masses was still and without the. These hat masses are often found in the lakes in great abundance, and are called, from their shape, money ove. The globules, or grains of metal, are not all of the same size, but are proportioned to the insect, for whom they serve as tumbs. The fishery, or gathering of the metal, commences about the end of autumn, when the lakes in that country are already covered with ice from two to three inches thick. Then the fishers, choosing the spots upon the lake where the waters are supposed to be deepest, cut small holes in the ice, through which are passed long poles. With these the bottom is telt, and the ferruginous deposit discovered by the sound of the mineral as it is struck, or by the fragments brought to the sur-face. A layer of the ore having been discover-ed its limits are marked by means of branches and twigs stuck in the ice, and the space thus and twigs stack in the ice, and the space thus circumscribed by the fertanate discoverer becomes his own legal property, upon which no other can make researches until the end of winter. The different claims being staked out, all further operations are postponed until a few months later, when the ice becomes very thick and strong. Then the fishing commences in carnest. Each one seeks his claim, and begins by cutting a hole of about a yard in diameter in the ice, through which he passes to the bottom of the lake a large sieve attached to a pole cut long enough for the purpose: theu, with a large rake, be gathers into a heap immediately underneath him all the mineral he can reach. A smaller rake serves to fill the sieve, which is smaller rake serves to fill the sieve, which is then drawn to the surface with its load of lake ore mixed with sand and clay. This is washed in the water, which carries off through the meshes of the sieve all except the ore, which is then deposited upon the ice. Having gathered from the water all the mineral within the limits of his claim, the ore fisher, or miner, has nothing fur-ther to do than to fill his sacks and proceed to the nearest furnace, where he finds a ready sale for the product of his labors.

This singular tishery gives employment to great numbers of the inhabitants of the Province of Smaland, to whom it is quite profitable, as an expert hand can readily gather half a ton of the ore in a day. Children are early habituated to it, and great care is exercised in teaching them to discover as well as to gather the lake ore.

CURATIVE POWERS OF ANIMALS.

ONE William Ellis published a curious book ONE William Edits published a currous book in 1750, in which we find this charm for the cure of the king's evil: "A girl at Gaddesden, having the evil in her feet from her infancy, at eleven years old lost one of her toos by it, and was so had she could hardly walk. A heggar-woman coming to the door, and hearing of it, said, that if they would cut off the hind-leg, and the foreleg on the contrary side of that, of a toad, and she wear them in a silken bag about her neck, it would certainly cure her; but it was to be ob-served that, on the tond's losing its legs, it was to be turned loose abroad, and as it pined, wasted, and died, the distemper would likewise waste and die; which happened accordingly, for the girl was entirely cured by it, never having had the evil afterward."

In various parts of Scotland the following bar-barous expedient is even now had recourse to for children infected with worms: a quantity of the common garden-worm is collected and tied in a cloth bug, and then cruelly submitted to a painful and lingering death, by exposure to the in-fluence of a slow fire, by which they are gradu-ally reasted slive. Their decomposed remains are then applied, as a salve, to the stomach of

A child was suffering from thrush, when its nurse, a Yorkshire woman, procuring a frog, held it for a time to the mouth of the child, that the creature might imbibe the silment, and leave its own bealth in exchange. The same practitioner had herself occasional attacks of cramp, in anticipation of which she kept a supply of spiders in a pill-box, swallowing one whenever she was threatened with the suffering. When the hoop-ing-cough attacked the children of whom she was in charge, she feasted them on roast hedgehog, imposing it on them as a tender rabbit. She also borrowed a piebald horse; and having had also borrowed a pickeld horse; and having had it brought into the yard, carried each of the afficied children out in succession, wrapped in a blanket, and passed them thrice under the animal's belly. These attempts being unsuccessful, each child was condemned to wear a hairy enterpillar in a bag round its neck.

In Lancashire, and some of the adjoining counies, the following practice is prevalent for curing warts: steal a piece of meat from a batcher's shop or from his tray, and after having well rubbed the parts affected with the purloned meat, bory it under a gateway or in any secluded rubbed the parts affected with the partoned mest, bury it under a gateway or in any secluded spot. If this be done so secretly as to escape detection, as the meat decays, so will the warts disappear. In order to get rid of a "sty on the eye," it is customary for the sufferer, on the first might of the new moon, to procure the tail of a black cas, and after pulling from it one hair, reb

The right fore-foot of a hare worn constantly in the pocket is deemed an excellent amulet against "the rheuman." A very common charm resorted to for the cure of that painful disorder the cramp consists in wearing about the person the patella of a sheep or lamb, popularly known as the "cramp-bone." It is to be worn as near the skin as possible, and at night it must be laid under the pillow.

In Germany the tongue of the capercalle is considered by many an excellent preservative against the pains of dentition. Sewn up in a lit-tic beg, it is hung round the infant's neck. Among the Swiss it was generally believed that a few drops of the blood of the steinbock, poured a few drops of the blood of the steinbock, poured into a glass of wine and taken before going to bed, produced immediately a violent perspiration, and cured all sorts of diseases. The very hall with which he was shot had its use; for water into which it was dipped acquired valuable medicinal properties. The genu-bell, a sort of besoar or morbid secretion, sometimes found in the stomach of this animal, was used as a medicine. It used to sell for its weight in gold.

The horn of the stag was long supposed to possess great medicinal virtues, especially the right or off horn, which, it was said, was rarely found, and consequently was the more highly right or off horn, which, it was said, was rarely found, and consequently was the more highly prised. Michael Drayton, in a note to his description of a stag-hunt, says that "the hart weepeth at his dying; his tears are held to be precious in medicine." Deer-horns, when in the "velvet," are eagerly bought by the Chinese, being esteemed a valuable medicament.

Among the Turkomans the horns and hoofs of the goat are burned to ashes, and are then employed for the galled places on camels. The blood of a goat was once thought a sovereign remedy for the stone. The goat was fed with "saxifragous herbs, and such as were conceived of power to break the stone." The blood of a goat, when fresh and warm, had the property, it was supposed, of making soft the diamond, the was supposed, of making soft the diamond, the hardest of all stones. The gall of a bear is val-wed by the Chinese at its weight in gold.

FIGHTING CRICKETS.

CRICKETS are extremely savage, particularly so in the hotter countries; they frequently attack and kill each other. Indeed, this pugnacious disposition is so well known in China that a larger sort is often exposed for sale in the markets, each in its separate enge, just as game fords among the Malays. The Chinese bet very large sums upon the issue of the battle, and many have gambled their feetunes away upon the fights hetween the rival champions, some of the crickets attaining as much fame as bull-dogs or terriers in England. The crickets are placed in a sort of miniature rat-pit, with their respective backers; and the excitement when the contest is long and severe grows to the highest pitch. The owners or trainers excite their crickets with a little stick, though they scarcely need it, for as soon as they catch sight of each other they are ready for the fray—advancing, attacking, and biting their adversary, the noise of their jaws and claws being distinctly heard. Sometimes one of these insects has been known to kill vast numbers of enemies, and bring large fortunes to its owners. They are easily tamed, an .. grow to a large size.

HONG-KONG.

Turn small island, only nine miles in length by eight miles in breadth, which was inhabited by a few Chinese fishermen and smugglers when taken possession of by the British, in 1841, has grown in the lapse of a quarter of a century to be a place of great importance. The popula-tion in 1868 was 115,000, of which 29,459 were ar this is exc a military one naval forces, but inclusive of 2113 European and American civil residents. Imports for 1866 were $273,065,000; and the exports $162,961,475, exclusive of treasure. The foreign trade with China in the same year was $470,000,000, and of that trade the share of Great Britain amountable $257,500,000. ed to $357,500,000.

LIGHT IN DARKNESS.

THERE has hardly ever been such an instance of important results following from the investigation of minute and apparently unimportant phenomena as Frannhofer's lines afford. Who would have thought that the fact of there being some dark lines across a ray of light, when dis-persed by the prism, should be the means of dis-covering the constitution of the stellar bodies, and should have proved with almost certainty that Strine has a proper motion of its own to the extent of one hundred and forty millions of miles in the tourse of a year? Doubtless the material world is crowded with minute phenomena involv-ing similar great results, which phenomena we pass by with unregarding eyes every day of our lives. How Lord Research lives. How Lord Bacon would have rejoiced to see such a grand result as that above alluded to, of which the basis was the observation and recording of this minute phenomenon by the Ger-

FACTS FOR THE LADIES.

I mave used my Where & Wilson Sewing Machine eleven years for all sorts of family sewing, from the very coarsest—even carpethinding—to the finest worn by women, and requiring No. 300 coston. It gives me still entire tion, and I can not too highly recommend it to others as a family comfort. Solely from my appreciation of your machine above all others, I have been the means of selling more than a hundred of them. Mas. C. SLAUGHTER. a hundred of them. Dover, Del.

PURE AND LUSTROUS AS WHITE SATIN

Are the teeth to which Sozonosv is daily applied. And no wonder—for the Quilloy Sapo-noria, or Bark of the Chilian Soap-Tree, which is one of its components, is used in South Ameries for removing spots from white silks without injuring the fabric. Of all preservatives and an-tiseptics it is, according to the famous French botanists and chemists, Fleury and Chalard, the most potent and the most harmless.

To remove Morn Parcens, Francis, and Tay from the fice, use Print's Moru and Princip Lovice. Prepared only by Dr. B. C. Printy, 49 Bond St., N. Y. Sold by all Druggists.—(Coss.)

Dyspareta Tascars core Indigestion, Heartburn, and Sour Stomach. Pifty Cents per Box. Mailed for Stc. Sold by druggists. S. G. Walleys, 571 Broadway.

Our readers can obtain a for-simile Gold Watch, $15 to $15 each, at 29 Nassau Street, N. T.—(Ore.)

ADVERTISEMENTS.

"Examine Yourself!"

Learn what are your capabilities, what pursuit in life to follow, and "what pow can do beet," also, "when and whom to marry," by reading the new Book entitled "HOW TO READ CHARACTER," a "self-examiner," containing 170 engravings, and a Chart for recording the sizes of all the organs of the brain. Price $1 St. Bookrellers and Newsmen have E. Sent first post by S. R. WELLS, 359 Broadway, N. Y.

A SPI, ENDED PRIKE, The FOURTH OF A JULY PICKIC, by Lilly M. Spencer, engraved on steel in line and schools, at a cost of over seven thousand dollars; size 25 by 25 inches. The most artistic large engraving ever done in Assertes. To be given as a pressum to each subscriber to Dasconser's Mourant, Managuet, Yeely sobscription only 25, Address Description Mourant, No. 398 Erosdway, N. Y.

CATARRH

Bad, losthsome disease. One third of the people suffer from Catarrh until Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, and Communicion bring them to the grave. Physicians do not understand the complaint, nor can they care it; but WOLCOTT'S ANNIHILATOR, in plat bottles, cradicates this filter complaint from the constitution. Sold at all Drug Stores, or six pluts sent free of express charges on receipt of $6, or one plut of WOLCOTT'S PAIN PAINT, for Pain or Lameness. Address R. L. WOLCOTT, 181 Chatham Square, N. Y.

THE CELEBRATED GENUINE OROTHE GOLD WATCH CO., Geneva, Switzerland,

Geneva, Switzerland,

Manufacture Watches with the ulmost precision. They have all the hellinery, durability,
and appearance of the most rare and costly description of geomite Goue Boreiro-Cass Watches. Antiread Confuctors, Espisarre, Expressmen, the most exacting of our customera, have theiroughly demonstasted the strength, durability, accuracy, and utility of the
FAC-SIMILE WALTHAM
WATCHES, and pronounced them invaluable as reliable Time-Kacpers, Ladies' and Geotiemen's Fine Swiss Movements, $12 and $15. Magnificent Full-Jeweied Patent Lavers-Fac-Simile Walthams
-$2.0. Chronometer Balance,
$2.8. Each Watch warranted to be in perfect running order, and to retain the color of 18carat Geld. Latiest Styles of Chains, $2 to $1 each. Sent by supress every where. Control

carat Geld. Latest Styles of Chains, 20 to 21 each. Bent by express every where. Custom-press, who will exhibit Watch, 2c., previous to payment of the bill, on receipt of charges only. Orders must be accompanied with satisfactory reference from the Express Agent.

If you want the Genuine Oreide Gold Watcher, he sure and order of our only office in the United Statest. To Club, ordering t Watches, we will send one eating, few of charge.—JOHN FOGGAN, President Geolde Gold Watch Ca., No. 79 NASSAU STREET, N. Y.
THE CELEBRATED METAL WATCH. ONLY THE CELEBRATED METAL WATCH, $10.—BEST IN THE MARKET.

BOOSEY'S MUSICAL CARINET. A Complete Li-brary of Modern Music for Voice and Plano-forts: Diray of Modern Rame for Young and Passioner.

Converse Valers, complete.

Storyware Bastroner and Bast Sonos.

Storyware 40 Oniginal Walters.

Storyware 40 Oniginal Walters.

Storyware Overse For Plans, each.

Storyware Overse For Plans, each.

Storyware Storyware Cavalogues Pass. BOOSET & CO., 644 Broadway, N. Y.

SUPERIOR HOME EDUCATION Near London (England). For Prospectus, apply to No. 45 South Washington Square, New York.

$3000 Salary. { v.s. mano co., n. v.

FOR BOSTON

PALL RIVER, DIRECT. THE WORLD-RENOWNED STEAMERS

BRISTOL and PROVIDENCE, COMMANDER BRAYTON, COMMANDER SIMMONS, WILL LEAVE (Alternate Days) DAILY, FROM PIER—30—NOETH RIVER, (Fost of Chambers Street), —AX 5 P.M.—

DODWORTH'S CELEBRATED OBCHESTRA, including brass, string, and reed bands, will be attach-ed to each steamer on its passage.

Grand Promenade Concert THIS IS THE ONLY LINE RUNNING A SUNDAY NIGHT BOAT.

PROVIDENCE Passengers by the above steamers will leave Fall River at 500 A.M., ARRIV-ING at 6:50 A.M. RETURNING will leave Providence at 5 P.M. making direct connection with the boot, and allowing a good night's rest on board each way.

FOR THE BETTER ACCOMMODATION OF THE PUBLIC,

THE SPLENDID STEAMERS, NEWPORT and OLD COLONY

COMMANDER LEWIS, COMMANDER MILLER,
WILL LEAVE (Alternate Days) DAILY,
(Sundays excepted),
FROM PIER—28—NORTH RIVER,
(Foot of Harray Street),
—AT 8:30 P.M.,

BOSTON via NEWPORT.

FREIGHT received at Pier 30 up to 5 P.M., and at Pier 28 up to 6:00 P.M., each evening. JAMES PISK, Jr., President,

M. R. SIMONS, Managing Director, CHAS, H. VAILE, General Passenger Agent, H. B. MANGAM, Pedgid Agent, NARRADANEATY STRAMMER COMPANY.

CYPRESS HILLS CEMETERY. OFFICE, No. 124 BOWERY, N. Y., (Corner of Grand Street).

OPPICERS:
EDMUND DRIGGS, President,
A. S. JARVIS, Vice-President.
WILLIAM MILES, Treasurer.
WILLIAM EDWARDS, Secretary. HERVEY G. LAW, WM. J. PEASE, JOHN L VAN ALST, ALPRED M. WOOD, Trustees. N. G. PALMER, Sup't and Surveyor.

THE CELEBRATED

STERLING

SIX CORD, SOPT PINISH

Spool Cotton.

EQUAL, IF NOT SUPERIOR, TO ANY KNOWN THREAD. WELL ADAPTED TO

HAND AND SEWING MACHINE WORK. A. T. Stewart & Co.,

NEW YORK, Sole Agents for the United States.

PIANOS and ORGANS.

Prices greatly reduced for Cash. New Seven-Octave Pianos, of first-class makers, for $575 and upward. New Cabinet Organs for $45 and upward. Second-hand Pianos, Melodeons, and Organs from $48 to $175, at 461 Erosdway, N. Y. HORACE WATERS.

TO AGENTS.

L OSSING'S PICTORIAL PRILD-BOOK OF THE LOWAR OF 1872 is new ready for delivery to Agents. Price in Cloth, $7 00; Pull Roan, $9 00; Half Calf, $10 00. HARPEN & BROTHERS.

PARLOR STEAM ENGINE: made entire-ly of Metal; Boiler and Furnoce complete: will work for hours if supplied with water, &c.; free from danger; a child can week it. Sent free, with instruc-tions, for $1.00; three for $5.00. Address WALTER BOLT, No. 109 Nassau Street, New York.

$10 PER DAY GUARANTEED

Agents to sell the Howe Service Sawres Macrime. It makes the took syrice, antice on sorn situa, has the under-feed, and is equal in every respect to any Sewing Machine ever invented. Price $55. Warranted for 5 years. Send for circular. Address Jourses, Clark, & Co., Boston, Mass., Pittsburgh, Pa., or St. Louis, Mo.

$15.

IMPROVED ALUMINIUM BRONZE | HUNTING-CASED WATCHES.

The Improved Aluminium Become is a metal differing outerly from any ever offered to the public. He qualities and resemblance to Gold are when the twen judges have been deceived. It has seriously occupied the attention of scientific men, and has not only called furth the catograms of the peculiar properties, but has also obtained a Gold Medal at the Parts Exposition.

The movements are well finished to warrant them as excellent time-keepers.

Phose won $36 to $27.

Further decisis will be found in my pamphlet, which will be sent, postpaid, on demand.

Goods sent by Express, C. O. D., with charges.

Address JULES B. HUGUENIN VUILLEMIN, No. 44 Nassan Street, New York.

This is acknowledged to be the best saw and in more general see than any other in the United Status. For Sale by all first-class Hardware Dealers. Made by the LEVINGSTON HANDFACTURING CO., OF BEKKMAN ST., N. Y.

$20 A DAY to Male and Female

Agents to introduce the BUCK RYE 220 SHUTTLE SEWING MACHINES. Sitch alike on both rides, and is the only LICENSED SHUTTLE MACHINE in the market sold for less than $40. All others are infringements, and the seller and user are liable to prosecution and imprisonment. Full particulars free.

Address W. A. HENDERSON & CO., Cleveland, Ohio.

Savage's Ursina, PURE GREASE of the CANADA BEAR.

Seperior to every other Pomade for softening, giving a brilliant gloss, and increasing the growth of the Hele. Evans, Merces, & Co. (Lave Lamplovos & Cant-sold), Montreal, Proprietors, AND SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

Musket SHOT-GUNS, warranted to shoot close and kill at 60 yards. Price, $2.50. Warran.—Army Guns and Revolvers. Send stamp for price-list of Bildes, Shoot-Guns, Beroldwars, to JOHNSTON'S GUN WORKS, PRESSURE, Pr.

DO YOUR OWN PRINTING. Cheapest and Best Portable Presses.

MEN AND BOYS MAKING MONEY. Price of Presses, 25, 212, 210. Offices, 315, 220, 230. Send for a circular to LOWE PRESS CO., 15 Spring Lane, Boston, Mass.

CURL YOUR HAIR!

A SAMPLE of PROFESSOR ROBE'S MAGNETIC CURLIQUE seat PREE. It corts straight hair (without injury) in soft, lexuriant, beautital, flowing curis, or the first application. Address, with Start, PROF. B. H. ROBB, PARAMAN, Ouro.

DEAFNESS, CATARRH, SCROPULA.

A lady who had suffered for years from Deafness,
Catarrh, and Scrofnia, was cured by a simple remedy.
Her sympathy and gratitude prompts har to send the receipts free of charge to any one similarly afflicted.
Address Mas. M. C. LEGGETT, Hobeken, N. J.

VELOCIPEDIOLOGY—The Tale of a Proved-er. A curious book for inquisitive people. 400 pages, elegantly bound in cloth and gilt. Sew your buttons on fast before sending for the book, enclosing postage stamp and address to the publisher. T. W. EVANS & CO., 41 Sc. Eighth St., Philadelphia.

Agents! Read This!

WE WILL PAY AGENTS A SALARY of $30 per week and espenses, or allow a large commission, to self our new and wonderful inven-tions. Address M. WAGNER & CO., Marshall, Mich.

Hellowey's Ofnice of and Polls are the mother's true friends. Measles, so bital to children if improperly managed, can be controlled by these excellent internal and external remedies. Sold by respectable druggists.

$15 A DAY, Samples Free, Address, with stamp, RAND & CO., Biddeford, Me.

$3500 Per Year to sell " Wonder of the World." Address J. C. Taxon, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Removed to 335 Broadway. THE COLLINS

WATCH FACTORY. The Collins Metal and Jewelry Pactory has re-moved from 27 Nassau Street to their spiendid New Offices,

No. 335 BROADWAY.

These superior Watches have now been in use over three years, and give universal satisfaction; and although sold at so mederate a price, are not surpassed in appearance and for time by gold one costing $150 and $200. They have been greatly improved, but the price remotes the same, $55. Those of extra fine fluish, $26. Gents' and Ladias' since. Jewelry of the richest styles, in every respect egual to the finest gold, at one-lenth the price. We have but

ONE OFFICE, NO AGENTS,

and are not responsible for the bogus and worth-less goods sold at them lewely establishments. Our Factory is the ONLY PLACE where the Gen-uine Collins Metal Watches and Jowelry can be

C. E. COLLINS & CO.,

No. 335 Broadway, car. Worth Storet.

Fresh Summer Books

PERSONAL BOOKS OF

HARPER & BINTHERS, NEW YORK.

Sent by Heil, postage preparid, to any part of the Unided States, on record of the price.

PANOUS LONDON MERCHANTS. A Book for Boys. By H. R. Fox Bouxes. Hinstrated. 16mm, Cloth, 21 96.

RHETORIC: a Text-Book, designed for Use in Schools and Colleges, and for Private Study. By Rev. E. O. Ravre, D.D., Li. B., President of the Northwestern University, Byzanton. 1230, Clot.

SIGHTS AND SENSATIONS IN FRANCE, GER-MANY, AND SWITZERLAND: Or, Experiences of an American Journalist is Europe. By Eswan Godle Breful. 12nn, Cloth, §2 54.

FIVE ACRES TOO BUCIF. A Tratible Election of the Attractions of the Country, and a Careful Consideration of the Question of Frost and Lorent as involved in American Ferning, with much Valerable Advice and Instruction to those about Purchasing Large or Small Phrons in the Rural Districts. By Bosener B. Rossevent. With Characteristic Electrations. 12mo, Cloth, §2 50.

THREE SEASONS IN EUROPEAN VINEYARDS. Treating of Vine-Culture; Vine Disease and its Care; Wine-Making and Wines, Red and White; Wine-Diricking as affecting fiscally and Morals. By Wine-Linking as affecting fiscally and Morals. By Wineless J. France. 12ms, Cloth, §5 56.

THE STUDENT'S SCRIPTURE RISTORY. The Old Testament History. From the Creation to the Hotor of the Jowe from Captivity. Edited by Wullians Sarra, L.J. D. With Maps and Woodcats. Largo 18mo, Cloth, $2.00. Uniform with The Student's New Testament History.

THE WEDDING DAY IN ALL AGES AND COUNTRIES. By Edward J. Wood, 17mo, Cloth, 83 25.

THE MALAY ARCHIPELAGO: The Land of the Orning-Utim and the Bird of Paradise. A Narra-live of Travel, with Studies of Man and Nantre. By Attrace Busine, Wattace, Author of "Travels on the Assasson and Rio Negro," "Pales Trees of the Assasson, "&c. With Teo Maps and Fifty-one vicegant Blustrations. Crowd Sec. Cloth, $2.50.

FISHING JN AMERICAN WATERS. By GENO C. SOFT. With 170 Hinstrations. Crown Syc, Civile, $0.00.

KLEMENTS OF ANTRONOMY. Designed for Academies and High Schools. By Essas Leonas, LL.D., Professor of Natural Philosophy and Astronomy in Yale Cellings, and Author of a "Course of Mathematics." 19mo, Succep, $150.

HARPER'S HAND BOOK FOR TRAVELLERS
IN EUROPE AND THE EAST. Being a Golde through France, Belgium, Holland, Germany, Ametria, Italy, Egypt, Syria, Turkey, Greece, Switzer, land, Twick, Roselia, Denmark, Sweden, Spatia, and Great Britishs and Ireland. With a Railmad Map corrected up to 1868. Ey W. Passasoux Physicia, Havised Edition: Seventh Year, Large 12mo, Leathcr, Porket-Book Form, $7 90.

HARPER'S PHRASE-BOOK; or, Hand-Book of Travel Talk for Travellers and Schools. Being a Gable to Conversations is Rights, French, German, and Italian, on a New and Improved Method. In-tended to accompany "Harper's Hand-Book for Travellers." By W. Pannous Faranson. Archivel by Professors of Heidelberg University. With con-cise and explicit Rules for the Promudation of the different Languages. Square 16mo, Flexibio Cloth, $1.50.

The New Novels

PERLIMINE BY

HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK.

MY DAUGHTER ELINOR. A Novel of American Society. Svo, Paper, $1 in.

CORD AND CREESE. By the Anthor of "The Bodge Clab." Blustrated, two, Paper, 15 cents.

ANTHONY TROLLOPE'S LAST NOVELS: PHINEAS FINN, the Irish Member. Himtrated by Millais. Svo, Paper, $1.35; Cloth, $1.75. HE ENEW HE WAS RIGHT. Complete. With 64 Distractions by Marcus Stone. Svo, Paper, $1.90; Cloth, $1.56. Part H., separately, Paper, 50 cents.

STREPTON. A Novel. By Hexay Kinesery, Author of "Herry," "Geoffrey Hamlyn," "Ravenshoe," Ac., &c. 800, Paper, 40 cents.

THE SACRISTAN'S HOUSEBOLD. A Story of Lippe-Demoid. By the Author of "Mabel's Freq-rese," &c. With Illustrations by C. G. Bush. Svo, Paper, 75 cents.

THACKERAY'S NOVELS:

Now Edition, beautifully printed, with the Author's own Illustrations.

VANITY FAIR. Illustrated. 8vo, Paper, 50 cents. THE VERGINIANS. 150 Engravings. Sec. 75 cont-THE NEWCOMES, 162 Engravings, 6vo. 75 cen.

THE ADVENTURES OF PHILIP ON HIS WA.
THROUGH THE WORLD, Showing who Holde-him, who Helped him, and who Passed him by.
With Fortrait of Author and 64 Hinstrations. See, Paper, 75 cents.

EN HARREN & BROTHERS will fame immediately. New Editions of Thurburgy's other Antels, Husbrated

CHARLES READE'S NOVELS:

HARD CASH. Blustrated. 8vo, Paper, 35 ccuts. GRIFFITH GAUNT; or, Jealousy. Illustrated, IT IS NEVER TOO LATE TO MEND. Sec, Pa-

23" To be followed by Charles Strade's other Nords.

THE DODGE CLUB; or, Italy in 1888. By January De Manas, Author of "Cord and Creese," &c. With One Buckred Elizatrations. Svo, Paper, 75 couts.

FOR HER SAKE. By Farmence W. Reunserv, Author of "Carry's Confession," "Poor Humanity," &c. With 30 Ulustrations, Svu, Paper, 25 cents.

BREAKING A BUTTERFLY: or, Blazebe Ellershe's Ending. By the Author of "Guy Livingstone," &c. Illustrated. Svo, Paper, 25 ccots.

THAT BOY OF NORCOTTS. By Cuas. Level. With Illustrations. Swo, Paper, 55 cents. IF Harren & Becomma will send any of the above books by mail, postere from to any part of the Parties States, on receipt of the price.

E selves S. M. SPINCEM & CO., Smiles of FALSE ALARM, SURELY!

Miss Jenema (with the Ihoy). "Yes, it's the worst of these Watering-Places. There are so many Adventurers on the look-out for Wives that one is always in fear of being proposed to!"

The Reason why Every One can obtain a Haines Piano:

The price will come within the mirans of all classes, as they make several sizes and styles to suit all classes. Constantly on hand l'innes at very reasonable rates, all of which contain all the modern improvements, and are warranted for seven years.

Processed, and are warranted for seven years. Suffigiration generated.

For further proof of the popularity of these Pianes, see Revenue Returns for Year ending April 1st, 1802, in which HAINES HERFN sold 1135 Pianes in one year alone shows the partiality shown these favorite Pianes. Catalogues sent on application to

Or to Serre & Nanos, Chicago, Ills.; H. N. Hamperran, Milwankee, Mich.; Louis Thier, Louisville, Ky. J. A. McClerke, Nichville, Tem.; Kewcart. Bros., St. Louis, Mo.; J. H. Jackson, Sandusky, Ohlo: J. E. Goran, Philadelphin, Pa.; Hea. C. Riebr, R. Historian, Chicago, E. Sono, Albany and Troy, N. Y.; J. Y. Hammor, Rhinebeck, N. Y.; J. H. Historian, Rhinebeck, N. Y.; J. H. Historian, Rhinebeck, N. Y.; Whitz, Shith, & Perky, Boston, Mass.; Mayrinas Guay, San Francisco, Cal.

TO SPORTSMEN!

MERWIN & HULBERT, applied.) 285 Broadway, N.Y. Circulars supplie

A, 1.—The Fragrant Hair Renewer.

BARRY'S TRICOP/DEROUS I most highly recommend as the most exquisite Hair Restorer I have ever used.

No. Journ Structure, St. Chard Botel, 42d St., N. Y.

The Best Soap in use-NOME DETTER IMPORTED. $2000 A YEAR AND EXPENSES Sewing Machine. Stitch alike on both vides, Samples on two weeks' trial. Extra inducements of experienced agents. For further particulars, address the WILSON SEWING MACHINE CO., Cleveland, Ohio: Bostos, Mass., or St. Louis. Mo.

Do not Hasp the Conting of the Intes-tines with irritating eatherties. The most southing, cooling, and halosmic breative known is Tanaavi's scarres Areauser. It carries of every obstruction without chafing the tender intestinal membrane in the dichiest descree.

SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

If you wish to obtain a Genuine Waltham Watch, at the lowest possible price and without any risk whatever, send for our descriptive Price List, which explains the differ-ent kinds, gives weight and quality of the Cases, with prices of each. Silver Hunting Watches, $18. Gold Hunting Watches, $70.

Every Watch warranted by special cer-tificate. Single Watches sent by Express to any part of the country with the privilege to open the package and examine the Watch before paying. Send for a Price List, and please state in what Paper you saw this notice. Address, in full, HOWARD & CO., Jewelers and Silrersmiths, No. 619 Broadway, N. V.

This Troiting Balt stands unequaled for catching Pike, Pickerel, Bass, &c. It is far superior to any single spoon ever invented. Price 15c. each. JOHN IL MANN, Syracuse, N. Y.

HARPER'S HAND-BOOK OF FOREIGN TRAVEL.

HARPER'S HAND-BOOK FOR TRAVELLERS IN EUBOPE AND THE EAST, Being a Guide through France, Belgium, Bolland, Germany, Aus-tria, Italy, Egypt, Syria, Tuckey, Greece, Switzerland, Tyrol, Rissia, Denmark, Sweden, Spain, and Great Britain and Ireland. With a Railroad Map corrected up to 1868. By W. Prainton Fatamer. Revierd Edition: Seventh Year. Large Hmo, Leuther, Pocket-Book Perm, $7 50.

HARPER'S PHRASE-BOOK.

HARPER'S PHRASE-BOOK; or, Hand-Book of Travel Talk for Travellers and Schools. Being a Guide to Conversations in English, French, German, and Italian, on a new sad Improved Method. Intended to accompany "Harper's Hand-Book for Travellere." By W. Piesnour Friedric. Assisted by Professors of Heidelberg University. With con-cise and explicit Rules for the Pronunciation of the different Languages. Square 4to, Ficzible Cloth,

PUBLISHED BY HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK.

HARPEN & BROTHERS will send the above works by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of the price.

BEAUTIFUL WOMAN,-If you would be beautiful, use Hagan's Magnolia Balm.

It gives a pure, blooming complexion and restores vonthful beauty.

Its effects are gradual, natural, and perfect. It removes Redness, Blotches, and Pimples, cures Tan, Sunburn, and Freckles, and makes a lady of thirty appear but twenty.

The MAGNOLIA BALM makes the skin smooth and pearly, the eye bright and clear, the cheek glow with the bloom of youth, and imparts a fresh, plump appearance to the countenance. No lady need complain of her complexion when 75 cents will purchase this delightful article.

The best article to dress hair is Lyon's Ka-

BRANDRETH'S PILLS.

They remove all bad accumulations from the bowels, and purify and invigoeste the system. All whose health is not perfect owe it to themselves to take a few dones of Brandreth's Pills, because the seeds of decay are constantly eradicated by their use, and the principle of life confirmed, thus giving a vigor of body and mind to a period when we have been used to see the faltering step and the enfecbled intellect.

General Page, the distinguished liberator of Venesuch, says that he has used them as his only medicine for thirty years, with the most satisfactory results.

For Costiveness, Dyspepsia, and as a Family Medicine, they are unrivaled.

Daniel L Tenney, Esq., Astor House, New York, cared by Brandreth's Pills of Dyspepsia and Costive-ness when all other means used had falled.

A gentleman, whose father died of consumption at 36 years, was also attacked, when about 21, by the disesse. He had cough, night-sweats, and general debility. Doctors recommended cod-liver oil, but he wasted away. At last be determined to use Brandreth's Pills. In two months they made him a sound man

SIGHTS and SENSATIONS

119

FRANCE, GERMANY, and SWITZERLAND: OR, EXPERIENCES OF

AN AMERICAN JOURNALIST IN EUROPE.

BY EDWARD GOULD BUFFUM, Author of "Six Months in the Gold Mines," &c.

12mo, Cloth, $1 50.

* * * A book at once entertaining and instructive.

* * * Fashlensble tourists who are leaving this port for a trip to Europe will flad Mr. Buffunis "Rights and Scuestions in Frame, Germany, and Switzerland" a delightful and serviceable traveling companion. At the same time the thousands who are to spend the summer at home, either in town, in the country, or on the sea-show, may, by the help of this little book, enjoy many of the pleasures of feeding travel while they escape its annoyances. * * It will doubtless be more heartily welcoused by the public than any similar work which has appeared. — S. Y. Hernid.

PUBLISHED BY HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK.

EF HARPER & Bucrusss will send the above work by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of $1.50.

GOING UP TOWN!

On the 1st of August we shall remove to 747 BROADWAY, near 8th St., and now offer our present stock of

CHINA, GLASS, AND FANCY GOODS at very low prices

Davis Collamore & Co., 479 Broadway, near Broome St.

MAGIC DIAMOND,

A recent discovery that steel, when made to rotate upon glass and similar substances, will cut with more rapidity and case, and is

Cheaper, Better, and More Durable

BEST DIAMOND.

Invaluable to every Family. NO TOOL-CHEST COMPLETE WITHOUT IT. Sent free by mail on receipt of price, $2 each. AGENTS WANTED. Address

J. Russell & Co.,

Green River Cutlery Works, 83 BEERMAN STREET, New York City.

NATURE'S GREAT RESTORER.

GREEN MOUNTAIN MINERAL SPRING WA-TER, Mount Holly, Vt.

This celebrated water cures Dyspopsis, Rheuma-tian, Piles, Scrofels, Urinary Diseases, and Female Weaknesses. "It is a tonic and general builder and of the system." Send for Descriptive Circular. Self the Prescription.

McKESSON & BOBBINS, No. 21 Fulton St., N.Y., GEO. C. GOODWIN & CO., Boston, Mass., Agents. F. FENN & CO., Proprietors, Ratland, Vt.

POLLAR & SON, Manuf'rs of Genuire Meerschaum goods. Stores: 319
Broadway, under St. Nicholas Hotel, 427 John St., middle of block. Send for new wholesale or retail circular to Letter-Box 5846. Repairing and Boiling also done.

STAMMERING cured by Bates' Appliances, For Pamphiet, address Simpson & Co., Box 2004, N.Y.

HARPER'S PERIODICALS.

TERMS FOR 1869.

HARPEN'S MASSASSER, ODO YOSE. $4 00 Harpen's Wherly, One Year..... 4 00 Harpen's Bazar, One Year..... 4 00

Habpen's Magazene, Harper's Weekly, and Rappen's Bazar, to one address, for one year, $10.00; or any two for $7.00.

An Extra Copy of either the MAGAZINE, WERELY, or Baran will be supplied gratts for every Club of Firm Scheckinges at $4.00 each, in one remittance; or, him Copies for $20.00, without extra copy.

The Postage within the United States is for the Managers M cents a year, for the Warran or Baran 20 cents a year, payable yearly, constrained for quarterly, at the office where received. Subscriptions from the Dominion of Canada must be accompanied with 42 cents additional for the Managers, or 20 cents for the Warran or Baran, to proper the United States postage.

postage.

The Volumes of the Managers commence with the Numbers for June and December of each year. Subscriptions may commence with any Number. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to begin with the first Number of the current Volume, and back Numbers will be sent accordingly.

the cerrent Volume, and back Numbers will be sent accordingly.

The Volumes of the Weerly commence with the year. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the saliseriber wishes to commence with the Number next after the receipt of his order.

Subscribers to the Magazesa, Weerly, or Baran will find on each wrapper the Number with which their subscription expires. Each periodical is stopped when the term of subscription clease. It is not necessary to give notice of discontinuance.

In remitting by mail, a Post-Office Order or Draft payable to the order of Harren & Brounens is preferable to Bank Notes, since should the Order or Draft be lost or stolen, it can be renewed without less to the sender.

In ordering the Magazers, the Werkly, or the Baran, the name and address should be clearly written. When the direction is to be changed, both the old and the new one must be given.

TERMS FOR ADVERTISING IN HARPEN'S PERIODUALS. Harper's Macarine.—Whole Page, $250: Half Page, $125: Quarter Page, $70.—each insertion; or, for a less space, $1 50 per Line, each insertion.

Harper's Weekly.—Inside Pages, $1 50 per Line; Outside Page, $2 50 per Line—each insertion.

Harper's Baser.—$1 00 per Line; Cuts and Display, $1 25 per Line—each insertion.

Address HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK.

THE REISSUE OF JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION

Vol. XIII.—No. 656.]

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, JULY 24, 1869.

SINGLE COPIES, TEN CENTS. 84.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Courses, in the Year 1968, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Cours of the United States, for the Southern District of New York

WASHINGTON MONUMENT, PHILADELPHIA.

The subjoined cut represents the Washington Monument recently erected in front of Independence Hall, Philadelphia. This statue of Washington was secured through the liberality of the public school children of that city, and the caremonies incident to the presentation took place. July 5. Upon the unveiling of the statue a salute was fired from Independence Square. The principal features of the ceremony were, a prayer by Bishop Simpson, an address by Hon. Henny

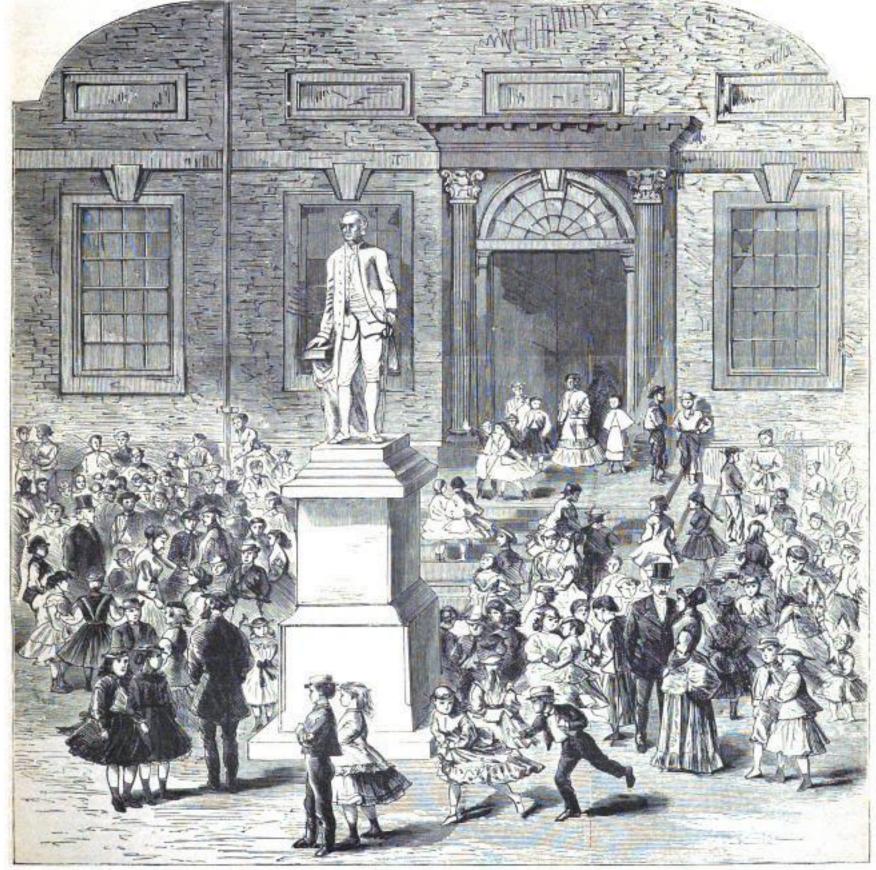

D. Moone, and another by Ground: F. Gonnow, presenting the statue to the city. Matur-Fox also delivered an address. A large number of the school-children were present.

THE FRENCH-AMERICAN TELE-GRAPH CABLE.

Buronn this reaches the eyes of our readers the French-American Atlantic Telegraph Cable will probably have been laid from Brest to the near Cape Ushant and a few miles from Brest. It starts in very shallow unter—not more than six, eight, or ten fathoms deep for the first two or three miles, when it slowly deepens from thirty to sixty and ninety fathoms, a depth which is maintained over the whole bed of the English Channel. At this level it continues till in a line with the westeramost part of the Irish coast, where the water quickly deepens from 200 to 800 fathoms. The line, after leaving Brest, takes rather a northerly course, so as to pass just north and within a short distance of three tremendous grim-looking rocks, round which the mendous grim-looking rocks, round which the Atlantic beaves and boils incressantly. These black parameter are called the Three Chiences, and, as far as is known, the foot of man has nerand, as far as is known, the boot of man has ner-er yet been on them, only the stormar petrels and the wilder kind of galls nestling in their coves and niches. They stand in about lat. 47° N., long. 30° W., and the water round them should to about 1000 fathoms. A little south of these rocks it shouls to 1100 fathoms, and about a degree south to less than 500. The rable course, however, is kept in a pretty regular depth of from 1800 to 2000 fathous, and throughout over a soft bed of shells and coze. The shells comprise the most minute forms of the diatomacear, which are only visible under a powerful microscope, and are as smell as the finest dust. The whole bed of the Atlantic seems more or less composed of the debris of these small animalcule. After passing the Three Chimneys the line will be laid across mid-ocean to near the solitary Job Rock, which rises from deep water in lat, 45° 50° N., long, 35° 50° W. It passes a long way north of the Milne Bank, where the bottom of the Atlantic is very irregular, and gently curves up to the southern end of Newfound-land, not far vest of Cape Race. Here it skirts the south shee: of the island for a short length, lying in as little as 100 fathoms water. It soon, however, deepens to 1500 fathoms as it turns doe north between the shools called the Green Hank and the St. Pierre Bank. Passing between these it is landed on the French island of St. Pierre, not far from Placentia Bay, Kewfoundhand. From St. Pierre, where there is to be a station similar to that at Heart's Content, the line will be continued south in moderately shallow water, of from 200 to 300 fathoms, past Cape Breton, the coast of Nova Scotia, Cape Sable, and south of the Brown Bank to Cape Cod, and from a lit-tic beyond that to the neighborhood of Plymouth, a small town on the coast of Massachusetts, which is famous in the world's history as the landing-place of the first colonists of New En-gland, the Pilgrim Fathers of Puritan New England, in the time of CHARLES I.

THE WASHINGTON MONUMENT IN FRONT OF INDEPENDENCE HALL, PHILADELPHIA .- [Sketched by Chirles E. Scolfield.]

The total length of the cable required for this route will be no less than 3564 nautical miles, or very nearly double the length of either of our Atlantic cables. One length of 2788 knots will be required from Brest to St. Pierre, and 776 from St. Pierre to Massachusetts. The distance between Valentia and Heart's Content is, in a straight line, only 1670 nautical miles, but for the cables 2400 miles had always to be made, to allow for stack and in case of accidents. In the cable of 1865 only 1800 miles have been used, and in the cable of 1866 only 1851 miles. The French Company, therefore, has made every al-lowance for slock and whatever unforescen accidents in calde laying may occur.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, JULY 24, 1869.

A WAR PARTY.

IS there a war party, or is there likely to be a war party, in the country? This is a question which is always timely under certain circumstances, and which may very properly be asked just now. Abstractly no intelligent and industrious community desires war, and war is very soldom distinctly foreseen. How many people in England supposed there was to be a Crimean war until it came? How many Americans believed on the 4th of March, 1861. that we were then upon the eve of the terrible war of the rebellion? Every body has a theory that every thing will be settled. Nations, we are told, don't go to war if they can help it. How John Bull has been laughed at within the last three months for supposing that we meant to fight about the Addoms! Fight? Why, bless his dult old soul, we were never so penceful in our lives-only he must pay for the Ala-

In reading the English political and popular history at the beginning of the century, no-thing is more evident than the latent hostility to France and Frenchmen, upon which demagogues, and even statesmen, drew at pleasure for their own purposes. And the supply never failed. Popery and wooden shoes was the ridiculous ery of a spirit that was very far from ridiculous, and which produced the most de plorable results. Hostility of this kind is the most convenient resource of unprincipled poli-ticians. Profoundly persuaded that there is no such thing as moral principle in politics, and that every thing is possible to audacity and persistence, they calculate upon jealousy and inflammatory misrepresentation as confidently as a chemist upon his elements and combinations. The greatest events in history are interpreted by them upon the basest theories. Guaccuts was an ambitious and selfish schemor; I'vm and Hampurs and the Parliament unscrupulous intriguers and hypocritical cant-Our own Revolution was the work of a handful of penniless lawyers who wanted distinction. The rebellion was diamond cut diamond. One day politicians of this kind arraign a President as the arch criminal of history; denounce him as the destroyer of the lives and liberties of the most defenseless people, and the probable accomplice of an assassin; the next day they are bowing to him, and pleasantly taking his hand.

This is the spirit in politics that besitates at nothing, and it is to the extent and influence of this spirit that we must look in answering the question we have proposed. There is unquestionably a deeply seated hostility to England in this country, and there is an entire bill in domestic politics. The Democratic party is burning to recover power-the Republican party is resolved to retain it. The "Irish vote" is a unit in opposition to England. This vote is by the Democratic party, but there are Republican leaders who are always hoping and scheming to gain possession of it. No hid for this vote could be so resistless as a declared policy of war with England upon a good pretense. But this is as well understood by those who now control it, and who would not shrink at any step necessary to retain it. Meanwhile the American sentiment in regard to the Alabowe is virtually unanimous—not in all the de-tails, not upon every position taken by Mr. SCHNER, but upon the essential point that the escape of the Alabama was a "scandal and a reproach," and the result of an unfriendly feeling. Under these circumstances, is it unlikely that politicians of the kind we have described, by no means wanting in shrewdness, believe that the party which first appears as a war party with England, upon a fair pretext, will carry the country? The debt is not a consideration in the case. The argument for war is always an appeal to passion, to prejudice, to emotion of various kinds, and aweeps away every economical consideration. In this case, too, the rebel and repudiating influence would all be for war; nor must we omit the force of the jubilant confidence in our own strength which springs from the experience of the last few years. The domestic political situation of the country, in its various aspects, and the kind of feeling due to the Alabama difficulty, suggest, therefore, the strong probability that some favorable pretext for a war policy will be sought by certain

What is it likely to be? Certainly not a haughty ultimatum upon the Alobawa question. But are there no other unhealed points of difference with Great Britain? Has the fishery difficulty ever been settled? Yankee fishermen may take fish within a certain distance of the British American coast; but was is ever determined to our satisfaction that the line ran across from headland to headland in the Bay of Fundy? How then if American fishermen, under instruction, should insist upon their right to a certain fishing ground; how if they should disregard a warning to quit; how if they should be attacked, fired upon, killed? A Yankee fishing smack sunk by British guns in the Bay of Fundy would, under the circumstances, make war with England very probable. Now the fishermen of Cape Ann are General BUTLER'S constituents. In his speech at Gloucester, over the graves of the soldiers, he declared that the on of the victims of the rebellion is to fan the flame of hatred to England. He has, indood, openly announced his favorite method, a peremptory demand of settlement of the Alamen claims, with six months' grace; then nonintercourse, with consequent civil war in England. But statesmen can not always put their ideal policy into practice, and are sometimes obliged to seek results in less heroic ways. We do not mean to insinuate that the Essex representative is now issuing instructions to the Gloucester fishermen, and we mention the sub-ject of the fisheries merely as an illustration of the kind of opportunity that can always be improved. But General BUTLER has an undoubted influence in Congress. He is a shrewd and resolute party manager. Does any body doubt that he will stremuously cultivate a belligerent feeling toward England as a sagscious

We trust that there will be found in Congres plenty of members who will regard this subject as honorable men, and not merely as American partisans; who understand that the most patriotic American is he who endeavors to see how all difficulty may be avoided, not facilitated; who heartily despise the eternal caviling and bragging and bectoring and pandering to illfeeling, which are so foolishly mistaken for a sincere devotion to the country and its rights. What we most need is not the statesmanship that estentationsly seeks to force England to cat humble-pic, but that which strives to ar-range the difficulty most favorably to the honor and the amity of both nations.

Tite "Irish Republicans," of whom we spoke two or three weeks since, met in Chicago on the 5th of July, as they proposed, and passed sun-dry resolutions. They set forth what they concrived to be "the duty of the Irish people in this Republic," and they asked " for the downtrodden of all enslaved lands the sympathy and support of the people and Government of readiness "to stand by the Government of the Republic in insisting upon an ample apology for the wrong committed [in the Alabama affair] and full compensation for the loss sustained."

FOREIGN INTERFERENCE.

The American people will undoubtedly be grateful for this cordial expression of regard from the "Irish people in this Republic." The Americans have certainly done nothing at any time to forfeit a kind feeling upon the part of Ireland and the Irish, whether at home or elsewhere. It is also peculiarly flattering that so many Irish delegates should come so far from their own land to declare their friendship for Indeed it is surprising that with their feelm8. ing these gentlemen do not take one more step and become American citizens. If the resolu tions at Chicago had been the expression of American citizens they would have had a sig-nificance which no resolutions of "Irish people," or "German people," or "English people," or any other foreign people in this country can possibly have. Why, for instance, should "Irish | is effected, it is the imperative duty of every people" pronounce against free-trade in this country where it is not the commercial policy rather than in their country where it is? It would not be a very edifying spectacle if the "American people" in France should assemble and resolve against a republic. The Parisian journalists could not help exclaiming, "But what then? We others are not Republicans," If Irish people are opposed to free-trade let them remonstrate at home, not in this coun-

We observe also that the Convention pro tested against the neutrality laws of the United States, upon the ground that they are useful only to the "monarchies of the earth"-those of heaven and elsewhere not being includedand the "Irish people in this Republic" pledge themselves to labor for their entire repeal. But how is this? Is not the repeal of any law of the United States the exclusive business of American citizens? Have the Irish people, or the Portuguese, or the Russian, or the Italian, here or elsewhere, any thing whatever to do with it? If the American people in the empire of France, again, should pledge them-selves to labor for the entire abolition of the existing French laws regulating elections or the imperial succession, would they be considered a trifle impertment? The only ground upon which any body of persons is entitled to pledge themselves to labor for the repeal of the laws of this country is, that they are citizens of this country; and if they are, then they are American citizens, and can rightfully take no other national name. The instant they claim to interfere in our affairs as Irish, or German, or English, or French, their action becomes Politically, there are no "Irish citizens of this country," and no "Irish Republicans." As citizens we are Americans, and nothing else; as a party we are Republicans, and nothing else. hatever tends to divide American citizenship by lines of foreign birth is mischievous and not to be tolerated. If the gentlemen who met at Chicago are American citizens of the Republican party, their action was not an authoritative party action, and tends only to perplex the party. If they would strengthen the Repub-lican party they must act with it, not organize themselves separately as foreigners.

LATEST FROM TOOLEY STREET.

Tun amusing absurdity of the theory of the civil service of this country which is held by a certain class of politicians is very well illus-trated by the recent proceedings of a Committee in the city of New York in regard to the United States Marshal for the Southern District. There was a special sub-committee solumnly appointed to consider the offenses of that delinquent in the matter of appointments of his deputies, This sub-committee reported that the Marshal had " utterly ignored party" in his selection of subordinates, and that the party "can not be with impunity neglected, ign red, or defied," and so on, in the most res anding strain, the report finally exploding in certain resolutions: that the working Republicans won the fight; that they are entitled to the legitimate fruit of the victory (Mr. MARCY'S phrase was better —"To the victors belong the spoils"); that the public man who ignores the working politicians commits political suicide; and that FRANCIS C. BARLOW is that public man. Thereupon the sub-committee demanded his removal, and the parent committee approved by a vote of 44 ayes to 24 noes.

The exquisite humor of this performance is the assumption of these forty-four gentlemen that they are the Republican party. They do not say, for they could not truly say, that the Marshal has not appointed as good Republicans as the members of the Committee themselves, but simply that he has not allowed the Com mittee to appoint for him. Honest, intelligent, industrious, capable, faithful men and Republicans he may have appointed, but not those whom the Committee designated, therefore be defies the party, and the President whom the party elected must remove him. A soore ludicrous illustration of the spoils theory could not be conceived. After the booty is bagged, the President has the honor of the Presidency for his share. The offices for which he is responsible are then to be distributed among the local committees for their share. The committees are to select the "working politicians" as the incumbents; and whoever doubts their peculiar fitness and capacity is, in the language of the report, to be considered an "ingrate demagogue." The efficiency, the fidelity, the honesty, and the economy of the public service are of no importance; but a few gentlemen elected upon a committee-and how gentlemen are elected upon committees every man knows who is practically familiar with politics-must have the offices they want because they are the party, and the party elected the President.

The friends of a reform in the civil service of this country are greatly indebted to this amusing comedy. Those of us who hope for that reform are probably "ingrate demagogues," and we are undoubtedly defying and ignoring the party, in the opinion of the statesmen of Tooley Street, if we say that, until that reform appointing officer of the Government to select as his subordinates those political friends of whose qualifications for honest and efficient service he is satisfied, and with no regard whatever to Tooley Street, except so far as its recommendations may be approved by his judgment. It is a gross offense against the people of this country for any local political committee to attempt this kind of interference with the duties of the officers of the United Scates. Such a committee may indeed control caucuses against those officers; but it can not prevent the confidence which, upon the very grounds for which they are denounced, will be reposed in such officers by the better part of their own party, and by all their intelligent fellow-citizens.

CERTAIN "GREAT PRINCIPLES."

MR. WADE HAMPTON, who was described by the World a year ago as a kind of ideal American citizen, is Vice-President of the Southern Historical Society; and he recently wrote in a public letter asking the publication of certain

"We owe it as a sacred duty to our ancestry, the fathers of that Republic which exists now only in name; to our children, whose daty it will be to re-establish civil liberty on this continent, if they hope to escape our fair; and, shore all, to the memory of our heroic dead, that we should place upon record, where the future historian of our late war may find it, the true facts relating to our unfortunate but glorious struggle. By this means alone can we vindicate our principles, justify our cause, and preserve intect that which alone can give value to history—truth."

He adds, urging the appointment of branch societies in South Carolina

"In the mean time I invoke in behalf of the Society "In the mean time I invoke in behalf of the Society the aid and co-operation of every man who reveree the ancient honor and renown of our State; who cherishes a proper regard for the great principles which have governed her in the past; who believes that these principles will yet be triumphant; who wishes to vindicate the cause for which we fought, and who desires to preserve untarnished the memory of those patriots who died for that cause."

Mr. Warn Hampton, whose public career shows him to be a very foolish gentleman, here shows how curiously be and his friends misconceive the vital point of the war, and the inevitable judgment of History. What is the verdict of History upon the great rebellion in England? That it was honorable and justifiable, Why? Because, although the line between the Royal prerogative and Parliamentary privilege had never been definitely drawn, yet the King asserted his prerogative against the liber-ties of the people. He asserted a right that could not be expressly and technically denied, but for an ignoble purpose, and therefore the heart and conscience of mankind declare against

Now what is the cause for which Mr. WADE HAMPTON fought? Ostensibly it was that of State sovereignty, the right of a State to secede at will from the Union-a right left obscure in the Constitution. We say nothing of the un-speakable folly of the theory, of the impossibility of any real national growth and development, of the painful limitation of every defense of freedom implied in such a scheme, because men may fight not only bravely but honorably for a mistake in political philosophy and prac-But while State sovereignty was the ostensible cause, the perpetuity of human slavery in its most odious form was the real ob-ject of the rebellion. Mr. Wade Hampton inherited and bought and sold men and women, and lived by their unpaid labor. By reason of regarding human beings as chattels he enjoyed also a political privilege which was not shared by his fellow-citizens who held to the equal human rights of all men. Perceiving that the friends of equal rights were likely to control the Union, of which his State was a part, by which ascendency the system of buying and selling men and women, living by their la-bor, and deriving political privilege from them, might be at last peacefully abridged and even abolished, Mr. Wars Hampton asserted the right of his State to secede from the Union. He asserted a claim, in itself innocent enough, however foolish and unfounded, but for the basest of conceivable purposes.

To maintain State sovereignty that slavery might be perpetuated was the object of his "unfortunate but glorious struggle;" under the pretty name of State rights, to buy and sell men and women were his "principles;" and the triumph which he anticipates is the reduction of this nation to an imbecile league, each member of which may at its pleasure enslave a part of its population. Does Mr. HAMP-TON suppose that History will not know this and record it? Will History know any thing of the subject that we do not, from the unspeakable treachery in the Cabinet to the unimaginable torture at Andersonville? As civilization advances is humanity likely to regard the savage slave system of the United States with more favor, and to honor a desperate struggle to perpetuate it? History, Mr. WADE HAMPTON may be very sure, will care little about the "glorious" principle of State sovereignty, but its eye will not remove from the object for which that sovereignty was invoked. The bloody hand of the rebellion all the perfumes of rhetoric can not sweeten.

WAS THE POLICY OF HOLDING ON TO GRAIN GOOD?

Tun drought of last year in Europe, which was most severe in Great Britain, was succeeded by a winter wholly unparalleled for mildness. In England, about the 20th of February, new leaves appeared upon the trees while yet the old remained, which, having started afresh on the termination of the drought in September, had not been subjected to the usual law which causes the leaf to drop annually at nearly fixed periods. The verdure of fields, started into new life by excessive fall rains; the turnips, sown late by way of experiment; the cereals, put into the ground in autumn-all attested by their free and long-continued growth the presence of unusual warmth and moisture during the winter, and pasturage was afforded for cattle in place of foreign supplies of grain. Providence seemed bounteons in proportion to the severity of the visitation under which the English had lately suffered. As the drought extended over a large district, the uncommon season by which it was followed was not limited to England.

In comparing the value of particular crops it is not always easy to assign to each with certainty its relative importance, but there can be no doubt that grass is generally far more valuable in the districts in which it grows luxuriously than any particular crop of grain, or perhaps than all of the crops of grain united. The loss of it in England during the drought was the most felt; its recovery and continuance during the winter, especially as the growing wheat was freely pastured, did more to enable England to tide over the drought than all other causes. Cattle had been thinned off; the population had been put on an economy amounting al-most to the pinch of a time of allowance; the markets of the world were searched for cheap food; emigration was set on foot, but happily for England, and we doubt not for the world at large, a winter that partook of the character of spring was beneficently provided, and cattle and sheep were enabled to fill themselves with the richness of pastures, instead of being subjected to an inclement season. Although this has moderated the demand for our cereal productions, we rejoice in this fortunate turn in the situation of the English.

But notwithstanding this result, which could not have been foreseen, we are satisfied that holding on to grain was the true policy of our farming interest. Every consumer of breadstuffs in the United States has had a supply adequate to his means; the speculators of Chiand New York have had as much as they could carry conveniently, if not more; and it is highly probable that, although here and there a particular person might have been benefited by selling early, the whole mass of our food products would have been slaughtered in price but for the policy of not producing a glut of grain at the sea-board.

It has been our endeavor, with the most sincore regard for the welfare of our great agricultural interest, to place before them their exnet situation with respect to the populations that consume their products, and the conditions upon which the consumers' statements of markets, general and local, ought to be receiveda matter which in time will be well understood. The control of the world's markets is now in the hands of the principal dealers in grain of Liverpool and London, and yet it is the habit of our press to publish the quotations they daily utter through the telegram as if they were a true and reliable index of the state of the market as between the producers of grain elsewhere and themselves,

If the farmers of the United States commit the mistake of pressing their grain upon the senboard in such unusual quantities as to lower the price, the quotations in Liverpool are lowered in a corresponding degree, and presented to other lecalities as the test of transactions with them. The interests of the most important consumer are thus promoted in all markets at the expense of all producers. The value of foreign food of all descriptions consumed by the population of the United Kingdom amounts now to about $500,000,000 per annum, measured by our currency, and it may be supposed that an interest, the deepest that can sway a community, is constantly operating with never-ceasing effect in the direction we have suppo

Never until this year has there been any serious effort to check this foreign control over our producers of food. The existence of a tht, the severest known in England during this century, seemed to offer an opportunity for resisting the policy of English dealers, and to claim the privilege of equality with them in adjusting the price of our own products. The immense disadvantage that our grain was carried in foreign bottoms from this port, and that freights advanced as the foreigner rose to our grain limits, has operated unfavorably. The English have been obstructed in their attempts to break down the market at no other point; but the firmness of our farming interest has been perceptible in some degree, and, to that extent, to its advantage.

The demand for grain now proceeding from Burope encounters a severe money market and high freights, but prices are obtained that would have been impossible had grain not been stored in the West this season. The wheat of California received at Liverpool this spring met with severe slaughter, and such would have been our experience had the example been imitated.

As other states of Europe come into the condition of England, and attain to a growth in population too redundant to be fed with what they severally produce, the question becomes more interesting to us: How shall the price be adjusted for what we have to sell?

Mr. RUGGLES, in some interesting statistics presented recently to the Union League Club, stated that our production of grain of all descriptions, measured by population, was more than double that per head of the like production in Europe; and that as the quantity abroad was constantly diminishing in its ratio to the population, and ours was being angmented, they would very soon look to this country for very large supplies of food. Russia has lately ed her railroads into new localities, and will doubtless be relied upon for many years to come to supply part of Europe with many agricultural products; but making allowance for the new districts thus connected with sea-board markets, it is very probable that the demands of Europe upon this country for food will in-crease to such an extent as to require on our part more attention in adjusting the price than has been considered neces

All that we want is a fair remuneration for our products, and, we repeat, the farming interest is more certain to obtain it than if they had loaded the merchant with what would have swamped him and produced serious disaster under the unscrupulous system which the English apply.

Last year the harvest in England commence on the 12th of July, and continued without being disturbed by rain until the 12th of August. This year it will be more than a month later, as the grain is very backward, owing to recent cold weather. But whenever it may take place there is a certainty that the immense sacrifice of cattle, sheep, and hogs produced by their premature slaughter for want of food in the summer and fall of 1868, and the necessity for close feeding which has existed ever since, operate severely until the harvest of 1870.

It seldom happens that the price of both our cotton and grain are high at the same seas and it is probable that the attention of English operators has been diverted from cotton by their close attention to the manipulation of grain, and that we owe the advantage from cotton to the neglect of similar combinations. The entire smount of money to be distributed, obtained from foreign sources, is as large as could be expected, and but for a pernicious paper sys-tem would inure to the solid benefit of the whole country.

NOMINATIONS.

THE recent ridicatous speech of Mr. Amones Jourson at Washington, and the utter indif-ference with which it has been treated, offer a very suggestive text. A year ago Mr. Jousson was the President of the United States; an officer of such power, and a man of such suspicious character, that Congress thought it necessary to impeach him, as a measure of high state concern. That he was a dangerous man can not be doubted. That he would not have besitated at any measure, however revolutionary, which had a fair chance of success and a certain show of legality, is unquestionable. For a long time he seriously and even perilously thwarted the settlement of the questions arising from the war upon which the loyal people were resolved. He was both an impediment and a menace, and when in ungovernable rage he denounced from the White House Senators and citizens by name, there was a very uneasy feeling that trouble might be imminer

Now, a few rods from the White House, with feeble ribaldry, he denounces his successor, and the only emotion with which his words are received is one of incredulity and shame that, at so solemn a moment as the election of 1864, a man so curiously unfit should have been placed in the possible succession to the Presidency. It was, however, not so extraordinary at the time. Mr. Johnson was very little known to the country before the war. With the rebellion began his vehement denunciation of rebels, and his fidelity to the cause of the Union at a conspicuous and exposed point, in view of his antecedents, and the propriety of a ticket which should show that the Republican was merged in the Union party, procured his nomination at Baltimore. The ANDREW JOHNSON of May, 1864, and the ANDREW JOHNSON of the last three years were apparently very different men. When, therefore, the Republican party is derided by the Democrats for making such a nomination, it may very justly smile at a speer for such a reason coming from a party that nominated "Jos Lane," and that elected RICHARD M. JOHNSON to the same position; and may allege that, as nominations are usually made by both parties, it was not at all extraordinary.

But the moral that Mr. JOHNSON'S career so strongly points is the necessity of a sharp serutiny of men who are proposed to be nominated to responsible offices. There are few men in this country to-day so little respected as he. The same thing is true of FRANKLIN PIERCE. It can not, indeed, be said of Mr. FILLMORE, yet certainly no man is more unimportant than he. His opinion upon public affairs is not sought. Its expression would have no weight whatever. Yet these three persons, Mr. Fill-MORE, Mr. PIERCE, and Mr. Jounson, have been Presidents of the United States. They have filled the highest office in the world. Two of them, indeed, were not elected to it, but they were elected to the next degree of succession. Merely to mention such names is to enforce a moral. Nominate men whose success or failure will not justly injure the party.

Shall not the example of ANDREW JOHNSON remembered by the Republican party when it makes its nominations for the autumn elections? In this State, indeed, we do not this year elect a Governor, and the campaign will inevitably be languid. But let us at least nominate men whose well-known characters are their credentials; men who are known for honesty and ability. In the absence of great na-tional issues the elections will be determined by other considerations, and most prominent among them will be the indication given by the nominations that the party is as intent upon the public welfare, upon efficiency and economy of administration, as upon mere party success. The point to be impressed upon our minds is, that in politics as elsewhere, in the long-run "corruption wins not more than honesty." Democrats have no issues, no policy, no proposition. Their State Convention as and the dreary talk at Tammany Hall on the Fourth of July sh w that they are unchanged. The country is satisfied with Republican administration if it shows that it deserves to be maintained. Let us remember Andrew Jourson, and beware!

FALSE PRETENSES.

Tun Democratic managers are swidently firrely persuaded that to call a cabbage a rose makes it a rose, or that if you only persist long enough you can at least fatigue people into acquiescence. The Ohio and the California Democratic Conventions have both solemnly resolved, the first, that "the Democratic party of the United States have always been preeminently friendly to the rights and interests of the laboring men;" and the second, "that the Democratic party ever has been, is now, and ever will be, the champion of the rights of the mechanic and the working-man."

These be brave words. What are the facts? There is not a person in the country who is in the least familiar with our political history who does not know that the great policy of the Demceratic party for a generation was the aggrandizement of the slave system of the Southern States—a system which imbruted the laboring population of those States, denying them even the common personal rights of humanity; and when the Southern leaders of the Democratic party claimed the right of carrying their slaves into the free Territories of the West, whereby a Democratic leader, like JEFFERSON DAVIS or ROBERT TOOMSS, with a horde of laborers whom he kept like cattle, became the immediate rival of every free laborer from the East, it was the Democratic party that supported the demand. It was because the great mass of intelligent laboring men of every kind in the free States saw that the Democratic policy was one that dis-graced labor and degraded the laborer that they threw that party from the power it had so long and foully misused; and it was the great slaveholders who were the chiefs of that party who then attempted to overthrow the Governm in order to perpetuate the abject slavery of the laboring population of half the country.

There was never a haughtier aristocracy than the old slave lords in this country; and their interests and will determined the policy of the party that "has always been pre-emisently friendly to the rights and interests of the labor-ing men," and "the champion of the rights of the mechanic and the working-man.

Now that Mr. WALKER is elected Governor of Virginia, why do we hear nothing from our Democratic friends of carpet-baggers? Mr. Walker is a "carpet-bagger" of the most unquestionable kind. According to the World, Mr. WALKER'S carpet-bagging proponsities are invetorate. Born in Binghamton be carpetinvetorate. Born in Binghamton be carpet-bagged to Hamilton College, thence to Owego, thence to Chicago, thence to Norfolk at the cast of the war. Why then, on the one hand, does the World, with its keen scent for carpet-bags, talk of a "Conservative" victory in Mr. WALKка's election? and why, upon the other, does it say that the result in Virginia "completely disconcerts the carpet-baggers from Mississippi and Texas," and that there is "dismay among carpet-bag politicians of the South?" Why should the election of a carpet-bagger as Governor of a Southern State dismay Southern carpet-baggers in general?

Does not the Sun push its sensational reports of what it calls Spain's rule in New York a little too far when it denounces the officers of the United States who execute the laws as "bloodhounds?" As its report virtually justifies the murderous intentions of foreigners against American citizens for doing their duty, we hope the Sun has duly considered its responsibility if its incitements should be followed and murder en-ste. The account which the Son gives of the examination of General Goscocuta before the Commissioner shows only more plainly the proriety and the necessity of a proclemation from the President warning every well-disposed person that the nuthority of the United States can not be safely defied. When a mob of foreigners with outside of the United States Court-room to wreak their vengeance upon a man whom the San calls "perjured traitor" and "wretch" because he his part in enforcing the law which forbids those foreigners to make our territory the have of their war upon a friendly nation, is really seems time to ascertain whether the Cuban au-thority of Captain RYAN and General Gotcoursa. or the Government of the United States is para-mount in this city.

THE other day the Ohio Democratic Convention nominated General Rosecuans for Governor. How agreeable a nomination this is to Mr. LLANDIGHAM and his friends may be inferred. When General Rosecnass was fighting the reb-els, the friends of the rebels nominated Mr. Val-LANDIGHAM for Governor. It is to be supposed, therefore, that the friends of "the martyr" can hardly be very friendly to the General. But all tastes can be suited by the news from Ohio. The Democratic organ in New York assures us that "the nominations and the platform are hailed throughout the State as the sure way to success. The Democrats here to night are jubilant and the Radicals are despondent,.....We shall carry the State with the ticket nominated to-day." How despondent the Radicals are, appears in the Trifune of the same day. "The result was received with utter disgust by the radical [Democratic] element of the party. And an effort to ocratic] element of the party. And an effort to have the nomination made unanimous met with a signal failure. The Vallandighamers are loud as signs initire. The valuating america are load and bitter in their curses to night, and indi-cate that they will give the head of the ticket only a milk and water support......The Repub-licans are perfectly satisfied with the action of the Convention, and are confident of an over-whelming victory next fall."

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

The Democratic State Convention of Ohio met at Columbus July 1, and nominated General W. S. Howeverse for Governor. Resolutions were adopted against the cremption from tax of the Government bouds, and against their redemption in gold: against a high protective tarifs, and against the Fifteenth Amendment. At the dedication of the mountment to Fitz Greece Halleck. July 5, at Guilford, Connectient, a peem of Oliver Wendell Holmes was read, and an oration was delivered by Bayard Taylor.

The match base-hall game between Yale and Harward, on the 8th, resulted in a victory for the latter by a score of 41 to 24.

Miss Nora Giles, daughter of Rev. Henry Giles, the well-known heiterer and essential, a becautiful and highly-checated young lady, eighteen years of age, was drowned at Buckspeet on the 3d by the uporting of a boas in which she was calling, in company with her sister, another young lady, and a gentleman.

Judge Leois Batt, kruther-in-law of President Grant, has been tendered, and has accepted the nomination for Governor of Mississippi by a Hepublican delegation from that State, which has recently arrived here. Hr. Deat is an old resident of Mississippi, and has large plantation interests in that section.

A serious accident took place July 2 on the Short Line or Cincinnati, Louisville, and Lexington Railroad, nocurily opened to the public. The bridge of Railroad, nocurily opened to the public. The bridge of Railroad, nocurily opened to the public. The bridge of Railroad, proceedings for a long time; it consists of four men who have rowed for many years, and never been besten. The betting in Railand is in favor of Oxford 10 to 1.

The pacht Essenties, with James Goeden Beanett, June, its owner, arrived at Queenstown, July 11. She made the passage in 12 days, 17 hours, 6 minutes, and 25 seconds, busing even the Heavitte.

FOREIGN NEWS.

Tur British House of Commons has decided to postpone for the present all discussion relative to the Abeham chains difficulty. The attitude of the House of Lords on the Irish Caurch question erectes much excitement in England, and disculars have been eradiscussion in England, and disculars have been eramound suggesting the property of the country ridding itself of "this electrocion to legislation." The Lords have rejected the Jafe Freengas hill.

The Opposition in the French Corps Législatif have demanded the resignation of M. Render, the Minister of State. A Ministry is demanded which shall be responsible to the country. It is reported that the Emporce is inclined to sequiexe in these demands.

The project of the new Constitution for Servis has been completed. It establishes equality of the citisens, Ministerial responsibility, liberty of the Legislative Chamber.

The Prime Minister of Bevaria, Prime Hobstolich has beened a circular to the foreign Lywers on the sees, Ministeria responsing, heavy or the Frenchistive Chamber.

The Prime Minister of Bavasia, Prince Hobenlohe, has issued a circular to the Sueign Powers on the Geomenical Council. Be wares the Governments of the principal dangers which they ought to principal dangers which they of the Pope, the disposition it may make of the questions of Charter property, and other points likely to come up of an essentially political character.

Berrent has recipred his port as Minister of Juctice in the Spatish Cabbet. Zorilla takes his place. Beccars has been appointed Minister of the Colonika.

The Island of St. Pierre, the American termines of the French cable, lies off the southern coset of Newfoundland. Great and Likele Microtion are islands of the same group. These are harren rocks, rabushionly as a refuce for French Selectron, and as giving France a title to the surrounding Selectron, which are extremely important. The catire area of St. Pierre and French Mignelses is about 106 square miles, and the permanent population perhaps 200 scals.

Letters have been received at Montreed from Jefferson Bavis, in which he states that he will not be able to return to this side of the water. If he gets well enough to travel he intends to spend the late summer in Canada, and the winders in Mississeppi.

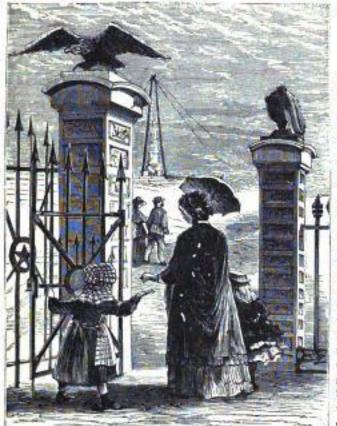

Mexican advices of July 5 report that the results of the late alections have been favourable to the Government. The volenne of Colona was in a high state of cruption, and the inhabitants of the towns within its range had fied to the fields.

THE "GREAT EASTERN" STEAMSHIP LEAVING SHEERNESS WITH THE FRENCH ATLANTIC CABLE. -[See First Page.]

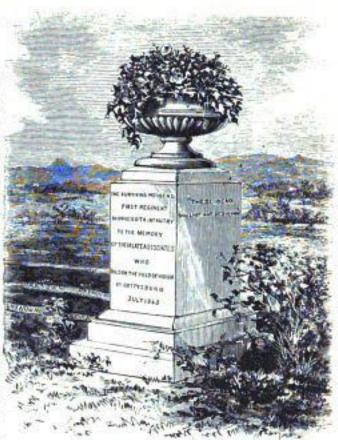

LANDING OF THE SHORE FND OF THE FRENCH ATLANTIC CABLE, BAY OF MINON. NEAR BREST .- (SEE FIRST PAGE.)

GETTYSBURG-ENTRANCE TO THE CEMETERY, [SKETCHED BY TREO, R. DAYER.]

President Mincoln's Settysburg Gration, November 19, 1883

Fourscone and seven years ago our fathers brought forth upon this continent a new nation, conceived in 1herry and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal. Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that nation, or any nation so conceived and so dedicated, can long endure. We are met on a great battle-field of that war. We are met to dedicate a portion of that field as a final resting-place for those who here gave their lives that that nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this. But in a larger sense we can not dedicate, we can not consecrate, we can not hallow this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here have consecrated it far above our power to add or detract. The world will little note nor long remember what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us, the living, rather to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us, that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion; that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain; that this nation shall under God have a new birth of freedom, and that Government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from the

THE GETTYSBURG MONUMENT.

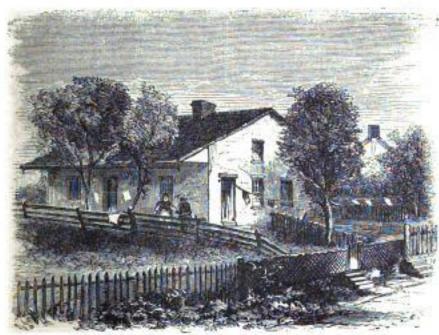

GETTYSBURG.

Gerreson so, though picture-quely located, can not be called a pret-ty town. The number ty town. The number of its inhabitants will not exceed five thou-sand; and, aside from some work done in the way of relic manufac-ture, the industrial features of the place are not remarkable. Tourists may reach the town from New York by three dif-ferent routes; via Baltimore, Northern Central of Pennsylvania, to Hanover Junction, thence to Gettysburg; or via Al lemown to Harrisburg thence by the Northern. Central to Hanover Junction; or by the shortest and quickest route—from New York to West Philadelphia, thence to Lancaster, Columbia, Wrightsville, York, and Hanover Junction. By this latter route numerous changes of ears will be necessary, but it is un-doubtedly the most satisfactory line. Arriving in Gettysburg one feels instinctively that the ur-chius of the town are anxious to get his mon-ey; for they swarm about you with bullets, "ten cents apiece, three for a quarter," "Reb shell, Sir!" urges another, with all the iron that he can lift in the shape of a rusty cannon-ball; "have it for a dollar n'at." Splitters of wood, fragments of boulders marked by some whizzing bullet, are crowded in rare profusion before the stranger's eyes, but not one of the quasis offers to burden himself with your laggage. It would seem as if the jovenile portion of the inhabitants had run mad on the subject of relies. Schools of those small fry darted about the monument during its crection, and any chip that was cut away to facilitate the setting of a stone was seized by at least three of these relic-hunters. The boxes in which the statues were brought from Italy were eagerly secured to make canoof, and the nails were preserved with great care beenuse "Why, they came all the way from Europe!" Mr. Bavringson, the sculptor, met with a warm reception on the day of his arrival in Gottysburg. Any number of youngsters insisted on selling him plans and aerounts of hanters, whether Gettysburgers or strangers. The trees there are torn with shot and shell; some are so riddled with bullets that death has ensued, and the naked limbs of the stricken trees seem lit emblems of the fierce struggle that occurred beneath them on the 2d and 3d of July, 1863. It was here that Scocus's men repulsed the oft-repeated and well-sustained assaults of Ewell,'s corps. Trees with two hundred bul-let wounds, and rocks with nearly as many sears, attest the lot fire that poured over this historical field. Turning from this, it is but a short walk to the gates of the National Cemetery. They are opened for you by children made orphans by this bloody fight. After looking at the monument we turn off toward the west, over the field where LONGSTREET made his famous charge. Now a murble vase meets our eye, resting upon a base of the same material. This is the tribute of "the surviving members of the First Minnesota Regiment to their comrades" who fell during the great battle. These Minnesota boys have invested money too, the interest from which is used by a lady of Gettysburg in keeping bright and fresh the red, white, and blue flowers which bloom in the vase. The leaves of the crimson vertenas that have fellen on the white marble base remind us of the red tide that stained this

GETTYSBURG-CULPS HILL-(SERVORD BY THEO. R. DAVIS.)

GETTYSBURG-JENNY WADE'S COTTAGE-[SERTORED BY THEO. R. DAVIS.)

GETTYSBURG-THE SPOT WHERE GENERAL REYNOLDS PELL -(Sketchio de Toro, R. Davis.)

On our way from the cemetery to the town we pass the little brick house in which JESSEE WARE was killed—the only citizen of Gettyslong who met that fate in connection with the lost le-and she was busy making broad for our wounded.

The grove where General REPROLES fell is in another direction, and not far from the well-known Gettysharg Spring. The grove was used known Getrodorg Spring. The grove was used as a comping-place for the Utica Zonaves, who come to assist in the inauguration of the monnent, and the tree beneath which REYNOLDS fell was to them a sacred spot. As "R" cut with an axe, and a few bullet sears in the bark of the tree, are the only marks by which the spot may be recognized.

TWO MATCHES.

Ir had got too dark to see the ball, and the active and athletic "Olympics" of Cooperania relationship desisted from their practice-game, the last but one before the great match which was to pit them with the renowned "Manhat-tens," the then Champions. The Nine had been all present, and had worked together splendidly; and it was with a calm but deep-seated confi dence in their strength that the men withdrew to the club-house; and thence, after refreshing ab-lutions, strolled homeward in the late twilight of midsummer.

Ned Hope went home with Charlie Somers, not because that was Ned's nearest way to his bone, but because it was the nearest way to Nellie Somers'a. Charlie Somers was the Captain of the Nine. Ned was at the head of his class at Columbia, but at the foot of the Nine. Still, Not Hope was a good trusty player, always re-liable on a long catch, and not seldom brilliant in the lot. Charlie was full of the coming match, in which he hoped to lead the Olympics of Coop-erania to victory and the Championship, and de-tailed to his companion his views of the several members of the Nine, and his speculations on the chances of the contest. Ned Hope was ab-stracted, as was too common with him, and said but little, now and then assenting in monosyllables to Charlie's rapid talk.

At last he broke in upon it with, "Charlie, how did your sister Nellie get acquainted with that Putch family?"

I didn't know she was. By-the-way, Ned, "I dath't know she was. By inte-way, you, that fence of Patch's is going to bother us in the game. Every long hit to right-field is going to land right in that yard."

"Yes, hang it: I had to climb the fence a dozen times to-night. I dare say the Patches are respectable people enough, in their way; but what Nellie can find congenial or improving in their society I don't understand,"

Oh, I guess they won't hart her, Ned. Any how that fence is as fair for one side as the oth er. You must practice up on going over it, you know; it's on your point. Look out for that, will you, Ned?"

By this time they had reached Charlie Somers's house, and Charlie held the gate open while Ned passed in. Three or four figures were seen grop-Ned's beart beat quicker as he heard Nellie Somers's voice:

"Don't flinch, Maggie! Hit just a little bit hard. Here's the stake. Now, that's splen-

And the rubber game of croquet was finished, won by Nellie's side, of course.

The young men went up to the girls, and in almost no time Charlie and his sister were in high argument over the last points of play, Charlie contending that she might have best game half an hour ago. It onded by her calling him a "great old goose," and conclusively prov-ing it. Ned very politely greeted the young la-dies, and went to work hunting up the balls and in the parlor the conversation opened and duck on the one topic that had possessed the minds of all Cooperania for weeks—the match with the Champions. Charlie again passed his men in review, recounting the special qualities men in review, recombing the special qualities of each in reply to the interested questioning of old Mr. Somers. Mrs. Somers deprecated practicing so much in the hot sum of the afternoon, but admitted that the momentous issue involved made it necessary. Nellie had her opinion about Then the game went as follows: Olympics, 3 0 his monument, and they so badgered the poor man that he bought a Gettysburg Panama for a quarter, and escaped.

Culp's Hill is the favorite resort for relicfence to do, but that was the point for him, she was sorry to say.

"I wish I could help you, Ned," she added. She had begun to notice that he was keeping strangely silent.

"I will tell you how you can," answered be, with a serious, meaning look and tone which she did not fail to observe.

Nellie now began to watch Ned with puzzled and uneasy glances, and he, perceiving it, and thinking that she was getting into a graver mood and one auitable for receiving a locture, felt much relieved, as though the battle were already half won. So when he lingered in the front-yard walk in saying good-night, he was very glad to

"Ned, what is it?"

Ned scored the gravel with his cane. Sud-denly looking straight into her face, he said: "I have no right to concern myself about

Nellie could say nothing to this, and there was an embarrassing pause. Not Hope ought to have said his good-night here and gone off, and ten minutes later he was vehemently up-braiding himself for not having done so. Indeed he found at once that he must come down from his high horse, so, with a sickly smile and a feeble attempt at pleasantry, he asked:

"How long is it, Nellie, that you have been intimate with the Patch girls?" Nellie showed some surprise at this question, and Ned, think-ing he had gained a point, went ou: "I had thought you were in the habit of choosing an al-together different sort of companions." And then, worse and worse: "I have only to say that I was very much assonished to see you there this afternoon, and I hope I never shall again." Nellic's head stiffened back and her eyes

Neille's news burners, I should think you did concern yourself with my doings! I think it very probable you may see me again at Mr. Patch's. Ned Hope, you will be sorry for this. Good-night,"

The day of the Match had come at last, and all Cooperania, and a great portion of the rest of the world, were gathered round the field of contest. "The weather was all that could have been desired, and a large number of the fair sex were in attendance," as the newspapers said the next day. Yes, the fair sex were present in large numbers, filling all the regular benches for spectators, and all the other scats that could be procured from the houses in the neighborhood and making the scene brilliant, joyous, and in-spiring to the gallant young knights who were to display their provess before their bright eyes and approving smiles and do battle for the glory of old Cooperania.

Yet the benches were hucless and lustreless for one knight in the tourney. Ned Hope scanne the throng anxiously over and over again, but the ladye faire whose favor he were in his heart of hearts was nowhere to be seen. He had not called at her house since that wretched night and the justice of her reproach still weighed heavily on him. Could it be that she had de-termined even to forego the pleasure of witness-ing the great match, in which he knew she had boon deeply interested, in order to avoid meeting him? Was he so odious in her sight as that?

The game which was to decide the ambitious claims of the Olympics of Cooperania became wearisomeness and a burden to him, even in those first critical innings of the match which are always played in breathless silence, and in which each man feels that the eyes of the little world of lookers on are upon him, as indeed they are. He heeded not the game—"his heart was far away." What glory won here could retrieve the disgrace in which he was held by that noblest and dearest of girls, Helen Somers? What was the match—what was any thing to him now?

the match—what was any thing to him now?

A good knock, coming straight for right-field, and the voice of Charlie Somers calling to him to "take care of it," roused Ned to his duty. The ball rose high, and was evidently destined for Patch's yard. Ned made a dash at the fence, and in another moment would have been upon it, when the gate, which old Patch (who was an investment hairs of the National Council had shore of the National Council had shore of veterate hater of the National Game) had always malevolently kept locked against the Club, opened wide, and a domestic came out to empty a pail. Ned dashed in, secured the ball, and had it back to the pitcher with as little loss of time as if the fence had never existed. The servant went in agnin and locked the gate.

"That was a piece of good lack," thought Ned; "and saved a run and my shins." And he had still further occasion to congratulate himself when he saw the right-field of the Manhatsent when he saw the right-field of the Manhat-tans struggling over the high fence, while the Olympic's men were flying round the bases. Nay, Ned had to thank his stars, or Patch's domestic, he did not know which, for the same good lack once, twice, and thrice repeated. The gate really seemed to swing open on its hinges immediately on the landing of the ball is no word features. yard (whenever the Olympics were after it. 4 the same woman with the pail came forth rike their good angel. Ned's spirits were so much revived that he even whispered an improper joke to Charlie Somers, quoting the Scriptural

"Knock, and it shall be opened unto you."
The game progressed with varying chances and amidst the most intense excitement. The Cooperania Nine had led off with two "ducks" eggs," while the Champions had scored a 5 and a 4. Then came the Champions' turn at the

and the second of the second innings to get 2 in to beat or 1 to tie.

Cooperania must not let them have that 1.

Bad Luck had seized upon the Champions in the third innings, and would not loosen her grip in their extreme hour. Charlie Somers, who was catcher, had taken their first two men out on "foul-tip" in one-two order, at the very be-ginning of the innings. The third striker had hit well and got away to his base. The next man had done the same and sent his predecessor to the second base. One more good hit would bring that man home and beat Cooperania.

Ah! there is the hit! Away it flies (it is toward Patch's yard), and away goes the Manhattaner for the home base and Victory.

Away, too, dashes Ned Hope for Patch's fence.

Will his good angel of a Biddy with the pail lesert him now?

No, the gate opens and she bustles out just in time for Ned to rush in by her. Ned is in the yard, thanks to Biddy; but where is the ball? He brushes hastily among the weeds where it ought to be, but can not find it. The Manhattaner must be nearing the third base. Oh, where is the ball?

As when in the conflicts of classic story the protecting deity of the hero always appears above his head at the critical moment and gives him the victory, so now a gracious goddess who had hung in breathless anxiety over the doubtful con-test sent down her voice from above and directs Ned's trembling hand.

"Oh, there, Ned, under the lilae!"

Ned grasped the bell and sent it flying in an unerring parabola to the home base, and victory descended with it into Charlie Somers's outstretched hands.

A great shoot went up from the field. Cooper-anis had won the Championship; and the Coop-eranian spectators, one and all, young and old, of both sexes, wanted to devour, almost, their gallant Champions.

Ned Hope still stood in Patch's garden in mate adoration of Nellie Sceners, who was waving her handkerchief from Mrs. Patch's window above; for he now knew whose hand had given them the victory. He threw his cap on the ground, made her the most frantic signs of gratitude and obeisance, and forgetting his usual propriety, threw her kisses with both hands. Nellie smiled -oh, how sweetly!--upon him, and shut the

At the suppor of the Club that evening in bon-or of the Champions, Ned Hope, who sat beside Nellie Somers, being called on to respond to the toast, "The Ladies," alluded with grateful mention to the "lady with the pail" (loud ap-plause), who had never "muffed" the gate a plause), who had never "muffed" the gate a single time during the match. (Laughter and cheers.) He wished, he continued, propriety would permit him to place the credit of this masterly strategy where it belonged (Nellie Somers's face was bent down, and tell-tale blushes and smiles contended for the mastery of it); but he was confident the name of Somers would ever stand among the highest on the roll of honor of the Olympics. (Long-continued cheering and waving of handkerchiefs, hats, and base-ball bets.)

That night, as Ned and Nellie walked homeward, she sold him how she had contrived to win over Mr. Patch to leaving his back-gate un-locked; how the "Patch girls" had ably sec-onded her efforts, although they were not exactonded her efforts, although they were not exactly "the sort of companions she usually chose;" how she had pressed Biddy into her service and thoroughly drilled her; and how she had secured an upper window in the Patch house to watch the game and direct her part of it. "And now you see, Ned," said Neilie, "why I am so "intimate with the Patch girls,"

Ned hung his head in silence till they reached the shade of the front-yard. Neilie had waited natiently, for she knew he would confess be was patiently, for she knew he would confess be was sorry, just as she had said he would. Ned would not go into the house, but drew Nellie aside and took both her hands, whispering:

"Forgive me, Nellie. I should not have "Forgive me, Nellie. I should not have speken as I did had I not loved you. I can not help concerning myself about you. Can't I have the right to do so?"

Nellie's head was by this time on his shoulder, he felt her nod assent. And then came their first kiss.

It was another "match." And Cooperania was almost as much pleased about this one as

THE BRITISH HOUSE OF COMMONS.

VARIOUS AS may be the of the architectural pectensions of the "Palace of Westminster," as the counte Gothic structure of 560 rooms raised on the bank of the Thames has come to be called, there can be but one opinion of the magnitude of the interests which are con-trolled by the men who sit within its walls.

It is popular now to talk of the decadence of Great Britain, and to regard with complacency Macautan's imaginary New Zealander survey-ing the ruins of the modern Babylon from a crumbling arch of a conce magnificent bridge; but before that time of Cockney desolation arrives some few generations of readers must come and go; and therefore it may not be amiss to take a glance at the history and modes of procedure of that powerful body who for six hun-dred years have sat within the walls of St. Ste-phens, and as "The House of Commons" have influenced the destinies of not alone two small islands in the East Atlantic, but the whole civilized world.

For six centuries the Commons of England have made a continuous fight for "more liberty to more people." Sometimes, indeed, that senti-ment has been confined to a very sparse minor-ity, but still has found utternoce, and with no

STERNING ST

3 0; total 15. Munhattans, 1 3 1, and the last | dubious sound, at every critical period of the world's history.

The House of Commons meets at four o'clock in the afternoon, the session frequently lasting until the summer sun is high in the beavens. Let us take ourselves in fancy to the door of the House when an interesting debate is progress-ing, and after elbowing our way through a mass of excited humanity, take a look through the open door. We can see nothing but a crowd of men; it covers the floor of the House, and the benches that rise, rank above rank, on either hand; nothing is visible but a sen of faces and a wall of backs, so packed full is the House, even to the threshold under our feet. One figure alone is distinctly visible: by the camopy overshead, by that long robe and flowing wig, the Speaker may be recognized. He sits raised above the throng, calm and unmoved, the rep-resentative of order. By standing on tip-toe you may get a view of the Leader of the House, who is just closing the debate. His last words have been uttered during a lull in the hideous noises which so generally disgrace the proceed-ings of the House; but as he sits down the storm of noise is renewed by the fierce outeries of "Ay, ay!" and "No, no!" when the Speaker, rising to his feet, reads aloud the motion in debate. That over, the scene changes.

All the doors of the House are thrown open,

All the doors of the House are inrown open, voices ory "Division." Division. I up and down the passages and corridors. And bells repeat the call, set jangling sharp and clear by the touch of an electric spark that in its circuit throughout that great building flies over sixty miles of telegraph wire. Thus summoned, the members hasten toward the House from Library, Refectors or Committee Room.

ry, or Committee Room.

Two minutes of jangling bells and hurrying seet, then the doors of the House slam to, the turn of locks is heard. No one can enter till all is over when once, at the Speaker's order, the door is closed. All within must vote, but the Prime Minister himself can not get in to join the division if accidentally too late.

Inside, for the next quarter of an hour, the strife of tongues ceases; the members are si-lenced by the supreme anxiety of the moment.

The House is a large square room, flanked on either side by two corridors, styled "Division Lobbies," into which all the members file, the Ayes on one side, the Noes on the other. Passing up the House the Ayes face toward the Speak-er, and circle around his chair into the western lobby; the Noss turn their backs on Mr. Speaker, walk down the house and file round into the eastern lobby; then the four "Tellers" bers of the House—two in each lobby, take down the names of the occupants, and count the num-

This occupies some time, for in a full House probably 630 out of the whole 658 members will vote, and then the crowd is serious enough; sometimes, before the division is half over, the result of the vote is visible, and cheers burst from the winning side; and on rare occasions some fun is raised at the expense of a friend of the Gov-ernment who finds himself in the Opposition lob-by, and escapes before it is too late, amidst clouds of good-humored cheff.

In close run fights the excitement lasts till the numbers are proclaimed. The counting in the lobbies concluded, the benches are again crowdobtains concluded, the tenenes are again crowd-ed with members all anxiously waiting the re-port of the Tellers, who, approaching from dif-ferent sides and ends of the House, with diffi-culty meet. At length they face the Speaker in a row, side by side. A cheer suddenly bursts forth—a shout sharp and decisive. It must be the winners who shout like that. The shouts are with difficulty husbed, all angest onits for are with difficulty hushed; all appear quite fu-rious to know more, to hear the exact number of the votes. Triumphantly it is proclaimed aloud by the Teller for the winners; triumphantly the winners echo back their delight.

The Speaker at length announces the decision of the House. Doors every where fly open; the shouts begin again in the lobbles outside; the crowd moves to and fro; feet rush to the telegraph offices; the electric wires are set at work throughout the country; the click, click of the telegraph hand is heard across the sea. The strength of steam-power races after the electric spark; the newspaper presses roll and shake; and in about one hour after the division the railways take up the movement. The damp news-paper sheets are bundled into the vans; the early morning trains speed away laden with the story of the great division. From minute to minute faster and faster, further and further, those tidings spread in ever-widening circles from the Speaker's chair, and all Europe and America can the Commons of England support a Ministry who holdly proclaim the poor man's right to vote. Stormy as are the denotes that forerun such divisions, fierce as is the war of tongues, not for two hundred years have the Commons wit-nessed any approach to open violence. On November 23, 1641, swords were drawn, and in the blind fury the members were all but slunghtering each other; but HAMPDEN, greatly respected by both parties, was able to quell the ot before any blood was shed. Although no blows have ever been struck, yet, undoubtedly, most unseemly displays of temper are often witnessed. And the power of the Speaker is almost aid in repressing these outbursts; for he has to keep order with no pow-er to compel order; he can not commit a member to custody, flagrant as may be his conduct; he can not even order him to quit his place in the House. The utmost punishment the Speaker can inflict is to name a member-to call him his name. An indirect rebuke is contained in this ceremony. When the Speaker addresses a member by his name, that very act implies that he has so conducted himself as to cease for the moment to be a member of the House of Commons; for there the members are never spoken of, or spoken to, save by the title of the seat which they represent. At best, however, an which they represent. At best, however, an indirect rebuke is not much of a punishment; though by an ancient rule there arises "the displeasure of the House." What that amounts to may be gathered from the following sneedote: A gentleman often "out of order," often needing the threat of "naming" from the Speaker, at length asked him: "Well, what follows?" The answer he got from the Chair was: "The result of my naming you? The Lord in heaven knows!" An emphatic mode of confessing that nobody did know.

. .

The Speaker is almost powerless in fact; he The Speaker is almost powerless in fact; he can not enter into a debate, nor can he regulate the order of business; he can not in any way interfere with the arrangement of the work before him. He certainly can call on a particular member to speak; that is, when a dozen or two rise at the same moment, he can say who "casches his eye;" but even this privilege is sometimes denied him; for it is in the power of the House to sattle whom they will bear. An illustration of this peinciple is connected with our own history.

When, in 1782, American Independence had been made a fact, England was eager to acknowlbeen made a fact, England was eager to acknowledge it, withstood only by the obstinacy of the King Gronous III. and his Prime Minister, Lord Nours. The Commons were resolved to stop the war, to throw out the King's War Minister; and after a six weeks' struggle the King and Lord Norrs had to yield. The Minister came down to the House to announce his resignation. He rose to speak; and out of courtesy the Prime Minister is generally heard at once without question.

To be courteous, however, the House was not inclined; they loudly insisted that another member, who had also risen, should speak first, and that Lord Noarm should give way. He was, however, too skilled in debating tactics to be easily silenced; and directly the motion that the other member be heard first was proposed Lord Noarm again started up to speak on that question. There was no stopping him then; and he immediately cut discussion short by announcing that he and the Government had resigned office.

A quorum of the House of Commons is forty that he and the Government had resigned office.

A quorum of the House of Commons is forty members. If one less be present, then it is no House; but though two members only were before him the Speaker could not recognize the fact. If one member proposed a resolution and the other seconded it the Speaker would have to put the resolution to a House of Commons composed only of those two members. It would go on the Journal as a resolution of the whole 658 ombers. The notice of the want of a quorum must come from some member, and then "a count" of the House must take place, debate is at once stopped, for two minutes the division-bells, as before described, are set ringing, and the doors are thrown open. Then the Speaker counts the heads upon the benches, and if the required forty members be not present the House, debate, and all is be not present the House, debate, and all is closed for that evening.

Yes though the Speaker can not himself begin a count, a very slight touch may set him off. One evening a very prosy member was talking to a score of listless, sleepy listeners. He got an-noyed at the paucity of members and the inst-tention of the few present; he fired off a joke about the packed House, the crowded benches, the eager faces he pretended to see around him. the eager faces he pretended to see around him.
The jest was fatal; he had referred to the number present; this done, and the Speaker must determine what that number is. "Order! order!" from the Chair silenced the delater.
Amazed and ignorant of the result of his wit, he saw the House counted at twenty, and his speech was never finished.

The Speaker can not leave his dignified seat unless his chain be loosened by a friendly mem-ber's voice. On one occasion the Speaker was ber's voice. On one occasion and opening pres-actually left sitting without a member being pres-actually left sitting without a member being present, and there he would probably have sat until next day had not a member been fetched back to repeat before him those magic words, "That the House do now adjourn." Even the silver gilt mace, the special emblem of the Speaker's authority, does not belong either to the Speaker or the House of Commons. The mace is only lent to the Speaker by the sovereign, who resun the loan when Parliament is not sitting.

The theory of the mace is that it represents the royal person, which is always supposed to be present at the deliberations of the House. The present at the deliberations of the House. The Commons are elected by the people; but by a principle, or rather a fiction of the law, they six nder write issued by the Crown. Therefore sovereign, as the legal incurnation of the legislative functions, is always presumed to be present.

A mighty part has the mace played in the annals of the House of Commons. When Caosewall ordered it to be removed—"Take that Parliament was scattered to the winds. At the Bestoration it is doubtful if the original mace was recovered, at any rate the Royal Sc claim to be in possession of poration of the City of Londo on of it, so does the Cor-

The power of true authority is not wanting to the Speaker, powerless though he seems. The Speaker has the greater power, because he pos-sesses no power. It is because he represents good order without the means of compelling order that he keeps order. So excellent have been the men holding the office that for many generations no conflict has ever arisen between the Speaker and the House.

A Speaker is elected by royal command on the first day of each new Parliament, but a new man is not necessarily placed in the Chair; indeed, this is now never done. A Speaker once elected continues to preside over successive Houses until removed by death, or by being raised to the peerage and a seat in the House of Lords.

When an election takes place the usual course is for a member distinguished by long experience to suggest who, in his opinion, is most suitable for the Chair; and if no one else be proposed the election passes by acclamation. This is not al-ways the case; the choice of Speaker has been occusionally the subject of long and hot debate. Out of the ten Speakers chosen during the last hundred years the election of seven was carried by a division, not by unanimous consent. After the election the supremacy of the Crown over Parliament reappears. Before a Speaker can act be has to ask and receive the royal ap-

This approval has been always given, with one notable exception: it was refused by King Charles II. to the proudest of his subjects. This was Sir Edward Sermour. At the open-ing of the new Parliament in 1678 the Commons unanimously chose him for their Speaker. Sayunanimously chose him for their Speaker. Sixtucors was personally obnoxious to the King, yet confident that King Charles dared not refuse him acceptance as the Commous' Speaker. Sexucors presented himself at the bar of the House of Lords to fulfill the ancient ceremony. He was more haughty than any peer—the haughtiest man alive. His looks asserted all the pride he felt; diadain glittered in his eyes; and with undannted assurance he addressed the King; "If am come hither for your Maisety's approchation." am come hither for your Majesty's approbation." In such a style no Speaker had ever before addressed a King. King CHARLES was not to be brow-beaten thus; he bluntly refused his consent; SETHOUR went away, no longer Speaker of the House of Commons. Most adignant were they with the King; the Commons thrice addressed him angry remonstrances. In vain; the only answer they could get was an assertion of the sovereign's undoubted right to annul their choice of a Speaker; and the Commous had to yield.

HOME AND FOREIGN GOSSIP.

Wornexper, caves multiply. In fact, it is the fash-m for two or three remarkable, unexplored caves to Wornester, cares multiply. In het, it is the issu-tion for two or three remarkable, unexplored cares to be brought before the public every year. The latest marvel is Proctor's Care, recently discovered in Ken-tucky, not far from the Great Manmoth wonder. A full description of this novelty is impossible, but those mil description of this novelly is impossible, but those who have visibed it are entinosiactic over its marvelous becuties. Vast avenues and halls yot remain unexplored, and the full extent of the cave will probably never be known. The entrance is situated in a romantic valley, and was at first but a narrow crevice in mantic valley, and was at first but a narrow crerice in the rock; but it has been enlarged by blasting, and steps lead the visitor to a serpentine avenue, called the Lebyrinth, which extends about two hundred and fifty yards to what is called the Grand Crossings, where three avenues branch off, leading to separate chambers or domes. "Eentacky Dome" is of vast dimensions and regular shape. It has been demon-strated that a river exists in this cave equal in size to ear in Maxamoth, and in this dome water can say in Manmoth; and in this done water can be heard dropping into this river at regular intervals, striking the surface with a low booming sound, and reverberating from side to side. "Herculean Dome" is believed to be the largest in the world. "Curtain is believed to be the largest in the world. "Curtain Dome," the crowning giory of the cave, is about seventy fact high by twenty wide. On one side a sheet of stalactite, semi-transparent and looped in graceful felds, extends from the top to nearly the bottom of the dome. It appears like a real entrain—the illustent is perfect. There is an endless profusion of stalactites and stalagmites in various parts of the cave. One, called "Lot's Wife," is a perfect representation of a female form, though with an unmistakable Grecian bend! In "Elfin Grotto" groups of stalagmites are found which greatly resemble statues. Also, there are a great number of soncous stalactites, which, when struck with the hand, sunit a mustical sound. Altogether, Proctor Cave seems to be as well worth Altogether, Proctor Cave seems to be as well worth the attention of the curious as any thing of the kind which has been discovered.

Omaha already boasts of three daily papers; and in Omaha already boasts of three daily papers; and in addition to births, marriages, and divorces, one paper announces betrothals, and proposes to have still an-other column headed, Flirtations. Advectisees are wide awake at Omaha. One enterprising individual is printing an edition of the Prayer-book, which he intends to give away to every attendant at church. The right-hand page contains the awast prayers, but the left-hand page is allotted to advectisements. An-other is trying to purchase the privilege of using the outsides of the pulpits for posting the merits of his patent habr-jumper. patent baby-jumper.

Some people seem to have a strenge impulse to taste of every thing that comes across their path. Not long ago a certain Captain Bawden was making some explications in the late of Man, with three miners. One of the men thoughtlessly polied up a carrot-like root and began to call it. The taste was pleasant enough, and he nessed some to his correspicuo. The Oak and began to cat it. The taste was pleasant enough, and he passed some to his companions. The fatal effects were almost immediately apparent, and the man who first partook of the root died within a short time after his repast. The others were saved by emotics. The vegetable proved to be the woody nightshade, a plant which is peculiarly attractive to chil dren from its inxuriant growth and crimson berries.

Eight workmen who had been employed in a cape symptoms of lead poisoning. All were very Ill, and symptoms of sear poseonag. An ware very in an one died. Investigation proved that white-lead was used for fastening on the tope of fancy eticks, and also to whiten them. It is stated that the poison was not inhaled, but that the men were poisoned through not what had based as weathing. washing their hands at meal-tir

A Bavarian chemist, M. Hahn, has disnew kind of guspowder, and has carried specimens to France to be tried at Vincennes. The compound to France to be tried at Vincience. The compound is said to be twice as powerful as the best sporting powder, and costs less than tempence a pound. The materials for making it can be found in all countries. It makes little smoke, leaves little sah, and does not foul the gen; damp does not hurt it, nor a blow explode it; its transportation is perfectly safe; its use highly accessable. highly agreeable.

A sarcastic opponent of "woman's rights" says it a a great convenience to have women as post-mis-recees, because they can not only inform an applicant if there is a letter for him, without looking, but can tell him what is in it.

Some very pleasant exercises took place at New on July 3, in connection with the presentation of an elegant life-boat to Miss Ida Lewis, as a token of ap-recelation of her berotem in rescuing two drowning soldiers near her father's light-house in March last. The boat, which is of the finest workmanship, is called the Resew; and the presentation was in Washingtop Square, which was filled with a crowd of cuthusi astic people. An appropriate presentation address was made by Francis Brinley, formerly President of the Boston Common Council, to which Colonel T. W. Higginson responded on behalf of Miss Lewis. He commenced by saying: "I am requested by Miss Lewis to return thanks in her name to the donors and to the citizens of Newport. Miss Lewis desires me to say that she has pever made a speech in her life, and does not expect to begin now. She has worked out the problem of woman's rights in a different manuet. She has been accustomed to assume the right of helpone has been accustomed to assume the right of the period sion should come."....At the conclusion of Coolons!

Higginson's speech, an elegant rudder-yoke, made of rose-wood, with solid silver mountings, was presented by the Narragauset Boat Club; and two silk flags, a ministure anchor of galvanized iron, with cable, an elegant set of cushions, boat-book, and a velvet carpet were contributed by Captain Kerny and the offiper were communicately to the communication of the steamboat Newport. The demeanor of Miss Lewis throughout the exercises was lady-like and composed, alike free from embarrasement and affectation.

station was in the morning; and in the This pres This presentation was in the morting; and in the afternoon the Research was launched from Long What in the presence of a vast crowd. At the appointed hour, amidst much applease, Miss Lowis seated herself at the cars; and by her quick and vigorous strokes the beautiful boat was guided rapidly toward its destination, the Lime Rock Light-house.

A Vermont editor has invented a new method of rousing delinquent subscribers to a sense of their duty. He writes an oblinary notice of them.

Grasshoppers very nearly conquered a train of care on the Union Pacific Re-road, near Green River, the other day. The passengers were compelled to dis-mount and throw sand on the track before they could

The "Ophthalmos," a sort of self-acting photo graphic apparatus, is in reality a camera provided with mechanical contrivances for automatically un-covering and covering the ions and exposing the plate. It is sent up attached to a small belicon without an operator, and at any required height takes a picture of the surface of the earth beneath it, with all the bearings of the compass accurately marked.

Whales seem to be hunted now just as vigorously as Whales seem to be hunted now just as vigorously as in old times when gas and petroleum were things unknown. The latest suggestion in reference to their capture is to stupefy them by electricity. The harpoon is to be double pointed, and each point is to be the terminal of a wire leading to a powerful electrical battery carried in the whaling boat. It is believed that a good dose of electricity will render the whale teepin, and render his capture easy.

Mr. Spurgeon recently introduced velocip sermon to a congregation of two thousand at Pershore, Worcestershire; and in this wise; "Those new in-Worcesterabire; and in this wise; "Those new in-ventions, which the lade were riding down our streets, would not keep up unless they were kept going; the moment they stopped they fell down; and, in this they were exceedingly like the Christian Church, which would fall unless it was kept constantly moving Velocipedists are warned by the London Lengt that "human sorrows keep pace with human progress." Within the last few months both French and English surgeous have been required to treat a great variety of injuries, resulting from bicycle accidents. These injuries have been dislocations, fractures, sprains, general shock of the nervous system, and special and peculiar accidents resulting from the novel risks attendant on the machine.

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

Concernment Investments.-" Irish lawn is at a

A "Down-East" Yankee has recently invented a rat exterminator, consisting of a sort of powder snuff. The snimal Jecks his head off the third sneese.

Can a source meal be made off a round of beef?

A Varmont man has written to a lawyer in Indian-apolis to know whether he can have a "devers," be-ing minhle to support his wife—asking, moreover, what it will cost. "If it costs $25, I can't pay that worth."

COMPANIONS IN ARMS. Twin bables,

A gentleman one day indiscreetly asked a lady how old site was. She reflected. "Let me see. I was eighteen when I was married, and my husband was thirty; now ho is twice thirty; that is eight; so, of course, I am twice eighteen, that is thirty-siz."

Was young Lochinvar a Scotchman ?- No! a York-shireman. He "came out of the West"-Hiding.

When a Scotch minister told his neighbor that he had preached two hours and a half the day before, the neighbor said to him: "Why, minister, were you not tired to death?" "Aw, ns," said he, "I was in fresh as a rose; but it would have done your heart good to see how tired the congregation was."

A person was asked why he did not take a newspaper. "Became," said he, "my father, when he died, left me a good many newspapers, and I haven't reed them through yet." He afterward became a

WOMAN'S TRUE SPHERE.

WOMAN'S TRUE SPHERE.

With bromstick for javelin, dust-pan for shield, On elother-brosse mounted, away to the field! And panophied thus, let us war to the ladis, But ladies shall vote: yes, and men rock the cradic. Arise, and chant wildly your Amason somets: Then on to the combat, girls! Pil hold your bonnets! Our whole social system without stay remode!: Charge, Mrs. Parlington! On, Mrs. Cardle! Finiter your streamers—unfur! your top-gailants, 'And sall in, my girls, we've Ben Wade in the balance.

Two countrymen went into a hatter's to buy one of them a hat, and were delighted with the sample, in-side the crown of which was insertied a looking-giase, "What is the glass for?" said one of the men. The other, impatient at each a display of raral ignorance, exclaimed, "What for? Why, for the man who buys the hat to see how it fits hom."

Banveyer. Passawr.—We noticed a fellow the other day wearing a large ring with a brilliant red setting; he were it in a queer place—around his eye. Upon making inquiry, be informed as that they didn't cost much, and people generally received and were them who deserved them. He says it was given him.

"How old are you!" asked a railroad conductor of a little girl whom her mother was trying to pass on a hittle girl whom her mother was trying to pass on a only six and a half."

When the enterprising butcher's boy "set up on his own book," did he flud a comfortable seat?

A Vow(a)t or Interestedness O.

During a recitation on natural history in one of our well-known colleges, a student, in the pursuit of knowledge concerning the habits of animats, said: "Froissor, why does a cat, while eating, turn her head first one way, and then the other?" "For the reason," replied the Prodessor, "that she can not turn it both ways at once."

A man who is publicly dined is now said to have sen reverdyjohnsonhed.

A FRIEND AT A PINCE-One who shares his sunf-

A BRIDAL REIGH-The Honey-moon.

OLD HANKS'S STORY.

"Some years ago I took a bed-bug to an fron foun-dry and drupped it into a ladie where the melicel fron was, and had it rem into a aktillet. Well, my old wo-man used that skillet pertiy constantly for the last six years, and here the other day abe broke it all to amach, and what do you think, genthemen, that are insec-jost walked out of his hole where he'd bean lyin' like a frog in a rock, and made tracks for his old roset up stairs! But, by George, gentlemen, he looked mightly pale."

A handsome young bride was observed to be in deep reflection on her wedding-day. One of her bride-maids asked her the subject of her meditations. "I was thinking," the replied, "which of my old beaux I should marry if I should become a widow."

THE LABORET ROPE IN THE WORLD-ED-POSE

BROTHER JONATHAN. "I say, John, here's your Lion burst again, and all the Stuffing is coming out. Better sew him up."

Digitized by Google

THE LOBBY OF THE HOUS

COMMONS, 1869 .- [SEE PAGE 470.]

THE ATHEIST.

WEEF not for them who weep For friend or lover taken thence, for child That falls 'mid early flowers and grass asleep,

Mourn not for them that meers For sin's keen arrow with its rankling smart: God's hand will bind again what He hath torn;

But weep for him whose eyo Sees in the midnight skies a starry done Thick sown with worlds that whirl and hurry by, And give the heart no home;

Who hears amid the dense Lond trampling crash and outcry of this wild Thick jungle world of dim magnificence No voice which says, "My child?"

Who marks through earth and space
A stronge dumb pageant pass before a vacant shrine,
And feels within his immost soul a place
Unfill'd by the Divine;

Weep, weep, for him above, That looks for God, and sees unpitying Pate, That finds within his heart, in place of love, A dull, unsleeping hate.

SO RUNS THE WORLD AWAY.

CHAPTER XXVI.

TWILIGHT AND DAWN.

This next afternoon, when Douglas came as usual to Auriel. Azalea did not meet him in the avenue as had been her wont. He missed the bright face and the enger welcome of voice and hand, and felt annoyed at their absence.

"I suppose her father is requiring her serv-ices more than usual to-day," he thought; but when he reached the house he found old Moore sitting puffing away at his pipe outside the door, looking very happy in the clouds of smoke and in the contemplation of a favorite beagle bitch that was stretched extended in the sun, tranced in a voluptions inertitess from which not all the velvety bitings of four soft-lipped pupples could arouse her.

"Ain't they beauties?" Moore said, complacently, referring to the fat pink-nosed creatures at his feet. "I said to Azalea, 'We musta't keep 'em all, the mother 'ill never be able to being them up;' but Azalea langhed and said,
'Dan't you think Him that makes young things knows best about that?' and then she wouldn't have them killed as first because they were blind, and it seemed cowardly to take advantage of their not seeing, and suddenly souse out their little lives in a pool of cold water; and when they opened their eyes she said they looked at her imploringly, and she couldn't have them hurt; not but what I think she was mistaken there, for I notice that when their eyes first open they don't look up or down, but just in a straight level, as if Nature didn't want them to stare at any thing but the mother's teats until they got stronger. They'll make beautiful dogs," the old man added, with that proud satisfaction which all human beings appear to take in things of their own rear-ing. From the street Ind who prophesies that whole hecatombs of rats will fall victims to the process of his mongrel terrier when it grows to the age of rat planter discovery age of rat-nipping discretion, to the of a thorough-bred horse, who thoroughly believes that an embryo Derly winner exists in the ur couth fool that kicks up its gawky legs in the pad-dock; from those to the human mother stirred by tromisious joy and mighty pride in her first-born—do we not all think that our young crows will possess, if not the pure fairness of the dove, at least the scaring attributes of the eagle? "But where is Azalea?" Douglas asked, impatiently.

"Dare say she's gone to pick up some plums in the kitchen garden. I said I should like a coulding to-day. I can't ent some made into a pudding to-day. I can't ent any thing but soft things now—haven't got any teeth, you know. I've often thought, Mr. Doug-las, that when Eve, woman-like, did the only thing she was told not to, and are that 'crude apple,' she burt her teeth and sent us down toothache among other curses."

Douglas wandered away to the study when be ordinarily read with Azalea,

"Not here," he muttered, discontentedly; "I hate unpunctuality." He sat down to a table near the window, where his own manuscripts were placed. He did a great deal of his work at Auriel now. well-stored libraries afforded him greater facilities for study and reference than he could possibly find in his own limited collection of books; and the atmosphere of remance that haunted the old place was in itself a stimulas to imagin-ation. The summer winds that blew through the open windows stirred into motion a thousand quaint funcies wrought in the faded hang Grotesque faces langhed and wept in perpetral shadow of brown oak earving. Lovely women trailed their draperies, and noble gentlemen clashed their swerds through the dim cor-ridors. There were also two children that belonged to the place—a little girl who sat in a picture near the door, and whose stiff bodice and ormal sush were in odd contrast with her baby face and dimpled arms; and a boy, a truculent warrior, aged eight, whose brown bair tumbled in loving profession over his fieren red coat, while his small fingers were elenched over a mimic fingers were clenched over a mimic pon of death. Azalea used to dream, when weapon of death. and dimples, and the boy, who was all curls and coat, slipped out of the frame while their parents slept, and danced minuets together in the dusky twilight. In dream-land, where the probable and impossible are so mysteriously fused, she was not troubled by the anachronism that the girl lived two centuries later than the boy; and, matter of that, in ghostly realms the difference of a hundred years or so is not likely to disturb ghostly friendships. The spirit of the place ghostly friendships. The spirit of the place breathed of dream-like mystery and gorgeous decay. "I am hundreds of years old," it whis-pered; "none but nobles with powdered hair bow in my saloons or talk stately sentiment to their mistresses on the grass-grown terraces. I am centuries old: do you not see it in my dusty china vases, transparent as a frail shell, and rares than precious gems? in my ancient manuscripts, traced over by hands that were dust with the worms four generations ago? I am dying, but I am royal even while moribund; do not disturb the sanctity of my peace—do not unveil my fad-ing features to the noisy scorn of modern life. Above all, let not any touch ruder than the wind clang the rusty shields which our forefathers made famous in Palestine."

As a rule, Douglas rejoiced to yield himself up to the thrail of fancies like these; but to-day be felt his mood to be one that jarred against the softness of the hour.

"I am getting to be a methodical old man, I suppose," he thought, half smiling, half vexed at his own incomprehensible irritation; "but the fact is, I am put out by not beginning the day in the usual manner. I shall go and look for that girl and get it over, and then I shall be settled in my mind."

That which was to be got over was a long philosophical dissertation, of which Azalea was bound to expinin the substance, and to expatiate on the arguments to be deduced therefrom; this, and a lesson in Italian, constituted her task for to-day. As Douglas left the room in pursuance to-day. As Douglas left the room in pursuance of his intention to seek Azalea, he saw the reflection, in an opposite mirror, of his long, ungainly figure surmounted by the square forehead shaded by a mass of gray hair.

"Who would have thought that I was ever rather a fine fellow?" he said, with a little touch of self-pity and contempt, as, shrinking away from the glass, he passed out at the porch. "I'll go to the garden."

The old garden had once been trimly kept;

the peaches had glowed in sumptuous profu on the walls. The dahliss had kept stately ward in the flower-beds, separated from the golden gravel paths by the several lines of the box border; but now the gravel was obscured by moss and long grasses. The stricken stems of the hollyhocks had, in many cases, fallen helplessly over their prescribed margin, and the crimson hollyhocks blossoms glowed through the soft green shadows of tall nettles; as for the wall-fruits, they were so concealed by the untrained exuberance of their foliage, that none but the quick-eyed birds knew where to discover and peck out the first tempting morsel that grew redly ripe in the sun. To-day the whole garden was sleeping in the slimbrous noon. The lilies drooped their fair heads in the hot drowsy air; the convolvuli re-laxed their tenscious hold of the rose-trees, and axes their tenerous non of the reservees, and trailed so languidly round the prisoned stems, that had not the red blossoms been inert and heavy with over-bloom they might have waved themselves free of their lithe enemies.

Douglas found Azalea under the plum-tree; but she, too, seemed infected by the atmospheric languor, for the plums were lying round her untouched; the misty bloom still veiling their sun-searched sides, save where the bruise of their fall or the trace of a hungry wasp had broken the purple skins. Douglas passed for a moment, and looked at the picture before him—so full of deep repose—so lovely with soft-breathed peace. What was this restlessness within him? What was this trouble in his eyes as they dwell on the girl's fair face and gleaming hair?

She was leaning against the smooth trunk of the tree, gazing dreamily at the old crambling wall opposite, as though her thoughts were wan-dering far away over its ivied summit, floating like the free ether beyond even the solitade of this lonely place. She was roused from her reverie by hearing Donglas step near her, and went

"Oh!" she said, "I had no idea it was so late, Mr. Robert. I should have been out to meet you had I known it was near your hour er coming." Again Douglas felt irritated.

"Don't call me Mr. Robert," he said, testily,
"Well, then, Robert. Only it seems so impertinent for me to call you Robert—you who are—"

"So much older than yourself, I suppose you " he interrupt "Not only that, but so superior," Azalen answered, simply. There was silence between them for a few mosents; then Douglas spoke again:

"Have you learned the task I gave you yes "Yes-no-that is to say, I don't quite know

I looked at it," she plended, spologetically, see-ing a gleam of displeasure in his gray eyes.
"I never knew you negligent before," he said, I never knew you negligent before, he said, hly. "I will leave you now, and return to harshly. my own work.

He rose to go, and she followed him at a distance, meck-eyed, like a dog depressed by its master's rebuke. Presently she carled her little fingers round his arm.

Please forgive me," she said, penitently. "I will study hard to-day."

Her touch seemed to thrill from his wrist to his very heart. He looked down on her, his eyes glorified by a light she had never seen in m before.

"I-I-of course I sorgive you," he stam-

Then he broke from her abruptly, and left her alone in the narrow path, wondering and confused

"How very strange he is to-day," she thought.

"But I must go back to the tree; for, after all, I forgot to pick up the plums for daddy's pud-

Neither tutor nor pupil made much progress with their studies this afternoon. Douglas sat and looked at his manuscript, with his face shadowed by one hand; but the other fell listless by his side, and only a flickering sunbeam moved across the blank whiteness of his paper.

Azalea, crouching down on the window-seat, strove hard to fix her attention on the page be-fore her; but the dahlias nodding in the long grasses outside, and the load humming of the bluebottle on the pane, singing his own dirge in a spider's web, seemed to possess magnetic at-tractions for her eyes and ears. She gave a furtive glance at Douglas, to see if he were noting her inattention. He seemed unconscious even of her presence; so she turned her face to the window once more, and resigned herself to dreamy inertness of thought. It was so pleas-ant to her, the golden warmth of the noon. She liked to see the soft shadows creep up the lawn, and pass their cool veil over the hot languor of She reveled in the faint scents of rice fruits and flowers which haunted the warm air.

"It should always be summer-time and afternoon," she said, softly; and Douglas started at the sound of her voice, as if it had been loud and imperative as a trumpet-call.

He did not speak, however, but followed her glance, and looked out at the sky until the gray clouds of night began to thicken in the north, and the sun glowed in long red flames beyond the western firs.

To her all the murmurous sounds, all the shifting phases of Nature, seemed to convey indistince possibilities of happiness. Hope, vague but sweet as the wistful music of an Æolian harp, whispered in the wind-swayed boughs, and glistened in the golden drifts of clouds that were blown toward the west. To him the autumn evening was full of sadness and desolation. The chill aspect of the lake, covered with dreary-looking patches of weeds; the quick shadow of the wild-fowl gliding over its breast; the weird-like trouble of the darkening sky, filled him with ineffable depression. The shadow of a new despair seemed to be looming behind the shadow of the coming night. Like his companion, he would fain have arrested the progress of time at noontide; not because, like her, he reveled in the present, but because he dreaded the hours of the future. Presently Azales broke the silence:

"What would you do if any one insulted you?" she asked, suddenly; and as she spoke a blash suffused her face, which seemed to Douglas to be only a part of the sunset glow which was streaming over her head. His eyes darkened at her question, and the pain of some old memory whitened his face to more than its usual pallor, as he answered, briefly, "It depends on what description of insult it

"Supposing that it were a very great insult?"

Azalea pursued, in a shy, low voice.

"I should probably revenge myself, and repent my revenge all my life," Douglas said, sadly, "But why need you ask such a question, Azalea?—you who are as secure from insult here as the lovely roses are from being plucked or the birds captured?"

Oh, of course," Azalea answered, confusedly. Once or twice she had thought she would to of the marvelous spectacle she had seen in the lane; but the memory of that audacious soldier always checked the impending confidence. How could she confess to her father or her stem-faced tutor that she had been picked up and kissed by a young soldier, as carelessly as he might pluck a flower and wear it for an instant at his breast? How could she tell them that she was haunted by the memory of a pair of brown eyes, which she would like to meet again, if only to abash them with the glory of her indignation?

Douglas left Auriel earlier than usual to-night, His manner was abrupt and confused : and Azales, scared by his unwonted sternness, felt some-thing of her childish fear of him return as she ed at his moody face.

"I will do better to-morrow," she said, depre-catingly, when he bade her good-night.

"It does not matter," he answered, absently; and then he disappeared through the misty gloom of the avenue, and she went back to her father, and wondered a little with him what had made

Mr. Douglas so cross to-day.

Meantime Douglas had paused cuce at the lower gate of the avenue, and looked round with a half-hope that the girl might be yet waving him an adien. He could not see her; and the closed shutters of the sitting-room excluded from his eyes the solitary light that beamed in the vast and lonely house. The mist and the darkness closed over all, and Douglas hursed home with his heart filled with a bitter feeling, the nature of which he dared not analyze to himself. When he reached his little cottage he sat down in the darkness and solitude of his room, and buried his gaunt face in his hands.

"'Ca!" he meaned, "surely, of all the bitter sufferings of my life this would be the sharpest!"

"I will not go there to-day; I will send an excuse," Douglas said to himself when he awoke the next morning.

On the previous night he had stifled the rising trouble in his mind by the sheer force of determination; but our clearest resolutions fade into helpless confusion under the softening influence of sleep; and in the first dawn of reawakened memory our sorrow strikes us quickly and keenly, with the surprise of a treacherous blow. A et of sullen resentment succeeded the first flush of conscious pain.

"They do not want me excepting as a school-master for her; and she has ceased to love to learn. I will not go." Accordingly, when the hoar approached in which he usually visited Auriel, he dispatched a note to Azalea announcing that he had engage-ments to-day which would prevent his leaving home. He felt a certain satisfaction in surmis-ing that the old man and the girl would miss his companionship; and with this reflection he strove to calm the restless irritation which possessed him all the afternoon. In spite of strenuous efforts be made to occupy his mind, he was continually haunted by the aspect of the scenes in which he usually passed these hours of the day. There was the old oak door of the library creaking heavily on its hinge; there was the Virginian creeper drooping down pink-tipped tendrils athwart the diamond-shaped window; there was the quick mider counterfaiting recess there was the quick spider counterfeiting repose on the window-ledge until its buzzing prey came within reach of its long arms. The lights and shadows that were flying across the meadows opposite were playing now in those lonely cham-bers, where the silence was rarely disturbed save by the twitter of birds or the music of one gentle human voice, and where only one fair face made human voice, and where only one fair face made a living light in their dusky gloom.

At Auriel the day was lapsing with the softness of dreams. He could fancy he heard the old-fishioned clocks chiming away time in mellow tinkles that, reverberating through the long corridors, sounded like the soft knell of lament for the vanishing hours. He tried only to image to himself non-sentient objects. He tried to limit his sight to the grotesque faces on the tapestry hangings—to shut his ear to all but the low whistle of the bird and the rush of the wind; but, despite his every effort to compel his thoughts into a prescribed groove, Azalea's hair would gleam in the dusky shadows of those familiar chambers—Azalea's voice would ripple in the summer wind that blew through the window, and her fingers seemed to dimple all over the pages of the book he was reading. He closed the volume impatiently, and walked up and down the room. The low ceilings and narrow space oppressed him with a sense of restraint. He ld have liked to thrust the walls asu with his strong arms, and to trample away the boards under his feet. He passed into the little garden, and vented his restlessness in hurried parties, and vented his resussasses in harrow-pacings to and fro on the narrow slip of gravel. He looked up once, and saw the red gables of Auriel chining in the evening sun. Turning abruptly in another direction, he walked away down the fields, and never stopped until he reached a small town about eight miles distant, where he sometimes called for letters at the post-office.

There was none for him to-night; indeed, it was very seldom that the seclusion of Douglas's life was intruded on by any communication from the outside world.

He received and read those echoes of the world's hourly life, the newspapers, but like a limpet that clings to its rock, cold and impassive amidst the whirl of waters and the thunderous confusion of storms, he, in the dead calm of his self-immolated existence, heard without feeling the surge of the outside current.

He did not care to glance at his papers to-night. The records of party clamor, of ru-mored war, of the black lists of scandal and crime, would not accord well with the quies peace of this remote country village, steepe it was in the secene splendor of sunset, shiny-headed babies played outside the cottages, the opened doors of which revealed occasional glimpses of calm phases of domestic life. Here a woman, with her head bent over her needle-work—there an old man, watching the united gambols of a child and a puppy tumbling to-gether over his crutches. Douglas looked wist-fully at the faint twinkling lights that were begianing to glimmer in some of the windows. There was "home" for every one but himself, he thought. He saw a day-laborer slouching toward one of these lowly homesteads; and the whilom Sybarite and dilettante grudged the wearied hind the rough but cordial greeting that welcomed him to the little dark, close room, of which the most costly ornaments were a solemn-looking white-faced clock, and one of those large imitation japan tea-trays, which occupy in cot-tages a position ordinarily assumed by family portraits in loftier mans...us, i. e., the place of honor over the chimney-piece.

A fat, unwashed-looking beby contrived with great difficulty to raise the garden latch with the tips of her round fingers, and then ran crowing with delight to the new-comer, who, tired as he seemed, was not too weary to toss the chuckling dimpled burden on to his shoulder. A brown-faced gaunt woman was busying herself within over a (luxury of luxuries, only to be indulged in during the fatigues of harvest time) hot supper, consisting of boiled potatoes and a piece of fat bacon. A bigger girl sat at the door, hemming a school sampler. A boy of eight was looking meditatively at the circles his heels described in the dust; an inward trouble caused him to be restless; be was making desperate efforts to learn his Catechism, impelled thereto by the recollection that the vicar's annual schoolfeast was approaching, and that buns were only for little boys who could give their orthodoxy fluent expression. He asked himself glibly what his name was, and answered with equal readi-ness as to his godfathers and godmothers having given him the patronymic of Joey Summers. But after that all was chaos, or rather marbles. Some disreputable little heathers, who under no circumstances could ever experience the blessings of buns and conversion, were playing marbles under the village oak. The student, gasing at under the village cak. The student, gazing at the rolling pebbles with hungry longing in his eyes, felt each article of his faith was blurred out eyes, felt each article of his faith was blurr by an illicit desire to join the game of taw.

Donglas, walking swiftly down the wide lane called by coursesy a street, noticed every detail of this homely scene. He felt as a famished bird might that soars over in its flight heaps of golden grain, showered down for the use of domesticated fowls.

That squalid cottage was filled with loveliness for the tired workman. The house might be small and dark, the chambers closely packed as cells in a bee-hive, but there was refuge from burning suns and biting winds. There was the tendance of hands, rough, it is true, but made gentle by love. There was the sweet human pride of paternity, and that sense of comfort in fellowship, which is in such strange contrast with the solitude of the vast, dark high-road we are compelled one day to traverse alone.

The shadow of a rare and undefinable pathos

The shadow of a rare and undefinable pathos The shadow of a rare and undefinable pathos filled Douglas's eyes as he turned his back on the picture of life's fruition, and walked in the direction of his silent, desolate abode.

How was it that the name he had striven to repel from his memory all day leaped to his lips simultaneously with the sigh he breathed for unstainable social joys?

"Azalea," he murmured, softly; and as his ears heard what his heart had uttered his pale cheeks flushed and his head drooped lower on his breast. He walked nuickly on, as though cheeks flushed and his head drooped lower on his breast. He walked quickly on, as though his hasty footstreps could stamp out the fire that was smouldering in his mind; passed by the cottage windows, twinkling like multitudes of rubies in the sun; passed the faded sign of the village inti—an anohor painted on a board which had been rifted in two by accidents of time and weather. In a little while the sign wavered in darkness; the windows reflected inward instead of outward light; the doors were all closed; and the peace of night deepened over the quiet town and over the fields through the shadows of which and over the neids through the shadows or which Douglas's tall figure passed a darker moving gloom. He thought with repagnance of his gray-walled cottage standing low in the green glooms of the Auriel lane. He pictured to himgray-wanted cottage standard, and as a gray-gluoms of the Auriel lane. He pictured to him-self the sallen sky darkening above its brown thatch, the dest-wet reses—their red glow ob-scured by the dask—nodding round the small casement. For the first time for three years the deuse peace of his life seemed distasteful to him. He felt a wild desire to stand on rugged declivi-ties, to catch the msd foam of the torrent in his hands, to breathe stormy airs that whirl round the misty summits of snow hills. There was a strange tumult in his heart which accorded ill with the dail still atmosphere that surrounded him. His thoughts reverted at in-surrounded him. His thoughts reverted at in-tervals to the wild freedom of his old life; he fracied that he would be more at ease if he were overpowered by fatigue, or menaced by danger, than he was in the calm security of these civil-

He brushed the dew off the woodbine, and trod the trailing bramble under foot in his hasty transit through the fields. In his restlessness he walked as quickly as if one who loved him wanted as querkly as it one was loved him awaited his return; but when he neared his cottage-door his steps slackened, and he paused at the garden gate, half dreading to encounter the dark loneliness of his small sitting-room.

There are times when existence is as a shroud which swathes one who yet lives and rebels feebly against the borror which oppresses him. On this night Douglas felt life to be all clouds; the myrind worlds that sparkled above conveyed to him no sense of immensity. He passed through the vast fresh air on his way to a vault fashioned by himself. He had been desolate, but free. Now he was desolate, but in bonds.

CHAPTER XXVII.

"BOW DO I LOOK, DEAR?"

Twe time was evening, the place the Misses Orme's dressing-room at Orme Castle. It was the night of the ball, and all the preparations for the furthcoming entertainment were completed, with the exception of Rosa and Amelia's toilets. At this moment Rosa was in the grub stage— her hair twisted tight in an ungainly bundle at her hair twisted tight in an ungamity bundle at the top of her head, and her face buried in the folds of a soft towel; for, "On nights like these," as Amelia said, solemnly, "friction must not be applied to noses prone to shine." Amelia was developed into the butterfly; her hair was friezed in golden profusion over her forehead; fresh in golden profusion over her forehead; fresh shining draperies flowed about her. Her ornaments were pearls; her lips were red and her shoulders white. Altogether she was a charm-ing picture of studied innocence. "I'm done," she announced, triamphantly. Then, in a solemn tone, she put the question that heads this chapter.

"I'll look directly," came in a stifled voice from behind the towel; and in the interim Ame-lia advanced and receded before the mirror with reflected there.

"Come into the light," Rosa said, when the face-drying was completed.

Amelia obeyed meekly.

"Um, pretty well; but a little too much pig with one ear, you know;" with a significant glance at one rosy cheek.

It was a point of honor that the sisters should speak the truth to each other on these occasions, however unpleasant it might be to hear or to Amelia looked at herself again, "You're Amelia tooled at nerseir again. Four-quite right," she said, in a tone of deep convic-tion. "I shall put a listle more on the left side."

"Two wrongs make a right," as the horse-couper said when he put a bean in his horse's sound foot," quoted Rosa, pertly.

"Where did you pick up that stable slang?"
Miss Orme said, disdainfully. "From pape. But do go away, Amelia; you are taking up all the glass; and I shall never be "People always think so if they see other peo-ple dressed first," Miss Orme observed, phlag-matically, "I shall go and see if Lady Disma is ready. She has had a box down from town; ready in time

Marie Carlos Company of the Company but," she added, with emphasis, "one comfect is, do what she will, she can't make herself look eighteen."

"Come back," called Rosa, "before I go down, and tell me if there is too much powder on my nose. Candle-light can not be trusted."

Amelia promised assent, but she did not keen faith; for on reaching the one sitting-room whi had been left comfortable in the general exodus of furniture she found Captain Mowbray sented in an easy-chair, deep in the perusal of Ruff's Automa Guide to the Tarf.

"I called to see your father about a horse," he explained, in answer to Miss Orme's pleased look of surprise. "He asked me to dine with him in his library, and to send into Brighton for my dress clothes. I hope I shall not be in your way here."

. "Oh no!" Amelia said. Then she wondered what o'clock it might be, and where pape was; and, in fact, indulged in all the little meaningless speeches and movements which are apt to characterise the manner of a very young lady when in the society of the man she prefers. Meanwhile Lady Diana Merton, who was a visitor at the house, and who had managed to locate herself in the most comfortable sait of rooms it possessed, was scated in an upper chamber, looking out of her window, which commanded a fine view of the sun-flushed down commanded a fine were of the sin-thinden down and the quivering ridge of far-off sea.

Make herself eighteen she certainly could not. Almost the only triumph beauty can not uncomplish is the reversal of Time's hour-glass. But who that looked on Lady Di now would have wished that the golden sands had marked at hour bas in her life? To the mellow flush of a land that the golden sands had marked at hour bas in her life? peach in that warmest, ripest moment ere it drops to earth—to the rich fragrance of the gardenia blossom as it expands in the heat of noon—to the last ten minutes of a fast run to bounds (but this simile is not poetical)—to aught rise that is emblematical of perfection her mature loveliness might aptly be likened. Her skin was as fair, might apily be likened. Her skin was as har, her tresses as insuriant, as ever; her levely gray eyes were not a whit less full of sweet content than when they first gazed with lazy astisfaction on the euchainment of Thurstan Mowbray. With a figure even more luxurionaly beautifut than heretofore; with lips yet red and full, and chin still round and dimpled, you will not be surprised to hear that Lady Diana was as charming, as malific, and as unprincipled as she had ever been.

She was not a woman to resign her unholy row-She was not a woman to resign her unholy pow-er of charming until the power itself failed her. Then she would have wit enough to discern her failure and retire from the arena where she was not strong enough to conquer. She thought it a great pity that she should ever grow old. She deplored the inevitable necessity, but she meant to bow her head gracefully to the blight of Time; and so soon as she found that men cessed to love, and women to hate her, it was her intention to become devout and build a church, if possible; or, if that was too expensive, at least put up a memorial window in one. Meantime there was no need yet to design the plan of the place of worship nor choose the subjects for the stained giass, so she ate, drank, and was as merry as it was in her shallow, yet unquiet, fervid nature to be. She was not yet in full dress, for she liked to be perfectly comfortable as long as possible, so she sat enwrapped in the folds of a gray-tinted Cashmere dressing gown, sipping a cup of tea and turning over the leaves of a novel until tes and turning over the leaves of a novel until such time as the sound of carriage wheels should warn her of approaching guests. Novels did not amuse her very much, she thought, as she put down this one gently, and took to stroking her spaniel's ears; she could recall infinitely more romantic incidents in her own career than those ordinarily recorded in faction. She had known greater sorrow of heart represented by a fer commonplace words than ever was expressed in the most elaborate descriptions of fabled grief. She had caught glimpses of direr tragedies in the dramas of life than any that have darkened the pages of a three-volume novel—darker and more terrible because the guilt was real and the pain veritable. Of all human passions that of love seemed to ber most inadequately delineated in books. That of which she read sounded but as a very feeble echo of what she had herself heard wrung from the pain of living hearts. She whose name had been a joy and a rapture, a wall and a curse of the lips of men—she who had heard it breathed in every imaginable ondence of emotion, from the low murmur of hinted tendemess to the short, quick utterance of wounded passion—she who had seen faces pale and flush at her words, had turned the wise into fools, and had exalted weak natures by the strength of the sentiment she was able to inspire —was it no wonder she felt the ordinary platitudes printed on the subject very insufficiently described a passion which is at once the strength and the weakness, the glory and disgrace, of man's mutable nature?

Lady Diana was aroused from her contemplation of the spaniel's glossy head by the sound of two voices outside the window; one was that of Amelia Orme, and Lady Di at once understood that Miss Orme's companion was not of her own sex.

"So Amelia has a flirtation on hand," mused Lady Di. "I wonder why it is that girls got so full of affectation on these occasions. Why do they giggle when there's nothing to laugh at, and s up a strange voice when their own would answer the purpose equally well?"

Lady Diana arose and lenned out of the window.

"I might as well have a look at him," she thought; "if I find I do not admire him very much I'll respect the laws of bospitality and not disturb Amelia's sport."

Contain

"Let me disengage this for you," Captain Mowbray said, in a low, tender voice to Miss Orme, referring to a stray blossom of overhauging elematis, which had become entangled ! in her fluffy braids. The clematic grew directly under Lady Diana's window, and Thurstan was lingering rather longer than was necessary over his task when he accidentally looked up, and saw a woman's head and shoulders—a lovely living picture in a frame-work of dull red bricks and rippling ivy leaves.

The senset firshed the fair face and warmcolored masses of hair with mellow glory; the soft gray tints of the wrapper folded over her bosom, and the dark crimson rose which nestled behind one ear, completed the perfection of col-oring which Titian would have exulted to imilize. As Captain Mouliray caught sight of the serene, downcust face, Miss Orme gave an exclamation of pain and anger,

"Beally, Captain Mowbery, you hart me very much. You've torn out quite a big lock," putting her hand to the disarranged braid.

I beg a thousand pardons. I am so grieved at my stupidity," he murmured in a low voice. Then he looked up at the window and took off his hat. "I am so delighted to see you again, Lady Diana," he said aloud. "If you are not shready hampered by engagements, may I hope for the honor of the second valse with you?"

Lady Diana smiled pleasantly.
"I never dance now. It is the nature of young things to frisk about, young kids, young fambs, young kittens, and young girls may do so with propriety; but at my age one should be a spectator, not a participator in spring-tide gam-

But in her heart Lady Dians thought that her old popul had made considerable progress since their set meeting, when he allowed her, as he said, "To get a rise out of him."
"The second valse, indeed?" she muttered, as she represented to her tollet-table. "Fancy any chalc leaking at me and asking me to be second in any thing!"

His self-possession annoyed her more than she exceed to acknowledge to herself. He was handsomer than ever, she thought—much too hand-some for that pasty-faced chit, Amelia,

"Why do young girls always wear white dresses?" she said, looking spitefully at Miss Orme's retreating figure. "These emblems of Orme's retreating figure. "These emblems of virginity always develop red elbows so forcibly." Then she sat down to her writing-desk and took out a little volume bound in bine velvet and guardent a strate volume bound in this variety and glassed of a Bramah lock.

"There is still an hour to spare," she thought,
"before the company will arrive. I will aid a few axioms to my book of moral reflections."

PART L-LADY DIANA MERTONS MORAL REPLECTIONS.

Never write compromising letters to a married man. Sconer or laser they will fall into the nands of the inevitable wife. Perhaps he leaves them in his coat pocket, and from the time of that demestic esciencies in the house of the Captain of King Pharaoh's guard to the present date much mischief has arisen from the shifting of a

It would be better to avoid lovers with legal encumbrances altogether. It is a pity, too; for there are some charming Benedicks whose only fault is that they are Benedicks. Be wary with those whose sives also "Live in Areadia." The wife who is (there are no has beens in this case, "once a coquette always a coquette") a flirt, brings all the advantages of finished experience ist ber in detecting the clumsy man of her spouse.

Supposing you evade the dangers of correspondence, there are many other perils to be considered with reference to this "twy-natured" class. Generally the bushend is the person least considered in his bousehold; will be not some connected in his bousehold; will be not some day, when over-oppressed by the inferiority of his position, reassert his degreity at your ex-pense? Will he not drop dark hints of some one who knows how to appreciate him, and os-tentationsly show the new locket at his warch-chain, or simper at the mention of your name? Some poor weak fools there are who do these things are and like other are who do these things once, and, like other enslaved races, fall lower after their futile attempt at rebellion.

Then there is the good and conscientious man, whose virtue increnses as his feet grow weary of treading the forbidden path. With a burst of moral sentiment, he will suddenly confess all to his wife; together they anothematize the snare, and weep over the snared. He adds treachery and cowardice to his former vice, and imagines that the abnegation of the sin he has ceased to desire is an evidence of sincere penitence. This is the most despicable of all the species.

If you have a heart, give it not to a married man, nor in any way make yourself uncomfort-able for his sake. Sooner or later he must and will resign you for his wife, Habit and the law give her an unassailable vantage ground. The horse that escapes to the pasture, and kicks up his heels many times with exceeding great joy in his fictitious freedom, will return meekly to his stall at the feeding-hour. And the married man (whatever he may swear in the delight of a novel wickedness) will always return to the bourne where his easy-chair, his slippors, his daily occupations, the mistress of his bouse, and the mother of his children awar mm.
Section has a decided moral tradency. Wives, be patient with your husbands. Should be make a slight derinden from the paths of conjugality, the beautiful parlance. "make you will be able to, in sporting parlance, "make a good thing out of it." He will tire of his new love as certainly as he has tired of you; and you have in your favor nine points of the law.

Trust no woman. Nor men either, if you can help it. I have sometimes wished in my heart that all men were dumb, and unable to write their own name-much less mine. They seldom say any thing worth remembering. There is a dreadful sameness about their protestations. Their caligraphic efforts are rarely of sufficient importance to art to atone for their terrible carelessness about blotting-paper. Blotting-paper and la-dies'-maids are the support of the Divorce Court.

Your unmarried men are, as a rule, to be moderately trusted—unless, indeed, they are prone to habits of intemperance. You must not object to their pulling up their shirt-collars uneasily when you are mentioned, or to their blacking after their pulling and the shirt tenders. blushing when they meet you, or to their in-discreet and violent defense of you to your spiteful rival. These are the follies of youth, and although they betray the boy's feelings they do not necessarily imply your complicity.

My reflections in this place chiefly concern the bigger and stupider sex. In another part of my note-book will be found a few observa-tious on the willer half of humankind.

PART IL-GENERAL AXIOMS.

Our greatest misery generally arises from our overrating ourselves. We get dreadful hurts through our vanity, and think it is our hearts that suffer. I approxiste inyself (no woman succeeds who does not), but I am musty blinded by my self-esteem. I know when my nose is red, or when I am otherwise looking plain. Then I concent myself from the view of mankind. Some women are less modest, and are consequently less successful.

If you have genius, conceal it as you would a gray hair, or hide it, as Brutus did, under the appearance of idiotey.

Tact is the supremest weapon in the hands of a woman. It is the fine tool that rivets the chains

At the first short letter your lover writes you, diemiss him. No man who loves has ever need to excuse a neglect to his mixtress. Let not your lover feel that he had ever made a sacrifice (even of a cigar) to you. Promote his comfort in small matters, partly because it is Christianlike to afford some compensation for the terment you inflict on him, chiefly because his attention should never be distracted from you by little worries.

Never forget that men's vanity is greater than their hearts. They will forgive a wound to the latter somer than an insult to the former. Never love at all where you wish to be loved greatly.

As no one is abused save to a willing listener, the friend who tells you she has heard you calum slated must be ranked with the calumniator.

Listen to nothing your friend wishes to tell on for "your own good," and because it is 'her duty;" it will assuredly be something you for unplessant.

An Englishman will trust his friend with his mistress sconer than wish his horse.

No fire is so difficult to rekindle as one where the ashes are already burned black. But every man has his price, and can be reached either through his vanity, his intellect, r his passions.

It will be understood that the concluding portion of Lady Diana's MS, was written after the little episode at the window. When her toilet was completes she looked at herself in the mirror with mingled admira-tion and regret. The admiration was for her-self, the regret for some one unknown. It may be premised that he was of the masculine gender, for her maid heard her murmur something which sounded like " Poor fellow!"

ARTESIAN FISHES.

WE have all beard of Artesian wells, but a onderful novelty is now announced in Algeria in the shape of Artesian fisheries. A well lately snak at Am Sala to the depth of forty-four metres three up not only a large body of water, but, to the great surprise of the engineers, an immunera-ble quantity of small fish. Those subterraneous vertebrae are described as being on an average half an inch in length, and resembling whire-bait both in appearance and taste. The female is distinguished from the male by the presence of dark-colored stripes on the upper part of the body. From the fact of the sand extracted from these wells being identical with that which forms the bed of the Nile it is concluded that an underground communication must exist between them and that river.

TRANSPLANTING TREES.

In European ciries, and especially in Paris, the success attending the restoral of large trees of all kinds desirable for shade and ornomental purposes was long ago settled beyond all question. Instead of setting out pipe-stems and unit-ing two generations for them to grow into approciable dimensions, go to the forest and select whatever sort of tree may be desirable.

Autumn and winter are the best time for their removal. First of all take the bearings of the tree with a true company. Then dig entirely round it, the centre of the circle being the trunk, Then dig and the circle itself being ten, fifteen, or twenty feet in diameter, so as to be quite beyond all the Cut the trench full two feet essential roots. deep-st any rate, below the frost. With long levers raise the mass, supporting the tree perpendicularly by ropes in the hands of assistants, and, finally, slide it on to a drag or a bread, strong sled. Horses or oxen may then trans-port the lead to where a hole has been dug to receive it, the exact facing of the tree in regard to points of compass as before being observed. It will thrive precisely as it did in its primitive locality, without the least indication of having been any way injured by the voyage. park might as readily be thus created in a week as in half a century. Our Central Park has been thus improved; and the Champ de Mars, at l'aris, was thus transformed into a grove for the Exposition in a few weeks,

EMILIO CASTALLAIL

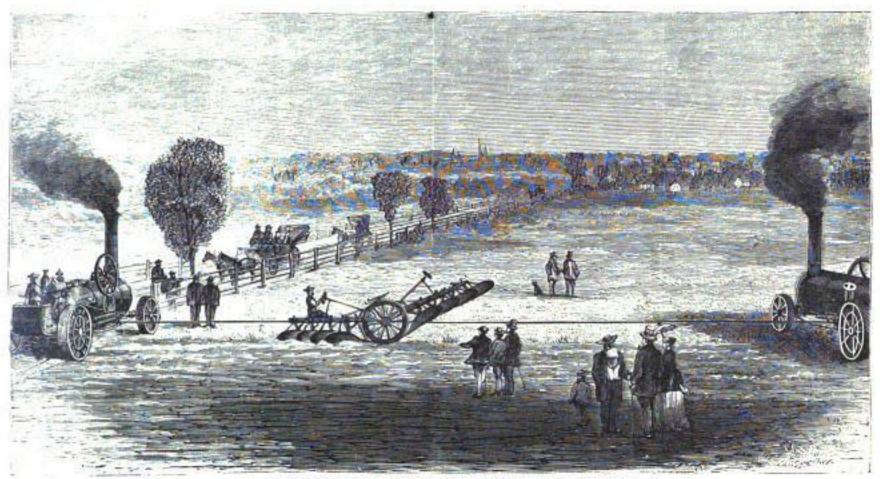

CUBA.

The new Captain-General of Cuba, Canallero de Rodas, has commenced his administration with great vigor. Fortunately for him, he has had no serious conflict with the Volunteers. He has commenced operations against the insurgents, who will find him a more wary and energetic foe than his predecessor. He has also issued a proclamation closing all the ports on the east end of the island, except Sagus, Caibarien, Nuevitas, Gibara, Baracoa, Guantanamo, Santiago de Cuba, Manzanilla, Santa Cruz, Sasa, Trinidad, and Cienfuegos. Vessels and their crews, if armed, engaged in transporting filibusters to Cuba, are declared pirates. Spanish cruisers on the high seasure instructed, in boarding vessels, to observe all the restrictions as to the right of search contained in the treaties of Spain with the United States and Great Bertain.

the United States and Great Britain, Count Valmassina, the Spanish General commanding in the Bayamo District, and also known as "The Butcher," on account of his cruel proclamation issued in the spring, has recently distinguished himself by the capture of a rebel intrenched regiment, to form part of the division of General Echagua, who opened the campaign in 1839. He is said to have distinguished himself on many occasions, and particularly by the cool and able manner in which he manouved his regiment in a dangerous position at the storming of the Seragiio. He won the reputation during the war of a rough, frank soldier, who in camp merged all distinction of rank and mingled
all distinction of rank and mingled freely with his men, and in the field always led his regiment on foot and shared the danger and hardships of the commonest soldier, while, at the same time, he maintained such strict discipline as made his command a model for the army. He returned to Spain in command of a brigade, and was some years later proposed to the Queen, by O'Donnett, under whose eye he had fought, for the rank of Field-Marshal, and was also (in 1866) appointed to an important post, of which he was deprived by a change of ministry the following year. He then retired with his family to the town of Zamora, where he remained until sent, with a number of other prominent generals, under an order of banishment to the Camary Islands. After a residence

COUNT VALMASEDA.

STEAM PLOW ON THE FARM OF COLONEL W. C. PATTERSON, NEW JERSEY .- [SEE PAGE 478.

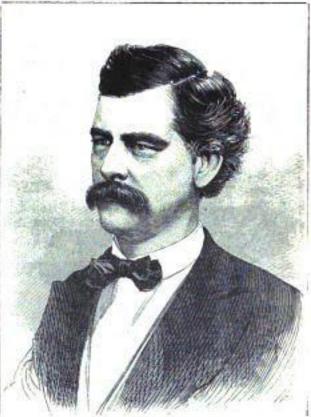

CABALLERO DE RODAS, THE NEW CAPTAIN-GENERAL OF CUBA.

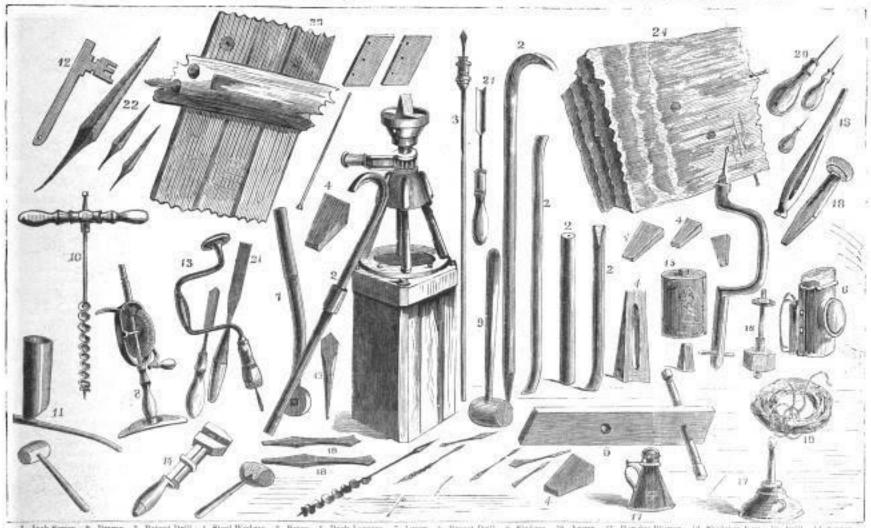

camp at Sagua, containing a powder-mill and a quantity of war material, being, in fact, a complete

Count VALMARED first came prominently before the Spanish public in the year 18-4, when, having reached the rank of Chief of Staff, he offered his services to the Liberal party, who had risen in arms. He reached the field of the battle of Vicalvaro when the strife was at its height: but was wounded by a discharge of grape before he could incorporate himself with the Liberal army. He was discovered by his friends upon the field the same night which closed the battle, and was hidden in the town until he could be servetly converted to the house of one of the embassadors in Madrid, where he lay for a long time in so precurious a state that his life was despoired of. After several dangerous operations for the extraction of the meant from the wormds in his head, he finally recovered, to find the revolution triumphunt and himself ramed to the commencement of the war with Morocco he was ordered to Africa with his

of a few months be was recalled by the revolution of Cadix in September last, and arrived in time to receive from General Sen-RASO a command at the battle of Alcolen, which decided the fate of Queen Isanet.i.a. He was fur-ther promoted by the Pra-visional Government, and made Director of Artillery and Captain-General of New Castile. His deeds in Cadia, Serille, and Malaga, in the suppression of Republicans who rose in arms against the abuses of those they had put in powrisen against the Queen speak little for his liberalism or that of his party. He was deputy to the Cortes from Zamora when he received his appointment to Cuba. He is a man of low stature, somewhat adranced in life, and has the reputation, among those who know him, of possessing an indomitable will and great energy; and be is unsernpulous in carry-ing out what he conceives to be his dary. He ar-rived in Culsa at a time when his abilities were put to the severest test, and when he could only gain the approval and support of his countrymen by sanc-tioning an indiscriminate slaughter that made him

GOVERNOR GILBERT C. WALKER OF VIRGINIA. PROTOGRAPHED BY C. R. REES & Co., ROSENON....(SEE PAGE 478.)

Jack-Screw.-2. Jimmy.-2. Patent Brill.-4. Steel Wedges.-3. Series.-5. Back Lancers.-7. Lever.-5. Breast Drill.-2. Steelges.-30. Auger.-31. Printer-Biomer.-32. Stellens Rev. -13. Brills.-13. Powder Christia.-13. Powder Christia.-14. Brills.-15. Drills.-30. Fines.-30. Awis.-31. Chiscia.-22. Files.

BURGLARS' IMPLEMENTS USED IN THE OCEAN BANK ROBBERY, NEW YORK CITY .- [See Page 478.]

execrable to the whole world. The bare fact of such a man being appointed at such a time shows very clearly that the only liberalism Cuba can expect from Spain is the liberalism of the sword.

During the short interregnum since the rising of Cadiz, in September last, until the election of the present Regent, for the first time in three hundred years the voice of truth could be mised in Spain without being silenced by the garrote or the Inquisition, and it has poured forth from the mouth of EMILIO CASTILLAI—the great Republican leader and the champion of right and justice against theoracy and aristocracy—in tones so forcible and impussioned as to unsettle the very foundation of the things that were, and stamp him one of the greatest orators of the present day. In the late debate in the Spanish Cortes upon the Caban question he made a brilliant speech in her defense, from which an idea may be formed of his principles. He stated that he followed only the dientes of his own conscience, because he believed that its dictates were those of justice: that he did not hold two opinious, but that all that he spoke in private he dared to maintain in public before the whole world; and that Cuba had suffered great injustice at the hands of Spain, after having been deceived with false promises year after year since 1837, when her depaties were refused admittance to the Cortes and sent away unbeard. She had been invited again to send representatives to place their grievances before the government, and after having done so, had again been put off with false promises; and the only answer to their just claims was to impose upon them a new and odious contribution. He maintained that the rebellion was not the work of a day nor a year, but the final result of years of error and flagmant injustice; that in the aineteenth century a people could no longer be kept under the receiver of that great air-pump called Despotism; that it was no longer possible to maintain Cuba and Porto Rico like two great blots on the broad field of Democracy that covered all America; that it was difficult for a people to govern itself, hut impossible for one people to govern another people; and that neeling but liberty and a government like that of Canada could preserve hercolonies to Spain.

THE "RED STOCKINGS" AT HOME.

We give on this page an illustration of the presentation of the champion but to the "Red Stocking" Base-Ball Club on its return to Cincinnati, July 1.

Upon its arrival at the depot the Club was received and escorted through the streets by the citizens, who gave it a perfect oration. In the afternoon a display game was played on the Union Grounds, where the presentation of the lat took place. The lat is of ash, and measures twenty-seven feet in length, nineteen inches in diameter at the bat, and mine and a half at the wrist. It is proportioned like the regular play-bat. Handsomely painted upon it is the inscription, "Champion Bat, 1869. To Cincinnati Base-Ball Club, First Nine—H. Whigher, Alassos, Waterinan, Sweary, McVer, Fowler, Brainann, G. Wright, Leonard, Gould, Hurley," It was presented by the Club and the Cincinnati Lumber Company.

PRESENTATION OF A CHAMPION BAT TO THE "RED STOCKING" BASE-BALL CLUB, CINCINNATI, OHIO, ON ITS RETURN HOME. -[SKETCHED BY J. A. GERVIA.]

Mr. Carter Gazlay, Secretary of the Cincinnati Lumber Commany, made a graceful presented by the Club and the cinnati Lumber Commany.

Mr. CARTER GAZLAY, Secretary of the Cincinnati Lumber Company, made a graceful presentation speech, alluding to the twenty-one viotories which had been won by the "gentlemen of the first Nine" without a single defeat. A large number of speeches were also made at the banquet at the Gibson House in the evening by prominent gentlemen of Cincinnati.

HON. GILBERT C. WALKER, GOV-ERNOR OF VIRGINIA.

The election of Mr. Walker as Governor of Virginia is very significant. It is a victory for General Grant's administration, the result being in consonance with the President's policy as to reconstruction. It is a victory for impartial suffrage and universal amnesty. Governor Walker is piedged to support the policy of the Government as regards the treatment of the colored race; but he is opposed to the continued disfranchisement of the whites. "We must remember," he said at Norfolk, just after the election, "that we have succeeded on the platform of universal seffrage and equal rights; and we must see that those who opposed us, as well as those who supported us, have all their rights, and are protected fally by the law." The returns from eighty-four counties gave Walker a majority of 21,000. He was until a few years ago a citizen of Binghamton, New York, where he was born. In 1856 he was nominated by the Democratic party in the County of Tinga for Attorney-General, but was defeated. He soon after removed to Chicago, where he identified himself with the Documan party. Since his residence in Virginia he has distinguished himself as an able function. He is known as a man of sterling integrity.

BURGLARS' IMPLEMENTS.

One of our illustrations on page 477 shows the largiars' implements discovered in the Ocean Bank of this city after the robbery of Jane 27. The tools used were of every conceivable kind and of the best quality, consisting of over 400 pieces. The burghars remained in the bank from Saturday night until Monday morning, working at their leisure. They entered from the basement. The basement of the bank was formerly one room, and was occupied by the Globe Insurance Company. William Oreal, subsequently rented it for an exchange office, and subdivided it into three apartments as shown in the diagram. The middle and rour apartments he offered for rent, reserving the front-room for his own use. About three weeks before the robbery a well-dressed, gentlemanly appearing person engaged the inner or rent reson, as he represented, as an agency for the Chicago Life Insurance Company, agreeing to pay $0.00 per year rent, monthly in advance. He poid one month's rent, $2.0, on taking possession. This office is directly undermeath the private room of the Provident of the bank, and has an entrance on Fulson Street. Apparently engaged in the Insurance business the burghars introduced their tools, and on the night of the 27th cut a hole through the floor to the hank above, where they secured about $1,000,000 in available funds and scentities. They were also proposed to encounter opposition, having several lowic-knives, removers, two pairs of seed handcuffs, a coil of rope, entridges, etc. And in the line of disguises they were equally well prepared, having every thing at hand with which to army themselves as gentlemen, as longshoremen, or in any other of a dozen clumeters. They also left behind a supplied,

On the morning of June 30 a trunk was found by a policeman in Elizabeth Street, which was marked, "For Captain Journax, Sixth Precinct," and which was found to contain $268,021 —a portion of the stelen money.

CORRESPONDENCE.

STEAM CULTIVATION.

Fon many years it has been the dream of the enthusiast that steam might become the motive power in cultivating the lund, and that the car of Agriculture would only make permanent progress when propelled by that agent. By those thoughtful men who saw how important it was for the producer to add to the productive capacity of his heavy soil by deeper tillage, steam was considered the power to satisfactorily sides the problem. In this country, who, e capital in the hands of the cultivator has been, and is yet, comparatively scarre, steam-engines have made slow progress in faming operations. But in England, and latterly on the Continent, esperially in France, steam-power is being largely developed in agricultural operations, and even as a motive power.

tural operations, and even as a motive power.

The other day I was invited by a wealthy and enterprising merchant of Philadelphia, Colonel W. C. PATERISON, to visit his farm some twenty miles below Canaden, in New Jersey, and witness the trial of a steam play, or, more properly, of an attempt to plow by steam. The farm consists of about 30,000 acres. It is of varying breadth, being from 50 to 100 miles wide, and the soil has great agricultural resources if properly worked. The Colonel imported the tackle from England, which consisted of two 14-horse locomotive steam-engines, a balance plow of two gangs of 6 each, a cultivator, and harrow, all rigged to be worked by the engines. The engines were landed at a little town some six miles from the farm, and propelled themselves out to the field, over uneven and bad roads to move a heavy load upon. This was the first cheering sign of their usefulness, for heretofore I had seen only portable engines employed in the labors of the farm, particularly in threshing. The field selected for the trial was an oblong square, containing one hundred or more acres. It was an old field, and had been long under cultivation, tolerably level, but smooth only in places, as much of it had been in corn the previous year, and the safece was therefore uneven by reason of the old hills where the corn had grown. The soil was a sandy loam resting on a clay loam subsoil. The previous cultivation had been at an average depth of about 5 inches, and formed a hard crust below, which the plow would require additional power to break.

The engines were placed on opposite sides of the field, some 370 yards apart, and opposite to each other. A flexible wire cable sufficiently long to reach across the field was attached to each engine, and run off or was wound on to the large drum on the under side of each. The plows were set to work 7 inches deep by 13 wide, and each gang therefore plowed 6½ feet at each time it crossed the field, or 13 feet in a boat, which averaged 7 minutes. The work was well done, and every thing seemed to be as perfectly under control of the operatives as if done by a team. There was evidently plenty of surplus power for all possible contingencies. The engines were mored as easily as locomotive engines on a milroad. The success of the experiment was most marked, leaving no doubt that henceforward steam can be successfully used as a motive power in caltivating the soit, and in nearly every field where the harvester can be used successfully. The question now is simply one of detail and capital. I think there is a better system for stirring the soil than by plows, and that it will be adopted in this country. The rotary Spader or Terricultor must be substituted for the plow, and then the system of steam cultivation will be complete. In the South it must supersede all others; and there the steam farm-engine will take the place of animals in driving the cotton-gin.

Componies are formed in England to furnish engines and tackle for this country.

I have just received a letter from Colonel Parterson, wherein he says: "The best day's work of the plow since you saw it has been 20 acres. I think it will average 15 on old land, and the cultivator 40." The enltivator will do from 7 to 12 acres of stiff clay, 12 inches deep, per day.

I consider the question of steam cultivation, as before remarked, simply one of capital and detail.

T. C. P——.

FAIR AND FALSE.

"SHALL I, wasting in despair,
Die because a woman's fair?
Or make jule my cheeks with care,"
For her wentth of yellow hair?
She may have been Brown as I!
I will not despair—but dye.
If I am not fair as she;
Very quickly I will be!

She is fair, and I am dark;
She's admired in the Park—
Sought of those who pass me by!
I must live—and I will dve!
I will be more fair than fair:
Pearly skin, and golden hair!
What care I how fair she be,
I will be more fair than she!

THE "CONQUEST OF SOULS."

Nor many years ago the Jesuit fathers in South America endeavored to promote Christianity in a way peculiarly their own. They combined the exhibitrating pleasures of the hunting-field with the more seber and selemn dary of catching souls. The hely fathers, no doubt animated with religious real, used now and again to call tegether their Indian converts, and, sallying forth into the wild sarannas that serm-unded their missions, earry off, if not by persuasion them by force, every native family they chanced to meet with. This was called the "conquest of souls."

We will not stop here to dispute the term, but relate an incident that occurred in consequence of one of these raids. On the banks of a small stream, a tributary of the Orinoco, lived an In-dian family, a father and mother and four chil-Although wild and uncivilized, they were happy and content; happy in their love for each other, and content in having enough to satisfy their wants. Surrounded by the eternal forests, and washed by the ever-flowing river, they lived on the best that nature has to offer. From morning to evening Guatana, with his sons, chased the boar and the bison through the mazy labyrinths of the surrounding jungle, or, leaping from rock to rock, speared the saimon as they sported in the oddying pools of the Orinoco. Guahiba sat tending her little ones at home ever rendy in the twilight of evening to welcome with foud embraces the tired hunters. Thus joyfully they passed their time, never thinking of civilization until civilization in an evil hour thought of them. One sultry evening in midsummer Gunhibs sat with her two little ones playing on the sloping turf before her, patiently waiting the return of her husband. But her husband she was to see no more. When he returned that evening he found no wife or child to greet him, no bright smile or fond welcome. A tenantless hut and a desolate hearth were all that met his view.

The missionary fathers of San Fernando had

The missionary fathers of San Fernando had been hunting for souls that fine summer day, and, ascending the stream on their homeward voyage, discovered Guahiba outside her solitary hut. Resistance was vain; bound with thongs, and bleeding in every limb, the Indian hunters carried her and her children to the boat. She cried aloud for help, but no help was there. The echo of her voice was lost in the depth of the endless forest. She was borne along up the silent stream, passing ever and again some well-remembered spot, and at every streke of the muffled oar receding farther and farther from those she held most dear.

They reached at last the mission station of San Fernando. Here, miles away from her forest home, her captors hoped she would be unable to find her way back. But they had yet to learn the difference between the virtue of a savage and the barbarism of civilized men. Despair, indeed, seized upon her brain, but it was the despair that leads to desperate venture, and not to inaction. The remembrance of her desolute home, the children she had left, and the husband or her youth looking vainly day by day for her return, gave looking vainly day by day for her return, gave wings to her feeble courage.

Time after time with her two little ones she escaped to the wild savanna, and endeavored to penetrate the impassable forests that surrounded the mission. Time after time was she tracked down and brought back to the station. Bound and mercilessly beaten, she still bore up, and still hoped against hope. At length, tired out with her obstinacy, the Jesuit fathers determined by one more act of refined cruelty to subdue her wayward spirit. She was separated from her two remaining children; and the last link that bound her to life was enapped, the last spark of comfort that smouldered in her bosom was extinguished. But she was not yet subdued. Once more bound she was thrown into a bost; come more bound she was thrown into a bost; come more up the silent waters of the Atahapo she is carried to the far-off missions of the Rio Negro. Ignorant of the fare which awaited her she could only tell by the direction of the sun that she was removing farther and farther from her native country. Strong in her despair, she burst the bonds that bound her, and throwing herself into the water, swam to the shore. She fied to the woods; but the Indians, urged on by the president of the mission, were soon on her traces, and ore the sunset she was once more borne a captive slave, torm, bleeding, faint, up the waters of the Atabapo. They arrived at last at the place of their destination, the mission of Javita.

It was night, and the rain was descending in torrents. Alone in a small but Guahiba found herself, faint from loss of blood and want of food. Boundless forests separated the mission of Javita from that of San Fernando, twenty-five leagues distant. No Indian had ever yet attempted to penetrate by land from one station to the other; but such difficulties do not stop a mother who is separated from her children. She is at Javita, her children are at San Fernando. She must find them again; she must deliver them from their captors, and bring them back to their father on the banks of the Atabapo. She was carelessly guarded; her arms being wounded, the Indiana had loosened her bonds unknown to the missionary fathers. She succeeded by the help of her teeth in breaking them entirely, and unfustening the frail bolts that secured her door, she again cluded the vigilance of her guards, and escaped to the surrounding woods.

she again cloded the vigilance of her guards, and escaped to the surrounding woods.

The fourth rising sun found her at San Fernando, hovering round the but where her children were confined. During those four days she had threaded her way through leagues of unknown forests, torn and bleeding she had swum across rivulets, and waded through pathless quagmires, supporting the enavings of nature by eating the great black ants that infest those dismal swumps. Hardly stopping to rest herself at night, she had struggled resolutely on, borne up by that never-dying love that binds a mother to her children.

In this life her virtue was not to be rewarded. Discovered before she could effect her object, she was again borne away from her children, without being allowed to hold them once more to her boscen, without time to heal her wounds or rest her wearied limbs. She was carried to the far-off regions of the Upper Orinoco, and there at length, assured that all was lost, she died, refusing nourishment, as savages will do in great calamities.

THE SEASONS.

Astronomenes inform us that the angles of displacement between the planes of the equator and the orbit of our planes are diminishing according to a geometrical ratio, based upon observations and records for the past two thousand years. In other words, the present limit of the tropical zones, defined upon ordinary maps of the world at twenty-three degrees and a half of latitude north and south of the equatorial line, is less than it was formerly, and its annual diminution can be ascertained by the delicately-graduated instruments in our observatories. It is true the diminution within a year is infinitesimal, but in the course of many thousands of years it accumulates to a whole degree, so that in time the torrid zone may contract, and the heat concentrated within its circle become gradually diffused through the temperate zones, which, secondingly, would widen in proportion. Ou this basis, if we trace back the ratio of diminution into the fossil records of geological time, there is abundant evidence to show that the tropical belt at one period extended far beyond its present limits, even to the latitudes of the British Isles, or at all events to double the extent of the Tropic of Cancer. At this period the four seasons, as they are now calculated upon our almanacs, were not in existence. Europe was subject to climatic influences similar to those prevailing at present in the tropical regions of Africa or America; and it was not until the flora and fauna of that period became extinct, after flourishing through successive dry and rainy seasons, that these were broken up into four divisions, introducing a new order of things into the vegetable and animal kingdoms. Notwithstanding the many evidences in astronomy and geology that the reign of the seasons has been of recent origin in the physical history of the earth, it seems to be a foregone conclusion, almost universally entertained, that they have existed from all time.

A MUSICAL EAR.

A westcal education is one of the accomplishments that parents in this country are generally ambitious to bestow upon their children. Patronage is bestowed without stint on great artists, and the public sentiment sustains this liberality. But both labor and money are uselessly expended on those who have not a musical taste. As far as physiology has laid open the laws of sound, it has been ascertained that the musical and non-musical ear, in their organic structure, are precisely alike. The ear is of itself a beautiful tostrument, so constructed that sound is actually conducted from one gyrating apartment to another, in which the sonorous rays are strengthested instead of being weakened as they traverse the canals. Being entirely passive, the mind has no control over it as it has of the eye. We can not exclude sound by an act of volition. Whether we wish it or not, the ear takes cognizance of all sounds within the range of its acoustic power. A faculty for acquiring music depends on a peculiar condition of the brain, which enjoys musical harmony through the instrumentality of the ear, and in no other way. If, therefore, no brain faculty axists for music, it is utterly impossible to make any entisfactory progress under the highest class of instructors. It would be good policy, therefore, before attempting to teach a young lady to play the piano-forte, to first ascertain whether she has a brain possessing musical organization.

WORK IN PARIS.

Two following curious facts concerning Paris are taken from the Joseval des Consaissances Medicales: "The total population is, in round numbers, 1,700,000—viz., 750,000 men, 700,000 women, and 220,000 children. Of these 1,700,000 inhabitants, 400,000 live on their private property, or on the produce of their professions, as Government officials, lawyers, physicians, and members of other liberal professions; 100,000 are in schools, hospitals, prisons, or religious fraternities; 200,000 are engaged in trade, whole-sale or retail, in shops, markets, or the streets; one million are occupied in manufactures, either as masters or workmen; and 35,000 are military men of all ranks. Coming to more minute particulars, manual labor employed in producing all the various articles great and small, constituting what are called articles de Paris, is represented by 416,811 working-people. Of these, 205,861 are men, 105,410 women, and 25,540 children. We now come to the question, how many hunds are represented by steam in Paris? There are 1800 engines in the capital, employed in a variety of trades, and forming an aggregate of 10,000 horse-power. Now, as one of the latter is equivalent to the working power of seven hands, it follows that, to the 416,811 working-people above stated we must add 70,000 hands, or 35,000 individuals more. Hence, if all steam—engines were suppressed here to-morrow, it would require an infinx of 35,000 workmen to keep the daily production at its present rate."

LARGE BAIT.

Live horses and live donkeys are used by the Sandwich Islanders to bait for sharks. This is a dreadful cruelty practiced by the natives. The plunging animal, whose head is fastened to a buoy, attracts large shoals of the shovel-need monsters, which ravenously tear the hannehes and finals of the poor beast, and they are heedless of the Kanakas, in canoes, who spear them.

DRUNKEN FELICITY.

REGARDING drunkenness as an evil which has a demoralizing influence on the community, law-makers have exerted themselves in all civilized countries where the vice pervails to correct, and, if possible, to stop its baneful progress. Every town and city in America has its record of misery based on intemperance. It has been assumed that sixty thousand persons die annually in the United States victims to that dreadful malady. Philanthropists and legislatures have failed, thus far, in all their efforts to put a stop to drunkenness. Possibly the desideration of keeping all conditions of people in their sober seases through life is to be accomplished at a future age in the world's history. But there are places on the face of this fair globe where the privilege of getting drunk is considered the highest felicity to which humanity can astain. Ibrahimawa, a Borus voyager on the White Nile, assured Mr. Baker there was a country adjoining Bornu where the king was so fat and heavy that he could not walk till the decrees "opened his belly and cut out the fat," which was repeated annually. He described another country as a perfect Paradise, where to one ever drank any thing so inferior as water. The country was so wealthy that the poorest man could drink morisso—beer. At 3 r.m. every body was drunk, so that there was not a sober man in the land. Even the cows, goats, and fowls got drunk also by drinking the marisas left in the jars after the people were all down. In his view it was a happy region, where one could indulge in as much in-toxication as he liked without being disturbed by mischief-making moral reformers, whom he probably conceived to be disturbers of the public

THE GREAT DENTAL DISCOVERY

Of the age was made when the bark of the Soup-Tree, of the Chilian mountains, was incorporated with the other vegetable materials of fragrant Sozonowr. Its property of arresting decay and obliserating discoverations in silks, muslins, etc., obtainerating discontrations in size, musting etc., first suggested its use as a purifier and preserv-ative of the dental enamel; and its effect as as-sociated with other antiseptic vegetable sub-stances has proved one of the happiest results of modern experiments. —[Core.]

To remove Move Parcess, Parceles, and Tax from the face, use Person's Motel and Fernanta Lorson. Prepared only by Dr. B. C. Person, 49 Bond St., N. Y. Bold by all Bruggista.—(Core.)

Dravarena Tasarra cure Indigestion, Bearthorn, and Sour Stomach. Fifty Cents per Box. Malled for 60c. Sold by draggista. B. G. Walland, 511 Broadway.

Our readers can obtain a fac-simile Gold Watch, $19 to $15 each, at 79 Nassan Street, N. Y.—(Con.)

ADVERTISEMENTS.

PHONOGRAPHIC VISITOR. — Once a week from July 5. 696 pages Common Print, and 200 pages of beautiful Phonography. St a Year: 15c. a Number. Vol. III., 1960 pp., bound, 36 90. Two House' Course, ste. Hand-Book, the best and only complete and standard instruction-book, 35 90, postpaid.

A. J. GRAHAM, 598 Broadway, N. Y.

CATARRH.

Bad, leathsome disease. One third of the people suffer from Catarrh until Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, and Consumption bring them to the grave. Physicians do not understand the complaint, nor can thereuse H; but WOLCOTT'S ANNIBILATOR, in piot bottles, eradicates this fifthy complaint from the constitution. Sold at all Brug Stores, or six pluts sent free of express charges on receipt of $5, or one plut of WOLCOTT'S PAIN PAINT, for Pain or Laureness. Address E. L. WOLCOTT, 18) Chatham Square, N. Y.

BOOSEY'S MUHICAL CABINET. -- A Complete Li-beary of Modern Music for Voice and Plano-Sorte:

CROPET'S VALUES, COMPRIS. 50c. 50c.
RIBETERS BARTONE AND BASS SONGS. 50c.
REPTERS BARTONE AND BASS SONGS. 50c.
COMPARTE OPERAS FOR PLANO, 68ch. 50c.
Mailed on receipt of price. CATALLOGUE PRES.
BOOSEY & CO., 646 Broadway, N. Y.

THE CELEBRATED

STERLING

Spool Cotton.

EQUAL, IF NOT SUPERIOR, TO ANY KNOWN THREAD.

WELL ADAPTED TO

HAND AND SEWING MACHINE WORK. A. T. Stewart & Co.,

NEW YORK, Sole Agents for the United States.

CYPRESS HILLS CEMETERY. OFFICE, No. 124 BOWERY, N. Y., (Corner of Grand Street).

OFFICERS:

EDMUND DRIGGS, President.
A. S. JARVES, Vice-President.
WILLIAM MILES, Treasurer.
WILLIAM EDWARDS, Secretary.
HERVEY G. LAW, WM. J. PEASE, JOHN VAN ALST, ALFRED M. WOOD, Trustees.
S. G. PALIMER Section Secretary.

N. G. PALMER, Sup't and Surveyor.

RAPIDLY INCREASING POPULARITY. The Best Teachers are all using it in prefe to other methods.

Clarke's New Method for Reed Organs. Br WM. H. CLARKE.

Be sure and get the right Book. It is not an adver-tisement for Cabinet Organs, but gives the greatest aid to those who wish to become good performers upon these pleasing instruments. Price $2.55. Sent postpaid on receipt of price. O. DITSON & CO., Boston; C. H. DITSON & CO., New York.

Good Boys like Excellence better than Sham—hence so many prefer RIVERVIEW MILITARY ACADEMY, POUGHEREPASE, N. Y.

A wide-awake, thorough-going School for Boys wishing to be trained for Business, for College, or for West Point or the Naval Academy.

OTIS BISBEE, A.M., Principal and Proprietor.

PIANOS and ORGANS.

Prices prestly reduced for Cash. New Seven-Octave Planos, of first-class enakers, for $515 and upward. New Cabinet Organs for $55 and upward. Second-band Planos, Melodecora, and Organs from $60 to $175, at 631 Broadway, N. Y. HORACE WATERS.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—Females whose systems are deranged from sedentary coppleyment will find immediate relief by using a few boxes of those most reflable Pills. They purify and carried the blood, enabling the various organs to fulfill their duties.

$9 A DAY FOR ALL. Address N. Y.

FOR BOSTON

BRISTOL and PROVIDENCE, Com'r BRATTON, Com'r SIMMONS, Will Leave (Alternate Days) Daily,

FROM PIER—30—NORTH RIVER,
(Foot of Chambers Street),
—AT 5 F.M.—
DODWORTH'S CELEBRATED ORCHESTRA Grand Promenade Concert

THE ONLY LINE RUNNING SUNDAY NIGHT.

PROVIDENCE PASSENGED by the above steamers will leave Fall River at 520 A.M.

ARRIVING at 430 A.M.

RETURNING will leave Providence at 5 P.M., making direct connection with the boat, and allowing a good night's rest on board each way.

To better accommodate the public,

THE SPLENDID NYEAMERS

NYUPORY and OLD COLONY.

NEWPORT and OLD COLONY, COMMANDES LEWIS, COMMANDES MILLER, WILL LEAVE (Alternate Days) DAILY, (Sindays excepted),

PROM PIER 28—NORTH RIVER, (Foot of Merray Street),
—AT 6:30 P.M.,

BOSTON via NEWPORT.

FREIGHT received at Pier 10 up to 5 P.M., and at Pier 20 up to 5:0 P.M., each evening.

JAMES FISH, Jr., President,
M. R. SIMONS, Managing Director,
CHAR. H. VALLE, General Passenger Agent,
H. H. MANGAM, Freight Agent,

NARRAGAMSETT STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

GRAND EXCUBSION TO

LAKE SUPERIOR.

The splendid steamer METEOR leaves Cleveland, Ohlo, on Friday, July 18th and 18th, Angust 18th and 18th, at 8 o'clock, F.M., and Detroit, Mich., the fol-lowing evenings at 10 o'clock, for Superior City, Du-lath, and all points of interest on Lake Superior. Recome secured and other information obtained by plication to

HANNA & CO., Ag'ts, Cleveland, O.;

BUCKLEY & CO., Ag'ts, Detroit, Mich.;
or J. T. WHITING, Manager, Detroit, Mich.

IMPROVED ALUMINIUM BRONZE HUNTING-CASED WATCHES.

The Improved Aleminiam Bronnes is a metal differing entrely from any over offered to the public. Its qualities and resemblance to Gold are such that even indpes have been decisived. It has actionary occupied the attention of scientistic rices, and has not only called forth the calogiums of the pressit consequence of its peculiar properties, but has sit on obtained a Gold Medal at the Paris Exposition.

The movements are well finished up the Paris Exposition.

The movements are well finished up the Paris Exposition.

The movements are well finished up the Paris Exposition.

Press whom Sis 10 SER.

Farther details will be found in my pamphiet, which well be sent, pootpaid, on demand.

Goods sent by Exposis, C. O. D., with charges.

Address JULIS B. HUGUENIN VUILLEMIN, No. 44 Namen Errest, New York.

$20 A DAY to Male and Female

Agents to introduce the BUCKEYE 200 SHUTTLE SEWING MACHINES. Such after on both sides, and is the only Licensers SHUTTLE MACHINE is the market sold for less than $40. All others are infringements, and the seller and user are liable to proceed and imprisonment. Full particulars free.

Address W. A. EENDERSON & CO.,

Cleveland, Onio.

CURL YOUR HAIR!

A SAMPLE of PROPESSOR BORB'S MAUNETIC CURLIQUE sent PREFE. R. It coels straight hair (without injury) in soft, laxuriant, beautiful, Bowle curls, on the reser arranearon. Address, with Stant, PROF. B. H. ROBB, PARENAN, OHIO. PARLOR STRAM ENGINE: made entire-ly of Metal; Boiler and Furnace complete; will work for hours if supplied with water, &c.: free from danger: a child can work it. Sent free, with instruc-tions, for $1.00; three for $0.70. Address WALTER HOLT, No. 102 Nassau Street, New York.

MAPLEWOOD INSTITUTE for Young Ladies, Pittsfield, Mass., counceces its Fall tem Sept. 14. 1899. Packities and location un-surpassed. Bay. C. V. SPEAE, Principal.

VINEGAR -- How made from Cider, Wine, Me-without noing drugs. For leves, circulars, &c., ad-dross F. I. BAGE, Vinegar Maker, Cromwell, Cu.

$10 PER DAY.—Agents wanted to sell an Amueing Toy. Specimes and particulars on receipt of Secut stamp. Address W. Saxs, to Leight St., N. Y. S15 A DAY. Samples Proc. Address, with Secut stamp. Address W. Saxs, to Leight St., N. Y.

$15

Important to Consumptives and Invalids.

WINCHESTER'S

HYPOPHOSPHITES

OF LIME AND SODA, THE SPECIFIC REMEDY FOR CONSUMPTION!

Has been in general and extensive use for the past TEN YEARS, during which period it has been subjected to a most critical test in innumerable cases of confirmed CONSUMPTION, and has achieved a SUCCESS unparalleled in the annals of Medicine.

The facts and testimony which we offer as to the Great Carative Properties of this Remedy, and its unparalleled efficacy, can hardly fast to carry conviction to the minds of the most skeptical, and kept to thousands who are lishes to or are suffering from this institutes maissly, that a Remedy has been found as prough, so certain, and so potent in its action, that "Cure is the rule, and Death the exception."

THE EXTRAORDINARY TONIC, STIMULATING, AND INVIGORATING PROPERTIES OF

WINCHESTER'S

HYPOPHOSPHITES

nder it the most appropriate as it is the SPECIFIC REMEBY

For Nervous and General Debility, Bronchitis, Asthma, Neuralgia, Paralysis, Wasting, Scrofula, Loss of Strength, Flesh, and Appetite, Dyspepsia and Indigestion, Impurities of the Blood, Female Com-plaints, Chronic Biarrhea, Maladies of Children, &c.,

In which cases it is the most effications treatment known. The presupt and beneficial effects of Wine-chester's Etypophosphites will both SUR-PRISK and CHARM you.

For sale by Druggists and Dealers in every city, town, and village throughout the United States and Canadas. Prices: -81 and $2 per bottle; Three-larys, or $2. enail, $5.

Circulars, information, and advice Free. J. WINCHESTER & CO., Proprietors, 36 John St., New York.

Savage's Ursina.

PURE GREASE of the CANADA BEAR.

Superior to every other Formade for softening, giving a brilliant gloss, and increasing the growth of the Hair.

Evans, Marcen. & Co. (Latt. Lauraceum & Campania, Morrerat, Proprietors, AND SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

Musket SHOT-GUNS, warranted to shoot close and hill at 60 yards. Price, 82 50. Warran.—Army Gune and Berobers. Seed samp for price-list of Rifles, Shot-Guns, Hewslever, to JOHNSTON'S GUN WORKS, Patsburgh, Pa.

$10 PER DAY GUARANTEED

Agents to sell the Hose Secreta Sewiso Macaise. It makes the took serven, alast or sore cross, has the under-seed, and as equal in every respect to any Swing Machine over invented. Price 25. Warranted for 5 years. Send for circular. Address Jonsson, Claus, & Co., Boston, Mass., Pittsburgh, Pa., or St. Louis, Mo.

DEAFNESS, CATABRH, SCROFULA.

A lady who tad suffered for years from Deafness,
Catarrh, and Sorodala, was cured by a simple remedy.
Her sympathy and gratitude prompts her to send the receipts free of charge to any one similarly affected.
Address Mas. M. C. LEGGETT, Hoboken, N. J.

EMPLOYMENT that pays. For particulars, address S. M. SPENCER & CO., Bratileboro, Vt.

VELOCIPEDIOLOGY-7he Tale of a Travel V et. A carious book for requisitive people, 460 pages, elegantly bound in cloth and gill. New your buttons on fast before sending for the book, enclosing postage stamp and address to the publisher, T. W. EVANS & CO., 41 Sc. Eighth St., Philadelphia.

De IT NOW...Don't delay, but send 25 cents at D core and receive MAPLS LEAVES for twelve months. It is the cheapest, the best, and the most popular Monthly published. Specimen copies sent on receipt of a stamp. Address.

O. A. BOORBACH, No. 102 Nassan St., N. Y.

Agents! Read This!

WR WILL PAY AGENTS A SALARY
W of $30 per week and expenses, or allow a large commission, to sell our new and wonderful inventions. Address M. WAGNER & CO., Manshall, Mich.

Removed to 335 Broadway. THE COLLINS $20. ACTORY.

The Collins Metal and Jewelry Factory has re-soved from 87 Nassau Street to their splendid lew Offices,

No. 335 BROADWAY.

These superior Watches have now been in use over three years, and give universal self-action; and although sold at so moderate a price, are not sequenced in appearance and for time by gold ones costing $150 and $200. They have been greatly improved, but the price remains the same, $15. These of extra fine fields, $20. Gents' and Ladies' sizes. Jewelry of the richest styles, in every respect equal to the finest gold, at one-tenth the price. We have but

ONE OFFICE, NO AGENTS, and are not responsible for the begue and worth-less goods sold at cheap jewelry establishments. Our Pactory is the ONLY PLACE where the Gen-ulter Collins Metal Watches and Jewelry can be had.

C. E. COLLINS & CO.,

No. 335 Broadway, cer. Worth Street, (Up Stairs).

HARPER & BROTHERS,

FRANKLIN SQUARE, NEW YORK,

Have just Published:

RHETORIC: a Text-Book, designed for Use in Schools and Colleges, and for Private Starly. By Rev. E. O. Bayes, B.D., Ll.B., President of the Northwestern University, Econeton, III. 12440, Cloth, $1.50.

FAMOUS LONDON MERCHANTS. A Book for Boys. By H. R. Peo Bousse. With Portrait of George Peabody and 24 Illustrations. Heno, Cloth, $100.

SIGHTS AND SENSATIONS IN FRANCE GER-MANY, AND SWITZERLAND: or, Experiences of an American Journalist in Europe. By Enwarm Gound Hoffers. 18ms, Cloth, 31 50.

PIVE ACRES TOO MUCH. A Truthful Elucida-tion of the Astractions of the Country, and a Care-ful Consideration of the Question of Frofit and Love as involved in Amptor Farming, with much Valu-able Advice and Instruction to those about Parchas-ing Large of Sendi Pines in the Haral Districts, By Rossarr B. Rossavan, With Characteristic D-lastrations, 12mo, Cloth, $150.

THREE SEASONS IN EUROPEAN VINEYARDS.
Treating of Vine Culture; Vine Discuse and its Cure; Wine-Haking and Wines, Bod and White; Wine-Dinking as affecting Routh and Morals. By Walliam J. Falson. 17mm, Cloth, §1 50.

THE STUDENT'S SCRIPTURE INSTORY. The Old Testament History. From the Creation to the Return of the Jews from Captivity. Effect by Windley Serve, LL.D. With More and Westlers. Large from Cities, Clob, $2.00. Uniform with The Science of the New Yorkman History.

THE WEDDING DAY IN ALL AGES AND COUNTRIES. By Enwann J. Worth, 18mo, Cloth,

THE MALAY ABCHIPELAGO: The Land of the Orang-Utan and the Bird of Paradise. A Narrative of Travel, with Studies of Man and Nature. By Arran Russes. Washare, Amber of "Travels on the Amazon and Bio Negro," "Palm Trees of the Amazon," &c. With Ten Maps and Fifty-one elegant Hiestralions. Crown two, Cloth, 23 50.

PISHING IN AMERICAN WATERS. By Geven C. Sever. With 170 illustrations. Crown Svo, Cloth, $1.50.

ELEMENTS OF ASTRONOMY. Designed for Academies and albeb Schoole. By Kuas Loones, LL.D., Professor of Natural Philosophy and Astronomy in Yale Cellege, and Anther of a "Course of Mathematics." 1700, Sheep, $150.

HARPER'S HAND BOOK FOR TRAVELLERS IN EUROPE AND THE RAST. Being a Guide through Fesner, Belgium, Holland, Germany, Ana-tris, Italy, Egypt, Syris, Tarkey, Grocce, Switzer-land, Tyrok, Russla, Bermack, Sweber, Spein, and Great Hesteln and Ireland. With a Railroad Mag-corrected up to 1868. By W. Pransisco: Favourie, Revised Edition: Seventh Year, Large Broc, Leath-er, Focket-Book Form, $2.50.

HARPER'S PERASE-BOOK; or, Hand-Book of Franci Talk for Trivellers and Schook. Seing a Guide to Conversed on in English, French, German, and Italian, on a New and Imperved Method. In-tended to accompany "Harper's Hand Book for Travellers." By W. Pesasone Peraseou. Assisted by Professors of Heidelberg University. With con-cise and explicit Rules for the Fredmentation of the different Languages. Square 16mo, Flexible Coth, $1.50.

The New Novels

PROLESSOR BY

HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

MY DAUGHTER ELINGE. A Novel of American Society. See, Paper, $1 25.

CORD AND CREESE. By the Amber of "The Bodge Club." Blustrated. 8vo, Paper, 75 cents.

STREITON. A Novel. By Hanny Kingston, Author of "Heiry," "Geoffrey Handyn," "Ravenshoe," &c. 8vo, Paper, 40 conts.

THE SACRISTAN'S HOUSEHOLD. A Story of Lippe-Detunoll. By the Author of "Malar's Frag-ress," &c. With Illustrations by C. G. Bush. &co, Paper, 75 cents. THE DODGE CLUB; or, Boly in 1879. By James De Manar, Author of "Cord and Creece," &c. With One Hundred Hisetrations. Svo, Paper, 75 cents.

FOR HER SAKE. By Function: W. Romosov, Author of "Carry's Confession," "Fost Rumanity," &c. With 20 Hinstrations. Sro, Paper, 35 cents.

THACKERAY'S NOVELS:

New Edition, beautifully printed, with the Author's own Illustrations. VANITY PAIR, Illustrated, &co., Paper, 50 cents.

THE VIRGINIANS. 150 Engravings. 8vo, 75 THE NEWCOMES. 160 Engravings. Syo, 25 cents.

THE ADVENTURES OF PHILIP ON HIS WAY THROUGH THE WORLD. Showing who Reblied him, who Relped him, and who Passed him by, With Portrait of Author and 64 lilustrations. ser, 50 cents.

17 Harren & Barrange will have from districtly See Editions of Theobropy's other Newls, Illustrated by the Author, at correspondingly loss prices.

CHARLES READE'S NOVELS:

States, on everyt of the price.

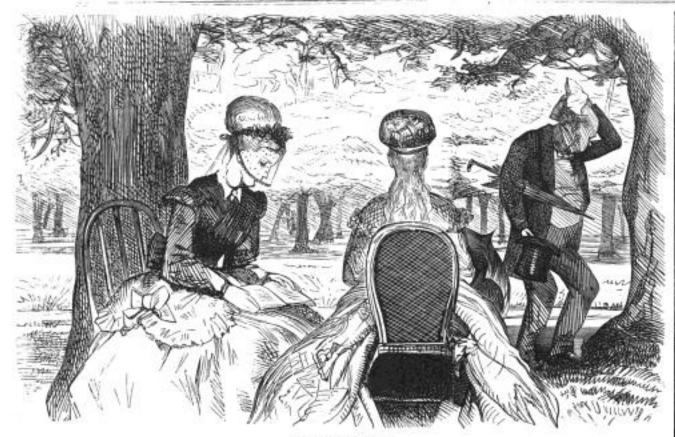

HARD CASH. Binstrated. Sec, Paper, 25 cents. ORIFFITH GAUNT; or, Jeniousy. Blustrated. 8vo, Paper, 25 cents. IT IS NEVER TOO LATE TO MEND. Svo, Pa-per, 85 cepts.

EF" To be followed by Charles Reade's other Novels.

ANTHONY TROLLOPES LAST NOVELS: PHINEAS FINN, the Irish Member. Hinstrated by Millale. Sen, Paper, $1 25: Cloth, $1 75.

HE RNEW HE WAS RIGHT. Complete. With 44 Hinstrations by Macros Stone. Sec. Paper, $100; Cloth, $150. Part II., separately, Paper, 50 coats. I HARREN & BROTHERS will send any of the above books by mail, produce Free, to any part of the United $3500 Per Year to sell "Bunder of the World."

Address J. C. Turres, Pittsburgh, Pa.

HOT WEATHER.

Young Later (who imagines she has a Bonnet on). "Ah! I only wish we could go without Any Thing on our Heads, like that Old Gentlemus."

The Reason why Every One can obtain a Haines Piano:

The price will come within the means of all class es, as they make several sizes and styles to suit all clarers. Constantly as hard Pianes at very reasonable rates, all of which routain all the modern improvements, and are warranted for seven years. Satispection grammiest.

For further proof of the popularity of these Pianos, see Resenue Returns for Year ending April anos, see leciente fecturas per less energia Apai 1st, 1863, in which HAINES BRO'S sold 1135 Pianos. The selling of 125 Pianos in one year alone shows the partiality shown these favorite Pi-nnes. Catalogues sent on application to

HAINES BROTHERS. 46 East 14th Street, New York,

Og to Sauli & Nikos, Chicago, His.; H. N. Heweregan, Milwankee, Wis.; Louis There, Louisville, Ky.; J. A. Modiane, Nachville, Tema.; Kercker, Bros., St. Louis, Ma.; J. R. Jacesos, Sandusky, Ohio; J. E. Goden, Philadelphia, Ph.; Mrs. C. Blinne, Philadelphia, Ph.; Mrs. J. T. Haussee, Rhindbeck, N. Y.; J. H. Histzenster, Hinca, N. Y.; White, Shite, & Perry, Roston, Mass.; Martinas Gray, San Francisco, Cal.

WE PUT GENUINE WALTHAM VV Watches into the hands of purchasers in any state, territory, town, village, or feontier settlement, at the lowest New York wholesale prices. The Express Companies take then from us and deliver them to the customers in any part of the Union, however remote. The package can be opened, and the watch examined, and not till then is the purchaser required to pay for it; and if on examination it is not satisfac-tory, there is no obligation to receive it. Our descriptive and illustrated Price-List gives full information in regard to the watches, and our plan of sending them by capress. Every one should have a copy. We send it prolipsid on application; no return stangs re-quired. When you write, please state that you saw quired. When you writ-this in Harper's Workly.

HOWARD & CO., Jewelers and Silversmiths, No. 619 Broadway, New York,

TABLESN'S REVIEW OF UST SCHOOL APPENDER, while action is a corrective upon that organ, gently expels all anothid matter from the alineatory canal, and im-parts a healthful activity to the shagein liver.

FOR SALE BY THE WHOLE DRUG TRADE.

TO AGENTS,

L OSSING'S PICTORIAL PHELD-BOOK OF THE WAR OF 1812 is now mady for delivery to Acents. Price, in Cloth, $7.00; Full Resu. $9.00; Half Caff, $10.00. HARPER & BROTHERS.

Musical Boxes

The largest and oldest depot in America. Fresh Novellins by unsely every Steamer. Fine Supply of Fancy Goods, Suiss Carred Goods, Fine Gold and Silver Watches, M. J. PAILLARD & CO.,

$2000 A YEAR AND EXPENSES to Accuse, to introduce the Wilson Sewing Machine. Stirch alike on both sides, Samples on two weeks trial. Entre inductments to experienced agents. For father perticulars, address the WILSON SEWING MACHINE CO., Cleveland, Ohio; Boston, Mass.; or St. Louis, Mo.

ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS

seem to possess the quality of Accumulating Electricity

and imparting it to the body, whereby the circulation of the blood becomes equalized upon the parts where applied, causing pain and morbid action to cease. The Porous Plasters are flexible, and found of a great help to those who have weak backs or pain in the side. Especially are they valuable to those who have neglected colds. They are often preventives of Consumption; may, they are believed to have loosened the grasp of this terrible affliction, and been mainly instrumental in effecting a cure. In variable climates they should be worn on the breast or between the shoulders, or over the kidneys, by those who are subject to take cold easily.

Tais Trolling Bait stands unequaled for catching Pike, Pirkerel, Bass, &c. It is far superior to any slacks spoon ever invested. Price the each. JOHN H. MANN, Syracuse, N.Y.

$20 A DAY MADE.—Agents wanted to sell the Novelty Pocket Knife, the State-Penell Sharpener and Pen-Heider combined, and the Yosemice Pers. Samples sent of all, including a box of pens, for 50 cts., postage paid. Address ModISE ERASER CO., 408 Library St., Philadelphia.

STAMMERING cured by Enter Appliances. For Pamphlet, address Simpson & Co., Box 1076, N.Y.

"FRESH AS A MAIDEN'S BLUSH" is the pure peachy complexion which follows the use of HAGAN'S MAGNOLIA BALM. It is the true secret of beauty. Fashionable ladies in society understand this.

The Magnolia Balm changes the rustic country girl into a city belle more rapidly than any other one thing.

Redness, Sunburn, Tan, Freckles, Blotches, and all effects of the summer sun disappear when it is used, and a genial, cultivated, fresh expression is obtained, which rivals the bloom of youth. Beauty is possible to all who will invest 75 cents at any respectable store and insist on getting the Magnolia Balm.

Use nothing but LTON'S KATHAIRON to dress the hair.

HARPER'S HAND-BOOK OF FOREIGN TRAVEL.

HARPER'S HAND-BOOK FOR TRAVELLERS IN EUROPE AND THE EAST. Being a Guide through France, Beigium, Holland, Germany, Austris, Italy, Egypt, Syris, Turkey, Greece, Switzer-land, Tyrol, Russia, Denmark, Sweden, Spain, and Great Britain and Ireland. With a Railroad Map corrected up to 1868. By W. Pamssons Faranses. Revised Edition: Seventh Year. Large 19mo, Leath-er, Pocket-Book Form, $7.50.

HARPER'S PHRASE-BOOK.

HARPER'S PHRASE-BOOK; or, Hand-Book of Travel Talk for Travellers and Schools. Being a Guide to Conversations in English, French, German. Gende to Conversations in English, Proba, cermin, and Italian, on a near and Improved Method. Intended to accompany "Harper's Hand-Book for Travellers," By W. Prensoons Fernance. Assisted by Professors of Heidelberg University. With concise and explicit Rules for the Pronunciation of the different Languages. Square 4to, Flexible Cloth, Pencisies by HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

HARTER & BROTHERS will send the above works by reall, postage perpaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of the price.

ADDRESS TO SMOKERS.

In reply to the many inquiries unde daily in regard to Neerschains Pipes, we wish to start that we recommend, resecially for home and office use, the plain Humgarian and Egg Bowls, with Weichsel Stems. They hold the most holoston, and are the most durable and particul ones, being the earliest to clean. Or the Hamburg Bowls, having the largest surface to show color. For travelling and street smoking, we recommend Significant London Hend.
Heng represented extensively thoughout the country by any conds, we are designed to be light and globalon between Broag represented extensively throughout the country by our goods, we are desirous to have our Pipes th are considered equaled by more—still more extensively used for those who relich a good smoke, as Clears too expensive. Therefore we have reduced our prices to the following:

the transfer of entracted equality by none—still made extendent the trade who felled a good smoot, and find Crass too expension. Therefore me have reduced our prices to the following:

We will sell a No. 3 Pape for $1, and charge $1 additional for every number higher; therefore No. 4 codes $6. No. 8, $10; No. 13, $14, $2. Papes from No. 4 to No. 8 are considered fair-stard cares; from No. 3 apward, here ones. In the price is included a Case and Stem.

Nice Amber Monthpieces for Weichoel Stoms we are relling from $1 to $13 a piece.

We send by Express to collect an delivery, amount and charges; but suggrest that the amount be sent in Resistenced Letter or Prest-Office Money Order in advance, to save consigned the express-return charges. In correlation, we wish to state that we warrant all our goods (which we stamp with our name) to be real Araber, penalton Mecrachama, and to color, and will readily give every information in regard to it, based on thirty years' experience in the trade, having received our Diploma in 1839 by the respective consulsations in Europe; and we will ever uphold the fair time we have acquired in the introduction of the MANUFAC-TURE OF GENUINE MEERSCHAUM GOODS into this country.

We cut Pipes and Cigan-Heiders of any shape or design, mount them, do repairing, boiling, and pulishing. Also, Amber Work done. And, main of all, do not charge exercitions between the procession of commendations from thousands of our customers, representing all classes of society.

POLITAK & SON, Manufacturers of Genuine Measurchaum Goods

POLLAK & SON, Manufacturers of Genuine Meerschaum Goods. STORES: 519 Broadway, St. Nicholas Hotel, and 27 John St., 27 John. SEND FOR DIAGRAMS, CIRCULAR, AND PRICE-LIST to LETTER BOX 5846.

GOING UP TOWN!

On the 1st of August we shall remove to 747 BROADWAY, near 8th St., and now offer our present stock of

CHINA, GLASS, AND FANCY GOODS at very low prices.

Davis Collamore & Co., 479 Broadway, near Broome St.

A recent discovery that steel, when made to rotate upon glass and similar substances, will cut with more rapidity and case, and is

Cheaper, Better, and More Durable than the

BEST DIAMOND.

Invaluable to every Family. NO TOOL-CHEST COMPLETE WITHOUT IT. Sent free by mail on receipt of price, $2 cach. AGENTS WANTED. Address

J. Russell & Co.,

Green River Cutlery Works, 83 BERRMAN STREET, New York City.

NATURE'S GREAT RESTORER.

GREEN MOUNTAIN MINERAL SPRING WA-TER, Mount Holly, Vt.

This colebrated water cures Dyspesia, Rhouma-tism, Piles, Scrofnia, Urinary Diseases, and Female Weaknesses. "It is a tonic and general builder-up of the system." Send for Descriptive Circular. Self by Druggists.

McKESSON & ROBBINS, No. Fl Fulton St., N.Y., GEO. C. GOODWIN & CO., Boston, Mass., Agents. F. FENN & CO., Proprietors, Butland, Vt.

TO SPORTSMEN!!

of our own Manufacture and Importation. FISHING TACKLE, POCKET CUTLERY, and Sportsmen's Articles. Sofe Argents for W. R. PAPE'S Celebrated Manufe and Breech Loaders.

MERWIN & HULBERT, Circulars supplied.) 285 Brondway, N.Y.

BUT if you want to make money, sell our New Put-D ent Fonntain Pens—sample box, 12 pens, 25 cts. 1 Patent Fesknife and Pencil combined, 10 cts. : Patent Eraser and Pen-Holder combined, 15 cts. All poetpaid, Sell at slott. §10 a day, 560 per cent, profit. Adlmost Cerr Noveaur Co., 684 Library St., Philadelphia, Pa.

FOUNTAINS, VASES, and GARDEN

OHNAMENTS.

JANES, KIRTLAND, & CO.,
8, 19, & 19 Read St., New York.

HARPER'S PERIODICALS.

TERMS FOR 1869.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE, ODS YOUT$4 00 Habper's Weerly, One Year..... 4 00 Habper's Bazar, One Year..... 4 00

HARPER'S MAGAZINE, HARPER'S WEEKLY, and HARPER'S Bazar, to one address, for one year, $10.00; or any

An Extra Copy of either the Magazesa, Weerly, or Bazan will be supplied gratic for every Club of Five Sumenzana at $4 00 each, in one remittance; er, Six Stringtonians of $4.00 each, in one presidence; er, Six Capies for $20.00, without extra caps.

The Posinge within the United States is for the Manazina 24 cents a year, for the Wassay or Bazan 20 cents a year, payable yearly, semi-pendy, or quarterly, at the office where received. Subscriptions from the Boundaring of Canada must be accompanied with 24 cents additional for the Manazina, or 20 cents for the Wassay or Bazan, to prepay the United States postage.

postage.

The Volumes of the Managers remmence with the Rumbers for June and December of each year. Subscriptions may commence with any Number. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to begin with the first Number of the current Volume, and back Numbers will be sent accordingly.

the enternt Volume, and back Numbers will be sent accordingly.

The Volumes of the Warnay commence with the year. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to commence with the Number next after the receipt of his order.

Subscribers to the Managard Werker, or Bazan will find on each wropper the Number with which their subscription expires. Each periodical is stepped when the term of subscription closes. It is not accessary to give notice of discontinuance.

In remitting by mall, a Fost-Office Order or Broft payable to the order of Harring & Bostman is preferable to the order of Harring & Bost order or broft be lost or stolen, it can be renewed without loss to the sender.

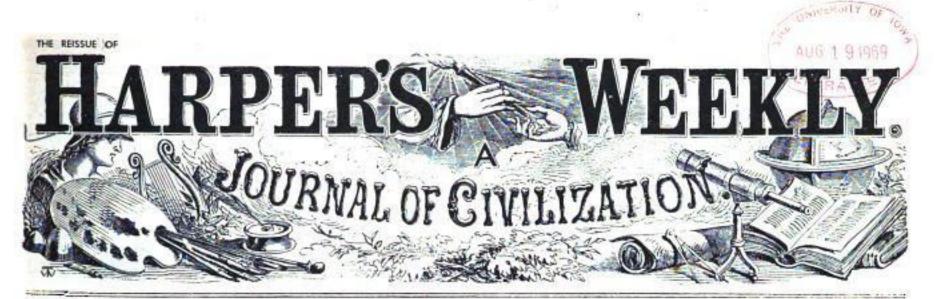

the senter.

In ordering the Managuer, the Wernay, or the Bazan, the name and address should be clearly written. When the direction is to be changed, both the old and the new one must be given.

TERMS FOR ADVERTISING IN HARPER'S PERSONGELS. Horper's Mastriae.—Whole Page, $750: Half Page, $150: Quarter Page, $70—each insertion; or, for a less space, $1 50 per Line, each insertion.

Herper's Westly.—Inside Pages, $1 to per Line; Outside Page, $2 00 per Line—each insertion. Harper's Sazur ... $1 00 per Line; Cuts and Display, $1 35 per Line...each insection.

Address HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

Vol. XIII.—No. 657.]

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, JULY 31, 1869.

SINGLE COPIES, TEN CENTS.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1930, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Cours of the United States, for the Southern District of New York.

MISS IDA LEWIS, THE HEROINE OF NEWPORT, -PROT. BY MANCHESTER BROTHERS. PROVIDENCE, R. L - [SEE PAGE 484.]

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, JULY 31, 1869.

THE RESULT IN VIRGINIA.

THE recent most difficult question seems to be, who won in the Virginia election? The contest was nominally between Conservative and Radical Republicans—that is, between the advocates of general amnesty and suffrage and the friends of a more stringent policy. The result was that the candidate who is a Demoerat, who was supported by the Democrats, the late rebels, and some of the Republicans, was elected. It is not denied that the bulk of his vote was Democratic and rebel, that Republican votes would not have elected him, and that the Legislature which is elected with him can in no sense be called Republican. And yet, virtually, the question submitted at the election was a Republican alternative; it was the Republican Constitution in its most proscriptive form, or the same instrument with the chief points of the reconstruction policy.

The result seems to be, therefore, that the late rebels voted for their own amnosty, and for the enfranchisement of the colored citizens, and, indirectly, for the Fifteenth Amendment. Nominally, the result is thus Republican. But the anomaly of the situation is that it is a Republican victory won by its enemies. It is in Virginia that the Democratic party, by compulsion, eats its own words that this is a white man's government. Now it certainly makes a great difference whether a radical reform is carried by its friends or its enemies; because, in the latter case, it may justly be suspected that, having carried it to obtain power, they will use the power to repeal it. In the present case, however, this is impossible. Unless the Fif-teenth Amendment be ratified by the Legislature, the situation reverts to that before the election. If, however, it be ratified equal suffrage is secure.

This indeed is the view taken by a Democrat who writes to the Warld in the true Democratic strain. It is a signal illustration of the charactor of the victory that it is obtained even by the assistance of such gentle malignants.

"The first thing to be noted in that the Uspenwood "The first thing to be noted in that the Usonawoon Constitution, in a modified form, but still very objectionable, has been adopted by a majority of not less than sixty thousand votes. True, the obnoxious instrument has been purged of its most proscriptive features, but even now it has characteristics that would dawn it in any State that has not been broken on the wheel of Reconstruction. In the first place, we have had to shirt our eyes, hold our nose, and awallow the black dose of negro suffrage. There is no doubt shost that, nor of the still more distantful fact that we will never not the dung out of our system. It only we will hever get the drug out of our system. It only remains for us to try to creatral the creatmen whom we have given the right to vote, and to use every effect to make them keep in the path is which we would have them to go."

Of course persons like this correspondent will do all that they can to thwart the free exercise of their newly-won rights by the colored citisens, and their spirit was plainly exhibited last summer by Mr. Warm Hamron and others. But this is unavoidable,

The spirit of the new Governor WALKER, as displayed in his speech after election, was admirable. He appeared beneath the National and State flags, held respectively by a colored and a white voter. He said that he and his friends must remember that they had succeeded on the platform of universal suffrage and equal rights; and must see that those who opposed them have all their rights and are fully protected by the law. The opportunity of the vicand its fruits must be for all. These are certainly very sensible words; and all that is said of Governor WALKER justifies the belief that they are as sincere as they are wise,

But the malignant-for the word, although originally applied to the Paritan forefathers of us of the radical persuasion, seems poculiarly appropriate in this instance—who writes to the World speaks with evident satisfaction of what he calls the "Conservative" Legislature. One of the abominations of the new Constitution in his eyes is that colored voters may also hold certain "petty offices." Happily, however, remarks this wise and patriotic citizen, who immediately proceeds to sniff at radical " rymandering"-happily, however, "with a Conservative Legislature these offices may be made so approfitable that it will not pay the negroes to accept them." He is pleased to remark also that in the Legislature "the Conservative strength is sufficient to overrule the Governor's veto should be ever 'go back' upon the party that put him in power," But Governor WALK-zn will probably remember that if the Republican element be taken from the party that put him in power and added to the side of its naturof sympathy, this "Conservatism" would be a mere minority. His little speech shows him to be too wise a man to believe that the political future of the State is with this bitterly reactionary spirit. It is with a larger liberty, a more enlightened justice, a general intelligence. Let him trust the tendency that has made the bitter-est Democrats unwillingly vote for that equality of rights which is so abhorrent to them.

Moreover, as the principles of a national party must be the same in every State, we shall of course hear no more of the natural inferiority of one class of citizens, nor of the sublime creed of color as evidence of political capacity. Any such declaration would denounce the worthy Virginia "Conservatives" who have "swallow ed the black dose." There are still doubts and perplexities, but Virginia has decided to equalize the suffrage, to admit colored citizens to office, to educate all the colored children, to forhid the disfranchisement of colored voters; it has elected a Governor who declares that all this must be honestly done, and the World salutes it as a famous Democratic victory! When your gun has a new lock, stock, and barrel, is it your old gan or a new one?

A PROTESTED WORD.

THE news from France is amusing. The Emperor grants certain concessions note preprio-of his own will. He is reported to have said: "The elections show that I must choose between empire and revolution. I will give full satisfaction to the liberal aspirations of all parties; but have decided to cease concessions at the boundaries prescribed in the Constitution." The message to the Legislative body proposes to allow it to elect its own officers, to give it the control of the budget, and to extend the right of interpellation, or of inquiry into executive action. This, it is asserted, amounts practically to the concession of ministerial responsibility as an element of Imperial govern-

The story of the Grand Remonstrance in England is very familiar. The King promised what he felt obliged to promise, and broke his word when he thought he could break it with safety. One oath, or promise, or pledge of Louis Narotzon is just as valuable as another. He talks of the limits of the Constitution. But the Constitution is his work, and it is what he chooses to consider it. If he has taken an oath to support it, did he not also take an oath to support the Constitution under which he was placed in the Elyste as President? The word of Louis Narolnon has gone to public protest. Is that word all the security he can offer France for larger liberty?

What he proposes is merely the old charter with different details. A man of his anteced-ents is not and will not be a constitutional monarch in the ordinary sense. He will govern as well as reign. He has, indeed, the form of a popular trust. He speaks of powers explicitly confided to him by the people. But who for-gets the facts? Sworn to obey a constitution, he forcibly overthrew the government which it established; imprisoned the Legislature; exiled his fellow-citizens at his pleasure; occupied Paris with the army; overswed France; and, having shown himself absolute master, asked Frenchmen whether he should be Emperor. They said yes; and in this manner were powers "explicitly confided" to him. Frenchmen have begun to change their minds, and his prostige is waning. But it needs a much greater man than Louis Narolkos to give France real liberty at the expense of his crown and dynasty.

THE "ALABAMA" QUESTION POSTPONED.

In the report of the speech of Mr. GLADstock moving the definite postponement of the Alabama question for this year, he remarked that the Government of the United States did not regard the failure of the treaty as a definite dropping of the question, but, on the contrary, that it considered it better an interval should occur on account of the state of public opinion in America, before negotiations were resumed; and in this opinion the British Government were inclined to concur. The question was accordingly postponed.

This result is unfortunate, because it is not a postponement of the discussion merely, but of the negotiation; and it would certainly be better that when Congress meets a treaty should have been negociated, and in readiness to be laid before the Senate, than that there should be a war in debate and lofty resolutions, as there undoubtedly will be, to perplex the settlement of the question. Nor is the tone in which the Euglish press receives the postponement reassuring. The Times observes that "when Mr. MOTERY considers the feeling of America is such that a treaty consistent with the honor of England will satisfy Americans, he may address the Government for a renewal of negotiations." The suspicion that America wishes to dishonor England by a trenty is certainly not favorable to a candid interpretation of any proposition. The Times further hopes that the question of the Queen's neutrality proclamation will be tacitly abandoned. But this is a vital element of the question. It is moral evidence that can not be set saide. Undoubtedly the issuing of such a proclamation is a right reserved under the law of nations to every government; but undoubtedly, also, the manner in which the right is exercised is indicative of the spirit of the government. Why is it that the escape of a Cuban expedition from

New York does not accuse the United States

Government of bad faith toward an ally, while that of the Alabama from Liverpool filled this country and all the friends of this country in England with indignation? The answer to this question involves the reason why the Queen's proclamation, which was undoubtedly discretionary with her Government, is a cardinal consideration in the discussion.

The Star also rejoices that the debate is postponed. It is of opinion that American resentment against England is likely to become weaker and her desire to reduce the burden of the debt stronger. If the Star had a more intimate knowledge of the political situation in this country it would think otherwise. Indeed, as a general principle nothing is gained between two countries in which there is a deep feeling of hostility by leaving an angry ques-tion unsettled; and that for the very obvious reason that it furnishes an irresistible political opportunity. If the situation remains un-changed until the meeting of Congress, the Star will find that the discussion of the question will not be postponed in that body, and General Banks, or some other honorable gentleman, will have the most stringent resolutions ready, and patriotic ardor will be kindled to the highest practicable point. However the autumn elections may be decided, the question will be pressed. If the Republicans succeed, the Democrats in Congress will act in sympathy with Mr. RYLAND'S resolution in the California Democratic Convention, that the Democratic party alone has always proved faithful to the country upon such issues. If the Democrats succeed, they will strike every string of popular feeling to strengthen themselves for the national campaign, while the Republicans will feel a greater necessity of raising some rallying cry of enthusiasm and union.

Meanwhile the duty of good citizens is to inform themselves thoroughly upon the subject, that public opinion may intelligently guide and not mislead Congress, nor be unduly influenced by Congressional harangues and resolutions. President Woolan't truly observes, that it is unwise to mingle the question of general unfriendliness with that of damages by the Alabassa; but the question of general unfriendliness very seriously affects the point which be concedes to be most vital; namely, whether due precautions were taken to prevent her escape.

SECTARIAN SCHOOLS.

Ir is remarkable that while the Roman Catholic ecclesisatics in this country, assisted by the Democratic party, as in this State, are trying to establish sectarian schools, in Bavaria, a peculiarly priest-ridden country, the people have recently voted by great majorities against the sectarian policy. The ecclesiastical interest, indeed, both Protestant and Roman, warmly advocated the sectarian plan; but such are the feeling and conviction of the people that in one town Protestants, Catholics, and Jows all voted against the sectarianism except one Protestant and one Catholic. In Austria, as we have formerly stated, the Government has decided to organize the schools without ecclesiastical influence of any kind.

The reason for this action, both of the people and of the priests, is obvious. The aim of the priesthood every where is to obtain as absolute control of the people as possible. It wishes its power to be felt in every relation of life. Its object is to produce the feeling that every important movement and event and institution most have, not a religious sanction, but ecclesiastical approval. Its purpose in obtaining control of the schools is not the education of the people, it is the confirmation and extension of its own power. It wishes to appoint teachers, that it may put its creatures into place. It would prescribe text-books, so as to exclude what it calls heresy; that is to say, whatever tends to unfettered mental and moral liberty. Science threatens certain ecclesiastical traditions and dogmas, and ecclesiasticism would therefore smother science. The great aim of the priesthood is to identify in the popular mind religion and the Church; and to cultivate the conviction that the word of the priest or of the Church is the voice of religion.

The experience of mankind fortunately pleads against this purpose. Just in the degree that intellectual freedom is secured, the ecclesiastical hold upon the human mind is relaxed. With every fresh ray of light comes the stronger desire for more light, and a more instinctive resistance to the power of darkness. Conse-quently the universal popular tendency in this time of increasing liberty is to shake off eccle-stastical domination; and where the opportunity is offered the people as resolutely protest against it as the ecclesiastical power insists upon it. This explains the movement in Bavaria, in Austria,

The apparent growth of this domination in this country, and especially in this State, is easily enough explained. The enormous immigration, and especially again the part that remains in this State and city, has been chiefly of adherents of the Roman Church, and political purposes compel a pandering to the influ-ence and power of that Church. The support of the Democratic party to the sectarian school scheme of the priesthood is a bid for "the Irish vote," and has no other significance, although it may produce very disagreeable consequences. If the "Irish voters" were not so many in the city of New York, and if they were not generally Roman Catholics, of course we should not see indefinite municipal leases of valuable property at a dollar a year, nor would a Catho-lic mob feel emboldened to assault an Orange procession in the streets on the anniversary of the Boyne.

To control the schools, to appoint teachers, to choose text-books, and at the expense of the state, is to master the very sources of influence. As we have before said, the mere contact of Catholic with Protestant children is liberalizing. The little Catholics see as much intelligence, good conduct, confidence, happiness outside their Church as within its pale. The result is inevitable; and therefore the first step is most streamously resisted by the occlesiastical influence. It is a subject which deserves the most thoughtful consideration among intelligent per-sons in this country; and the tendency that is so perceptible in this State as to be called a policy is one of the strong reasons for opposing the Democratic ascendency. That party can not, with any hope of success, displease its members of this faith, as formerly the party at large could not displease the slavery interest. And as its old national policy was dictated by that interest, so its policy upon the subject of sectarian education in this State will be dictated by the ecclesiastical leaders of the voters whom it must propitiste.

ENFORCEMENT OF THE USURY LAW.

ALTHOUGH it is made the express duty of courts of justice to charge each Grand Jury especially to inquire into violations of the usury laws, and the courts very regularly perform it, yet no indictments have been found, and the statute had remained a dead letter for years, until the late meeting of the Grand Jury in this city. The offense of receiving, directly or indirectly, any "greater interest, discount, or consideration" for the loan or forbearance of any money, goods, or things in action than seven per cent. per annum is declared to be a "misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof the person so offending shall be punished by fine not ex-ceeding one thousand dollars, or imprisonment not exceeding six months, or both,

The immunity from punishment enjoyed by those who have constantly accepted usurious interest-perhaps in entire ignorance of the statute-has been very suddenly disturbed, owing, it is said, to the wants of some of the Erie clique, who are thought to have an influence over the composition and movements of the Grand Jury.

In the summer of 1868, when the money market was tightened by operators in Erie, the Grand Jury was not only not invoked, but it would have been hushed into silence had some curious investigators then unburied the statute and brought the offense before that tribunal,

The sympathy with crime which is shown by many public officials does not embrace offenses committed by the class which has lately been indicted, and it may be that this obsolete stat-ute may be enforced in such cases, and especially when the offense consists in satisfying the pressing wants, at the market rate, of those who lately have been loaded with too much stock for a time of severe pressure.

It is unquestionably the duty of courts and juries to enforce the laws, not capriciously and for peculiar purposes, but constantly and because they are in force and ought to be obeyed. They constitute a snare when they are allowed to lie dormant for years and are raked up to gratify ulterior objects.

There would be no objection to the repeal of usury laws if the right to issue the money of ordinary circulation were as free as the industry by which gold and silver may be obtained from the earth for this purpose. It is true that the precious metals may not be coined except by the general government, but its coinage in that way does not interfere with the freedom of producers. On the contrary, it is en aid to that industry, which is thus made practically free and unrestricted. But as the money of circulation may not be issued except under special authority, it would seem to be necessary to fetter a privilege which a few only enjoy by restricting the rate of interest which may be claimed by them, so as to prevent oppression. The case as between papermoney issued by a few and that fabricated from gold and silver which every one may have freely coined, is very different, and it is from the failure to make the distinction that much of the confusion as to the policy of usury laws may be traced.

The argument in favor of absolute freedom in loaning money, based upon the supposed freedom with which money is created and supplied, fails except in its application to gold and silver money; but as this has been practically demonstrated in parts of the United States, and an artificial system substituted, the safeguards which belong to an artificial system would seem to be necessary.

The severity of punishment provided by the statute is disproportioned to the offense, and the statute in this respect needs alteration, at least so far as dealers are concerned who are not connected with banks nor acting under their authority. The penalty of the loss of the excess of interest would seem to be sufficient in ordinary cases.

But while the statute remains unrepealed no prudent man will expose himself to its provitions, for the law may be appealed to when least expected in behalf of unscrupulous speculators, with a view to alarm those who take an unlawful rate, and create the ease in money which on a turn of events they will deprecate, employing then all the advantages which the change con-

THE DEMOCRATIC PROGRAMME.

THE late Democratic Conventions have thoroughly undeceived those who supposed that the leopard would suddenly change his spots. More amusing and even ridiculous spectacles have seldom been presented to public attention; ridiculous, because there is always something abourd in the incessant reiteration of offers that are perpetually rejected. The only alleviation of the old order is the nomination of General ROSECRAMS for Governor of Ohio. But as if to extinguish any hope that might begin to glimmer in consequence, Mr. Wallace, the Chairman of the Pennsylvania Convention, in calling it to order, remarked that principles, not men, are the Democratic doctrine. That, indeed, was evident at Columbus, as it was at Chicago in 1864. Then the man was one who had been a Union soldier—the principles were surrender to the rebellion. Now the man is ROSECRAMS—the principles are VALLANDOOMAM. And as Mr. WALLACE truly remarked, principles, not men, are the Democratic doctrine. Those who are not Democrats, however, are expected to look solely at the man. Repub-licans in Ohio, for instance, are respectfully re-quested to contemplate the Union uniform of ROSECHANS While they give their votes to VAL-LANDSORAM.

But with this exception the men and the principles are equally familiar. VALLANDS-GRAM in Ohio, and in Pennsylvania Mr. WAL-LACE, Mr. HUGHES, and Mr. ASA PACKER, the candidate for Governor, are the same old Copperhead managers who conducted the business during the war. They told us then that the Government was a dark despotism because it would not let our rebel brethren depart in peace; now they tell us it is a fell tyranny because it will not let them stay upon their own terms—the Government being the people of the country. Then we were being taxed to immolate our brethren; now we are taxed to pamper bloated bond-holders, who are not our brethren, probably, because they sustained the war. Then the negro was an inferior, and this was a white man's government; now also the negro is an inferior, and still it is a white man's government. Then the local rights of States were ruthlessly invaded; now the local rights of States shall never be overthrown. In fine, now as then, in the estimation of the old Democratic managers, all is tyranny, corruption, and black despair, and universal night is at hand, unless-sh! unless-Mr. Vallandegman and his friends are permitted to direct the taxation, to handle the money, and to control the Government; in which happy case Astres will return to earth, and the hopes of mankind may

There were those who supposed that this party might have learned something; that inasmuch as the country had decided that the national faith should be kept, and that colored citizens should vote and be no longer estracized. those issues would have been relinquished and battle offered upon other and more promising grounds. There were those within the party who advised this course, who recommended it last year, and who had the emphasis of rueful experience to support their counsel this year. But all has been sublimely disregarded. Even in the city of New York, where a year ago there was a party in Tammany Hall which seriously wished to nominate Mr. CHASE, this year Tammany Hall, as a Fourth of July festivity, repudistes the war and its results, and after an oration worthy of VALLANDIGHAM OF ALEXAN-IS OF HENRY CLAY DEAN, che for John T. Hoffman as the Presidential candidate; while, simultaneously, as if to refresh in the public memory the claims of the party to the confidence of honorable and patriotic men, its late candidate for Vice-President, General BLAIR, extols rebels at a social meeting of faithful Union soldiers,

And all this denunciation of equal rights, and praising of rebels, and demand for repudiation and dishonor, is put forth under the name of "Conservatism;" as in the bitter hours of the war, during the tortures of Andersonville and the horrors of the battle-field, it was "Conservatism" to pulliate the rebellion and to sneer at the Government. Is there any thing in the character of those who manage these conventions, or of the principles which they proclaim, which should persuade an honest and loyal American citizen that the just results of the war will be more respected, or the Government more honestly and economically administered, or the public honor and peace more surely maintained by the Democratic party than by | ground that he is not fitted for it, the instinctthe Republican? If, indeed, that party had abandoned all its defeated issues and repudiated the managers identified with all its ignominies-if it had declared its acceptance of the situation, nominated men whose careers and characters were their credentials, and with such pledges of a changed spirit had challenged public confidence, there would be circumstances in the situation, as there always are when a party has been long in power, that might have in-clined that public confidence toward it, unless the dominant party by its practice as well as its profession had vindicated its claim to continued success. But the opportunity has been lost; and therefore the triumph of such a party with such a platform would be not only a defeat but a national disgrace.

MEN AND WOMEN IN CONVEN-TION.

THE late Woman's Suffrage Convention at Saratoga was but another indication of the fact, that this movement will not be laughed or frowned down. Indeed, while many persons are not attracted, but rather repelled, by some of the public aspects of the agitation, it is privately making rapid inroads upon the old traditions; and the simultaneous appearance of Mr. Mills's book in England and of Dr. Buss-NELL's in this country shows how deeply it en-gages the attention of the most thoughtful The public conduct of the reform seems to many repugnant to good taste; but reforms in their beginnings are not apt to propitiste what is called taste, and they are always distasteful to those who wish the old order to remain undisturbed. The Reform agitation of 1883 in England was excessively distasteful to the Lords and the Conservatives; the Corn-Law agitation was singularly wanting in good breeding, in the judgment of the Protectionists; the Anti-Slavery agitation was angrily outlawed from polite society in this country; and the Woman's Suffrage movement is summarily de-clared abourd by those who do not favor it.

The old argument, which consisted in the superior smile at "strong-minded" women the humorous allusion to the spectacles and umbrella of a typical and redoubtable "bloomer," in such clever dabs as "the Spirit of '76," and the excellent fun of the descriptions of men officiating as nurses and washers and ironers, has perhaps spent its force. At least it is now a little stale whenever it appears, and as an argument has palpably failed; and this for the reason that we have already stated, namely, that the question now engages persons who think, and who are not persuaded by a joke because they laugh at it. Even the Tribune, which keeps up rather a brisk fusilade of the old style, occasionally falls back upon what it evidently considers a serious argument-a doublehender, as the boys sny on the Fourth of Julyfirst, that woman suffrage is a new idea; and, second, that it will be time enough for women to vote when they ask to. But to this it should certainly be enough to reply, first, that reform of every kind necessarily proposes some novelty; and, second, that no reform would over be possible if it must be delayed until every body interested had been consulted.

There is also something a little puerile in saying that women may vote when they wish to; for how many women must first wish to? and why should the indifference of some to a perfectly just claim prejudice those who are not indifferent? How sound an argument would it have seemed to the Tribuxe in the old antislavery days that it was time enough to emancipate the slaves when they asked to be free? Mr. Mill says truly that the women in an Oriental harem do not complain of not having the freedom of European women; but while that fact undoubtedly enables men to retain them longer in that kind of bondage it does not render it less unjust.

The book of Mr. MILL, which we most beartily commend to every one who is interested in human progress, is an exhaustive but small volume, for the subject is very simple, and may be very concisely stated. The usual talk about the "natural sphere" of the sex is pointless, ause, until th development which the reform demands is granted, it is as absolutely impossible to determine the sphere of women as it would be that of men had they always been similarly constrained. When a man tells us of the heaven-appointed sphere of lovely woman he merely tells us what his theory of that sphere is; to which there can be no objection until he puts his theory into law and attempts artificially to produce the sphere which theoretically pleases him; and pleases him not from conformity to right reason, but from very different and very much lower considerations.

FREDERICK DOUGLASS has always said, with reat good sense, that what the colored race in this country wants is to be let alone; in other words, to be suffered to have the same fair play that other races have. But when conventions of full-grown men, like the late Democratic Conventions in Pennsylvania, Ohio, and California, solemnly resolve that the negro ought not to be allowed to do this and that, upon the ive reply is, "What do you know about his fitness, who have never given him the opportunity to prove it?" The absurd position of the Democratic party in regard to the negro is precisely that of society at large in regard to It begins by begging the question. With Dr. BUSHNELL it denounces the movement as a reform against Nature, but with a horribly suspicious unwillingness to let Nature vindicate herself. We venture to say that there are friends of the reform who have quite as romantic and poetic a respect for women as Dr. Busnenz, but who add to it such a practical trust as to believe that even with the largest liberty they will not as a sex do what Nature did not intend them to do.

Meanwhile we are exceedingly mistaken if the proceedings and resolutions of the Women's Convention at Saratoga do not very favorably compare in every point with those of the Men's Conventions at Harrisburg and Columbus. For which is the higher and more practical wisdom for intelligent Americans at this day—to resolve with the men that the national faith shall be dishonored and the equal rights of American citizens denied, or to resolve with the women that, "as we deny the right of one class of men to define the rights and duties of another class of men, so do we emphatically deny the right of one sex to define the rights and duties of another sex?"

NOTES.

Ms. Sawarn is indulging in most Californian Mk. Sawarn is induling in most Camorana rhetoric. With the same ardor that he made a famous speech at the Astor House in New York on the 22d of December, 1860, he said at San Francisco, on the Fourth of July, 1860, that he anticipated the time when there would be three Pacific Railroads, when the waste country between the Sierras and the Rocky Mountains would be covered with trees and vegetation, when our star of empire shall shed its light when our star of empire shall shed its light north to the Arctic Ocean and south until its rays mingle with those of the Southern Cross in the tropics. "This period," he said, "I antici-pate not to be very distant. I hope all here will live to see it. I hope I shall live to see it. I think it is only about seven years away from us now. I think it will have taken place by 1876— the year of the hundredth anniversary of Ameri-can independence." He then sat down, and can independence." He then sat down, and naturally amidst "immense, cathusiastic, and long-continued cheering."

THE State Temperance Convention in Maine, as we have already mentioned, has nominated a separate ticket for State officers. In New York it urges, as a sacred duty, upon all temperance men to persuade their parties to nominate only strict temperance candidates. But the Convention does not say what a Republican is to do if his powers of persuasion fail, and his party nom-inates an unpledged Republican and the Opposi-tion a Temperance Democrat. Is he to disregard his Republicanism or his temperance? In Ohio a separate ticket will probably be nomin-ated. And the Republican who supports it will have to show that the probable success of Mr. Vallangeman, and his friends in consequence, is of greater service to good morals and public order, including the interests of the temperance reform, than their defeat.

THE Secretary of the Society of the Army of the Gulf, Mr. GRANVILLE P. HAWES, made a very trenchant roply to the remarkable letters of General BLAIR, in regard to his recent remarkable performance as a guest of the Society. Gen-eral BLAIR said that he believed the Society, whose hospitality he had accepted, to be a "Radical stalking horse," and delivered himself to his hosts accordingly. Mr. Hawas observes with vigor to this excuse, that the Constitution of the Society expressly procludes the discussion of polsociety expenses pricions in occasion in the tien-ities, and that its rigid enforcement in the tien-eral's particular case by Admiral Farancour should have quieted him forever upon that point. He then adds: "There is no man connected the transfer of the price of the price of the point. with the Society who ever held a political office [ch! Mr. Blazii!], who wants a political office [ch! Mr. Blazii!], or who, through fear that he can't get one, is afraid of calling a rebel by his right name [ah, ah! Mr. Blazii!]; neither will they allow politicians, Democratic or Republican, to call them to account for 'aspersing reb-els,' especially if the remark is illustrated by comparing Lee and Stonewall Jackson with FARRAGUT and SHERIDAN, who were also our relief of the sixting with us at our own table." So were the American the Colf. So says the Army of the Gulf, so say we all, Mr. BLAIR.

"A Hand-Book of the River Plate," compiled and printed in Buenos Ayres, and issued in this city by Collins & Brother, contains the most copious and detailed information in regard to the Argentine Republic. A second volume, which is to follow immediately, will treat of Uruguay and Paraguny. The information is very interesti and to any one who proposes removing to that region, or who would be familiar with it, the region, or who would be fa Hand-Book is indispensable.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

The Pennsylvania Democratic State Convention met at Harrisburg, July 14, and nominated Res. Ast Packer for Governor. The resolutions adopted desire regainst the exercise of deathful constitutional powers, and that Pennsylvania will never give up the great right of local subfrancement; that the realization of the Piloceath Americance by the Legislature of the State cought to be repeated, and the question submitted to the people for their decision; that the negre should not have the ballot; that the finances need reform; that labor reforms should be encouraged; that the whole Reconstruction policy tends to destroy republican government and establish tyrange; that our soldiers should not be forgotten; that our synthesis should not be forgotten; that our synthesis should be given to nations struggling for liberty; and that our system of taxation is burdensome, and should be done array with.

The President has issued his proclamation ordering the election in Mischelpid on the Bith of November, the floath Toesday. He submits the test and disfinitehing clames to separate vote.

The through train from New York to Washington.

The through train from New York to Washington, which left the former at 5.50 r.m., July 15, came in collision with a head-car leaded with Islograph cree-arms, two railes south of the Besquehama River, throwing the engine, begane-tar, and maliters down an embankment dwo feet high. No one was hort. The train was delayed about six hours.

The train was delayed about six hours.

A dreadful disaster occurred on the night of July 14 at Mast Hope, if sulles west of Fort Jerris, on the Eric Baltrand. The night expense train from New York came into collision with a freight train not peoperly switched off. The origins and four cars were weeked and destroyed. Nine passengers were burned alley, among them the Rev. B. Haffeck, of this city, who was unsigned by the collision, but could not extricate himself from the burning wreek. The credict of the coroner's jury holds the oughteet of the freight train responsible.

The Chieges Labor Conversion was hold as New York.

of the coroner's jury holds the oughner of the freight train responsible.

The Chinese Labor Convention was held at Memphis, Tennessee, July B, and called together a large number of prominent men from all parts of the South. A number of Chinamen have already been introduced to the South, and the planters are exceedingly well pleased with them. They are not only patient and falthful workers, but they seem well adapted to the climate and industries of the South.

A dispatch from Omalia gives reports from General A. E. Carr of his operations against the Indians. On the 18th of July he surprised a village of "day soldiers" and Cheyennes, under commond of Tall Bull, and killed fifty-two of them, and appured seventeen women and children, assuing them the wife and daughter of Tall Bull. The Indians had two white resumm, who had been taken on the Salite Bliver, and they had murdered one whose first name is mid in be Suruma. General Carr captured 300 sulminis and many beiges, rifes, pistols, etc. The names of the chick captured are Good Baar, Whicier, Powder Pwee, Fretty Bear, Scain Pace, and Bull Talgh. He fallowed them and days, and found them at South Phille, near Veilley Scation.

The District-Attorney and Murchal of New York.

Station.

The District-Aftorsey and Morshal of New York have severally been instructed, at any and all handrids, to enforce the Neutrality laws and break up the expeditions against Cube. For this purpose they have each been empowered by a cosmission from the Fresident, maker the great sent, authorising them to call on General McDewell for such troops as they may require, and the Admiral to command of the Navy-yard for such treevels and forces as they may deem necessary to present the departmen of any hostile expedition; and they are also directed to parate any such expedition, and capture on the high seas, if processary.

The Great Eastern arrived off St. Picere July 13. The splice with the above can was effected the next day, when a message was sent by the cable to the French Emperor.

The Penbody Institute, in the town of Penbody, Massathusetts, formerly Seuth Harvers, established mainly by the bounty of Mr. George Penbody, was dedicated July 14.

FOREIGN NEWS.

FOREIGN NEWS.

Is the Corps Legislatif, July 12, a message from Emperor Napoleon was presented and rend by Minister Rouber. The message states that the Emperor has resolved to convoke the Senate to consider the following questions, via: The right of the Corps Legislatif to clock its own officers: the simplification of the methods of presenting and examining amendments to projects of law; the submission to the trept of commercial treaties for approval; the control of the flowing testing and examining amendments to project of law; the submission to the trept commercial treaties for approval; the control of the flowing testing and examining amendments and office in the Ministry; and the extention of the right of interpellation. Similar questions with respect to the Science are hereafter to be considered. The Emperor beliaves that these measures with need all demands. In continuous, he asks the Depatites to consider how offensheds alternatives to the Depatites to consider how offensheds alternative of the activation of the Empire. They saight to leave intertition rights which force an integral part of the institutions of the Empire. They saight to leave intertition rights which have been explicitly excelled to bein by the people, and which are escenticle ordificant of powers as the safegurates of sector and succipy.

The French Cabinet has been reorganized. M. Resilver, who was Minister of State, has been invited to assume the Presidency of the Stante. The new Cabinet is thus constituted: Minister of the lateriar, De-Forcade in Bosonties, Minister of Hubbit Works, Gressier; Minister of Parille Insertation, Bostebour; Minister of State, Chaeceloop.

M. Lesseys officially amounters that the coremony of the opening of the State Canad will take place on

M. Lessers officially amountees that the ceremony of the opening of the Sucz Canal will take place on the 17th of next November.

A riot occurred at Belfast, Ireland, July 12, between Grangemen and Roman Catholics, and for a time moliniw was supreme. The occusion of the distributed was a strong public demonstration made by the Grange societies.

was a strong public demonstration made by the Grange societies.

The Bittish House of Lords on the night of July 13 resumed consideration of the Irich Church bill. An amendment was passed providing for connected endowment, 121 to 114. The bill was then passed. It was taken up in the House of Cammons on the 16th. Mr. Gladstone said, with respect to the measurement which had been made to the bill, that the Government proposed to restore the premishe and the date of disestablishment as they appeared to the original bill; they would agree to the assembaouts relating to curation amounts agree to the assembaouts relating to curation amounts to papear, with the single exception of anomaliants, with some magnifications; but all other menulments they should appear, with the single exception of the grant of last a million of penuds in feet of private beautifications and before 16th.

Biren Ven Beget has replied to the recent chemical the proposed Cambrance of Catholic Powers against the proposed Cambrance of Catholic Powers against the non-index of time to take step when the Council declares against the rights of sister.

A new Spanish Calment the Campel, with Govern Poline in Power of the Campel, with Govern Poline in Power of the Campel and Milatier of cares against the rights of states.

A new Spanish Cabinet has been formed, with General Point on Provident of the Council and Minister of War; Admiral Topete as Minister of Marine; Solvein as Minister of State; Sopasta as Minister of the Interior; Eckegarars as Minister of Agriculture; Admiral as Minister of Finance; Zoulia as Minister of Justice; and Recept as Minister of Openiors and Recept as Minister of Council as Minister of Decisions.

thou and Become as Minister of the Colonies.

The French and Pensstan Governments have recognized the Spanish Reneary.

The attendance of Russian bi-bops at the (Egamental Council is faciside) by the Carr.

The consumption of beer in Monich and throughout all lavarials countries would be a facisided find the captured fine six shoursed each bi-warney, complexing something like six shoursed each bi-warney, which make over a handred radiion pallons over year, and, though light treasury is more than one-half of the eatire revenue of this proeperous kingdots.

LIME ROCK ISLAND, OFF NEWPORT, RHODE ISLAND, -[SIGETCHED BY C. G. BUSH.]

IDA LEWIS, THE NEWPORT HEROINE.

The Newport "Grace Darling" was been in the city of Newport, Rhode Island, in the year 1842. Her father, Captain Hosea Lewis, was appointed keeper of the Lime Rock Light in 1854. It is located upon a rock covering a few hundred square feet of space, at the southern entrance of Newport Harbor, and is entirely surrounded by Newport Harbor, and is entirely surrounded by water. Hence the only means of communication with the land is by a boat. Soon after the appointment of Mr. Lawis a small dwelling-house was erected on the rock, and his family took possession thereof in 1858. Mr. Lawis was paralyzed about eight years ago, and since that time has been almost a helpless cripple. His wife has since been obliged to give most of her time to caring for the light and keeping it in order, while Ina, the oldest of four children, has looked ofter the family, transported her brothers and sisters to and from Newport almost daily. and sisters to and from Newport almost daily, for the purpose of attending school, and aided in supporting the family.

She first distinguished herself as a rescuer of human life in the same year that she went with the family to reside in the light-house. Four lads, who were in a small boat, were upset, and were in imminent danger of perishing, when IDA, discovering their situation, put off in her boat, and succeeded in picking them all up and reand succeeded in picking them all up and restoring them to consciousness.

In the winter of 1866, on one of the coldest days ever known in this latitude, Ina rescued a soldier who had endeavored to have a sail in a frail skiff. It was a most daring feat, and required courage and perseverance such as few of the male sex even are possessed of.

During the prevalence of a gale in the fall of 1867, two men, who had lost a valuable sheep overboard, while searching for the animal, found themselves in imminent danger of being swamped.
Ina saw their peril from the light-house, and,
with her accustomed promptitude, jumped into her boot and went to their rescue. After landing them safely on shore, she returned and saved the sheep also.

Soon after the above, on one stormy, cold night, a boarman whose eruft was disabled took refuge on an isolated rock half a mile distant from refuge on an isolated rock half a mile distant from IDA's dwelling. Finding himself in danger of perishing from cold, he shouted for help, and his cries being heard, IDA started out promptly and added to her previous bright record by the rescue of another imperiled life.

Miss Lewis's last and crowning act of heroism was the rescue from drowning of two soldiers on Monday, the 29th of March, 1869. She was quite unwell at the time, suffering from a severe cold. The soldiers had started from Newport for Fort Adams in a small boat under the guidance of a boy who professed to be capable of managing it. They had proceeded about half the distance when the boat was swamped, and the boy perished almost immediately. Miss Lawis's mother discovered the position of the soldiers, who were clinging to the boat in an ul-most exhausted condition. She immediately re-ported the fact to her daughter, and the latter ported the fact to her daughter, and the latter rushed out without covering either on her head or feet, save a pair of stockings, and jumping into the hoat she called to her younger brother to go with and aid her. A fearful gale was raging at the time, and the management of a hoar was extremely difficult, even to an experienced conswoman like Ins. Nevertheless, the feat was accomplished, the men were dragged into the hoat and taken to the light-house, one of them being so much exhausted as to require much hard work before he could be restored to consciousness.

Miss Lewis has received a handsome gold watch from the two young soldiers. On July 5 one of the most interesting features of the celebration of Independence Day at Newport was the presentation to Miss Lewis of a beautiful and costly boat. The presentation was made by the inhabitants of Newport.

INTERIOR OF LIME ROCK LIGHT-HOUSE-IDA LEWIS AT HOME.-[Sketched by C. G. Bosn.]

IN THE HEART OF THE EARTH.

I THINK we created some excitement at Fal-mouth. Unconventional in our attire, merry in our deportment, excited in our demeanor, and altogether imbued with that excellent Mark Tapleian philosophy of being "jolly under any circumstances," it is small wonder that we did create some excitement at Falmouth. We have none of us a word to say against Falmouth—a charming, health-giving, and delightful spot, in the most beautiful of all English counties, Cornthe most beautiful of all English counties, Corn-wall—indeed, we are all of us inclined to mark with a white stone the day that the Falmouth expedition was proposed in a certain smoking-room, of which history knoweth not, but indi-viduals a very great deal. The little army that invaded the place of which I am speaking, where the sea is of the bluest and the harbor of the grandest description, was mixed in its tastes, talent, and temper. In this consisted our joility. We gave and took; smothered our absurdities; advertised our excellences; offended no one, advertised our excellences; offended no one, and seldom laid ourselves open to giving offense. I am not egotistical, for I am speaking of the party in its collective form. We behaved prettily on all occasions. It was too hot to put ourselves out of temper, and the society too pleasant to suggest boredom. If young Cecil, the budding poet, chose to read Tennyson's Idyls—backed up most strongly by Isaline Langworthy, with the fair hair and blue eyes—on the pleasant cliff underneath the casele, we raised no objection. Those who cared to hear Cecil spont listened; and those who detested poetry went to ened; and those who detested poetry went to sleep. If the famous Farquahurson, briefless barrister, orator, and sucking politicism, chose to discuss Mr. John Stuart Mill and the female franchise, women's rights, and the rest of it— backed up most strongly by Mande Carrothers, with the raven hair and olive complexion—we allowed him to rap his knuckles on the table, and talk us into a semi-idiotic state of stupor. If Harry Armstrong found delight in bringing his London manners into Cornwall, and preferred the society of a certain soft-eyed little divinity who sold newspapers and gum-arabic in the town to our sweet society, we allowed him to make excuses for descriing us, and, with the exception of a little innocent and unavoidable "chaff," he was free to "spoon" all day in the stationer's shop for aught we cared. We excused Lilian Corner's scales and morning exercises for the sake of her Heller, Hiller, Schubert, and Chopin; sake of her Heller, Hiller, Schubert, and Chopin; her tarancellas, moonlight sonates, and reveries, with which we were favored in the evening if we behaved ourselves very prettily. The "irrepressible Edgar," as we used to call the youngest male member of our community, was allowed to give full vent to his overflowing spirits all day long, provided he woke us betimes in the morning to get our materinal plunge in the blue waters that carled themselves refreshingly into "Summer Cove." And what of our host and hosters? Theirs indeed was a rule of love; and as they allowed us to do exactly as we liked, we were the more considerate in meeting their wishes and pulling all together.

"BLINKING LIKE AN OLD OWL, I ARRIVED SAFE AND SOUND ON TERRA FIRMA."

e had vainly imagined that we had seen every thing worth seeing in the environs of Fal-mouth, and enjoyed ourselves as much as is consistent with human nature, when our party re-ceived a valuable addition. A certain sweet songstress of whom the world has heard, and of whom the world will ere long hear a great deal whom the world will ere long hear a great deal more, came down among us to breashe her native sir, and get new inspirations and health from the woods and caverns, and rocks and sen-music, with which we were surrounded.

But the songstress did not come alone. She brought her sweet voice and all our old pet songs; the songs set to words which were poetre, and the words wedded to music which breathed of love, and was therefore quite unsalable; she brought her cheery manner and her indominable plack—she has been in the saddle during the late American campaign for days and days, has this sweet songstress of mine—and she brought her brother. her brother.

Her brother was such a good fellow that I must really introduce him with a little bit of a preface. He was, if I may make use of an exprecision, most puzzling at school, and most use pre-sion, most puzzling at school, and most use ful in after-life—a walking oxymoron. He was an Englishman, and not on Englishman. An Englishman he was in heart, and speech, and bearing; but destiny had scolen him away from his native hand years ago, to shed his cheeriness on other climes.

on other climes.

So much, however, did he love the old country that once in every three or four years he wended his way bork again—the lacky sunflow!—his pockets full of gold, and his heart full of love, to spend a holiday in England and a little fortune in generosity.

During these holiday trips he never left his sister or his parents; and as his sister and his parents had chosen to non-down to Falmonth, like a duriful fellow, Washington followed them thinker.

We were at breakfast when Washington burst in upon us at Falmouth; and breakfast at Falmouth was not such an early meal as it might have been. With that generosity and unselfah-ness which is characteristic of Englishmen, I will at once exculpate the whole male portion of our party.

The irrepressible Edgar was bound to wake us in the morning; and we were always on our backs in the sea by eight o'clock. But the women! oh, those dear women! Well, generally speaking, we had but little to complain of. They were cheerful, and bore the fatigue which stronglegged men not unfrequently impose upon finglic women without a murmur; but they were not proof against the nightly exercise of that highly necessary, but eminerally female organ, the human tongue! At ten o'clock deceptive youns were chorused forth, to take us off our guard, and persuade us to allow them to go to bed.

NO THOROUGHFARE.

Not an objection was urged. The poet perhaps | looked somewhat more betrymose than usual, and the crutor came to a dead stop in an able harringue on the "Female Franchise;" but Isaline's hand was squeezed by the poet, and Maude's eyes followed by the orator, without another murmur at ten o'clock.

I am bound to confess that I don't altogether consider that the poet or the orator were quite fairly treated. Ten minutes after Isaline and Maude had disappeared in a beyyof beauty, the strangest, wildest, and most discordant noises pro-eded from the upper regions. That strange freemassnry of women which exists solely and entirely in the upper regions, at a time which should be devoted to sleep and rost, puts aside all thoughts of weariness previously assumed. Then commence the monkey-tricks of women. They wrestle and they plunge, they dance fandangoes in limited attire, they vie with one another in feats of agility and forcy; they talk, they do one another's hair, they do any thing but that for which they left the sweet society of males—go to sleep!

The consequence is that, having devoted the freshest part of the night to folly, they have to devote the smallest part of the night to sleep. And when the meaning comes the great hungry men, ravenous from fresh air and salt-water, have to thing pebbles and sand and gravel up at the windows in the opper regions, from which the motalizing sirens will never emerge.

And so it came about that Washington found us at breakfast at an morthedox hour, and we all got outrageously chaffed. We very soon saw that there were to be no half-measures with Washington. He did not intend allowing the grass to grow under his feet. His stay in England was limited, and that which had to be done was evidently to be "done quickly."

I must say that, up to the time of Washing-ton's arrival, we had not made the most of our time. In the little smoking mean in which the expedition had been arranged, all sorts of exentsions and drives, and pienics and sails, had been mapped out.

But once at Falmouth, we dreamed away our time. It was very pleasant. We hathol till breakfast, and hecked till banch, and loanged till dinner, and sang and stedled till tea, and talked till bedrime; and so day after day slipped away, and Washington found us at breakfast prepared for another day's dream.

I suppose we wanted a leader. Energy—that is to say, personal energy—was out of the ques-tion. Washington assumed the vacant directorate and led us. It was a case of "Thimus! Ibimus! nicumque precedes Washington."

To tell the trush, it was Washington who persnaded me to go into the heart of the earth.

He did not begin rashly or impetuously. He did not frighten me wish an accurate description of the "man-engine," and the "bucket," and the interminable lablers; but in a light and niry way—before all the girls, by the by—he led the conversation gently up to mines and mining adventures. He told us how the Princess of Wales and a talented contributor to Peach had been down the Botallack; and then taking stock of me, after a preliminary examination of my bicejes and a general examination of other muscular developments, he asked me how I should like to be introduced to the Wheal Isa-

"Of all things in the world," I said, "previded she be young and good-looking. But why Wheal? Is it a sign of codearment or a token of respect? Am I to understand from the mysterious word Wheal that Isabel is a Cornish Countess, or a Gipsy Queen? Introduce me to the Wheal Isabel? Certainly! Wheal or wor Isabel, could any thing unfortanate be synony-more with such a charming appellation?"
"Hold hard!" he said: "this Cornish air of ours has tilled you too full of came. Bestrain your ardor. Isobel is not an enrhanting maiden feddoned by your poetical imagination. She is no gualener's daughter, no maid of Tregodia, no roast menuaiden, no Cornish beauty. She is black, deep, dirty, and torrilde. She will cause you a ten-mile ride, trouble, fatigue, and some little expense; but the Wheal Isabel is worth

"In Heaven's name, then," said I, "who or

'The Wheal Isabel," said he, " is one of the largest nones in this magnificent district; and if you would like to be introduced to her you

"Coal?" said I, shaddering,

"Or tin?" orbiod the macilegioous Armstrong

"Gold, no doubt," whispered Isaline in my enr.
"Nonsense," said Washington; "copper."

I very soon saw that at this very early period of the entertainment there was no getting out of an introduction to Wheal Isabel.

The cariosity of the women was fairly aroused, And that was quite enough.

In an instant the programme was mapped out entirely to the satisfaction of the girls. We were all to ride over to the Wheai Isabel under the mentorship of Washington, and I was to be the unhappy victim sterificed on the copper altar.

Friend Washington, who at one time had been all corknhoop about the dangers and during of the expedition, got out of it, or rather of the fatigning port of it, with that irrinating air of indifference peculiar to leaders of expeditions.

"You know, my dear fellow, I have seen these kind of thougs so often before that it is really hardly worth while the trouble of changing one's clothes for it," suid he, with that charasing tone of superiority which is so comforting to the man who knows that he is about to make a feed of himself for the hardly of the seen as fool of himself for the benefit of his fellow-creat-But I would advise you to go down,

he added, suspicious that I would back out of it] at the last moment. "You will never regret it."

And then he eleverly magnified me into a here, whereat the girls said pretty and compli-mentary things, and the expedition was finally arranged. Our cavalende was not altogether pretty to look at, but I think it may be safely termed a good one to go. Falmouth was not great in saddle-horses.

We had a 'bus-horse, a hearse-horse, a flyhorse, a wall-eyed horse, and a broken pommel. With these excellent assistants to a ten-mile ride along the Cornish roads, we started, amidst much laughter of parents and cheering of neighboring butcher-boys, on our journey to the Wheal

Very black and barren grew the land as we neared the Queen of Copperdom. The trees somehow or other left off growing; the fields seemed sown with ashes instead of grass; tall chimneys emitted huge volumes of smoke, and deserted shafts, broken wheels, and grimy-looking monstors mot us at every turn.

When four cross roads met amidst a labyrinth of shafts and outhouses in the centre of a blackened heath we drew rein.

"I think this must be the place," said Washington. He was right. A stalwart Cornich-man came out to meet us, and to him we pre-sented our credentials, addressed to the Captain

The captain was somewhat disappointed, I think, when he found that we were not all to be indoctrinated into the mysteries of mining. Miners are after all but men, and the laughing merriment of our joyous girls had already won over

"No, it is only this gentleman," said the treacherous Washington, with the old tone of superiority again. "I have been down mines superiority again. scores of times."

This was all very well of Washington, vaunting his superiority in this way; but why should be, by implication, assert that I was a fool because I was a novice, and because I had not been down

I was quite prepared to go through all the dirty work, but I wanted to be thought a hero

The girls stood by me bravely. Their sympa-thy relieved me from some of the humiliation I felt; and they seemed determined, at all events, that I should not go down into the heart of the earth without a cheer.

sub-captain, who hinted that it would be as well if two other miners were told off as a private es-cort, to guard me through the lower regions.

"It's as well to have two or three with you, Sir," said he; "they treat you with more re-spect down below, and they're a rough lot, I can teli you.

I assented, of course. At such a time it would, by no manner of means, be politic to disscut from any thing or any body.

For the next hour or so my life was in the hands of the slaves of the Wheal Isabel. The sub-captain led me into a little outhor where he personally superintended my toilet. had imagined that it would merely be necessary to put a rough canvas suit over my ordinary clothes. But I was very soon disabused of this

"We must have every thing off, Sir," said my guide, in a soothing medical tone, as if he were about to operate on me. "It's an awfully dirty "It's an awfully dirty place down there.

The costume will bear description. I was first eneased in flannel, clean, of course; and over this come an old clay-stained, moddy, stiff minor's suit. My feet were wrapped in two flame! dusters and then thrust into a pair of old miner's shoes, miles too big for me. On my head was placed a very stiff billy-cock hat, literally as hard as iron, smeared with tallow grease. On the brim in front the captain dabbed a lump of clay, and into this he stock a farthing rush-light.

About half a dozen more rush-lights were suspended to my waist, and I was then pronounced ready for netion.

On our way across the open to the but in which our party was resting, my attendant asked me which way I intended to go down. Asked me, indeed! as if I knew what the good fellow was talking about. I was only auxious not to look a fool, and to do exactly what I was told. I must own that I felt a perfect child in his hands.

"Will you go down," said he, "by the lad-ders, or by the bucket, or by the man-engine?"

He might just as well have asked me the Hindostance for Wheal Isabel.

"The ladders," said he, by way of explanation, "are the most tring and the most tedious.

You will take a good hour to get down by the ladders. The bucket is a dirty way of going down; besides, in this mine, it is used alone for bringing up the rubble and the ore, and any interference with this arrangement stops the working of the mine. Now the man-engine is the quickest way, and it is the way all the men here go down. Would you like to try it?" and then he added, looking at me, "but you must be year careful.

This was the first suggestion that had been made to me that there was any danger in my undertaking. Now the principle of the bucket and the ladders I naturally understood, but I had no more idea what a man-engine was than the man in the moon. My menter, for some mysterious reason of his own, kept on quietly pressing the superior adventage of the man-engine. And so I consented. If I had only known then, at that quiet moment, away from the laughing girls and the heroic Washington, what I was under-taking, and the mortal agony I was about to endure, my prodence would most certainly have got the better of my pride, and I should have been whizzed quietly down in the dirty bucket.

But as it was, in my ignorance and in the inand the second of the second of the nocence of my heart, I decided for the manengine; and in a minute more I was ushered into the hut.

My quaint appearance was the signal for a loud burst of laughter. Some would "never have known me, would you?" others pronounced me a fright; but one little soft angelic voice declared me to be "a handsome young miner."

"You're sure you are all right?" said the same little confiding voice. "Have you had some brandy?"

"All right," said I, feeling very pale, "I should think so. Particularly now."

"But how are you going down?" said the sweet voice; "the captain has been telling us all about it." all about it.

"By the man-engine."
"For mercy's sake, don't! It's very danger-ons if you're not accustomed to it. He told me

That tone of entreaty persuaded me more than ever that I would take the most dangerous route. It was very brutal, I know, but at such a time I would somer have died than shown the white

They escorted me toward the infernal machine like a criminal on his road to execution.

"Set it agoing, Bill," said the sub-captain; and then in a few terse sentences he explained the principle of the engine.

Two parallel horizontal bars provided with iron steps at intervals of about ten yards were forever working up and down.—up and down. The meth-od of getting down the shaft was by passing from bar to bar, and from step to step, the very instant the word "Change" was given. It was essen-tially requisite to change the moment the word of command was given, and to make no bungle or shuffle about the operation. The engine waited for no man. There was no possibility of call-ing a halt, and no saving hand to catch one if a miss was made. All one's safety rested with one's self. One false step or false clutch at the next rung, and it would have been all over with me. this fun was all very well with the daylight shining down the shaft, when one could see the iron steps and see the handles, but in the pitch darkness it was simply awful. The rush-light in one's hat gave little or no light; and it was ten chances to one if the water dashing off the sides of the shaft did not extinguish it.

They practiced me at first for a turn or two about a hundred yards up and down the shaft, and even in the daylight I bungled a little.

"You must change quicker, Sir," said my ide; "if the iron steps knock against you it will be all up with you."

I was very pale, I know, after the first short practice. I felt that I was doing a madeap act, I know that the men ought to have stopped me; the little voice, now quite trembling, begged me not to go; but I bit my lips and vowed I would not show the white feather.

"Do you think you are all right, Sir?" said my guide. "Will you go? You must decide finally."

now finally."

"All right," I said.

And then the bell rung, and down we went. I saw the little face—it was the very last thing I saw—and upon my honor I really and truly felt that I should never see that little face again, except by a miracle.

But there was no time then to think of any thing but my own safety.

That terribly monotonous word "Change" came ringing out from the dark depths of the shaft, uttered by the sub-captain on the next ledge below me. And I knew that my life depended upon every change. Hours, days, years, yes, and centuries to pass between every change. It was like a hideous nightmare. The awful suspense behideous nightmare. The awful suspense be-tween every word of command; the feeling that something terrible might happen next time; the loueliness of my situation, the darkness of the shaft, the rush of the water, the glimmer of the rush-lights going down; the sad, hollow echo of the captain's voice giving the word of command and exherting me to be careful, now kindly, now fewfully; all these thioses combined made up as fearfully; all these things combined made up as hideous a day-dream as it is possible to conceive. For full five-and-twenty minutes I was in this awful suspense, and in that time went through about five hundred changes. At last, half blinded with bends of cold perspiration, and nearly dead with fright, I heard the welcome bell ring again, and I was safe on the first ledge of the mine.

The man-engine went no further, and the rest of the journey had to be accomplished by ladders. I never told the men what I suffered, but in a rough, kindly way I was congratulated on my

"I never thought you would have come, Sir," said one. "It frightens most after the first

"Can't you signal up that we are all safe," said I, thinking of the little face.
"Yes, Sir, to be sure."

And they did.

The signal came back again, "Thank God!" and all the miners took off their bats at the last signal. They are pious fellows, these Cornish

I was quite two hours away from my friends, groping about, now on my hands and knees, now down ladders from ledge to ledge, now in a stoop-ing position, now erect in the dark, mysterious corridors I found in the heart of the earth. It was hot - stiffing hot, hotter than the very hottest room in a Turkish bath. But the stalwart, half-clad men working away at the ore were so interesting, and the metal sparkled so on the ground, and the scene was so strange and fascinating, that I could not tear myself away.

On and on I went, still forever walking on. was very thirsty, and would have given any thing for a draught of beer. But no stimulants of any kind are found in the heart of the cortin. I was allowed, however, to put my mouth to the bunghole of a water-barrel, and very refreshing was the draught.

"You can walk on like this for hours, Sir," said the captain, seeing I was tired, and still de-termined not to give in.

"Is it pretty much the same?"

"I think you have seen all now," said he. So we went back. "Which way will you go?" said my guide.

I was very tired. "In the bucket," I said, without any hesita-

With my pockets laden with copper ore, and with my postest mean with copper ore, and in the rough embrace of a stalwart miner—for it was close quarters for two in the bucket—we were swung up to the daylight.

Dash went the bucket against the sides of the shaft, through which the water cozed and trickled and splashed. Lighter and lighter it became, until, at last, I saw above me the clear, blue, cloudless sky; and, half-dazzled with the glaring light, and blinking like an old owl, I ar-rived safe and sound on terra firms.

They greeted me with another loud peal of They greeted me with another room pull-langhter, louder and merrier than the last. My appearance was certainly not prepossessing. I was covered with red mud from head to foot, hot, disheveled, wild, and weary. And then "I smelt so pah!" as Hamlet says. However, a refreshing cold bath, a hair-brush, rough tow-els, and a change of clothes soon made me pre-sentable; and after an excellent luncheon in the board-room of the owners of the Wheal Isabel, we were all very soon trotting away toward Falmouth.

One word more. A brooch made from the copper ore I brought up from the mine rests on the neck of the owner of the little face which is looking at me as I write from a distant corner of which is not very often now. I wake up suddenly from a disturbed dream in my old arm-chair, and fancy somehow that the little face is gone, that there is a strange singing in my ears, and from a dark unearthly vault a voice keeps mouning, "Change."

EVENING.

FROM THE GERMAN.

CHILD! let me journey on my way; It is already cold and late, The closing of a dreary day, And I may neither pause nor wait.

Why sing to me? So tenderly, So strangely sounds thy noontide song! What was the word? Love? Love? Ah me! I had forgotten it so long.

And yet, I think, in days long past, I think the word once sounded sweet! But now the road is darkening fast, I go where rest the weary feet.

The darkening road winds surely on, And slower flag the steps, and slower; My early fire is dead and gone, And every hour I feel it more.

FLIRTATION A LA JUDITH.

THERE is a beauty that dazzles at first sight. and afterward shows more and more defective. And there is a beauty to which you are drawn by an attraction so subtle that you are not at first sure that it is beauty; a better kind but dangerous, apt to become for a man the one face in the world. Of this order was May Barcarole. A brown-eyed, brown-haired beauty. And for her moral nature generous, haughty, ignorant, impulsive. In theory a detester of men; a little twenty-year-old radical, progressively burning to avenge the wrongs of all other women. In fact,

This pretty little reformer, with her cousin Betty Bloodel, was spending a summer at the Hermitage. Mrs. Margrave was fond of young people, and the old house was always gay with them. There were a decrease always gay m. There were a dozen other young men and women, and more were coming, Eversham among the rest. His aunt wrote Mrs. Margrave "that she should bring him as her favorite pephew, and that they would be sure to like him."

"Like him!" echoed Mrs. Margrave, laying down the letter with a stately shiver, and every body shivered responsively, and looked at Betty Blondel. Betty turned a greenish yellow and rose. May dropped her netting and rose also. The young ladies looked with indignant sympa-thy toward the young men. The young men returned commiserating glances. Betty's handkerchief was at her eyes as she went out leaning on May, and the retrent was not so expeditiously managed but that a sniff or two were heard outside of the door. Betty was a young lady of uncertain age and complexion, with no particu-lar eyebrows and expression; but at this moment she was the becoine of Hermitage, and excited the deepest interest both in the male and female bosom. Even the waiters had it, and discussed the affair with the cook and up stairs girl in the privacy of the kitchen.

What affair? That is what I find difficulty in explaining. How is one to say such things? In fact, how do such things get to the air? A young lady can not propose to a young man. A young lady can not propose to a young man. A young lady can not pay attention to a young man. Only a very bold and daring spirit ever supposes that a young lade arrivable. supposes that a young lady seriously considers a young man at all, unless he has behaved in a manner—well—to justify it. At least this was Mrs. Margrave's theory, and of course the theory in the Hermitage, and in all the houses that the Hermitage condescended to visit: for Mrs. Margrave ruled with absolute sway. And it was very distinctly understood, in all these localities, that Betty Biondel had been "disappointed" by that Betty Boomer had been to deep the Eversham. Do you ask in what way disappointed? My dear girl, technically speaking, there is but one disappointment for a young lady; and it being clearly understood that Eversham had inflicted this disappointment upon her, it is evident that this young man was a brute and a trifler. That may sound sweeping, but examine the theory and you see at once no other conclusion is possible.

Fancy, then, the flatter when this mouster was announced as soon to make his appearance at the Hormitage. On hearing it Betty left the room in the dramatic manner already described, and it is difficult to say whether indignation at the monster's audacity or curiosity about his ap-pearance ruled most strongly at the Hermitage till Eversham's arrival. Then it was discovered that Nature 1 takes benevolent provisions, even for monsters. There was no trace in him of the moral hyens. He was a winning man, his man-ners were unexceptionable. His composure! Ah, that was sublime! His well-bred self-control was so perfect that it was as good as perfect innocence. He met Betty with an air of amis-ble indifference; the sharpest scrutiny could not detect the quiver of a muscle. He devoted himself to May at once; under her eyes; hefore ev-ery body. It is my belief that he thought him-self unsuspected, and that Betty, for her own sake, had given no sign. Otherwise nerves of iron and a brow of brass could not have done it, in my opinion, it, in my opinion.

And May repulsed him, of course; froze him with scorn; harried him by her savey wit; avenged the wrongs of her sex in general, and Miss Bloodel in particular, in season and out of season? Nothing of the sort, my dear. She listened to him. She smiled on him. She cajoled him. She made bouquets for his buttonhole, on the days when he went to the city, and fastened them with her own fair hands. She fastened them with her own fair hands. She met him in artful muslin toilets on the plants when he came back. She was always on his side at croquet, and cheated under his banner. For his sake she threw over Shafton, and Marcy, the other strings to her bow, without compunetion. It was a flirtation; and the men as what spitefully declared that is would be me a match, at which the ladies always smiled sig-nificantly, as who should say, "We know what

For Eversham-did I not say in the beginning For Eversham—did I not say in the beginning that May's face had that dangerous tendency to become the face of all other faces for a young man? There are many presty girls, and Eversham flirted with a suitable number, as became him; but besides peutiness, May possessed a look that was at once frank and sweet. There is one recipe for beauty, girls, and an easy one. If you are plain it will redeem you. If you are fair it will make you irresistible, take my word for it. I myself have been three times saved from the estate of a Benedict only by a look of from the estate of a Benedict only by a look of small conceit or pettish vanity on the features I admired. But it is of Eversham we are talking; and Eversham had studied the face till be could and exercises may subset the stee the re-meither dream nor plan without it. He thought himself also safe in dreaming of it; for Miss Barcarole was a girl who understood herself and the usages of society, and modestly but plainly Miss Barcarole had encouraged him. In this way they had arrived at that stage—de-licitors but embarcassing—well known to lowers. licious but embarrassing—well known to lovers, where conversation becomes an impossibility, and the most promising subject seldom gets be youd the second sentence. Eversham felt that he must speak, but though he had had experiences with women, he was at a loss how to begin.

"I have something to tell you," he commenced, laying his hand lightly on hers, "though it can hardly be new to you."

May started and looked up. There was no mistaking the face bending toward her. Before he had whispered "I love you" she knew what he has whisperon. I sove you see knew what he was about to say, and the smile not only died away from her lips, but she grew awfully pale. Eversham was embarrassed. He had expected that she would blush, or show some signs of confusion. On the contrary, she sat looking at him rigidly and fixedly, like one nerving herself for a singularly support.

for a singularly unpleasant duty,
"You must have expected I would tell you

"Yes, I expected it," answered May, me-chanically, and looking straight before her.

"Yes, I expected it," answered May, me-chanically, and looking straight before her.

"And your answer," urged Eversham, telling himself that he ought to be charmed by such it secretly, if I m shocked. "I have no answer," said May, indiffer-

"No answer!" He no longer thought of criticising her tone or expression. There had come upon him a sudden, sickening conviction of an intolerable treachery. Her head was turned away, but there was no softening in its lines; on There had com away, but there was no sectioning in its ines; on the contrary, something like defiance, and though she felt his look, and grew, if possible, paler yet, she was obstinately silent.

"What do you mean?" he asked, huskily.

"What have you intended all this summer?"
"Intended." The word, for some reason, roused May from her passive defiance, and she rned on him with a cruel smile:

"Why, nothing, Mr. Eversham, only to pass the time. The game of flirtation has its ri as no one should know better than you. On Only it is generally the woman who loses, and the man goes away smiling for another game elsewho goes away smiling for another game elsewhere. You will acknowledge that our game has been well played, and if it is your turn to lose, why, you can set it over against some past victory, you know.

And this was the girl whom he had loved, because he found her sweet and true. Eversham felt as if the ground were gaping under his feet;

but he was a man of spirit, and with her last word he was ready for her.

"Quire right," he answered, coolly. "I as you say, the game has been well played-" And, you. I admit that I was entirely deceived, and, in spite of some past knowledge of women, I really thought you honest and modest.

Then, with a formal bow, he turned into a side path (they had been lounging in the garden), and walked there, sick to the heart, wrathful, loathing her very remembrance, and yet torn and tor-tured by doubts; for at his last cruel words she had looked up at him with a sweet, piteous reproach that argued for her more powerfully than words; and he could have sworn that her soft words; and no could have sword that her sons eyes were full of tears.

And now, no doubt, dear girls, you are triumphantly sure of what you suspected long ago.
This was the modern Judith, flirting for revenge! She had avenged the innocent, that is, Betty Blondel, and paid the traitor back with interest. Her success was full-orbed, perfect. She had stabbed him to the heart. His hourse and al-tered voice, the twitching of the muscles about his mouth, small evidences as they were, spoke volumes in a man so strong and self-centrolled as this one. No doubt about her triumph; but there certainly was one drawback to its enjoy-

When she came to cut off his bend-meta phorically speaking, of course—our little Judith had discovered—that—she loved Holofernes! Poor little spider! Weaving webs for him, how hopelessly had she tangled herself! Long ago she had been conscience stricken to find how delightful it was to punish him, how much more she thought of him than of her revenge, and how seldom the vision of Betty rose between them. Now she went away successful, but in despair. Now she went away successful, but in despair. When he offered her his love her heart so knowledged him as its king. When he turned away from her in scorn she could not help ap-plauding him, and told herself that she should be glad to die, and that he was taking away with him all that would make her life worth living; and she dressed for dinner, morally certain that m would go away that night, as disappointed lovers always do in the remances; and that from henceforth she should be known as the beautiful Ireberg, or something of that sort, and never smile; and by and-by should marry some stout man to please her father; and when Ever-sham died should go heavily voiled, and strew roses on his tomb, etc., etc.
After which she went down stairs and flirted ith Jo Shafton shamefully.

But Eversham did not depart, as per romance bound. On the contrary, he staid there quietly. Partly because of the doubts that haunted him, partly to show that he did not think her worth a change of plan. So they met each other, as usual, in the eyes of society; bus with such a issual, in the eyes of society; but with such a hopoless gulf between them. Smile and greture the same for the world; but subtle, polite, freezing contempt substituted, she felt, for the tenderness that had been so delightful. No torture of absence could have racked May's tender little heart half so cruelly; but she took her punishment bravely, declaring to herself that she was in the right, and that she would not flinch under it.

This declaration brings us to the consideration of a very delicate mental process common to us.

of a very delicate mental process common to us all. I mean the subtle and curious manner in which we often contrive to have our own way in spite of ourselves. May's sense of right had led her to punish a brute and trifler. Being pun-ished, sense of right said, "Let him go."

But May's heart clamored, "I can not let him o. I can not live without him."

Here were two opposite interests setting up themselves in May's mental economy. She in-clined to her heart; but hearts are notoriously, desperately deceitful, and the sense of right is a dignified guide; and the matter was settled in favor of her sense of right. But never think all favor of her sense of right. But never think all your wits have been set at work till your heart has had its say. It was right to punish a brute and a triffer; but was he a brute and a triffer? Here was a fruitful suggestion. It was well known that Miss Blondel was apt to overrate ber own charms; and what had she seen in Eversham that was not manly and houest? Now that her heart was interested our little May could look on both sides of the question, though here-tofore she had stoutly denied that it could have more than one. She loved hopelessly, and she was growing thin and hysterical under the tor-ment. Betty professed to be a similar victim, and grew fat and almost rosy, and ate astonish-ing dinners, while the object of her passion had love all a woman on the opposite side of the table. Ah! there are no converts like those who are willing. May did not believe a word now of the Blondel-Eversham romance—not a word.

But how to get the truth out of Betty! Morally speaking, she was something like those fish that go all to jelly in your hand when you tried to do any thing serious with her.

"Betty, I want you to tell me the truth about

-Mr. Eversham," said May, with a great blush, when they were alone one day, and at once out came Betty's handkerchief.

"What do you mean by the truth? Do you suppose I—I romanced about it? How can you mention his name to me in that way?"

"Because I want to know exactly what he said and did," answered May, shrinking from the estion as much as Betty did from the answer; but relentlessly urged on -- by -- the sense of right? I leave it to you to decide. "How can I tell?" whimpered Betty. "I don't remember.

"You know what he said. Did he say he loved you?" persisted May, desperately. Then Betty felt that she was at bay, and came out from behind her handkerchief, red and angry,

"No, he did not. He knew better than to said so."

"Why?"

Betty winced and looked this way and that;

but May waited with quiet determination, and Betty was always afraid of May.

"What do you want me to say?" she answered, sulkily. "Do you suppose I wrote down what he said? He went with me to the church, and he found all the places; and when Aunt Peter-son would not go to the races, he said he would take me; and he sent me a bouquet and some books, and went with me twice to the Opera; and we saw some lovers, and he asked me if I did not think marriage the happiest condition; and-and-I don't see why you rake up thes things, I am sure.

"He took you to the Opera. He asked you what you thought of marriage," repeated May. "Is this all? and do you mean to say you consider Mr. Eversham bound to you by these attentions?

"Yes, I do," snapped Betty. "There are tones and glances that can not be translated in words—and—there is a difference—in young ladies, Miss Barcarole. I suppose men know where they must keep at a distance, and where they may presume."

dare say," responded May, dryly, and not thinking of Betty at all. Of course now there was a duty, plain, before her. She had chested and taunted a worthy man under a direful mistake, and there was only one reparation possible. She must confess the mistake and beg that worthy man's pardon. It would be hard, but it was the men's pardon. It would be hard, but it was the least she could do; and if any body should have mentioned to her that she had intended to do something of the sort from the very outset, when she found a reasonable excuse, how she would have scouted the suggestion! She was very happy, but she persuaded herself that she was very miserable. That she expected only to make the average knowable, and that Eversham would never guess that she loved him; as if it needed a spirit of divination to read sham would never guess that she loved him; as if it needed a spirit of divination to read what her eyes said so plainly when "She wished to speak with Mr. Eversham—she had a confession to make. She had decrived and insulted him, but not with the motives that he supposed. She was mistaken: she thought that he had triffed with a—a—person that she knew—"And she was so proud and so shy, so haughty and so tender, and her blushes so came and went in the awaying of it that Eversham had her accept in the saying of it that Eversham had her secret and her too in his arms before she was half through with her confession, bless her gener-ous, foolish, little heart say I!

It is only proper to record that Mrs. Margenve and Miss Blondel were much scandalized a week or two later by the announcement of Miss Bar-

Also that Mrs. Eversham is at present a very happy little woman, and has only one serious vexation. Eversham will address her now and then as, My dear Judith.

HOME AND FOREIGN GOSSIP.

The "season" at Saratoga has at length fully commenced. The weather having been comparatively cool thus far in July—in saying overprotein we have a wivid remembrance of the flerce heat of the early days of last July, though any day may bring a repetition of that "term"—there has been no great rush to the Springs until recently. Now, the hearts of hotel proprietors are every day made glad by scores of fresh arrivals.

fresh arrivals.

There are some new attractions this year to the habitude of Saratoga Springs. The Opera-House in the Union Hotel Grounds has been sutirely remodeled an elegant half-room having been just completed in it, and a fine billiard-room. About fifty private rooms have been finished off in the remaining space. The billiard-room was opened last week, and on Thursday of the present week the grand ball-room is to be dedicated on the occasion of a grand ovation to the Seventh Racingson. The old half-room of the Divisor has icated on the occasion of a grand ovation to the Sev-enth Regiment. The old ball-room of the Union has been converted into private rooms; and four benati-ful cottages have also been erected this season in the park of the hotel. These cottages are arranged in two sultes of apartments, each suits consisting of a parior and three bedrooms, are handsomely furnished, convenient, and siry. A family occupying one of these cottages may enjoy all the luxuries of Saratoga hotel life, and yet be as retired and exclusive as they please. Including the cottages more than a hundred new rej-Including the cottages more than a hundred new pri-vate rooms have been added to the Union Hotel this Hathorn's New Hall, adjacent to Congress Hall, is just completed, and will afford the visitors at the Congress a fine dancing-room. The Woman's Suf-frage Convention was held in this hall last week. Last suring, while the w on were digging to lay the foundations of this building, a new spring was discovered, which has received the name of Hathorn Spring. The water has a somewhat different flavor from the other springs. We learned that Professor public will doubtless soon be informed of the various ogredients it contains.

A pure white suphur spring was discovered last summer at Saratoga, the water of which is said to be equal in quality and strength to any other of the kind in the State. It is a question of some interest how a equal in quantity and strength to any conser on the kind in the State. It is a question of some interest how a sulphur spring should happen to bubble up in the midst of so many saline springs. But before long faratoga will have healing waters for every disease to which the human race is exposed—every year or omething new; and what may future disclose?

Some months ago statements were made in some of our city papers indicating that halles going unst-tended to hotels were liable to meet with difficulty in obtaining rooms—especially if they arrived at night. The cases must be rare when a quiet, refused woman would fall to receive courteons attention from those whose business it is to care for the traveling public; t it is well for ladies who need to be alone at ho tels to be informed in regard to different ones, and understand where arrangements will be agreeable for them. There are many pleasant hotels in our diy where a good degree of quiet may be secured. Among those which cluster around Madison Park—a central presume like that; but he might as well have I sad convenient locality—the Fifth Avenue, Hoffman, and St. James are prominent. All are well-conducted, first-class hotels; from its location and internal arrangements, perhaps the St. James is the most quiet. It is kept on the European plan, and a lady who is alone can thus avoid the awkwardness of going to a lable d'lide. The dining-room, on the right of the Twenty-sixth Street entrance, in particularly religed. The attendance and visuds are excellent, and the portions served bountiful. Single rooms are neatly and comfortably furnished; and saits of apartments are arranged in a peculiarly pleasant way, securing an unusual degree of retirement to families. In such a hotel as this a lady finds herself protected from disagreeable rencounters, by the general and special care taken to give to guests the comfort and se

The Bongor Whip gives an account of the singular case of a Miss Lovell, who recently died at the age of sixty-seven. For forty years she has been out of health, and for thirty-six bedridden. Thirty-six years ago she was confined to her bed, to all appearances in the last stages of consumption, and apparently with but a few weeks, at most, to live. Yet she has been lingering on, and what is most remarkable, has been afflicted with almost every-disease, contagions or epidemic, with which that city has been afflicted. During the prevalence of the choiers abe was one of its subjects; but while others, hearty and robust, were cut down, she, upon, as it were, the very helpic of the mean lived. brink of the grave, lived.

The director of a French provincial theatre has the credit of having organized a mechanical claque. Sev-eral articulated hummers are filled into different places under the floor, so arranged as to strike on a string being pulled. A few yards from these hammers, in under the floor, so arranged as to strike on a curing being pulled. A faw yards from these hammers, in the centre of the pit, are placed two hastruments which imitate the chapting of hands. They are two large castenets covered with leather—a string polls the shells together. The six cords meet in a part of the saction together. The art come meet in a part of the theatre unknown to all except the machinist, and are fastened to six strong wooden keys, like those of a plane. At certain passages of the piece the machinist puts his finger on one or another of the keys, and the applause is forthcoming.

It is stated that Mr. Seth Green is engaged on the Hadson in prepagating shad at the rate of a million a day, and turning them into the river. This work will be of great public value, and afford to thousands a wholesome and nutritious article of food. The halching-grounds are about ten miles from Albany.

Appropriate and interesting ceremonies were re-cently held at Guilford, Connection, in connection cently held at Guliford, Connectiont, in connection with the dedication of a monument to the memory of Fitz-Greene Halleck. An address was delivered by Bayard Taylor, and a poem by Oliver Wandell Helms. Fifteen hundred claiseon of Guliford assembled to pay tribute of love and respect to the memory of buried genius. This is the first monument spected and publicly dedicated in honor of an American poet.

A wonderful story is told of an Englishman-we regret his name is not given, but he is said to be an ex-M. P.—who, during the war in this country, bought a large amount of the early lennes of the Pive-Twenty Bonds. Recently he wrote to the Treasury Depart-ment, saying that he thought six per cont. gold interest on the bonds too high, and that he was willing to take three per cent. I A few days after he incinced a $1000 Pive Trenty Bond and seven $30 coupons, which he returned to the American Government as settlement for the past. He also intimated his desire to have the matter so arranged that in future he might divide the interest with the Government, retaining

A pretty novelty is a bouquet-holder, consisting of a small tube closed at one end, with a wire to book it to the batton-hole. This being concessed beneath the lapsi of the cost receives the stems of the flowers, and the tube being partly filled with water, keeps there from a large state of the stems. them fresh a long time. Similar bouquet-holders have been imported from England, intended for la-dies' use. They are tubes furnished with a pin to fasten like a cremmon brooch or breast-pin.

St. Albans is the butter mart of Vermont, and really

St. Albans is the butter mart of vermont, and really regulates the price of butter throughout the country. Once a week the farmers from all the surrounding towns come in with their two-horse scams and market wagons with the last week's churnings, in schen tuhs. The wide streets are then alive. Over four hundred wagons are gathered round the square, and the farmers, with their wives and doughters, are busy enough bargaining off the products of their dairies, or making purchases at the stores. The farmers are shrewd. They understand their business, are wealthy and intelligent. Nearly a million dollars per annum is re-ceived by the farmers in the eight or nine towns which send their produce to St. Albans for hulter and cheese

Spain equals any other country in the world in cetting up obituary notices. What could be more unique and comprehensive than the following, which lately appeared in a Spanish paper: "This morning our Saviour summoned away the jeweler Sichald Illmaga from his shop to another and a better world. undereigned, his widow, will weep upon his temb, will also his two daughters, Hilda and Emms, former of whom is married, and the latter is open to offer. The funeral will take place to-morrow, His disconsolate widow, Venorique Liamana

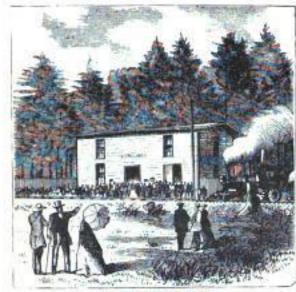

"P.S .- This bereavement will not interrupt our business, which will be carried on as usual, only our place of business will be removed from No. 5 Tessi de Teinsturiers, to No. 4 Rue de Missionnaire, as our grasping landlord has raised our rent."

What next? An enterprising Philadelphian has taken out a potent for the manufacture of wooden , the material being the same as that now used in papering rooms.

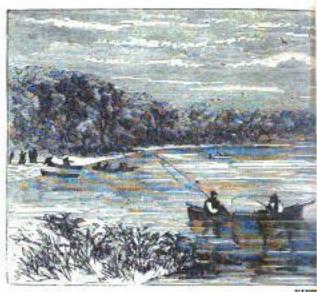

One of the most comical advertisements that has operated lately reads thus:

A WOMAN wants a Situation with a Boy 15 years
A old; is a good cook; dity reference; dity or country.

A horrible report comes from Germany of a so-called scientific experiment. A Berlin physician experiment-ed on a young woman who was supposed to be dying of consumption, and arinally subjected the wretched, belpless creature to a hideous experiment which must have inflicted terrible torture on her at the very time when she needed tenderness and sympathy to lessen the natural agonies of approaching dissolution. She died on hour ofteneard; and the surgeon then was able to satisfy himself by a post-morten examination of the effect he had produced; and the case is reported as a matter of scientific interest in the Prussian medical journals. # 1

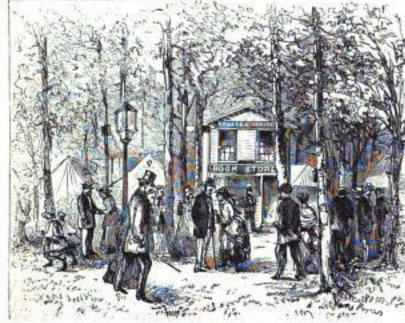

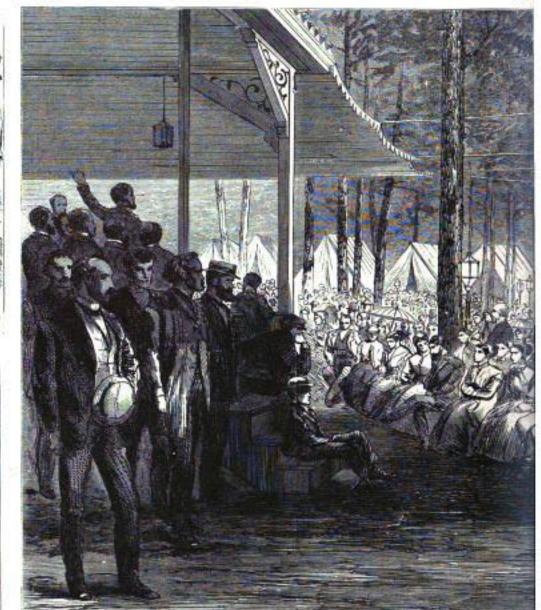

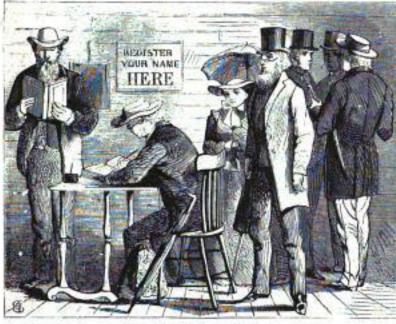

WATERING HORSES.

DOOK STORE.

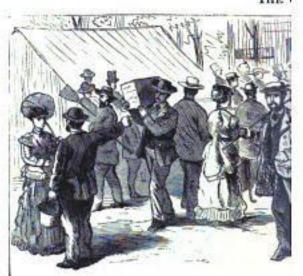

CAMP-GROUND REGISTER.

THE BIG TENT.

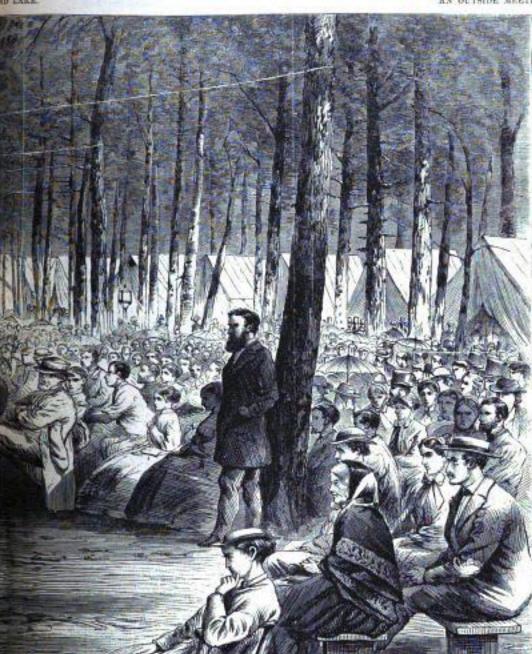

THE CA SKETCHES OF THE NATIONAL CAMP-MEI

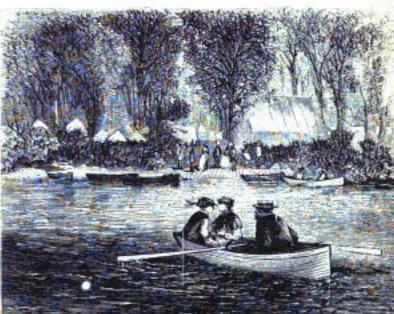

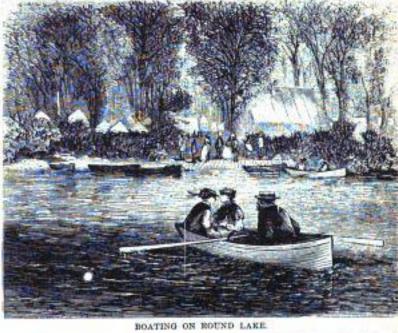

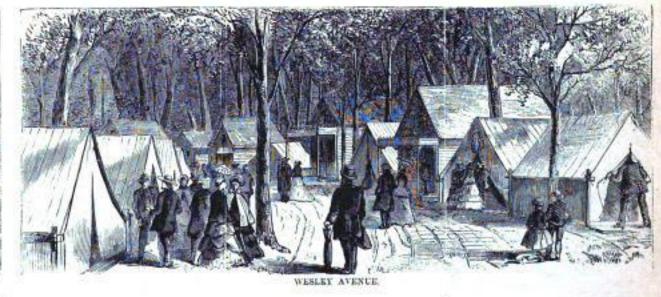

AT ROUND LAKE, NEW YORK, JULY 6-15, 1869.

ÆOLIÆ.

With wind that rageth o'er the sea, With biting fang and dreadful cry,
What storm-bent creatures plend to thee,
To spare them lost they sink and die!
With voice of sullen wrath Thou lospest on thy path, O'er wreck and found'ring ship, Mid cries from scamen's lip; Cast out like scuttered tares, With women's sole and prayers; Thy home the waters darkly blue All the bitter winter through.

Soft wind that roameth to the sea, With tender touch and soothing sound, A thousand voices sing with thee Upon thy tuneful, fragrant round, With gentle sigh of love, The coo of mated dove, Where bees still droning sin-The honeyed peral's lip;
They breath a fresh performe
Of flowers' sweetest bloom;
Thy home the heaven's sunlit blue
All the joyous summer through.

SO RUNS THE WORLD AWAY.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

AFTER THE BALL.

Tue ball was over. The Marquis of Grandseres had not proposed to Amelia; but he had danced once with her, and that, as she said to her sister, " was something toward it."

Moreover, Thurstan Mowhray had paid no at-tention whatever to Lady Dinna. Amelia, in the tention whatever to Lady Dinna. Amolia, in the confidential hours of dressing-gown and slippers, mentioned this circumstance to hor sister with great satisfaction; but Lady Dinna horself viewed it in a different light, for on the pages of the vol-ume before mentioned she inscribed; "He who deliberately avaids you is lost." She was amonyed I t not disheartened by Thurstan's apparent coldness. Well versed in all the mutability of suffering of which the homan heart is capable, she knew that as the fish in dying displays a variety of huce (strange beauty born of mortal pain) ere it is overspread by the dull color of death, so does a lover exhibit curious and incomprehensible developments of feeling before his love perishes in indifference. She had known prouder men than this one as sume the most profound innocence of her and her attractions; she had seen them hold aloot from her, restraining jealouely, with all the pow-er of their galled spirits, the impulsive tender-ness of eye, lip, and hand. Ne had known oth-ers, more aubtle in their factics, pretend to a circless ease of manner, the better to concerl the realisy of their pain; but sooner or later the attempt to dissimulate with their passion ended in after failure, and the slave erouched ones more beneath the sweet oppression of a hondage more exquisite than freedom.

Lady Diana would compassionate defeat, but she could never results to spare where she en-countered opposition. She was like the Pales-tine warrior of old, who "slew plentifully," and then "bewailed courteously" over the hoaps of

Besides, she felt something of her old tenderness revice for this handsome man. True, he tenderness, like an Eastern potentate's, had touch of the how-string in it; but here was a moral strangulation. Not would stifle all the was good in a man's heart rather thus that i should not heat for her. A husband must lear, his wife, a lover his mistress, somer than defi-her influence. Yet there had been cases when she had morroed the min she had wrought, and had even tried to lure the delinquents she her self had fushioned back into their moral perpen-

Fancy a upas-tree apologizing for its malign influence, and entreating that its poison should be rejected by the victim!

In her own way Lady Di had loved Thurstan, She loved him none the less for his defiance of her now; but she swere in her heart that ere long he should be hers, budy and soul—a hu-man pupper, which should take the place of the dolls of childhord, and while the tedium of her leisure hours; a toy which should ween real tears breathe real breath, and whose heart should bent fast or slow at her bidding, even as the wax effiail or smile according as he infant fingers pulled the wire. But even a child has its preferences among dolls, and Lady Diana liked this male sperimen with the brown eyes and curly hair better than others.

"As to Amelia Orme, slip must be taken down," said Lady 1% to herself, as she watched this young lady's little manageres to attract Thurstan's attention,

But coquettes, like other gamblers, are victims of chance. Lady Di had calculated on passing several weeks in her quasi lover's society. She had planned every move in her gome with a pre-cision worthy of a professional chess-player. She disliked to be harried in her play. justice, she preferred to retain an aspect of dignity, even of modesty, in these ignoble encount-ers. Like a child who attempts to give his adversary fool's mate, looking very hard in another direction all the while to divert suspicion. Lady Di kept an innocest countenance during the progress of her machinations. I think this appearance of lamb-like unconsciousness was one of the most potent starts wherewith this beauty lured prey to her wolfish maw. But for the present, at least, the game was stopped—the

On the morning succeeding the ball at Orme House Thursten was sitting in the music-room, turning over a song for one sister, while he dextrously pressed the hand of another, when the song and the firstation were brought to a premature close by the entrance of a servant, brought on a salver a telegraphic message for Captain Mowbray. It announced that his fa-

Captain Mowbray. It announced that has father was very dangerously ill, and it requested his immediate presence at Pisa.

It was as if a funeral train flung its gloomy shadow over a path gay with bridal flowers. A cloud fell over the faces of all. It is dismal to be recalled from laughter, music, and mirth to the voice of the bell which tolls finis, and the vision of the inevitable white robe, of which the Cabling and were forces independent of milling. fashion endures forever, independent of milliners and mourning warehouses. Besides the nat-ural awe which falls even on the most lighthearted at the sound of that ugly word death, those around Captain Mowbray had their own solfish reasons for sorrowing with his sorrow. Amelia Orme was becoming really attached to him, and the idea of his departure made her feel sore at heart. Lord Orme was disturbed because Mr. Mowhray had been a contemporary of his own. "What a sad thing! He was at Econ with me, you know. Older than me, but still we were school-fellows."

"That doesn't make it any sadder, paps, does it?" muttered Rea. rearly, not seeing that Lord.

it?" muttered Rosa, pertly, not seeing that Lord Orme's regret was as one tree may feel when its coeval falls, bowed down by storms and age.

Lady Di, sitting in a corner in a becoming nationde (becoming attitudes came as naturally to Lady Di as prinking does to a peacock), with a confusion of colored wools mixed up with her fingers and knitting-pins, made a vicious frac-ture of a twisted loop, and said to herself, "Tire-

When Thurstan had said good-by to all he pursed before Lady Diana.

"If all goes well," he said, hurriedly, "I shall go to Airdale's for a few weeks' hunting early in the season. The Ormes are going—shall you be

Lady Di said "Yes" meekly enough. She liked Lord Airdale; it was a pleasant place to stay at—she should certainly go. She was all meckness, depression, and pathos until Thurstan was gone, and she went up stairs to enjoy the privacy of her own room. Then she glanced at a mirror, and a look of gentle triumph sparkled in her gray eyes.

"I certainly do not show my age," she said.

CHAPTER XXIX. ROBERT DOUGLAS'S JOURNAL.

August, Freender, 15... Have I not read somewhere of a girt who picked up a linnet from the duet in which it had been thrown, with bruised wing and ruffled breast, and carried it home? The bird was young, and adapted itself by degrees to its new home, grew to love its captor and whistle to her voice. Then came a time when the girl sick-ened; it was the bird's place to lift its friend from the stouch. The sid reared the reward from the slough. The girl reaped the reward of her act of salvation. She was crippled, and of her act of salvation. She was crippled, and might not leave her weary bed; she was partially blinded by weakness, and could not face the gladness of the sun; she was obliged for a long season to turn her face to the wall; and while the hours, otherwise so blank, tided away, her ears were filled with the sweet hints conveyed in the linnet's song. The rush of the free winds, the heavy nodding of the bulrush, the shuddering luste of the stream, the splender of the films blown across the face of the setting on, the faint francance of ripening blossoms sun, the faint fragrance of ripening blossoms— nll these were bymned by the child of air, and the child of earth took comfort in the sound.

What has this to do with Azalea? Nothing. Only that every memory, every experience, ev-ery fancy floated from the past to be fused in the possibilities of the future; all the old sorrs, all the dead joys, all the tremulous silence of the present, seem stirred by her influence, even as the kiss in the magic bower woke the deepers of a century into a new, strange world.

I have rescued my bird from a slough of in-comprehension. Her mind was filled with dim light, I have strengthened her intellect. I have enabled my bird to look at the sun; and when the hour comes when I shall be blind, perchance with the terrible dimness of famity, will she sing of the day, will she hint brightness to me and of the day, was one and comfort despair? I doubt.

There is a whisper of trouble in the air, a throb of pain in my heart. Shall I tent it from me at ouce, this threatening evil? Shall I crush it out as I would a creeping red flame of fire? Shall I turn my face from it and fly? And what does this question prove? I try and hide my thoughts from myself, but they leap up in strength, as the flame, once allowed to have birth, flares up its threatenings of destruction. Oh, child, child! how your calm face troubles mine; how your miconscious serenity irritates the fever in my mind! If I were to leave you to-morrow, and begin all the old sick life of aimless wanderings, currying with me the great black of your absence, how would you feel? A little sorry, perhaps, for I have been kind to Moore. She might even miss me for her own sake. Am I not her only companion in intellect, yet do not the young prize beauty more highly than genius? She prize beauty more rugnly that if her pet birds would weep far bitterer tears if her pet birds were to droop into death, or her favorite dog got were to droop into death, or her favorite dog got n mortal injury, than at my departure. She loves these creatures, loves them with the warm, unreasoning sympathy with which Nature some-times links tender human hearts to her dumb offspring. Azalen has taught the wood-dove to coo in her breast; her dog creeps to her for com-fort if it receives a sudden hurt; her eyes close into a sidelong glance of ineffable tenderness when her gray-headed jackdaw perches on her hand, chuckling quaint choked notes. But I-I am less to her even than these, infinisely less to her than the vague glories of her untried future. She has grown to the age of dreams; she is no longer the child whose pleasure is in gambol and unrest; she now rejoices in solitude; she likes to commune with the beauty of her own hopes, and in these I have no place. I will go and see her; the sight of her unconscious face may re-store my failing control. Why should I be vexed because a beautiful flower smiles at the sun rathbecause a beautiful mover smales at the sun rainer than at me, or a child whom I have known long fails to feel for me the surprise of passion?

Passion! Such a word is a profanation to her pure face; such a word is inadmissible in describing the relations between a young and beautiful woman and an old, uncomely man. Such passion she might feel for me as the wind shows than it bless at the state of t when it blows all the dead leaves from wintry boughs in one soft, sapless hecatomb of decay.

I have just returned from Auriel. I displayed naught but a somewhat unusual constraint—at least in a younger and more graceful man it would have been constraint, though with me I would have been constraint, though with me I fear it was ungainly sternaese; but it did not matter. She did not heed, far less inquire, even in her eyes, of the cause of my disquiet. She ran down the path to meet me, babbling gayly as a wayward brook. "There was news." great news!" she said, clasping my arm. "I must try and guess what it was." I suggested that old Sally's grandson had "come home from the Indies." Guess again? Well, had the cat brought into the world of birds and mice some small snowy duplicates of herself? Wrong again! I said I would guess no more. I spoke harshly, to conceal a mighty tremor of delight which thrilled me when her hands clasped mine careasingly—a delight which died almost as soon as it was born, for she ditted away from me again was born, for she flitted away from me again and caught hold of a pale cluster of chrysanthe-

Then, with her face sparkling, and breath coming quick, she cried,

What description of people?

"I have seen borses and dogs, and men in red coats, and ladies—two ladies I think I saw —and they flew like the wind; and—oh, look! they are here again!"

they are here again?"
She grasped my arm, her face glowing with excitement, her lips apart, her other hand pointing to a distant line of meadows which skirt the south side of the shrubberies. We were in the shrubbery-path, and in front of us a tree had fallen and let in a wide gap of light in the dense line of shedow.

line of shadow.

She perched her pretty arched feet on the guarled side of the branch near her, and stood like a beautiful wild hird, which, with bright startled eyes and head upraised, listens for a possible foe in the rustle of a leaf—only that the child's face was scarcely one of apprehension;

there was hope in it.

Far off beyond the meadow the blue haze of distance was flecked by scarlet coats. Only two men were far in advance of the rest. These two men were far in advance of the rest. These two were in close company with the pack, which streamed down the slope of the meadow toward us. On they came, close and compact. They were allent, but there was eloquence in their mo-tion. The scent held them as though it were a magnet to their desiring breath; their sterns, no longer quivered by doubt or anxiety, were close down. The scent was burning, and the pace too fast to allow of any superfluous expression of exdown. The scent was burning, and the pace too fast to allow of any superfluous expression of excitement. Not a hound spoke; they swept on, a bright, moving flash of last. Every faculty in them was strained to the utmost. They were tired, but they hung on to the line as though glased to it. Certainty added fury to their effort. The wind, which blew in the track of their flying prey, brought delight to their nostrils and lifted them coward in an accession of flerce exlifted them onward in an accession of fierce exultation. It might be a comedy to the pink-coated sportsmen behind, or even to that thorcough-bred steeple-chaser—an animal that still took his fences with the nonchalance of a gen-tleman, in spite of the heavy plow up which he had been obliged to gallop; but to the hounds it was a very serious drama indeed—one which necessitated their closest attention, and which absorbed all lesser and illicit attractions: the youngest and chubbiest-nosed puppy among them would not have dared to have even turned the white of his eye toward a hare, though she had got up under his paws; while as to the pant, ing, wet bundle of fur which crept into the wa-ter-ditch close to where Azalea and I stood, there could be no doubt but that he was suffering a dire tragedy.

"They will kill him!" gasped Azales. "Don't let them. Robert!' The hunted creature glanced slantwise at us, with an expression which seemed to say, "There's another devil!" Then he paused as though to consider his last resource. He was pretty near-ly exhausted. Doubtless it is fatiguing to run an hour and forty minutes (they had been run-ning that time), best foot foremost, at pain of death; it did him great credit that he was still able to form any plan of evasion. To the right of us was Azalea's little summer-bouse, a build-ing in which she was wont to hold levées of wood-pigeons. The door of this hut stood ajar, and the fox saw before him one last chance for ex-istence. In an instant, with a desperate effort, he cleared the space between the ditch and the hut and disappeared in the shadow of the inte-rior; and when Azalea peeped in after him, pre-vious to securing the door of his retreat, she saw a tuft of gray hair, fringing a log near the thatched roof.

"He has tucked himself in, all but his ta."" e said, with giee. "They sha'n't have him; she said, with giee. shall they, Robert?"

I shock my head. "You are dreadfully un-sophisticated, Azalva; no wonder Moore compisins of your living without the pale of the world. If you were a fashionable young lady you would perhaps know how to give a view hal-los, or lift the hounds on to the line of that fox which you have just secreted in that unsports-womanlike fashion; you would clap your hands with delight at the shrick of a hare run into by a swift graybound; at the very least, you would sometimes spend the summer hours in watching showers of pigeons fall under the prowess of the Red House champions; you might make a book on the event, while your kid-gloves got splashed with the warm blood of the living targets."

A look of disgust deepened in the girl's eyes.

"They are beasts," she said, emphatically.

The pack were close to us; in a minute they were in and out of the ditch, and round our feet. The majority rushed on, but a few old hounds threw up their heads and declined to be deluded. The two horsemen I have mentioned as being forward galloped up to the fence, followed by one or two others. "Where? where? Have you seen him? Where did he go?" they shouted.

Anales pinched my arm. I hesitated. The old hounds were still at fault; for when the fox sprung from the water-disch to the hat he had done so with a single bound, which cleared the short yard of ground which lay between the rerge of the ditch and the hut-door.

"You have seen him?" one of the horsemen cried, interrogating Azalea.

Her cheek flushed, and her lips quivered. Then she stood forward in the sunshine, this in-carnation of beauty and guilelessness, and deliberately lied.

liberasely lied.

"I saw him," she said, distinctly, "go up there," pointing vaguely toward a distant field. Then she turned on me with a savage whisper, "If you contradict me I'll never learn another line of Homer."

As the huntaman called off the puzzled hounds, and the riders turned their tired horses away from the fence, I looked repreachfully at her conscious face.

"It is never good to lie."
"Yes, it is, "she answered, defiantly. "Some-times it is quite right."

She besitated. "When when the the wo-men said, in l'harsoh's time, you know, that all the little boys were little girls. Didn't they do

"But foxes are not infants."

"But forces are not infants."
Every thing which is defenseless should be as an infant to us, "she said, gravely. "But look there! What is he going to do?"

He was the man on the thorough-bred horse whom I had noticed when I first saw the hounds;

a fine-looking young man, whose air and manner seemed familiar to me even in the distance, but whom I did not recognize until he now came quite up to the fence.
"What's on the other side?" he called out.

"Water. It's a double. Look out!" He took back his horse a few yards, and trotted alowly down to the fence.

Then came a flash of crimson through the golden autumn haze before us. I looked at Azales. Was it my fancy—was it the surprise of the to her novel sight—or did she blush and of the to her novel aght—or do she toush and wear an expression which was almost one of consciousness, as Thurstan Mowbray, handsome and bright as ever (damn him!) advanced to-ward me, taking off his hat to her?

"So glad to see you again, old fellow!" he said, his big brown eyes seeming to cauch new fire as he glanced at my companion. "You see, I have come to try the hunting-grounds of my native country. Will you do me the honor

I forced myself to anticipate his request, al-I forced myself to anticipate his request, al-though I fear I performed the ceremony of in-troducing Captain Mowbray to Miss Moore in a very churlish fashion. Introduce the falcon to the dove, the doe to the deerhound—introduce youth, beauty, and experience to youth, beauty, and ignorance—introduce this young and hand-some man, blessed with every adventitious grace, to the girl who is worshiped by me, who am old, to the girl who is worshiped by me, who are old, to grasp; for I love her with all the madness her to grasp; for I love her with all the madness of a boy, with all the anguish of a man. Child! when I saw you there in the evening sun, all the glows of autumn seemin, to deepen on your golden head, your eyes shy and averted, your face troubled with something which, if it was not pleasure, was one of its echoes; and that handsome man, whom Nature seemed to link with you, so well did his appearance match yours, talk-ing eagerly to you, alluding to me occasionally, but evidently engrossed by the loveliness of your when I saw all this, sickening over my beart. Then I looked at that man with some such dark foreboding of prescient guilt as may have clouded Cain's beart when bister jealousy begot lust of blood.

When Mowbray, smiling, bade us adieu, he

"I will ride over to-morrow, and you must il me all about the pictures." He spoke to me, tell me all about the pictures," but he looked at Azalea.

CHAPTER XXX.

THE WORK OF A PORTNIGHT.

So she had seen it once more-that bright, ndacious face which had caused such tumult is her existence on that never-to-be-forgotten day when she stood on the bank in a tremble of ferns. Was she angered still when she remembered the insult of that surprise? Certainly it was anger which flushed her check and made her pulses throb when she saw him again; but then his manner was so different now, he was so courte-ous and gentle; she could hardly realize that this was the person she had wished to slay with som imaginary dagger. And he was owner of Auriel, too, or would be so one day; Robert Douglas told her thus much in answer to her questions.

The grim warriors on the wall acquired an additional interest in her eyes now that she had | She pervades the whole chamber, and my seen their living representative. When she next | thoughts full into confusion again. I am crashseen their living representative. When she next went down stairs she pansed to wonder whether this Mowbray inherited any of the daring which made Gaston de Mowbray throw himself before the body of his young brother, a living shield, which presently fell backed with wounds, while which presently fell backed with wounds, while the boy rode away unscathed. Azales, living in an ideal world, could not suspect how ignoble were the aims, how mean and trifling the ambi-tion of the majority of nineteenth-century heroes, who wear gold lace and spurs.

After looking at the portrait which seemed to her to embody the lineaments of the gay rider on horseback who had flashed toward her through on horselack who had nashed toward her inrough the gray woods yesterday, Azalea walked softly into the large salon, and looked at her own re-flection in a large old-fishloned mirror. This is what Robert Douglas saw when, a few minutes later, his tall form and moody face darkened the doorway : The bright glow of her cheeks and hair showed dimly through the dust and cobwebs which obscured the mirror; a crack marred the dimple in her chin, a tremulous thread, blosched by a spider, seemed to wave down her hair; her hands were busy securing a rose over one little ear, a fillet of ribbon glistened behind the other. The rose se-cured, Azales stepped back, on her toes, with such a look of meditation as a bird wears when it nearly cover its dealiests in a winner. it puzzles over its duplicate in a mirror.

She was asking berself for the first time, " Am I fair?

And Douglas, watching her from the door, felt his beart contract with pain as he saw the nascent symptom of coquetry, the first consciousness of physical beauty develop itself in one who had hitherto been as careles: of her loveliness as the

"Why are you decking yourself in this way?"

be asked, savagely.

"I don't know," she stammered, half frightened, "I never thought; I was only wondering,"

"I have sometimes wished for your sake, Azales, that you were ill-favored as the women who are burned red in autumn suns, and coarsened by labor. But I comforted myself, think-who are densed to a action search, and coarsened by labor. But I comformed myself, thinking there was safety even for beauty in solitude, and now—" He checked himself, remembering that to warm a child or a woman of danger is to expose them to it. He added more gently—

"Forgive me for speaking so roughly, Azalea; but if you only knew how I should loathe to see your guileless face spoiled by consciousness of its attraction. Be content with the beauty God has given you."

"I meant no harm," the girl faltered, looking down; but when Douglas left her to make his morning greeting to old Moore she looked once more at her own reflection.

"I am pretty," she whispered to herself, and her lips turied into a smile as she spoke. "For all his scolding he thinks me fair—he owned as all his scolding he thinks me fair—he owned as

Then she went and sat at the window, and looked wistfully at the avenue path, which seem-ed to tremble in the light and shadow which played over it, which proves that Douglas had been wiser had be held his peace.

Robert Douglas's Journal continued.

There are two bells made by man for himself—remorse and jealousy. Which is the most terrible of endurance, the hell of the past or the hell of the present? In which is the flame hottest? Remorse is the dull, low throb of unassuageable pain, jealousy the wild bound of a fever which is almost craze.

What have I done to deserve this last? Is it not enough punishment that I have wandered through all the prime of my life with my head down; that for me no bird is jubilant, no sun is bright, no voice is glad?

For years I have carried a pall. What devil possessed me that I should break from its shadow to clutch at reses? That man whose life I saved, need he have cast the shadow of his beauty over the one gleam of sunshine in my path? "He would come again!" Of course he came. He would come again!" Of course he came. He was seized with an immense interest in the old portraits and books. Will Miss Moore tell him "all about them?" She begins shy and finshing at the sound of her own voice. She speaks with her soul in her eyes, and looks at him with while the young man yawns a good deal, but takes every available opportunity of drawing nearer to her, of touching her hand, of caress-ing, when her face is sverted, stray curls blown about her head by the wind.

It is a fortnight since that day when this fresh curse in my life fell on me. Perhaps the bitter-est pang of all is to feel that were I free, and were my soul clean, so that I could place myself at her feet, she would walk away, never perceiv-ing that I was thus prostrate. I never could be to her even a possibility. I mak with her old guardian, with the gloomy shadows of the house, with all the familiar receive of childhood. To with all the familiar scenes of childhood; I am an appendage. This Mowbray is in his vent, an event which colors all her hitherto hueless existence. A fortnight to-day since he crossed my path, and he has been here nearly every day since. Heaven belp me! My hate of him is becoming hideous. This mean, bitter jealousy dwarfs the big heart into that of a freeting child. I loothe and seorn myself for the ignoble torture self-in-flicted. I pore over crabbed pages, hold my head between my hands, and try not to entch the reflection of that withered, barsh face peuring at me from the eracked mirror opposite, and then her presence approaches in that gust of lonely-sounding wind tossing the bough against the pane; her face gleams in that star which sparkles in the upper square of the casement.

but a finding of the new years from the con-ed by the misery of my prescience.

CHAPTER XXXL

LOVE PASSED AN HOUR OF LOVE WITH ME.

THE hours "drawled" (that was George Moore's term for the dreamy, drowsy, autumn moons) into days, and days slipped into weeks, and still Cap-tain Mowbray lingered in the vicinity of Auriel, tain Mowbray lingered in the vicinity of Auriel, showing an increasing interest in what he vague-ly described as "the books and pictures, and all that sort of thing." What need to repeat the details of the old, old story; what need to dwell on all the subtle indices which point to one inevitable result? The sun and the sunflower, the "moon that draws the sea, and the cloud that "moon that draws the sea, and the cloud that stoops from heaven and takes the shape," has not every simile been exhausted to illustrate the beautiful antique Legend of Love? Only there be some children that blow bubbles, knowing well their insability, and anticipating their collapse to nothingness with a sort of pensive scorn; there be others who believe the exquisite phan-tom to be fashioned of enduring rock. The first inhalation of chloroform is as a foretaste of Paradise. It is only those who have partaken of it frequently who can prophesy the after-sensation of deadly sickness. Lady Diana, when she loved, and reaped happiness from her love's indulgence, felt as one who assumes royal robes for a brief period, and whose shining crown surmounts and foreseeing eyes, which are ever fixed on the end. Analea was as the imbecile, happy beyond the power of reason, who glories in the wrenth of straw and circles of beads, and has that sublime faith, the faith of ignorance, in these frail adornments of a visionary realm.

Captain Mowbray hunted very seldom now.

"The country was too blind for any thing," he said; and in truth autumn lingered this year, dilatory as a lover loth to bid his mistress farewell. To the horizon's verge the woods blushed red and brown, the wind held its breath, and the leaf that dropped did so in your prolation of its leaf that dropped did so in pure repletion of its life.

On one golden afternoon the sun shone on a pretty scene in the Auriel shrubberies.

pretty scene in the Auriel shrubberies.

A young man, and a girl still younger, sat on the trunk of a fallen beech. No hatchet had thus prostrated the tree; it had been rent in twain and flung to earth in some wild freak of the tempest. The sun fleckered patches of gold on to the girl's bare head, and on to the yet vivid ruddy beech-leaves. Wild flowers and long grasses, thrusting themselves up round the tree's sides, partly concealed her little feet. He and she supported between them a ponderous volume, with dusty edges. It had on its black sides a dingy inscription, which made believe to have once been written in gilt letters. The inhave once been written in gilt letters. The in-scription told that the volume was a treatise on Illuminating Manuscripts, and that it belonged to Anselm Mowbray, a priestly scion of the house of Mowbray, who flourished a.p. 1600. Either the work was too interesting to be read quickly, or so dull that it was not read at all; for the couple looking at it were so quiet that a furry bob-tailed rabbit came out and cleaned his face before them. Over-ripe blossoms drifted slowly through the air; sometimes they were caught on the hearded faces of tall grasses; here and there they rested on the hem of Azalea's dress. The bees kept up a hum of enjoyment over some late roses, or burrowed their brown bodies in the flowers' depths in an ocstasy of self-indulgence. Overhead, a bird sang out its appreciation of existence. Presently Captain Mowbray twitched off the head of a rose, and gently placed it in his com-panion's hair. The thrush flew away at his movement; the insect tumbled out of its luscious recess; the rabbit scudded away in a panic; but no other living thing was there to take note of the two.

Old Moore was alumbering away the hours by the fire indoors—for the old, like infants, are perpetually relapsing into alumber, as though their hold of life were not a thing assured or certain. Robert Douglas and brooding in his lonely cottage; withheld from going to Auriel— withheld from keeping the kindly watch over Azalea he would have done over any other de-fenseless creature placed in a situation of peril because of his own painful consciousness. So there was no one to spoil the pretty tableau on the beech-tree, nor to overhear and repeat the words which presently stole into, rather than broke the silence.

"My darling!"
My darling was rather a favorite expression of Captain Mowbray's. Frequent use made it come glibly to his tongue; he had applied it so often, to so many darlings, that it perchad lost somewhat of its charm to him. she at his side flushed and trembled, as the en-chanted princess might have done at the sound of the magic word which transfigured her from stone into life.

"Don't you love me a little bit, Asslen?

Hang it, do speak!"

It is a pity that the language of the hero should have been so little in unison with the exquisite poetry of the scene; but you see men, like green caterpillars, assume the color of what they sist on. Captain Mowbray had lived on barrack-rooms and clubs, furnished lodgings, cigars, bet-ting-books, etc. Had he been asked to describe the present scene in words he would have said that it was "Awfully jolly, you know; quite dry and warm; no fear of catching coid, and the dearest little girl in the world to spoon on!"

I think Thurstan had somewhat degenerated mentally since the days when he was wild for love of Lady Diana; there was now more of the barrack-room, and less of the fresh-hearted boy about him: more of that false philosophy which they glaze over their finer feelings, as pointers obscure the lovely vivid tints of modern paint-ings, so that they may obtain a fashionalde an-tique gloom. Not that Thurstan meant any harm in the present instance; he was thorough ly kind-hearted; he would not have burt a fir.

If you think that I am presenting you with the hackneyed picture of Faust and Margnerite you are mistaken. This girl attracted him. He believed that he loved her; he designed no evil to her; at any rate, it was very pleasant to see so fair a face flushing and paling under the fire of his eyes—she could never meet his eyes, and that amused him; she talked in a quaint, thoughtful strain, oddly at variance with her youthful appearance, and that amused him. He did not appearance, and /aef amused him. He did not altogether understand her; he thought her very odd, but very charming, nevertheless. He longed to kiss her again; to take her in his arms as he had done that day when he saw her in the ferms; but something in her innocence and defenselessness repulsed him more than the sharpest reproof would have done. He had referred more than once to that he were reproductive and the rich had once to that by-gone episode; and the girl had become so shy, had shown such gennine distress at the reminiscence, that he had not the heart to pursue the subject—only he sometimes found it very hard not to repent the offense; and on this especial day he felt himself tempted beyond the power of resistance; hence he had, as he said, "broken cover." He had asked Azalea if "she didn't like him, just a little bit?" and he was answered by that silence, more exquisite than words, which belongs to modesty—the proud modesty of seventeen—which made the girl chary of any outspoken expression of her heart's Captain Mowbray, better accustomed to wo-men of the world, always equal to every occasion, waxed impatient at her silence.

Do say you like me, Axalea. Azalea counted mechanically the flecks of light that danced on a laurel-leaf, and was si-

"Then you don't care for me; and I suppose I had better go away, and never come here any more.

She paled visibly, and stole a glance at him half-pitcous, half-fearful.
"Why don't you speak, then?" he said, vi-ciously annihilating a tall nettle which grew near his foot.

Still no answer. It was foolish of her, but something in her foolishness flattered him more than the grace of consummate case would have

"Do you wish me to go?"
"N-n-n-o."
"Oh!"

He was at her feet in an instant; then, in pity to her scared look, he only rested his lips on her

"My little darling!", he said, passionately, "Hove you, and I long to kiss you; but never mind; I won't without leave. I did it once be-fore when you couldn't help yourself, which was shally of me; so now I'll wait for your permis-

And Thurstan sighed, and felt that he was heroically self-denying; but he would not consent to releasing her hands, but held them tightly, looking up in her face with an expression which methinks is not apt to fill a man's eyes after the happy years of sweet-and-twenty. Sod-and-forty has thought in his gase, even in the maddest delirium of pleasure; it's only sweet-and-twenty who squanders his delight, believing it to be inexhaustible.

Ere long the sun burned low in the west, and the lovers wended homeward. It was not until they stood in the porch in that farewell pause which indicates so much that Thurstan suggested, "Couldn't you - wouldn't you - say goodnight properly, Azalea?"

He lowered the brown mustache to rather close proximity with her lips. For an instant she hesitated, and that hesitation was in itself a caress; but she pulled her hands free and flot precipitately into the room where Moore crooned over the fire in company with a blinking cat, on whom Topaz kept a wakeful eye of aggression. Captain Mowbray waited an instant on the chance of Azalea's return. Then he philosoph-ically lit a cigar and walked away.

"Rum creatures women are," he meditated;

"Rum creatures women are," he meditated;
"they never run straight. Now if I cared about any one enough to spend two or three hours in their company I should like to kies them."

THE NATIONAL CAMP-MEETING.

We give this week a large number of illustrations relating to the National Camp-Meeting which opened July 6, at Round Lake, New Some of these are from photographs, and York. others from sketches by Mr. STANLEY FOX.

The idea of holding annually a National Camp-Meeting of the Methodist Episcopal Church, the gathering to include representatives of every Conference in the United States, was started about three years ago, and in July, 1867, the first meet-ing of the kind was held at Vineland, New Jersey. The second meeting was held last summer at Manheim, in Pennsylvania, with equally gratifying results.

The meeting at Round Lake this summer was peculiarly fortunate in its surroundings. A more desirable location could not have been chosen. The grounds, situated midway between Troy and Saratoga Springs, consisted of about forty acres. Throughout their whole extent they are shaded by beautiful trees, and are identifully supplied with streams and springs of water; while to the north lies Round Lake -a shret of water about one mile in diameter. These grounds were laid out with rare taste and judgment in avenues and streets, and the different sections were divided some men think "good tone, and with which i mo plots for cottages and tents. The grounds are the property of the Round Lake Camp-Meeting Association of the Methodist Episcogal Church, Troy Conference, which was incorpora-ted about two years ago by the State Logislature,

To secure perfect order—a matter of the first importance, where, as in this care, about 20,000 people are gathered together—a detechment of the Metropolisan Police of Troy was present. The Rev. Mr. ISSKIP, of Baltimore, preached the opining discourse. On Sunday, July 11, an eloquent and impressive sermon was delivered by History States. by Histop Starson, the ablest pulpit orator in the Mathodist Episcopal Church. His immediate audience numbered 8000 persons. Twen-ty-eight States of the Union were represented at this comp-meeting. There was no disturbance, and all who attended the meeting were comfortably provided for.

THE FIAT OF FATE.

THE FIAT OF FATE.

A rost where water-flags all yellow goor,
A grassy bank where pollard willows stand like sentinels, to great the owward flow
Of those clear wavelets in between the land.
To where they rush, stream-like, and founding move
The miller's clattering, neeflegoing wheel,
And fill with snowy whiteness every groove
With low-voiced cries, as if they, ion, could feel.
Two girls, near by the willows, standing watch
Two little boats of bank with paper soils
Watch flost upon the pool, a minic match
In pledge of Fate, and wose to her who fells.
Mab, the arch little one, kneels down, "See, see,
My boat is crossing straight, my love is true."
And sees her counsale's eyes are bethed in dew.
Custance, with features straight, and mul-brown bair,
A hazel-brown, all lighted poldenly,
Her boat cepetalog is a breath of sir,
Cries, "Mab, my love is false—he's false. Ah, me?"

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

Dows in the Wealb-A miner.

REVIVING DROWNING PERSONS.

As the bething season has commoned, and persons are liable to drowning several times this summer, the following hints will sell how to bring them to:

If the drowned person he a politician, whisper in his ear that he has just been appointed to a fat edies. If a married woman, sofily tell her that her hashend is just entiting in fat with that woman she hates.

If a young men, tell him condidentially that another follow is effer his exceet-beart.

If a married man, ship tell him that a handsome young lady called pesterday, and is to call again today at his office on important private business.

BASE-BALL.

The noonday san was pouring down Upon a meadow sere and brown, Where stood a youth with hat on high; Load to his comrades may the cry, "Base-hall?"

He hopes to win himself a name, By playing seen "a great match gener." For him "will be the greatest fan To hear the words, "Live Oaks have won." "Hese-bell!!"

His brow was bumped, his one was blee? His coat was tern from off his back; But still, like bastered burle rong. The access of that swelles burner, "Raceball!"

Around the field he saw the light Of friendly faces beaming bright, Just by his head a hell has flore, And from his lips evenes a gream, "Bese ball!"

"Now step the parse," the old man said,
"The 'second base' had smarked his less'
The 'pitcher,' too, has sprained his wrist,
The 'mapire's brain is in a mist."
"Base-ball?"

"Oh, drop that bell!" the moides said.

"And make a long "horse roo" instead."

A "hot ball" bit film in the eve,
But still be answered with a sigh,

"Base-ball!"

"Beward you'll seen he cut on foul?"
This was the "debler's" awful kned;
But still re-echoed in his car.
In that deep voice, so thick and queer,
"Base-ball!"

"Used up," he sank upon the ground, While pitying courades gathered round, And in the awful threes of death He marmared, with his least breath, "Base-ball!" There on the cold earth, direct and gray, To perfect jelly smashed, he bey, Walle o'er the commer fields after Was heard the victor's load huten, "Bare-ball?"

An Englishmen, boasting of the superfority of the horses in his country, mentioned that the celebrated Eclipse had ran a mile in a minute. "My good fellow," exclaimed an American present, "that is rather less than the average rate of our common readsters. If the at my country seat, near Philadelphia, and when I ride in a heavy to bown, of a morning, my shadow can't keep up with me, but generally crouse in the store to find me from a minute to a minute and a half after my arrival. One morning the beast was restricted, and I rode him as hard as I could sectoral times around a large factory, just its take the old librity out of him. Woll, Sir, he went as fast that the whole time I saw my back directly before me, and was twice in danger of riding over myself."

as nanger of rading over myself?"

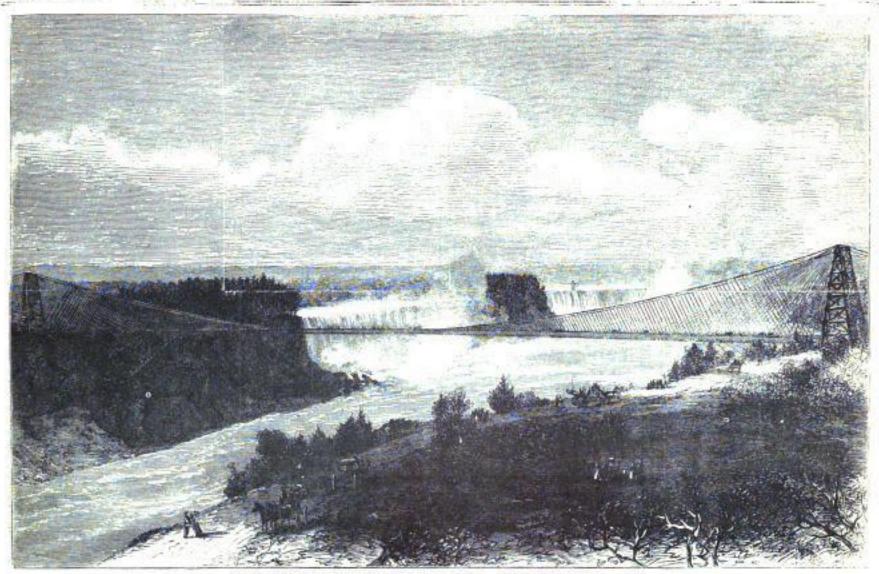

A shabby genized young man entered a tradesmon's store the other day with his immis crammed in both profitor, as if they were fissly with the trine, "Mr. J.—," said he, "Thelleve I are indeteed to reastly turn aind a hist centre, cash, hereoved some here always a year ago," "Yes, Sir," explicit the tradesmon, smacking his tips and holding out his hand to receive the ready cash. "I am glad you have come, for I had almost forgotten it myself." "Oil: I meer forget these things," said the follows; "I like an have all things square; so I want you to lead no thirty-scene and a half cents more, which will make even money."

SNUFF-TAKING.

What a moment, what a doubt!
All my nose is holds out—
All my thrilling, tricking constit,
Pyramid ribinsecrosit;
Wants in succes, and can not do %!
How it yearns are, theills me, stinct me!
How that represents toronent fills re:
Now says, "Source, yet glosse, yet those,
Sher----bec-och, the construction, yet choose,
the doubt--most deficies!
(dang is, I shall success till spring i)
Souffer a most deficies! (Hang it, I shall success till spring t) Smuff's a most felicious thing.

ON THE BEACH AT NEWPORT, RHODE ISLAND.-[DRAWS BY C. G. BUSH.]

NEW SUSPENSION BRIDGE, NIAGARA FALLS-FROM THE CANADA SIDE.

THE NEW SUSPENSION BRIDGE, NIAGARA FALLS.

The longest suspension bridge in the world is that which connects the village of Niagara Falls with Clifton in Canada. It was first opened to the public about six months ago, and is a beautiful structure, exhibiting remarkable engineering skill. Before the erection of this bridge the only method of crossing the river near the Falls was by a ferry-boat; a passage across the Old Suspension Bridge involving a long ride or walk of about two miles on each side. The new hendge enables one to cross from the American side after only a short walk from the principal hotels, and is located in full view of the Great Cataract, and the grand scenery which surrounds it.

This bridge is 1268 feet long, the cables from which it is suspended being nearly 1900 feet. They are composed of seven wire ropes, each rope consisting of seven strands, and are securely imbedded at the extremities—on the American side in heavy masonry, and on the Canadian side in the solid limestone rock. The American tower is 100 feet high, that on the other side being 103 feet. The suspenders are of wire rope, and twenty-four wire rope stays on each end of the bridge check undulatory motion. The combined strength of the cables and stays is found equal to the support of 3000 tous. The readway of the bridge is composed of two cords 10 feet apart, upon which are hid the needle-beams 5 feet apart. These cords are strengthened by channel burs of iron running the whole length on the under side, and so attached as to form a continuous plate. The elevation of the bridge above the Niagara River is about 180 feet, varying a little according to the general level of the lakes and the force of the wind. The depth of the water in the channel is 259 feet.

From the United States Collector of Customs, From the United States Collector of Customs, whose office is at the entrance of the bridge on the American side, and who controomly gave us many items of information, we learned that the New Suspension Bridge is well partonized, being found so much more concenient than the old one. In the "season" two or three hundred dollars a day is often taken for toll.

The narrow rondway is a disadvantage which it has been proposed to runnedy. At present, when a carriage enters on one side, a wire is pulled, which strikes a bell on the other side, to indicate that no carriage must be admitted in an opposite direction. But if the travel during the present season renders it expedient, the bridge will be widened. Two plans for doing this have been proposed; one being to saw the bridge through longitudinally and insert a timber ten feet long in the division of each needle-beam, bolting the timbers securely, and planking over the whole. This will spread the bridge apart without lessening the security of the auspension The second plan, which is considered preferable, is to insert entirely new needle-beams, by which the width of the bridge will be doubled. The towers are to be inclosed before another winter with a covering of corrugated iron, and in due time the whole bridge will be painted. Commodious offices for the use of the public officers and the attaches of the bridge will soon be creeted near the American entrance, and the surrounding grounds neatly laid out.

THE GREAT DAM AT SOUTH HADLEY FALLS, MASSACHUSETTS .- PROT. BY A. E. AND A. J. ALDEN, SPRINGFIELD, MASSACHUSETTS .- [See Page 494.]

This New Suspension Bridge is now one of the most attractive points to a visitor at Niagara Falia. In itself it is a most curious and won-derful structure; and standing in the centre of it you obtain a grand and imposing view. Above, the American and Horseshoe Falls, divided by Goat Island and Terrapin Tower, stretch in magnificent perspective from shore to shore; the white clouds of most rise high above the Falls, and, berne upon the breezes, fall in fine spray and, berne upon the breezes, fall in fine spray upon you; from the dizzy height you look below into two hundred and fifty feet of water, upon whose surface, however, a little ferry-boat safely plies between the cliffs; below, the beautiful "Bridal Veil" spreads over the rocks, while in the distance you perceive the beginning of the Rapids above the Whiripool. Such a view as this, once seen, is never forgotten.

An examination of our engraving on page 493, taken from a photograph by CHARLES BIRESTADT, will give our readers a general idea of this splendid structure.

SOUTH HADLEY FALLS DAM, MASSACHUSETTS.

THE Great Dam on the Connecticut River between South Hadley Falls and Holyoke, is now undergoing repairs of a peculiar and in-teresting nature. This dum, which is probably the largest in the United States, was completed the pregent is the Critical Strates, was competed in 1849. A year or two previously a dam had been constructed at this point, which was sup-posed to be of remarkable strength. The engi-neer took great pride in his work, and when it was fluished, and the gates shut down, he is said to have irrecerently exclaimed: "There! those gates are shut, and God Almighty himself gates are shus, and God Almighty himself can not open them!" Two hours after an alarm was sounded that there was a breach in the works; and the waters with resistless force burst through, tearing up the buge structure and carrying the fragments far down the streim.

The present dam is constructed in the most substantial manner of solid timbers twelve inches square, laid cross-wise, one above another, all bolted together, and sunk about four feet into the solid rock, where they are tirmly secured. All the open spaces between the timbers are filled with stone 15 feet from the bottom. The dam is 30 feet high, and 1017 in length. The whole stemenie is covered with six-inch plank, bolted down to the timber, the ridge being double planked, and e-wered with thick builer-plate from 4,000,000 feet of simber were used in the dam; 70,540 perrhos of mosonry were hid, and 602,-000 yards of earth, and 50,000 yards of rock ex-

The gates were closed October 22, 1849, and about nine hours afterward the water begin to run over the dam. The roar of this vast sheet of water is said to be supretimes beard at a distance of forty miles; and the vibrations are often distinctly perceived in towns ten or fifteen tailes away, where the doors and windows of houses rattle in militorm pulsations with those observed at the dam. The motive power secured by this dam, and the works connected with it, is said to be the best in the United States.

For some time just the Superintendent of the Hudley Falls Company has been apprehensive that the esoniumed action of this vast sheet of water, and the friction of the masses of ice which in times of freshet work back undernenth the fall, beating against the timbers, might have caused serious dimergos in the structure itself. About a year ago, having obtained the advice of stone of the most skillful engineers in the country, he resolved upon a thorough investigation into its It was a dangerous undertaking, and embr workmen utterly refused to risk their He, however, obesined one assistant, and the run boldly ventured under the noisy, rushing torrent. A slow and perilons task it was -coard ing on honds and knees through dark, misty spaces, over and under slimy timbers, the close, noxious air cloqging the lungs at every breath. Two or three hours passed, and the expectant crowd about the dam became absence of the explorers. At length one bold man, carrying restoratives with him, went in to search for them. He found both men exhaustand one in such a helpless condition that, wirhour stimulants and immediate bely, he could never have come out of his close quarters. The two adventucers, however, had made some huportant discoveries. Great cavities, some not less than fifty feet long and twenty deep, were worn in the rock before the dam, and extended many feet back into the structure of the dam it

Last September the work of repairing commenced. By means of coffer-dams the water was turned aside, so that, section by section, the uneven surface of the bed of the river in front of the great dam was accurately surveyed. Beginning with the section in which the damage was most serious, a structure was built of heavy timburs, laid cross-wise, fitting exactly into the ities, and supported by the solid rock in front. interstices between the timbers were filled with loose stone up to the water-mark; from which point the timbers were laid gradually re-cading from the outer edge, until they met the old dam at the top. The new structure was cor-ered with twelve-inch oak planks, over which beech planks, four inches thick, were laid, all being firmly boited to the original dam, and the apron of boller-plate, which had been raised, was secured over the whole.

(R.

About one-quarter of the dam has now been thus strengthened, giving to the fall of water the peculiar appearance shown in our illustration, The view is taken from the Holyoke side of the Connecticut, the point of sight being lower than the dam. The village of South Halley Falls appears on the opposite side, and the Holyoke range of mountains in the distance. On the 27th of of mountains in the distance. On the 27th of last April, when the view we give was photographed by Mr. A. E. Alman, of Springfield, the water had risen from the freshets to a height of twelve feet above the top of the dam. Some idea of the pressure of such a body of water may be obtained from the fact that when there are only two feet above the ridge the pressure upon the dam is upward of 44,000 tons. The flourishing city of Holyoke, which is not represented in our engraving, owes its rapid growth and prosperity to this great unter power.

The freshets necessitated a long intermission in the repairs on this dam, but the work has just

The freshes necessitated a long intermission in the repairs on this dam, but the work has just recommenced; and the huge piles of timber and stone ready to be used, and the force of workmen sugaged to use them, indicate a heavy job. The total alteration which these repairs will produce in the form of the falls will greatly detract, we think, from the picturesque beauty of the Holyoko Dam; but its superior expects and accurity will Dam; but its superior strength and security be unquestioned.

LOOKING BACK.

HAVE you forgotten the breezy downs, Where the lights and shadows play? And the purple haze of the distant hills, Lying westward for away? How the tinkling chime of the sheep-bells came O'er the slopes of the thymy turf? And the wind in the forest trees below Made a sound like ocean surf?

Have you forgotten the winding road, All bathed in the dreamy light, That shines on an autumn afternoon When the days are calm and bright? When the florid richness of summer's glow Had faded from earth and sky; And the year grew old with a gracious smile, Life a saint prepared to die?

Have you forgotten the vine-wreathed purch Of the little cottage door? And the palmy days of your happy youth-The days that return no more? When the rustling leaves of the garden flowers Were bushed by the moonboam's spell: And you lingered to whisper those parting words That I have remembered well?

linve you forgotten? I still believe You think of that pleasant past; And your hourt turns back to the quiet scenes Unchanged since you saw them last? God grant that the close of your restless life Grow calm ere its wanderings cease; And the better feelings of earlier years Return like the voice of peace,

A HINT FOR IMMIGRANTS.

In the London Leisure Hoar the following letter is published from C. B., which makes some important suggestions as to the prepayment of the passages of immigrants to America:

the passages of samingrains to America; increases of America and Canada there are, in every city and user-ly all the villages, agencies at which arrangements may be made for the passage of say out in the Old World whose presence is unused by their friends in the New. This method of helping immigration, to those who have not the eligibest knowledge of its weeking, may appear a very beneficial one to all partice concrete. But there are reasons why I should arrive these people in America who have friends here whom they wish to assist in Joining them to try some other plan.

they wish to nesset in joining them to try some other plan.

In the first place, when the passage of a person from Biroque to American is proposed in the latter country, the induced rate is always charged for it. Should the money, on the contrary, he sent through a banker or merchant to the intending immigrant, he can make a larginal for his passage a day of two before the altiputed plants which we have been a day of two before the altiputed is planted with the berths not be engaged much charger than his friends thousands of miles away can many weeks before it is wanted.

A few mouths ago I words to my biends in America for the means of sectorning there. Instead of sending a draft for the money, they very more only deposited for the first point for a select principal of that city. The meanest they poid for a select principal was sending two postells smore than I would have begine for the same of the anile of vessels of statill strans-power and great burden was sending two postells more than I would have to give for the same of the anile of the cane of the firm of agents told me that I much bring storte one with whom he was personally requisited, who also know no to be the person I reprocessed asyself. After much fromles and delay, and amorpains to some of my friends, and with the assistance of the American View-Consal, they were compelled to acknowledge my claim, Had the immediate because sens through a back or ordinary channel of complete or sens through a back or ordinary channel of complete to the sense through a back or ordinary channel of complete to the sense through a back or ordinary channel of complete to the sense through a back or ordinary channel of complete to the sense through a back or ordinary channel of complete to the sense through a back or ordinary channel of complete to the sense through a back or ordinary channel of complete to the sense through a back or ordinary channel of complete to the sense through a back or ordinary channel of complete to the sense through a back or ordinary channel ercial business I should have had no difficulty or de-mercial business I should have had no difficulty or de-lay.

When money is transmitted from one country to another, the person who is to receive it should have some legal document upon which he can demand the motor, and this many people in America, in assisting their briends here, do not send. I have heard of a per-son residing they sales from London, who received a commonication from his brother in America, in-forming him that arrangements had been made for his pessage from London to New York. He went to the office of the agents on whom he was told to call, and they would have nothing to say to him until he brought some responsible person to identify him. The man was not acquainted with a soul in London, and was unable to sail until the clergyman of his na-tive parish kindly came up to hown to his assistance. Some agreets would have required evidence that the clergyman also was not an impostor. It is undoubt-edly necessary that skip grents should take some pre-caution against taking the wrong person, but some of them have a disagreeable way of doing it. If the moter had not been propall on the other side of the Atlantic they would be much more civil and accom-modaling.

money had not been prepaid on the other side of the Atlantic they would be much more divil and accommodaling.

Many people in America and Australia do not seem to know that there is something unpleasant to the feelings of a sensitive man in going aboard a vessel with a passage tieftet that has long been paid for in another country. He is somewhat inclined to think that he is immigrating like a prise or, or that, like a hale of merchandine, he should be marked, "To be lept dry," and "This side up with care," in order to receive peoper treatment on the voyage. I have met several people in America who have immigrated with a passage propaid there, and who have teld me that when they axelst friends to follow them they will send the money and give the recipient a choice of the way he should go. This is treating a person as though be was a reasoning being, and it does not subject him to the chances of being annoyed and insuline by people who may rudely imply that he is trying to impose upon them by franchismity obtaining a passage from the country.

It has been proposed that the Post-office order system, which works so well here, and between England and her coloules, should be cetablished between the government and that of the United States. This would afford the best means of transferring small amounts of memory between the two countries, and would immediately become a popular one with those who have preceded them, and the Post-office money order system would afford than away now followed. Il would save much thus, and annoys ance to immigrating of the humbler chasses.

THE WATER TANKS AT ADEN.

ADER, which has not inaptly been styled the Gibraltar of the East, is an isolated corner continent where scarcely a morsel of vegetation or a blade of grass is to be seen, only at rare in-tervals in the sand a leafless shrub. For here not a drop of rain falls often for years in suc-cession, though the mountain peak, less than four miles from the harbor, is capped with cloud. Water is supplied chiefly by distillation from the sea, and also from huge tanks. Driving to see these tanks, one passes strings of camels, and tall, dirty, melancholy, scowing Arabe, and a wretched Arab village of huts of mad and straw like a warren of ill-instructed rabbits, and then up a hill through fortifications and covered ways hewn in the rock, where white-linest-coated sepay sentinels stand on guard, and down on the other side to the military contonments and to the Arab town of Aden. Here are the tanks, a very strange memorial of the past. They are hewn out of the solid rock one above another in a steep gully of the cloud-capt mountains, from whence at long intervals torrents of water pour down and fill them. Tradition assigns them an origin amerior to the time of Abraham, but there is no fragment of sculpture to help to give them a date; they are only huge irregular basins in the rock, capable of holding, each, from a quar-ter of a million to three millions of gallons, and for centuries were almost choked with rubbish, till within the last few years the British Govern-ment has cleared them out and made them available again.

DECADENT RACES.

DR. BERTHOLD SEEMANN, in "Dottings on the Hondside in Panama, Nienragua, and Mosquito," advances the following theory as to the decadence of the American Indian race:

advances the following theory as to the decadence of the American Indian race:

"A pure American Indian is always a subject of interest—destined as he seems to be to disappear from the earth, in order to make room for the Negro, Arysu, and Mongol, the only three races who at present show no sign of decadence. But races have their youth and old age as well as species and individuals; and Nature, I suppose, has not been less generous to the American Indian than to the rest of mankind. My belief is, that he had his fair lanings. In the couthern parts of North America, where his disappearance is close at hand, we find him associated with a Flora which, during the Molesse or Micores period of our globe, extended across the Atlantic to Europe, and—according to my theory, too long to develop here—ti is not improbable that he occupied Europe ages below the Arysin race left its Aslatic home. When the Flora of the Micores period was sweet away in Europe, and the island of Atlantic sank below the level of the occup, the American Indian disappeared with them in those parts, though as survives to this day in the sentheru parts of the North American continent. He represents, if my conjectures be right, a race much older than the races that have enplained when. A shuller change, slow, it is true, but show the less certain, is now going on in the scothern homisphere, where a still older flora, which also at one time extended to Europe, and a till older human race are dis-popuring. As soon as New Holmad shall have been broken up Into Islande, as Hope repetites it will be, we may expect its supplication to assume the arms aspect as that how presented by the Folynesian islands. The bolk of the planes, adapted as they are to the peculiar dry climate of the extra-tropical parts, would perish as soon as the climate became insular, and the Astatic Plora, which even now presented in the proper thand, as has been the one in the Pacietts offer the dissolution of the continent into those inneutrable islands now called Polynesian. Floras always associated with the present Flora. I do not know of any reason why it should not; but a closer examination of all the facts may possibly point to a different conclusion. It will probably time not that in the Ametralian native population we behold the oldest as well as the lowest race of men—a race in many instances without any religion whatever, and incapable of ansetring any religion teaching—a race unfatted for civilization, and so near the bruits creation that it might be appropriately classed with it, if it were not for its power of language and the only ingenious thing in its possession—the boomerang. The reasons why New Holland could not make any great strikes in civilization, conceding even that the natives as a race were capable of it, are easily found in the nature of the country. It wants moistore and nurritions plants for man and beast. Extensive tracts of land are required to feed even a flock of cheep; wild animals are scarce; and while every other part of the globe has added eablie plants to our table, we have not received a single addition from New Holland; indeed, Europeans who should have to rely for their food upon what Australian vegetation can wapply would share the melancholy fair of Burkes and William when they tried to else out their existence by eating the weetched nardon-firsts of Australian swamps. There could be no focking together of men as long as these conditions, man has existed in Australia, at least as far as we Autowiously know, for several contaries, we may conclude that he ould exist in Europe, even ming the Econes period, when the same or a closely similar climata, vegetation, and perhaps Fansa, pervaled there. We may also be sure that, with such surroundings, whatever his race may have been, be could not have arrived at a much higher degree of civilization than the miscroble aborigines who are now disappearing in Australia.

FACTS FOR THE LADIES.

We have had our Whentan & Wilson Ma-chine for ten years; have made five hundred suits of heavy cloth upon it, quite a number of tents—which is very heavy work—a quantity of family sewing, from the finest material to the coarsest, and never spent a cent for repairs. I have seen a great many other machines, but would not now exchange mine for any other.

MISS S. H. ALEXANDER. Newbern, Va.

A DISCLOSURE TO THE LADIES.

As you survey in your mirrors the white rows of teeth which owe their purity and lustre to Sozonovr, perhaps you feel curious to know the ingredients of this wondrous vegetable preservative. Well, the principle one is the bark of the Soap-Tree, brought from the recesses of the Araucanian Mountains, in Chili, to add one more charm to your personal appearance.--[Com.]

Drurereta Tascare cure indigestion, Searthure, and Sour Stomach. Pifty Centa per Box. Mailed for Go., Sold by druggists. S. G. Walleys, 571 Broadway.

Oun renders can obtain a fac-simile Gold Watch, $12 to $15 each, et 25 Nassan Street, N. Y.—(Cre.)

ADVERTISEMENTS.

New Work-Roady on Saturday, the 24th.

WEDLOCK; on Tun Bear Relations of THE SERRE. A Scientific Treatise, discioning the Laws of Conjugal Selection, and showing who may and who may not marry. By S. R. Wella, Author of and who may not marry. By S. R. Wellia, Author of "New Physiognomy," "How to Boad Character," &c.

This work contains directions by which one may indge of the mental and physical compatibility of different temperaments, qualifications for matrimosy, right age to marry, the model wife, the model hushand, marriage costoms of the world, ceilibary and crine, with the proce and postry of love, contribily, and wedded life. One Pimo Vol., 200 pages. Price, gl 50: In Extra Gilt, 2200. Sold by booksellers and newsmen. Sent free by return post, by
S. R. WELLS, No. 389 Broadway, New York.

GENUINE OROIDE

GOLD WATCH CO., Genera, Switzerland,

GOLD WATCH CO., Genera, Switzerland,

Manufacture Watches with the numer precision. They have all the brillancy, darability,
and appearance of the most are and costly description of grounds Goud Bearington Conductreason costly description of grounds Goud Bearington Conductreason and the strength, darability, accuracy, and utility of the
FAC-SIMLE WALTHAM
WATCHES, and peccounted
them travaluable as reliable by accuracy, and utility of the
FAC-SIMLE WALTHAM
WATCHES, and peccounted
them travaluable as reliable time-Keepers. Ladies' and Gentlemen's Fine Swias More
ments, $12 and $15. Maguticent Full-Jeweled Patent Levers-Fac-Simile Walthams
-320. Chronometer Balance,
235. Each Watch warrunted
to be in perfect running order, and to retain the celor of iscars Golf. Larest Styles of Chaina, $2 to $1 ceach. Sout by express every where. Christenexpress, who will exide Watch, de., previous to payment of the bill, on veceipt of charges only.
If you want the Genome Unide Gold Watches, beture and order of our oily office in the United States.
Yo Clubs, ordering a Walthes, we will send one extra, free of charge.—JOHN FOGGAN, President Oroide
Gold Watch Co., No. 79 NASSAU STREET, N. Y.
Read what the Editor of the N. Y. Bully Sun says;
"Mr. Fugners, of 19 Kansan Street, has shown as a specimen of his Oroide Watches. So close is the re-

"Mr. Puppers, of 19 Nansan Street, has shown us a specimen of his Ocolde Watches. So close is the resemblance to gold that none but an expect could the difference. The movement is the some as that of the best gold-cased watcher, and we are informed that the croide metal wears well, while it is not more costly than a plain eliver case.

GET IT PURE.

A pint of Pain Point for $3, a quart for $3, or a gallon for $40, double strength, with full directions, will be sent to any person, there of Express thusper, our religit of the money at Dr. R. Wessent's Office, 181 Chatham Square, New York; or a pint bottles of Azabillator, for Catomir and Code in the head, on receipt of $6. Small bottles sold at all Braggists.

FOR BOSTON

BRISTOL and PROVIDENCE, Con'r BRAYTON. Com'r SIMMONS.
WILL Leave (Alternate Days) Dully,
FROM PIER 30 NORTH HIVER,
(Foot of Chambers Street).

—AT 5 P.M.—
DODWORTH'S CELEBRATED ORCHESTRA

Grand Promenade Concert

THE ONLY LIN' RUNNING SUNDAY NIGHT.

PROVIDENCE PROSERRY by the above stances will have Fall River at 520 A.M.

ARRIVING 48 439 A.M.

RETURNING Will have Providence at 5 P.M., making direct connection with the boot, and allowing a good night's rest on board code way.

To before accommendate the public,

THE SPLENBED SYEAMERS

NEWPORT and OLD COLONY, Commander LEWIS, Commander Miller, WILL LEAVE (Alternate Bays) DAKLY, (Sandays excepted),

PROM PIER-28-NOSTH RIVER, (Post of Murray Street),
—AT 6:30 P.M.,

BOSTON via NEWPORT.
FREIGHT received at Pier 20 up to 5 P.M., and at Pier 20 up to 6:50 P.M., each avening.
JAMES FISH, Jr., President,

M. R. SIMONS, Managing Director, CHAS, H. VALLE, General Passenger Agent, H. H. MANGAM, Preight Agent, NARLAGARBUT STRANGER COMPART.

BOOSEY'S MUSICAL CABINET.—A Complete Libeary of Modern Mode for Voice and Franchitta; CROSTIN'S VALES, COUDSING TO BASE SCORES. 500.
ENGINEER BASETONES AND RASE SCORES. 500.
BESTHOVEN'S 45 ORIGINAL WALVESS. 500.
CONTLEYS OFERSE FOR FLANC, CECH. 500.
Mailed on receipt of price. Cavanous's Franchital Country of Prices. Cavanous's Franchital Country of Prices.

THE CELEBRATED

SIX CORD, SOPT PINISH

Spool Cotton.

EQUAL, IF NOT SUPERIOR, TO ANY KNOWN THREAD. WELL ADAPTED TO

HAND AND SEWING MACHINE WORK.

A. T. Stewart & Co., NEW YORK,

Sole Agents for the United States.

CYPRESS HILLS CEMETERY.

OPPICE, No. 124 HOWERY, N. Y., (Corner of Grand Street). OFFICERS:

EDMUND DERGGS, President.
A. S. JARVIS, Vice-President.
WILLIAM MILES, Transurer.
WILLIAM KDWAHDS, Secretary. HERVEY G. LAW, W.H. J. PEASE, JOHN I. VAN ALST, ALFRED M. WOOD, Trustees. N. G. PALMER, Sep's and Serveyor.

GRAND EXCURSION TO

LAKE SUPERIOR.

The splendid steamer METROR leaves Cleveland, Ohio, on Friday, July 16th and 18th, Angust 18th and 18th, at 8 o'clock, F.M., and Detroit, Mich., the fol-lowing svenings at 10 o'clock, for Superior City, Da-lath, and all points of interest on Lake Superior. Hours section and other information obtained by scaling to.

application to

HANNA & CO., Ag'ts, Cleveland, O.;

BUCKLEY & CO., Ag'ts, Detroit, Mich.;

or J. T. WHITING, Manager, Detroit, Mich.

SWEET

QUININE.

Swarr Quintes is marranted equal—dose for dose—to the sulphate (bitter) Quintes, with the important advantage of being sweet instead of bitter.

Swarran is Orum Purerum of its sickening und polemonaproperties. It is the most perfect Anopres and Scottune Oracra yet discovered.

Stearns, Fair, & CO., Chemists, New York.

IMPROVED ALUMINIUM BRONZE HUNTING-CASED WATCHES.

The Improved Aluminium Because is a metal differing entirely from any ever offered to the public. He qualities and resemblance to Gold are such that even judges have been decelved. It has seriously occurred to the control of the co pied the altention of ecies report the attention of scientific men, and his not only cathed forth the eulogimus of the press in consequence of its peculiar properties, but has also obtained a Gold Modal at the Paris Exposition.

the Face Expectation.

The movements are well flushed, perfectly regulated, and as all these goods are namefactured in my own factory, I am enabled to waterant them as excellent time-krapers.

Paner was 816 to $27.

Farther details will be frand in my pauphlet, which will be sent, partiald, on demand.

will be sent, postpaid, on demand.
Goods sent by Express, C. O. D., with charges,
Address JULES D. HUGUENIN VUILLEMIN,
No. 44 Names Street, New Tork.

PIANOS and ORGANS.

Prior greatly reduced for Cast. New Screen-Octar Plance, of first-class statkers, for $215 and upware New Cabinet Organs for $45 and upward. Security hand Plance, Melodecus, and Organs from $45 to $17 at 481 Broadway, N. Y. HORACE WATERS.

$9 A DAY FOR ALL. Address N. Y.

Removed to 335 Broadway. THE COLLINS $20. $15. WATCH FACTORY.

The Collins Metal and Jewelry Factory has re-moved from 37 Nassau Street to their splendid New Offices.

No. 335 BROADWAY,

These superior Watches have now been in use over three years, and give universal satisfaction; and aithough sold at so moderate a price, are not surpassed in appearance and for time by gold ones costing $150 and $200. They have been greatly improved, but the price remains the same, $15. Those of extra sine finish, $29. Gents' and Ladies' sines. Eventy of the richest styles, in every respect equal to the fixest gold, at one-tenth the price. We have but

ONE OFFICE, NO AGENTS,

and are not responsible for the begus and worth-less goods sold at cheap jewelry establishments, Our Pactory is the ONLY PLACE where the Gen-ulne Collins Metal Watches and Jewelry can be

C. E. COLLINS & CO.,

No. 335 Broadway, cor. Worth Street, (Un Stairs).

NOW READY

IN BOOK FORM.

THE GREAT GALAXY SERIAL.

By MRS. JANE G. AUSTIN.

One Vol., Octavo, Elegantly Illustrated. Price, bound in Paper, $1 00; bound in Cloth, $1 50.

This brilliant Serial was recently completed in Tun Galaxy. It will be remembered that it was first published anonymously: yet few American novels published without the prestige of a great name have at-tracted so much attention as CIPHER. It is written in a brilliant and deshing style, and is full of incident. After reading the first page the interest never flags until the end of the story is reached.

Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of the price.

SHELDON & CO.,

PUBLISHERA

498 & 500 BROADWAY, New York.

$100 PER DAY DISCONTINUED.

Having obtained an extensive and wide-spread sale for our "CENTURY" brand of Fine-Out Charles for our "CENTURY" brand of Fine-Out Chembay Theorem, we desire to announce that we shall not pack daily $100 in the small tin-foil papers after this date, July 1st, 1868, its merits being so favorably recognized that this inducement is no longer necessary. To avoid misappechemica, however, we would add that we shall continue to pack orders for elegant Mornebusser Pipes in our "YACEST CLUB" and "EURIEKA" brands of Smoothy Piberes.

The "YACHT CLUB" is devoid of Nicotine, and our not injure the health, and in especially recommended to people of sedemary occupations or nervous The trade are invited to could for elegant.

c are invited to send for circulars.

P. LORILLARD, New York.

NOW READY:

The Leading Church Music Book of the Sesson!

THE CHORAL TRIBUTE.

By L. O. Rawssey, Author of "HARP OF JUDAH," "JUBILATE." &c. Send orders as sinch in advance as possible, as they will be filled in the order in which they are received. Price, $1.00. $1.30 per done Sent postpaid on receipt of pelce. —O. DITSON & CO., Boston; C. H. DITSON & CO., New York.

ONLY ONE DOLLAR

POR ZION'S BEHALD to Jan. 1st, 1830. A drat-class illustrated Religious Journal of 18 pages. 200 Contributors: 5 Editors. The changest paper in the land. $2.50 a year, in advance. Specimen cop-ies free. E. D. WINSLOW, Publisher. 11 Cornhill, Boston.

EMPLOYMENT that page. For particulars, address S. M. SPENCER & CO., Brattleboro, Vt.

$15 A DAY. Samples Proc. Address, with stamp, RAND & CO., Biddeford, Mc.

SIGHTS and SENSATIONS

FRANCE, GERMANY, and SWITTERLAND;

OR, EXPENIENCES OF AN AMERICAN JOURNALIST IN EUROPE.

Br EDWARD GOULD BUFFUM,

Anthor of "Six Months in the Gold Mines," &c. 12mo, Cloth, $1 50.

 A book at once entertaining and instructive.

 Fashionable tourists who are leaving this port for a trip to Europe will find Mr. Buffurb. "Sights and Semantions in France, Germann, and Switzerfand! a deligatiful and serviceable travelling companion. At the same time the thousands who are to spend the summer at home, which in towa, in the country, or on the sea-shore, may, by the help of this little book, enjoy many of the pleasures of foreign travel while thus yearaps its annoyances. " " It will doubtless be more heartly welcomed by the public than any similar work which has appeared. S. F. Hereill.

It treats in a pleasant and popular manner some of the most striking topics of the European world. ... S. F. Enessing Past.

Escaing Past.
A refreshing and entertaining book, which will interest every body.—N. Y. Escaing Mail.

PURLIMIES BY HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK.

EF HARPER & BROTERES will send the above were mad, posture prepaid, to any part of the United St on receipt of $1 DO.

This is acknowledged to be the best saw and in more general use than any other in the United States. For field by all first-class Hardways Dealers. Made by the LIVINGSTON MANUFACTURING CO., to BEEKMAN SV., N. Y.

PSYCHOMANCY, Fascination: or, Science of the Soul, as applied to the purposes of life. 400 pages, Clock. By Hammer Hammon, B.A. A curious book for inquisitive people. It contains complete instructions to acquire this wonderful power over mon or animals. Can be obtained by sending postage stamp and address to T.W. EVANS & CO., 41 South 8th Street, Philindelphia.

Savage's Ursina, PURE GREASE of the CANADA BEAR.

Superior to every other Pomade for softening, giving a brilliant gloss, and increasing the growth of the Hair. Evane, Mencen, & Co. (nave Lasertodoss & Cambrilla), Monterals, Proprietore, AND SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

Musket SHOT-GUNS, warranted to shoot close and kill at 60 yards. Price, $2 50. Warran.—Army Gans and Revolvers. Send stamp for price-list of Riffes, Shot-Guns, Revolvers, to JOHNSTON'S GUN WORKS, Plusburgh, Pa.

DO YOUR OWN PRINTING. Cheapest and Best Portable Presses.

MEN AND BOYS MAKING MONEY. Price of Presses, $6, $12, $16. Officer, $15, $20, $30. Send for a circular to LOWE PRESS CO., 18 Spring Lane, Boston, Mass.

CURL YOUR HAIR!

A SAMPLE of PROPESSOR ROBER MAGNETIC A CURLIQUE seat PREEL. It correstrated towing (without lujury) in soft, luxuriant, beautiful, dowing curls, on this prest appearance. Address, with Stamp, PROF. B. H. ROBB, PARRIAN, OHIO.

AT DR. HERO'S SCHOOL for YOUNG LADIES are adventages to be freed in no other school in the world. EMILY A. RICE, Prin-cipal, Send for depalar to Da. J. HERO, Westbere, Mass.

HOLLOWAT'S OINTMENT relieves and another the severest pain of Gost and Rheuma-tian; overy vestige of inflammation is removed with-in a few hours of the first application.

$10 PER DAT GUARANTEED

Agents to sell the Hour Survius Sawing Macausa. It makes the took styron, attak on took after, but the under-feed, and is equal in every respect to any Sewing Machine ever invented. Price $25. Warranied fee 5 fears, Send for circular. Address Jouanax, Clark, & Co., Boston, Mass., Pittsburgh, Pa., or St. Louis, No.

V BLOCIPEBIOLOGY -- The Puls of a Transl-or. A curious book for impubilities people. 400 pages, elegantly bound in cloth and gill. Sew your buttons on fast before sending for the book, exclosing postage stamp and address to the publisher. T. W. EVANS & CO., 41 So. Eighth St., Philisdelphin.

Agents! Read This! WE WILL PAY AGENTS A SALARY of 330 per week and expenses, or allow a large commission, to sell our neward wooderful inventions. Address M. WAGNER & CO., Marshall, Mich.

MAPLEWOOD INSTITUTE for Young Ladies, Pittafield, Mass., commerces its Pail term Sept. 5s. 1993. Facilities and location un-surpassed. Ray. C. V. SPEAR, Principal.

PARLOR STEAM ENGINE: made entire L ly of Metal; Boller and Furnace complete; ill work for hours if supplied with water, &c.: free from danger; a child can week it. Sent free, with instruc-tions, for $1.00: three for $2.50. Address WALTER HOLT, No. 103 Nassan Street, New York.

VINEGAR.—How made from Cider, Wine, Me-without using drugs. For terms, circulars, &c., ad-dress P. I. SAGE, Vinegar Maker, Cromwell, Ct.

$10 PER DAY.—Agents wanted to sell an Amering 5-tor. Specimen and particulars on receipt of 5-cent stamp. Address W. Kam, 26 Laight St., N. Y.

HARPER & BROTHERS,

PRANKLIN SQUARE, NEW YORK,

Have just Published: .

PAMOUS LONDON MERCHANTS. A Book for Boyn. By H. R. Fox Burane. With Portrait of George Peabody and 26 illustrations. Mino, Closh, $1.00.

SIGHTS AND SENSATIONS IN FRANCE, GER-MANY, AND SWITZEMLAND; or, Experience-of in American Journalist in Europe. By Enwant Goran Bosten, 17ms, Cloth, $1.00.

FIVE ACRES TOO MUCH. A Truthful Elucida-tion of the Attractions of the Conney, and a Care-ful Consideration of the Question of Profit and Low as involved in Amateur Ferning, with more Valu-able Advice and Instruction to those about Purchas-ing Large or Small Pieces in the Bural Districts. By Rosear B. Roseavar. With Characteristic Is-lustrations. 18mc, Cloth, $150.

THREE SEASONS IN EUROPEAN VINEYARDS.
Treating of Vine-Culture, Vine Discove and its Cure: Wite-Making and Wines, Red and White; Wite-Drinking as affecting Reath and Rurals. By Withiam J. Plane. 12mo, Cloth, $1 50.

RHETORIC: 2 Text-Book, designed for Use in Schools and Colleges, and for Private Study. By Res. E. O. Haven, D.D., LL.D., Precident of the Northwestern University, Evanston, III. Trans, Cloth, $1.56.

THE SYUDENT'S SCRIPTURE HISTORY. The Old Testament History. From the Cention to the Return of the Jews from Captivity. Edited by Wulliam Sairn, LL.D. With Maps and Wesdenty. Large 1980, Cloth, 86 00. Uniform with The Standard's New Testament Bistory.

THE WEDDING DAY IN ALL AGES AND COUNTRIBOR By EDWARD J. Wood. 18mo, Clock, 28 25.

THE MALAY ARCHIPELAGO: The Land of the Orang-Ulan and the Bird of Foradise. A Narrative of Travel, with Stockes of Man and Nature. By Aurain, Resait, Wallace, Author of "Travels on the America and Ito Nogro," "Palm Trees of the America," &c. With Ten Maps and Effly-see elegant Illustrations. Crown 810, Cloth, $5.50.

PISHING IN AMERICAN WATERS. By Genio C. Scotte. With 110 Hinstrations. Crown Svo, Cieth, $1 50.

PLEMENTS OF ASTRONOMY. Designed for Academies and High Schools. By Extra Looses, I.L.D., Professor of Natural Philosophy and Astronomy in Yale College, and Author of a "Curace of Mathematics," Itme, Sheep, $1.50.

HARPER'S HAND DOOK FOR TRAVELLERS IN ENROPE AND THE RAST. Being a Guide through France, Belgium, Rodburd, Germany, Am-trin, Italy, Egypt, Syria, Turkey, Grocce, Switzer-land, Typol, Rasela, Danmark, Sweden, Spain, and Great Hritain and Ireland. With a Railrost Wap-corrected up to 1858. By W. Prannoux Permaters, Revised Edition: Seventh Year, Large Stan, Leath-er, Pocket-Book Form, $1.50.

HARPER'S PHRASE-BOOK; or, Hand-Book of Travel Talk for Travellers and Schook. Being a Guide to Conversations in Buglish, French, Garmain, and Italian, on a New and Improved Method. In-tended to accompany "Harper's Hand-Book for Travellers." By W. Pranancer Francos. Assisted by Professors of Heidelberg University. With con-cise and explicit Rules for the Promociation of the different Languages. Square 16mo, Plexible Cloth, $186.

The New Novels

PERLISHED BY

HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK.

BETTY. By Hexay Kusoster, Author of "Stret-tea," &c. See, Paper, 25 cents.

MY DAUGIFUR ELINOR. A Novel of Asserices Society. Syu, Paper, $1 15

COND AND CREESE. By the Author of "The Bodge Clob." Blostrated, 8vo, Paper, 25 cents.

STRETTON. A Novel. By Hanny Kismatte, Author of "Heety," "Geoffrey Hamlyn," "Revensible," &c. Sec, Paper, 40 cents. THE SACRISTAN'S HOUSEHOLD. A Story of Lippe-Detroid. By the Author of "Mabel's Prog-ress," Ar. Wish illustracious by C. G. Bush. Sws. Paper, 75 courts.

THE DODGE CLUB; or, Italy in 1820. By JANES Do Matte, Author of "Card and Creece," Sc., With One Bondeed Electrations. Svo, Paper, 75 center Cloth, $1 25.

FOR MER SAKE. By Passeness W. Rosenson, Author of "Curry's Confession," "Poor Branchity," &c. With 30 Illustrations. 8vo, Paper, 15 cents.

THACKERAY'S NOVELS:

New Edition, beautifully printed, with the Anthor's own Binstrations. VANITY FAIR. Illustrated. 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

THE VIRGINIANS. 180 Engravings. Svo. 75 THE NEWCOMES. 168 Engravings. Sec, 25 creats. THE ADVENTURES OF PHILIP ON HIS WAY THROUGH THE WORLD; Showing who Robbird him, who Helped him, and who Passed him by. With Portrail of Author and 64 litustrations, 8vo, Paper, 56 conts.

EF HARRER & Becreses will tune introducty New Hilliams of Thurkeray's other Sorole, Hindredol by the Author, at correspondingly law prices.

CHARLES READES NOVELS: HARD CASH. Illustrated. 8vo, Paper, 25 cents. GRIFFITH GAUNT; or, Jealousy. Illustrated. Sec. Paper, 35 cents.

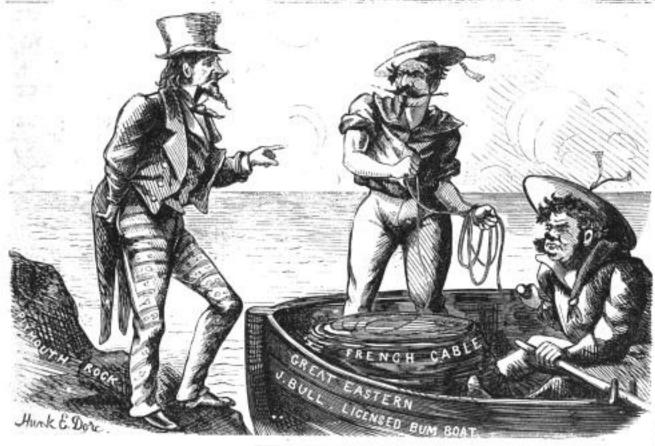

IT IS NEVER TOO LATE TO MEND. Bro, Pa-

EW To be followed by Charles Brade's other Novels. ANTHONY TROLLOPE'S LAST NOVELS

PHINEAS FINN, the Irish Meraber. Hinstrated by Millete. Sen. Paper, $1.85; Cloth, $1.75.

BK KNEW HE WAS RIGHT. Complete. With 64. Hinstrations by Marcus Stone. See, Paper, $1.60; Cloth, $1.50. Part II., separately, Paper, 50 cmis.

EF Hanres & Burrness will send any of the above books by mail, position five, to any part of the limited States, on receipt of the price.

THE CABLE QUESTION.

JONATHAN. "Look here, you lubbers; you can't make fast here. Hold off a bit, till we talk this matter over."

The Reason why Every One should buy a Haines Piano:

The reputation of these Pianos is fully established as being unsurpassed by any for a rich, full tone, elasticity of touch, long standing in tone, and elegance of style and finish.

Every article need in the construction of the Haints Piano is of the best quality and of thoroughly seasoned materials. The prices being reasonable, they can not fail to said may who may desire to purchase. Circulars and information sent on application to

HAINES BROTHERS,

46 East 11th Street, New York,

Or to Surva & Kixos, Chiesgo, Illa.; H. N. Henry, St. A. McCause, Nashville, Tenn.; Rescara Broa., St. Louis, Ma.; J. R. Jacksos, Sanducky, Otio; J. E. Goran, Philadelphia, Ps.; Mrs. C. Borse, Pittsburg, Pr.; Haarsane & Soss, Ceveland, Ohio; Carry & Soss, Albany and Troy, N. Y.; J. T. Harrier, Rhineberk, N. Y.; J. H. Herrimstern, Rhineberk, N. Y.; J. H. Herrimstern, Rhine, N. Y.; Wurre, Sperm, & Penns, Bellow, Mass.; Martimas Gray, Company, Son Francisco, Cal. : C. M. Menen, Cincinnati, Obio; C. M. Looms, New Haven, Conn.

PECULIAR ADAPTABILITY.

Brandreth's Pills,

Their peculiar adaptability to all constitutions as rican-ers of the howels and the blood has established , their creat merit. They restore the liver, the spicen, and even the heart to healthy action when other remedies have been used without producing any benedi-They do not expose these who use them to any danger, being as sufe as salutary.

Extent from Letter to Dr. Benninth, from C. J. Figs. Esq., P. M., Hammonton, N. J.

"In 1838 I was in poor health, and my friends as well as my-rif supposed that my cartbly voyage would soon harminale. But after taking one box of Benndivide Pills, I began to feel better. Weth, sir, when I had a of aptivelec bexes I was a well, bealthy man -my weight baying gone from 121 pounds up to 15c I then ordered a supply, and between that time and the persent I have retailed three those and dollars' worth of these invaluable jalls, and am quite are that I have thereby been instrumental in saving thomands of lives.

" Vours, traly, C. J. FAY, P.M.

Sold by all Denggists. On one my name in white letters in the government stamp. -- B. BRANDRETH.

CATALOGUES SENT FREE. MATHUM-TICAL INSTITUTIONS, 12 pages, OFFICAL INSTITUTIONS, 22 pages,
MAGGIC LANGERS on STEERINGTHOANS, 100 pp.
PHILOSOPHICAL INSTITUTIONS, 84 pages,
JAMES W. QUEEN & CO.,
S21 Chesinut St., Philodelphia, Pz.

MANN'S DOUBLE TROLLING SPOON.

is Trolling Bult stands unequaled for catching Piles, Pickert, Kass, &c. It is far superlar to my single open ever levented. Price Se, each. John H. MANN, Syracuse, N. V.

A CROWN OF BEAUTY.

Mrs. Aury, Kenstans, 71 West Doth St., New York, says: For pleasantness, for efficient in cleaning the scale, and for citing the hair: a natural softens, BALRY'S TRICOPHERIOUS is meganized.

S2000 A YEAR AND EXPENSES S2000 to Arcuit, in introduce the Wilson Sewling Machine. Stitch alike on both sides Singles on two weeks trial. Extra inducensests to experienced agents. For further particulars, address the WILSON SEWING MACHINE CO., Cleveland, Ohio: Bardon, Mass.; or St. Louis, Mo.

TO AGENTS. L OSSING'S PICTORIAL FIRED-BOOK OF THE WAR OF 1812 is now ready for delivery to Agents. Price, in Cloth, $2 00; Pull Roan, $5 00; Haif Calf, $1006, HARPER & BROTHERS. Sanatona "A" Spring Water,—A Positive Cone ros Headment! A Great Review ros Internation and regulates the stonact.—Except the blood rool and regulates the atomach. Persons subject to hendrake can insure themselves freedom from this multide by drinking it liberally in the morning before breakfast.

Sold by Jone P. Henne, at the U.S. Family Medicine Depot, 8 College Pines, New York.

Nature Fights Disease Gallantly; but don't fail to nid her when she is assailed. In all cases when there is a tendency to inflammation, the sile she must need is Tahasay's Everanson't Salayas Are-ainer. In effect is to prevent congestion and keep down faces.

SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

HARPER'S HAND-BOOK OF FOREIGN TRAVEL.

HARPER'S HAND-BOOK FOR TRAVELLERS IN EUROPE AND THE EAST. Being a Guide through France, Belgium, Holland, Germany, Aus-tein, Italy, Egypt, Seris, Turkey, Greece, Switzer-land, Treel, Rusett, Bethards, Swoles, Spain, and Great Britain and Ireland. With a Bullwood Map corrected up to 1608. Re W. Prantokt, Fernicet, Revised Edition; Seventh Year, Large 12ms, Leath-re, Packet-Book Form, §7-59.

HARPER'S PHRASE-BOOK.

HARPER'S PHIRASE BOOK; or, Hand-Book of Travel Talk for Travellers and Schools. Being a Guide to Conversations in English, French, German, and Italian, on a new and Improved Method. In-tended to accompany "Harper's Hand-Book for Travellers," By W. Passnock France. Assisted by Professors of Heidelberg University. With con-cise and explicit Rules for the Pronnechtion of the different Languages. Square éto, Flexible Cloth, §150.

Penusuen av HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

HARDER & BROTHERS Will send the above works by mall, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of the price.

"FRESH AS A MAIDEN'S BLUSH" is the pure peachy complexion which follows the use of Hagan's Magnorta Barn. It is the true secret of heauty. Fashiounble ladies in society understand this.

The Magnolia Balm changes the rustic country girl into a city belle more rapidly than any other one thing.

Redness, Sunburn, Tan, Freckles, Blotches, and all effects of the summer sun disappear when it is used, and a genial, cultivated, fresh expression is obtained, which rivals the bloom of youth. Beauty is possible to all who will invest 75 cents at any respectable store and insist on getting the Magnolia Balm.

Use nothing but Lvon's Kathathon to dress the hair.

$20 A DAY MADE.—Agents wanted to sell the Novelly Perket Knife, the Slate-Pencil Sharp-over and Pen-Holder combined, and the Yosendir Pens. Samples seat of all, including a box of pens, for to cts., postage paid. Address Molise ERASER CO., 404 Library St., Philiodelphia.

BOOKS FOR THE COUNTRY.

HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK, Publish the following Works:

ROOSEVELT'S FIVE ACHES TOO MUCH. Five Acres Too Mach. A Trathful Elucidation of the Attractions of the Country, and a Careful Country and to the Question of Profit and Loss as involved in Armeter Ferming, with much valuable Advice and Instruction to those about Purchasing Large or Small Places in the Bural Districts. By Boorser B. Roservett, Author of "Gome Fish of North America." "Superior Fishing," "Geme Ricks," &c. With Characteristic Hinstrations, Euro, Cloth, $1.50.

FLAGGYS EUROPEAN VINEYARDS. Three Seasons in European Vineyards. Trooting of Vine-Culture; Vine-Heisense and its Cure; Wine-Making and Wines, Red and White; Wine-Drinking an affecting Health and Morals. By Winnaw S. Flags. 1200, Cloth, $1.56.

SCOTT'S FISHING-BOOK. Fishing in American Waters. By Grano C. Scorn. With 170 Illustraaters. By Gissio C. Scott. us. Crown Sto, Cloth, $550.

MEAD'S GRAPE CULTURE. An Elementary Treat-By Pirrie B. Maar. Profusely litustrated. Cloth, 83 00.

VAUX'S ARCHITECTURE. Villas and Cotinges: A Series of Besigns prepared for Execution in the United Staties. By Carvert Vaux, Architect thate Downson & Vaux). New Edition, Revised and En-larged. Hinstrated by scarly 500 Engravings. See, Cloth. 5100.

THE AMERICAN HONE GARDEN. Being Principles and Bules for the Culture of Vegetables, Fruils, Flowers, and Strabbery. To which are added brief Notes on Farm Crops, with a Table of their average Profect and Chemical Constituents. By AMERANDEM WATER, Several Bundred Hinstrations, 12mo, Cloth, 82 co.

WOOD'S HOMES WITHOUT HANDS: being a De-scription of the Habitatious of Animals, classed oc-cording to their Principles of Construction. By J. G. Woon, M.A., F.L.S., Author of "Hastrated Nat-ural History." With shoot 140 Elinistrations en-graved on Wood by G. Freerees, from Original De-signs made by F. W. Keyl and E. A. Smith, under the Author's Superintendence. Svo, Cloth, Beveled Edges, $4.90.

EF Harren & Beotexts will send any of the obote works by small, postage free, to any part of the United States, on receipt of the price.

GOING UP TOWN!

On the lat of August we shall remove to

747 BROADWAY, near 8th St., and now offer our present stock of

CHINA, GLASS, AND FANCY GOODS at very low prices.

Davis Collamore & Co., 479 Broadway, near Broome St.

IVORIDE

KNIFE-HANDLES.

EQUAL IN

BEAUTY and DURABILITY

TO THE GENUINE

IVORY,

AND AT

HALF THE PRICE.

This material is guaranteed to resist the action of heat and cold, whether of water or of the atmosphere.

FOR SALE BY ALL DEALERS.

J. Russell & Co.,

Green River Cutlery Works,

83 BEERMAN STREET, New York City. NATURE'S GREAT RESTORER.

GREEN MOUNTAIN MINERAL SPRING WA-TER, Mount Holly, VI.

This celebrated water cures Dyspepsia, Rhenma-tism, Piles, Scrodis, Urimary Dicesees, and Female Wenknesses. "It is a tonic and general builder-up of the system." Send for Bescriptive Circular. Sold McKESSON & ROBBINS, No. 91 Fulton St., N.Y., GEO, C. GOODWIN & CO., Bestor, Mass., Agents, P. FENN & CO., Propeletors, Buthard, Vt.

TO SPORTSMEN!!

A very superior selection of fine Brosch-Loading SHOT-GUNS, RIFLES, and PISTOLS, of our own Manafacture and Eupoctation. FISHING TACKLE, POCKET CUTLERY, and Sport-men's Articles. Solv Agends for W. E. PAPE'S Celebrated Muzzie and Breech Loaders.

MERWIN & HULBERT, Circulars rapplied.) 285 Broadway, S.Y.

FOUNTAINS, VASES, and GARDEN

OBNAMENTS.

JANES, KIRTLAND, & CO. 8, 10, & 12 Bood St., New York.

Palling & Son, Matter in of Gene-ine Mestrechaum goods, Stores has Broodway, under St. Nicholas Hodel, & 3-John St., middle of block, Sond for new wholesale or setall circular to Letter Box 18-16. Repairing and Bolling also done, STAMMERING cared by Bates' Apolitones, For Paraghlet, address Simpson & Co., But 1466, N.Y.

HARPER'S PERIODICALS.

TERMS FOR 1869.

postage.

The Volumes of the Macazini commence with the Numbers for June and December of each year. Subscriptions may commence with any Number. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to begin with the draft Number of the current Volume, and back Numbers will be sent accordingly.

the current Volume, and back Numbers will be sent accordingly.

The Volumes of the Wexayay community with the year. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to commence with the Number next after the receipt of his order.

Subscribers to the Manager, Wexayay, or Hagan will find on each wrapper the Number with which their subscription expires. Each periodical is stopped when the term of subscription closes. It is not necessary to give notice of discontinuance.

In remitting by mail, a Foot-Office Order or Draft possible to the order of Harsen & Browners is preferable to Bank Notes, since, should the Order or Draft be lost or stolen, it can be renewed without loss to the sender.

In ordering the Magazine, the Wexayay, or the Bazza, the name and address should be clearly write.

the sander.

In ordering the Managing, the Weight, or the Bazar, the mine and address should be clendy written: When the direction is to be changed, both the old sod the new one must be given.

Trans for Advertising in Harpen's Periodecals.

Marger's Masseries.—Whole Page, $250: Half Page, $125: Quarter Page, $50—anch insertion; or, for a less space, $1 50 per Line, each insertion.

Harper's Worth,—Inside Pages, $1 50 per Line; Outside Page, $2 50 per Line—each insertion.

Harper's Hassr.—$1 50 per Line; Outs and Display, $1 55 per Line—each insertion.

Address HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

THE REISSUE OF S/BRARIES JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION

Vol. XIII.—No. 658.]

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, AUGUST 7, 1869.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1909, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the United States, for the Southern District of New York.

THE LATE JOHN A. ROEBLING.

JOHN A. ROEBLING.

JOHN A. ROKHLING, known JOHN A. ROKHLING, known as the bridge-builder, and regarded as the most talented engineer of the age in that department of his profession, died at Brooklyn on the morning of July 22. His death indirectly resulted from an injury which he had received three weeks previous at the Fulton Ferry slip, when his foot was crushed between the cross-beam of the dock and a float which was em-slip, when his foot was crushed between the cross-beam of the dock and a float which was entering the slip.

John A. Rohmelle was born on the 12th of June, 1800; in the city of Muhlhamsen, in Thoringia, Prussio. His academical studies were pursued in his native city, and on their completion he was sent to the Royal Polytechnic School at Berlin, where he received the degree of Civil Engineer after an unusually brilliant scholastic career. During the rext three years he was engaged in superintending Government works in Westphalia.

At the age of twenty-five he came to this country, and settling in the neighborhood of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, devoted himself to agricultural pursuits. The country at that time had just entered upon the grand progressive career which has since brought forth such mighty results. In nearly all of the States canal and slack-mighty results. In nearly all of the States canal and slack-water improvements were projected or in progress, so that HON. H. T. BLOW, U. S. MINISTER TO BRAZIL. Phor. by Rockwood. - [SEE P. 503.]

THE KANSAS CITY BRIDGE, MISSOURI. PROTOGRAPHED BY RAGAN & WINARS, KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI.-[SEE PAGE 500.]

when Mr. Rozerino, wearied with the monotony of a farmer's life, sought to enter again upon the profession for which he had prepared himself, he experienced no difficulty in obtaining an engagement. For some years he was employed in canal-work; but in the mean while the age had advanced another step, and the old-time canal was forced to give way to the new idea, the railroad. The State of Pennsylvania at this time projected several great railway enterprises, and in the service of that State the subject of this sketch spent three years, surveying and locating three lines across the Alleghamy Mountains, from Harrisburg to Pittaburg. Of these the line which was ultimately constructed is now known as the Pennsylvania Railway, and was built by the company having that title, and not by the State. Having completed his surveys Mr. Rozerino commenced the manufacture of wire rope, producing the first of that fabric that was ever made in the country. The introduction of these ropes on the inclined planes of the old Portage Railroad, over which the canal-boats of the Pennsylvania Canal were transported, was attended with much difficulty and met with much opposition. In 1844 he commenced a suspension aqueduct over the Alleghamy River at Pinsburg. This was completed early in 1845, and such was its success that Mr. Rozerino was engaged to construct the Monongabela Suspension Bridge, connecting Pittaburg with Sligo. In 1848 Mr. Rozerino commenced a series of suspension aqueducts on the line of the Delaware and Hudson Canal, connecting the anthracite coal regions of Pennsylvania with the tide-water of the Hudson River. They were completed within two years, and are all permanent works, needing merely an occasional renewal of the wooden ducts, which decay from the action of the water. It was soon after the completion of these works that Mr. Rozerino removed his residence to Trenton, New Jersey.

In 1851 Mr. Rosentino undertook to build a suspension bridge across the Ningara, to connect the Central Railroad of New York and the Great Western Railway of Canada, and in four years succeeded in constructing the first suspension bridge capable of bearing the immense weight of railroad locomotives and trains. The span of this bridge is 825 feet clear, and its supports are four 10-inch cables. Mr. Rosentino, while the Niagara Bridge was building, was also engaged on another of even greater magnitude. This was to have crossed the Kentucky River, on the line of the Cincinnati and Chattaneoga Railroad, with a space of 1224 feet; but before the structure had been completed the Company suspended payment, and the work was discontinued. In the fall of 1856 he commenced the great Cincinnati Bridge, whose span is 1080 feet, and, after having been forced to suspend operations for several years on account of financial drawbacks, brought it to a successful completion in 1837. In the interien, from 1858 to 1860 inclusive, he was engaged on another suspension bridge at Pittsburg. The last and greatest work of Mr. Rosentino was that on which he was engaged up to the time of his death—the East River Bridge. He had before his death prepared all the plans and made most of the arrangements for the construction of the bridge. Mr. Rosentino was that low knew him, and in his works has left behind him a nobler monument than could be shaped in marble.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 7, 1869.

THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY.

THE recent result in Virginia shows plainly enough the dilemma of the old Democratic party, which is confirmed by its action in the Northern States. It has hitherto held tenaclously not only to what it calls the inferiority of the negro, but to its refusal to allow him political equality. But upon this very point the party is now divided. In Virginia the Demo-eratic vote is cast solid for negro suffrage. In California and Ohio negro suffrage is denounced. In Massachusetts Judge J. G. Arnorr, one of the chief Democratic leaders, writes to Tammany Hall that reconstruction and negro suffrage have been finally settled, however wrongly, and Tammany Hall responds by glorifying the principle of the rebellion. The New York World urges acquiescence in what is evidently accomplished, and hop es for the nomination of General Hancock in Pennsylvania. Pennsylvania replies by denouncing the Fifteenth Amendment, which Virginia accepts, and by nominating a typical Copperhead for Governor, The Ohio Democracy virtually declares for repudiation, and the Iowa for the strict letter of the contract. The party agrees only in vague denunciations of "despotism" and "centralization" and "tyranny" and "unscrupulous major-Ities," which, as it knows, mean nothing, and furnish no issues for an election.

This condition of affairs merely illustrates the old truth that the Northern Democratic party was an instrument used wholly by Southern leaders for Southern purposes. During the last ten years it has had but one moment of apparent revival, and that was at the opening of the last Presidential campaign. The reason was, that the Southern leaders returned for that occasion from rebellion to the control of the party. The result was its defeat, despite its desperate frauds in New York, Penosylvania, and Indiana. But now that the Bouthern leaders have again withdrawn, the party drifts and drivels among its old degmas, wholly unable to confront the situation and to adapt itself to the utterly changed aspect of affairs. It is paying the penalty of its old subserviency to Southern mastery. That mastery forbade independence and rewarded the meanest servility. It humilisted Drx and Douglas, and promoted Pirror and Bucharas.

As a national party, professing certain great principles and advocating a distinct policy, the Democratic party does not exist; but as an organization for place and plunder it is still powerful. It is the camp of all the discontented and disaffected. It relies upon ignorance and passion, and watches eagerly for the mistakes of the party in power. While its Northern wing fears to alienate its Southern by accepting equal rights, the Southern wing proclaims them and sneers at its Northern allies. Such is the ludicross and pitiful dilemma of those allies that there can be no doubt, if the Northern conventions had been held after the result in Virginia had been fully considered, they would all have followed the lead of its indication, and have done what Judge Annorr advised Tammany Hall to do. With what profound contempt a man like WADE HAMPTON must watch the flabby political feebleness of his old lackeys!

Meanwhile an organized party intent upon obtaining power at all hazards is to be carefully watched also by those who know in what way it hopes to gratify its desires. By the stupid system of electing a President, to which we still pertinaciously cling, the most important of all elections is especially exposed to fraud. The real Presidential campaign is now always conducted in three or four States whose vote is decisive. Last year the battle-ground of the Presidency was New York, Pennsylvania, and Indiana. The electional vote in these States might have decided the result against immense popular majorities elsewhere. Thus the election of the President is not necessarily the expression of the popular will.

The Democratic managers would hardly expect, under any circumstances, to poll an actual majority of the votes cast at the next national election; but they have shown, in the States mentioned, how they will not scruple to attempt to carry the electoral vote. Mr. Charles Francis Adams, Jun., in his striking paper before the Social Science Association, at Albany, last winter, shows that ten thousand majority for the Sarmours electoral ticket in New York had the same legal influence upon the result as one hundred and sixty thousand majority for the Grant electoral ticket in Illinois, Massachusetta, and Vermont. It is notorious that that majority was fraudulent. The methods are known. The chief method was a system of dishonest naturalization, of which Tammany Hall was the head-quarters. The Democratic party every where opposes any schome for the next general election is a concentration and development in a few States of the method that carried New York last year.

Do we therefore claim that all bonest menbelong to the Republican party? By no means. But we do most heartily repudiate the puerility that one party is as bad as another. If this were true there would be no Union to-day. The Republican party has questionable members, and undoubtedly makes mistakes. But it is always that party which strives to protect the purity of the polls, and which relies upon the intelligence and conscience of the country. The great frauds which have been practiced or attempted upon the expression of the honest will of the people can not be charged to the Republican party; they are identified with their

As a party of principles, then, we repeat, the Democratic party has ceased to be formidable; but as a conspiracy against honest elections it still challenges the vigilance of every man who values true popular government. It is to be remembered that all who justify the rebellion and pledge the "lost cause"—all who would repudiate the national debt and dishonor the national name—all who disbeliers in popular government—all who oppose a registry and its strict enforcement—the ignorant and the dangerous part of the population—instinctively ally themselves to the party that is responsible for the vast system of electoral frauds. Is this the party to which the people of Maine, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Iowa wish to confide the welfare of their States?

OUR NEUTRAL DUTIES.

In the month of May, 1783, a French privateer, fitted out in Charleston, South Carolina, brought a British prize into the port of Philadelphia. President Washington, upon the advice of Hamilton, directed the arrest of the officers in charge, Hespiral and Singlerary. The sale of the prize was stopped, and it was held by the Government until the lawful owner could prove his title. Henville, says Mr. Gronce Breis, in his admirable and instructive pamphlet upon American Neutrality, "was energetically and thoroughly prosecuted;" and the President commended the subject to Congress in his next süngal address, and his recommendation resulted in the passage of the law of 1794. When HENFIELD and SIMOLETARY were arrested, Guerr, the Minister of the French Republic, wrote to Mr. Japperson, then Secretary of State, an offensive letter, demanding their immediate release. Gener said:

"The crime laid to their charge—the crime which my mind can not conceive, and which my pen almost refuses to state—is the serving of France, and defending, with her children, the common and glorious essue of liberty.";

To this letter Mr. Jappenson replied with coolness and dignity, saying, in speaking of Happenson:

"The act with which he is charged will be examined by a jury of his countrymen in the presence of judges of learning and integrity, and if it is not contrary to the laws of the land, no doubt need be entertained that his case will leave accordingly."

The kind of amazement manifested by Gu NET is reported to have been also expresse General Goscours a when he was lately arrested for a similar offense; while the Administration, for enforcing the Neutrality laws, is denounced in some quarters as not less detestable than the authorities that enforced the old Fugitive Slave law. In what respect are the Neu-trality laws like the Fugitive Slave law? The latter tried to make every American citizen an accomplice in the perpetuity of American slavery. The former say to foreigners like the Cu-bans or the Cretans, "We wish you well, but you must fight your own battles, and free your own slaves, as we have ours." Is that to connive at despotism and rivet the fetters of slavery? The argument in the denunciation of the Administration is, that the Cubans have proclaimed the liberty of the slaves, and not to help them is to help their enemies. This, if it means any thing, means that this nation ought to abolish its Neutrality laws, and take a hand in every war in which the popular sympathies may be enlisted. It means more. It means that any number of persons, for any purpose whatever, should be allowed to embroil this country in any foreign quarrel. But it is to prevent that very thing that the Neutrality laws are passed. They provide that the peace of the world shall not be at the mercy of a few men, whether honest or dishonest, whether intriguing for slavery or striking for liberty. "The rule which pro-hibits the using of neutral territory," says CARRIES, in censuring the escape of the Ainiona, "as a position from which to attack an enemy, is simply indispensable to the existence of neutrality. Without it a war between any two states must rapidly draw into its vortex the whole world."

It is plain that if some foreigners or natives may be allowed to fit out hostile expeditions in this country to abolish slavery in other countries, then other foreigners and natives must be allowed to do the same to establish slavery in other countries; or else we must either say that the former alone shall be allowed, or the latter, or neither. But if we say the former, who shall decide? Of course, those who are interested. In which case any Colonel Ryan or General Goscourra may plunge nations into war and incalculable suffering under pretense of extending liberty. This is merely unspeakable folly. It is for the people of this country, not for any Ryan or Goscourra, to determine when it shall take the risk of war.

Besides, if it be the duty of this country to help a foreign revolution against an oppressive government, it is no less its duty to originate revolutions against oppressive governments. If a people too weak to overthrow a despotism rightfully demands our assistance, how much more a people too weak even to begin to overthrow it? Indeed, there is no end of the absurdities into which such a position conducts us. It is, in fact, the principle of the Hely Alliance. It destroys all international comity and relegates the world to barbarism.

When the Cuban revolution began there was but one alternative for this Government. It could recognize the independence of Cuba, or it could remain neutral. There was no third course. It certainly could not pretend to do one and really do the other. If it was of opinion that we ought to interfere for Cubs and help the revolution, then its honorable course was plain. If it thought otherwise, its honor able course was no less so. Above all things, the Government was not to lie and sneak. was to execute the laws in good faith, or to adopt the alternative which was open to it. Now ought it to have recognized the independence of Cuba? The revolution began last October. The Cubane have won no decisive battle; they hold no port; they have no recagnized civil authority known to us; the struggle has been a guerrilla warfare of which we have only vague rumors. We all know, indeed, that the Cuban government of Spain was brutal; but we did not think it our duty to overthrow it. Now that the Spaniards themselves have overthrown it at home, is it our duty to interfere in Cuba upon the plea that the old government was oppressive? must we then proceed to inquire into the character of other governments to determine whethor they shall be allowed to continue?

We do not believe that the people of this country wish to imitate the French Republic of the old Revolution, and undertake the active propagandism of liberal government. They see with pleasure and sympathy and admiration the efforts of other people to do what they have themselves done; but they know that human liberty and progress and welfare are most surely secured by the traditional policy of the country, that of honest neutrality, which reserves the discretion of open and efficient assistance at the proper time. And if the sympathy of this country for the Cubans has seemed to be lately chilled, it is due to the mistaken seal of those Cuban advocates who insist that it is a beinous crime not to renounce that pedicy, and who bitterly denounce as blood-hounds those officers of the United States who faithfully execute the laws maintaining that policy—laws which, unlike the old fugitive law, are not in themselves wrong, but whose purpose is most civilized and humans.

Stanie Va.

DE FACTO GOVERNMENTS.

THE San, which is the devoted friend of the Cuban revolution, recently suggested that the Administration should decline to recognize the Government in Spain, and acknowledge that in Cuba. But upon what grounds should we re-fuse to recognize the Spanish Government? Last October the people of Spain, by a virtually bloodless revolution, changed their goverament. They have framed a most liberal Constitution, and the new system is not forci-bly opposed. The new Government exercises, by common consent, all its functions. It ad ministers justice; it collects tages; it maintains public order. All the great interests of the nation are undisturbed; and although it can not be expected that a country with the antecedents of Spain will escape political troubles, it has made an extraordinary step of progress in an extraordinary manner. In February, 1848, when the French Republic was declared in Paris, Mr. RUSH, our Minister, instantly acknowledged it as the existing goverument. There was no just complaint of his action. But if it were proper, can the recog-nition of the actual Spanish Government be improper?

Such a recognition is not an approval. We send a Minister to Turkey; but do we therefore approve the principle or the practices of the Turkish Government? Not at all. We concede to every people the right that we claim for ourselves, of changing their government at their pleasure. But in Cuba the situation is wholly different, as we have elsewhere intima-ted. Instead of a sudden and peaceful change of government there is a contest which has continued for nine or ten mouths, and no friend of the Cuban cause will seriously assert that there is any active authority visible beyond the range of the republican guerrillas that can honestly be recognized as a government. The Sun says that "it is time that this republic were a thing more than a dummy in the family of nations." But is the way to become so, to recognize a "dummy" republic? For whatever we may think and hope of the issue of the Cuban war, no honest Cuban will deny that no con-ceivable republic could be more "dummy" than the Cuben.

The principle for which the Sen contends is, that we shall recognise the governments that we like, and not those that we do not like. Now it certainly can not be said that we—the Americans—like the governments of England or of France, nor of Austria or Russia. We like republican and popular governments. Shall we therefore call home our Ministers in those countries? When the Spanish revolution occurred Mr. HALE acknowledged the new order. That was simply saying that the United States recognized the right of Spain to change its government. The Sun says, however, that the revolution "was welcomed by the United States in the hope that it would produce great good." But the hope is now bitterly disappointed, and we are free to act accordingly." But does the See seriously suppose that Mr. HALE acknowl-But does the edged the change because the people of the United States expected that Spain would become a republic, and that, if they had not expected that result, Mr. HALE would not have en enetained in his action?

Of course, also, we must concede what we claim. If we decline to recognize the Spanish Government because it is not republican, other nations may refuse to acknowledge ours because it is republican. We may, indeed, vociferate that we don't care whether they do or not. But is this a reasonable strain? Is it of no importance to liberty and civilization whether nations undertake to manage each other's internal affairs? Indeed, does any thing mark the advance of civilization and freedom more decisively than this mutual respect for national action? In 1823, as the Sun will remember, the monarchical reaction in France was "bitterly disappointed" by the Constitutional Government which had been established in Spain, and "was free to act accordingly." Consequently France invaded Spain to restore FERDINAND VII. to absolute power. It acted faithfully upon the Sun's present principle. It dealt with the friends of the Constitutional Government as "pretenders and intruders into a society where they did not properly belong." This was one of the greatest conceivable offenses against freedom and international peace. It was the highest mark of the terrible tide of reaction that followed the Napoleonic wars; and out of it sprang our assertion of the inviolability of this continent, known as the Monroe doctrine,

For ourselves, we protest against imitating so wretched an example. We deny our right to meddle, directly or indirectly, in the affairs of other nations, as we demand that they shall respect our independence. It is advocating anarchy to assert that we may decline to regard SERRANO'S government as the rightful government of Spain. If that is not, what is? The Swa may claim that it only wishes "stren-uously to leave it alone." But the situation makes such a course impossible. If the United States Government should refuse to maintain relations with Spain because it has not established a republic, it would deal itself and its own cause a more disastrous blow than any avowed enemy to liberty could inflict.

THE USURY QUESTION.

THE enforcement of the laws of this State punishing this offense, which may be done with fine or imprisonment, or both, has given rise to discussion as to the policy of these laws. Many ace in favor of repealing them altogether, so as to leave the rate of interest to be regulated by le v only in the contingency of the failure of ocrrower and lender to specify the rate, and is that case making it six or seven per cent.; will others seek only to modify the statutes of the State, so that the offense shall not be punished as a misdemeanor, or indeed at all, but shall expose parties who agree to take over seven per cent, to the loss of the whole interest, or of only the excess of interest above the legal

If it shall be deemed good policy to inflict any penalty upon an usurious lender, it would seem to be necessary to go so far at least as to make it the interest of the borrower to interpose a defense; for, if the latter were restrained by the want of sufficient advantage from making the plea of usury, the statute would remain a dead letter. It is generally considered an act of meanness to plead usury, except in cases where the youth or extreme want of the parties, and the severity of the rate of interest, give to the transaction the character of hard-The persons recently proceeded against by indictment and prosecution are not regarded in the light of criminals, but rather as the victims of persecution. These facts must be taken into view in whatever new legislation may be provided, as jurous have a decided prejudice against those who take advantage of the pleaof usury, as they will doubtless have against those who include in prosecutions because the turn of the market in stock or other specular tions is against them,

But our object is not so much to present any view of what has been done in the indictments now pending, or to suggest any modification of State laws, as to call attention to the policy in this matter which ought to follow the absorbtion by the general government of nearly full control over the business of banking in the United States. There is now but one issuer of paper-money besides the National banks, and but one regulator of coined money; and it would seem that the usury laws should proceed from the same authority, and be in harmony with the general interest.

From the origin of the government the several States have exercised jurisdiction over the regulation of interest, as they had until during the war over the business of banking. The two subjects belonged together. The money issued by State banks became in practice the money of commerce, for the privilege of issuing it was guarded by laws which restrained all but certain incorporated persons from doing so. There was good reason for allowing the States to regulate the rates of interest, and the punish-ments for refusing to conform to them, as long as they remained the depositaries of the banking power.

But evils likely to have effect for centuries grew out of this State bank policy, and there was no escape after war had commenced from the necessity of withdrawing, as has been done in effect, this power from the States. issues of State banks in the shape of papermoney, practically legalized, had the effect from year after year, for many years, to expel from the United States nearly an equivalent amount of gold and silver to the paper thus issued; and when war came, finding it impossible to provide for the greatest expenditure made by any nation in ancient or modern times with the triffing amount of gold and silver left in the country, the policy of issuing paper-money by the general government and making it a legal der was forced on the United States.

The general government, indeed, went further than this, and adopted the National Banking act, alleging the want of the precious metals in the country as the justification for the absorption of this great power. The creation of banks under that act was claimed to be a means of giving currency to the bonds, and to the greenback and National banks issues; and, further, that the exercise of a like power by the States was inconsistent with the success of

The error of permitting State banks to be created, invested with power to issue money, may be referred to as the reason for the paper policy which, on the occurrence of a great war, was forced on the nation. The relations of debtor and creditor were never so seriously interfered with, nor were those between producer and consumer, employers and employes; but the necessities of war compel the adoption of every recognized means for success, and the issuing of paper made a tender was one of too much importance to be overlooked.

The general government, thus driven to exercise nearly the same control over the issue of paper-money which it had exercised over the coinage of money, finds itself, after peace, with this business on its hands, with no prospect of immediate change; and the question arises whether control of the usury laws must not follow the exercise of these important powers. The user; laws appertain especially to money, the regulation of the value of which is specific ally devolved upon Congress; and they appertain also to commerce, power over the regulation of which is also conferred among the enumerated powers.

Massachusetts and other States have repealed their usury laws, except to provide for the single case of an omission between dealers to prescribe the rate of interest; and in some States the rate of interest is six per cent., in others seven, and in some not exceeding ten; and where a specific rate is mentioned or may not be exceeded, the legislation adopted in New York for their enforcement, and to punish violations of them, has been followed. This contrariety is inconvenient, and not only interferes with the present policy of the National government, but with the prosecution of trade between those in different parts of the Union.

This difference in the regulations of States on this subject has a tendency to keep us apart, while whatever in the shape of fusion the war has legitimately produced should be followed out to its logical consequences. The policy of having but one issuer of legalized paper-money will be maintained as long as paper is issued having the quality of money; and it follows that, as the States have nothing to do with the fabrication of coins, or any longer with the creation of paper-money, they ought not to be allowed to pass laws which affect materially the value and power of money within their respective limits, especially when the tendency appears to be to establish dissimilar rules.

Experience of the repeal of usury laws in Massachusetts will be valuable to the whole country, and will in time enlighten the path of future legislation. When the subject comes up in the arena of Congress it will be discussed and decided upon broad principles. If the fabrication of all money were as free as is that of the mining and coinage of the precious metals, we should perhaps feel no difficulty in supporting the policy which Massachusetts has adopted; but since the bulk of the community is restrained from such issues as the National banks make, it would appear to be necessary to guard against the abuses of those who are endowed with this important franchise, and who might use it for oppression. But whatever may be wise in this respect, it is clear that inconsistent and various State regulations should no longer be tolerated on a subject which reaches into the domain of general commerce, and closely affects the business of banking and our whole trade and industry.

THE MAST HOPE MASSACRE.

Tun borrible accident at Mast Hope upon the Eric Railway will perhaps have been obliterated from the public mind by some fresher tragedy before this paper is issued. But, as with most of the other events of the kind which are a disgrace to civilization and to this country, a little care would have avoided it. The Erie road has again become a name of fatal augury; and those are sincerely to be pitied who, living upon its line, are compelled to trav-The section upon which this accident occurred is one of the most exposed upon that road, or upon any road, and as the care of the most perilous parts is a test of the general care. and as two or three shocking accidents have occurred upon it, it is fair to conclude that there is criminal carelessness in the general supervision. A traveler ought to feel safest upon the most dangerous part of a road, conscious that the knowledge of the exposure will redouble vigilance. But the hapless mortal who must travel by the Erie abould henceforth understand that it is by sheer luck only that he is not crushed or burned before his journey's end.

An article in the Times, evidently by a writer of knowledge and experience, states some of the safeguards which are wanting upon most of our railroads, yet whose excellence is proved. A system of signals to correct the misplacing of switches; the mfety-brake; the closer connection of the cars, by which a train becomes "an articulated whole;" the proper adjustment of narrow and broad gange frogs; due care and sense in the quality of the rails and in the method of laying them; the constant removal of broken and unfit chairs, sleepers, spikes, rails, etc.; a thoughtful consideration of the wear of bridges, and their relative strength to the we imposed upon them; and the iron car in place of the magazine of angry splinters and funeral. pyre in which we now travel-all these precautions are generally wanting or disregarded in the management of our railroads,

There is something astounding in the patient submission of the public to these slaughters. The accidents of every day upon every road, the delays, the perilons "making up" of lost time, the narrow escapes, nobody takes the trouble Then comes the crash-a publicly to note. train piled up and passengers mangled and roasted alive, tremendous headings in the payers, indignant editorials and demands for justice, an excited coroner's jury with a verdict of criminal negligence and almost murder, a vague expertation of justice upon the part of some of the younger public, and then nothing more until the next barning. In the present case there were at least ten emigrants burned to death, besides the Rev. Mr. HALLECK, and the Commissioners of Emigration have made an inquiry. But he has a most vital faith in American railroad management or in American respect for human life and safety in travel who supposes that any body will be punished, or any change in the management of the road be made, in consequence of the awful massacre at Mast Hope.

"IRISH" REPUBLICANS.

A DELEGATE to the Irish Republican Convention writes to us from Cincinnati in regard to our observations upon the term "Irish" as applied to American citizens. He says that he and his friends "do not intend it in any party or sectional sense, but simply with the hope that it may have more weight and influence with their fellow-citizens of similar extraction, and those who are about to become citizens of our country...... I emphatically assert that the men who composed that Convention went in no other capacity than as true, loyal American citizens, and had no other purpose than to deliberate how best to perpetuate the true principles of this great American Republic. Heretofore the Irish emigrant, as soon as he landed on this shore, went blindly and confidingly into the ranks of the Democratic party, believing it was the national party, the party who upheld his race, and stretched out the hand of brotherhood to the oppressed of all nations."

Our correspondent adds that, to open the eyes of the new, foreign-born citizens, the Convention "met and resolved to form a nucleus round which the newly-arrived emigrant may rally, and from which he may learn his future political principles, and become a good, true freedom-loving American citizen. This was the object of said Convention; and if such be a crime, we plead guilty to the charge."

It certainly is not a crime, nor have we so charged. It is merely a mistake. But it is a very serious mistake; for it tends to perpetuate that kind of division among the citizens which it is most desirable to avoid. It is a clumsy and unwise expedient. Moreover, it is wholly unnecessary. An intelligent man, of whatever country, needs no such guide-post; and those for whom it may be thought necessary will be drawn in the other direction by more powerful persuasions. The Democratic party systemat ically panders to prejudice and ignorance, and that is a strain in which it must always surpass its opponents. The principle of the Republican party is plain enough for any body who can comprehend any thing. It is simply fair play for all men. But this, although a very simple and very noble principle, is by no means acceptable to ignoble and ignorant minds. If our friend the Delegate, with his friends, will devote themselves to the simple argument with the new voters, they will serve the cause and the country infinitely more than by appealing to a na-tionality which they have renounced.

NOTES.

THE Government has made ample and admirable arrangements for observing the total solinas of the sun on the 7th of August. Promiretoe arrangements for observing the total colipse of the sun on the 7th of August. Professor Hall, of the Naval Observatory, and Mr. Josepar A. Rogens, of the Hydrographic Office, left Washington in May for Bering Straits, under orders from the Navy Department, to take observations in that quarter, at which place the cellipse makes its advent. Professors Smoon Newscool. WILLIAM HARKNESS, and J. R. EASTMAN, of the Naval Observatory, have been ordered to Iowa, each to take observations, acting independent of one another. Professor Newcome will take with him the largest object-glass from Naval Observatory he can procure, and search for asteroids between Mercury and the sun. Some ten years since it was thought by LEVERIER, a distinguished astronomer, that a some of planets existed between Mercury and the sun; they have never as a three discovered and no house are ed between Mercury and the sun; they have never as yet been discovered, and no hopes are entertained of their discovery (if they exist), except during a total college. In view of this fact, Professor Newcoats will have this particular charge under his direction as part of his duties on this occasion. Professor Harkmans will make observations with the spectroscope, etc. Dr. Currus, of the United States army, will accompany the observers, taking with him the large equatorial from the United States Negal Academy, loaned to the Observatory by Vice-Admiral Posesson for photographic observations. Professor EASTMAN will have charge of and make meteorological observations. All these will go under the auspeces of the United States Naval Observatory, Commodore B. F. Sanus, Superintendent, and that institution will have all its professors in the field along the path of totality. At the last total eclipse visible in this country, in 1834, the Government had no facilities for accurate observations.

THE RESERVE OF THE PARTY OF THE PARTY OF

WE have just received the Fifteenth Annual Report (for 1868) of the Superintendent of Pub-lic Instruction in this State, This document contains a vast amount of instructive and sug-gestive statistics. The abolishment of rate-bills, and the substitution of taxation exclusively on property for a mixed assessment (which, in part, was a tax on attendance), have been productive of good results. School terms have been lengthened, and there has been a larger and more uniform attendance. The expenditures also for school buildings and appliances have been more liberal. The increase in the number of children of school age, as compared with 1867, was 87,687. The increase in the number of those attending school was 21,689. The greater proportion of the increase was in the rural districts. T crease in the number of teachers was 988. increased amount paid for teachers was $771,005. The report indicates great progress in the several normal schools in the State.

It is understood that the managers of the French cable have agreed to acquisece in any conditions that Congress may prescribe upon the part of this country, and that, consequently, the Government will not prevent the landing at Dux-We hope then it will be remembered that this Company enjoys an absolute monopoly for twenty years, and that it is a great deal better that this cubic should not be laid at all upon our coast than that we should acquiesce in the monopoly. The Keening Past says that the objec-tion to the landing of the cable is foolish, because it will certainly be laid upon the shore of Canada if we forbid it ours. That is very possible; but that does not implicate us, nor tie up the hands of American enterprise for the next twenty years. The Post, as the defender of a chartered moneyoly, appears in a new role. For the sake of its own principles we hope that it may plead in voic, and that the assent of Congress to the completion of the French enterprise will be withheld until the monopoly is renounced.

A commempener of a Democratic paper says, pleasuntly, that "the government which the Black Republicans boot-lick, and which they so assiduously ape, has been guilty of another atrocity." We supposed, of course, that this must be the present government of Dahorney, or the former rule of the Emperor Tracacus, but is turns out to be only that of Russia. The Cur-has emascipated the serfs, and has just now abolished the beroditary character of the Russian priesthood, without injustice to any body. These are probably the other atrocities to which the gentle Democrat alludes. The omancipating Caar can hardly expect to be kindly mentioned by an individual whose cardinal doctrine in lib-eral government is that some men ought to be julysically and politically "walloped" by others.

WE are glad to hear that Messes, LEE & SHEP-ARD, of Boston, are about to issue the complete works of Senator Scarsen in ten elegant volumes. This edition has been revised by Mr. SUBSER himself, and will be a valuable contribution to our foreusic literature. The first volume will contain an excellent likeness of Mr. Schner, from a recent photograph taken by J. W. BLACK,

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

The French cable has been landed at Duxbury, Mas-eachusetta. The Company, however, binds itself to conform to the conditions which may be imposed by Congress.

Congress.

The Newark and New York Railroad was opened on the 23d of July. This is the shortest route between the two cities. It has required an onlay of $2,000,000. It has twenty-seven bridges.

The analysersory of the birth of Humboldt, on the 16th of September, is to be celebrated in St. Louis by a festival, with music and orations in different languages. guages.

In the bost-race between the Harvard and Yale crews, July 20, Harvard was again victorious.

FOREIGN NEWS.

Tas Pope's Œcumenical Council, it seems, will be attended by none but the strictly orthodox Roman Catholica. Sents are prepared for 850 Bishops. Of these foo are of the Latin nations; vis., 864 Italians, 65 Spanish, 25 Portuguese, 96 Pretch; with whom must be classed IT from Breath, Mexico, and the Republic of South America. There are remaining 65 German, 48 English and Irish, 52 North American, 6 Beigins, 16 Canadian, 6 Hollander, 39 Greenian and Turkish. To these must be added 10 Cardinals, of whom 40 are Italian.

Italian.

Great excitement has been occasioned in Spain by the invasion of Don Carlos. The news that he had croaced the border was confirmed July 22, and was followed by "risings" among his numerous adherents. Advices of July 25 report a battle as having taken place at Cindad Real, 100 miles from Madrid, in which the Carlists were defeated.

Captain-General De Rodas, of Cuba, in view of the prompt action of the United States in arresting the Hilbusters, has issued a decree annulling article 1 of his proclamation of the Th instant, relative to the right of Homnik cruisers to search seatral weeds in of his proclamation of the 7th instant, relative to the right of Spanish cruisers to search neutral vessels in the waters near Cuba.

The Harvard Pour, who are to row the international match with the Oxford men on the Thames, arrived in London July 26.

The Irish Church bill, as returned from the British House of Commons, came up again in the House of Lords July 29. The subject of amendments was arranged by compounded.

A terrible colliery emplosion took place at St. Beleses, a few miles cast of Liverpoot, Regimed, on July 31.

Fifty-eight hodien have been taken out of the mine.

THE SEVENTH AT SARATOGA.

THE SEVENTH AT SARATOGA.

Thus famous Seventh Regiment of New York has not been forgotten. Its recent pleasure-trip to Troy, Albany, and Saratoga has excited much interest. The appearance of the regiment at Saratoga was the most interesting event of the season at that fashionable resort. We invite our readers' attention to the engraving relating to this subject on this page. We give also on the same page a representation of the statue of a soldier of the Seventh Regiment, made by J. Q. A. Warn, the well-known sculptor. This statue is to be placed in the New York Central Park.

THE KANSAS CITY BRIDGE.

Kansas City, Missouri, although not so well known in the East as Leavenworth, Omaha, St. Joseph, and possibly some other Missouri River towns, enjoys remarkable advantages of natural location and commercial facilities. It is already the terminus of seven different railroads. To Kansas City belongs the honor of building the pioneer bridge over the Missouri. On the south or west side of the river the Pacific Railroad (of Missouri) extends from St. Louis to the State line at Kansas City; the Kansas Pacific Hail-way, late Union Pacific Eastern Division, is now in operation four hundred and five miles west in operation four hundred and five miles west from the same point of the boundary. The Mis-souri River Railroad, now operated in connection with the Missouri Pacific, continues that line up the river to Leavenworth; and the Missouri Riv-er, Fort Scott, and Gulf Railroad, running at present to Paola, forty miles south, is being pushed rapidly to the Indian Territory, and will become the great route from the North to the Southwest. On the opposite river-bank the North Missouri Railroad forms a second line to St. Louis; the Missouri Valley Railroad runs North Missouri Rullroad forms a second line to St. Louis; the Missouri Valley Railroad runs northward to St. Joseph; and the Kansas City and Cameron Railroad, forming part of the Han-nibal and St. Joseph Railroad line, opens a di-rect route to Chicago. The bridge, now com-pleted, was built by the last-named road, and will enable the seven roads to unite at common points aithin the city.

enable the seven roads to unite at common points within the city.

The location of the bridge, as shown in the accompanying topographical sketch, is opposite the town, and immediately below a bend in the river. It was begun in January, 1867. In February Mr. Charcers, the chief engineer, took charge of the works. In the spring the enterprise was interrupted by a high flood, and it was not until August that work could be resumed. The south abutment of the bridge was sumed. The south abutment of the bridge was placed eighty feet back from the face of the bluff, and from it a sixty-six foot span extends over a street and the track of the Missouri Pacific Hailroad to a pair of pillars standing near the edge of the rock-face; a span of one hun-dred and thirty-three feet reaches from them to pier No. 1, the first river-pier. A pivot-draw of two spans, each one hundred and sixty feet in the clear, and three hundred and sixty-three in the clear, and three hundred and sixty-three feet long over all, from centre to centre of piers I and 3, turns upon pier No. 2, which is placed as nearly as possible in the centre of the channel. Pier No. 4 was located two hundred and fifty feet beyond No. 3; No. 5, two hundred feet further north, on the edge of the sand-bar; and two spans, two hundred, and one hundred and seventy-seven feet respectively, cover the distance remaining to pier No. 7, which stands on the edge of the wooded shore, taking the place of a north abutment. The railroad is then carried over the bottom-land on two thousand three hundred and sixty feet on two thousand three hundred and sixty feet of treatle-work, descending one foot in a hundred to an embankment. The carriage-way is carried down on a heavier grade by a side-treatle. The difficulties attending the building of this bridge were wholly in the foundations. The length of the structure is one mile.

"THE SOLDIER OF THE SEVENTH REGIMENT." STATUS DESIGNED FOR CENTRAL PARK, MY J. Q. A. WARD,-(PROTOGRAPHED BY ROCKWOOD.)

The masonry of all the piers is of limestone, quarried in the neighborhood, the facing being of ashlar and the becking of heavy rubble. The ashlar of the upper courses, above the ice-breakashlar of the upper courses, above the ice-break-er, is of a good blue-stone, of uniform color, and er, is of a good bine-stone, of uniform color, and the stones used below are of a grayish tint. The piers finish eleven feet higher than the great flood of 1844, and forty-eight feet above the lowest water observed. The total height of pier No. 4, from rock to coping, is eighty-nine feet. The pivot-pier is circular in form and tweaty-nine feet in diameter, finishing thirty-two feet on top.

The entire structure was completed by July 3, 1869, and the event was calculated by the citizens of Kansas City with the greatest enthusiasm.

TROLLING ON THE ST. LAWRENCE.

At this season of the year the fishing stations At this season of the year the fishing stations on the St. Lawrence River are generally crowded with pleasure-seekers from all our principal cities. In fair weather the stream appears througed with fishing boats, trolling among the Thousand Islands for pickerel, bass, pike, and maskinongé. The latter is the "heroine of the waters," and if an adventurer succeeds in getting one on his hook that weighs from 20 to 60 pounds, he becomes a hero and excites the envy of his brother sportsmen. The capture is rather difficult, and it requires an experienced hand to manage the victim, which, if large and sancy, has to be worried out or drowned—an operation which some ried out or drowned—an operation which some-ried out or drowned—an operation which some-times takes balf an hour. Alexandria Bay, Clay-ton, and Fisher's Landing are the principal stop-ping-places for visitors, who can easily find fish-ing apparatus and boots, with good oarsmen to accompany them on their excursions.

A SUMMER EVENING ON THE BOULEVARDS IN PARIS.

Though a great part of the fashionable society of the French capital has already taken flight to or the French captain and survey taken night to cool itself in the beths and watering-places, the nightly promemade along the Boulevards is yet frequented by a throng of all classes of pleasure-loving people. We present, in the engraving on another page, an illustration of this lively scene, where the pavement in front of one of the superbwhere the pavement in front of one of the superby decorated cases is crowded with men and women in their gayest outdoor dress; some of them seated at the little morable tables for the consumption of ices, coffee, or more stimulating liquoes; others strolling up and down, chatting with each other, or gazing at the passers-by; here and there a busiling bare-headed garpen, accords attentive to the wants and nurses of his nere and there a busiling bare-headed garpen, eagerly attentive to the wants and purses of his customers. Among these groups is a man with a couple of little lapdogs for sale, one of which is likely to be purchased, as we see, by a kind papa and mamma for the gratification of their little girl. The gas-lights and the foliage of the trees on the right hand, with the tall house-fronts on the left, will show to the reader who knows Paris the locality at which this sketch was made.

A SCENE AT SARATOGA DURING THE VISIT OF THE SEVENTH REGIMENT .- [DRAWS BY THOMAS NAST.]

AN INCREDIBLE STORY.

[Euron's Norz.—Notwithstanding that the suther has entitled this "An Incredible Story," the details of the narrative are by no means impossible. Without mentioning the numerous well-suthenticated case of double consciousness on record, we will refer our readers to the single instance of Mary Reynolds, as given upon competent authority, in Harper's Moyarise for May, 1969. Miss Reynolds not only entered upon a second Effe, in which the memory of the past was totally obliterated, but her temperament and disposition were wholly altered by the change.]

L-"SHE IS NOT DEAD, BUT SLEEPETH."

I.—"SHE IS NOT DEAD, BUT SUREPETH."

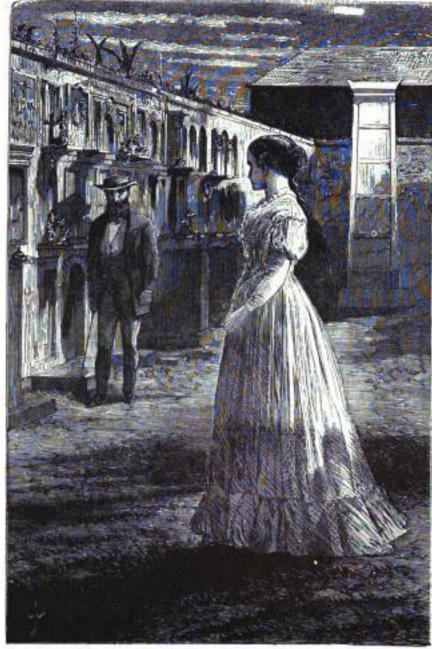

The fierce rays of an almost tropical sun at high noon slanted through the open windows of Magnolia Cottage, where Heinrich von Wetzlar stood by the bedside of his deceased wife. His little daughter Annette—a girl of five years—stood at his side; but, for all that, he was alone—alone, though a troop of men and angels had surrounded him; for what can disturb the desert solitude which Death flings about itself as a broad mantle, and about all who enter its presence? The very fullness of life on that summer ence? The very fullness of life on that summer noon, bints of which were borne through the windows with the stately sighings of the wind and the fragrance of Southern flowers, intensified and beightened, by contrast, the rigor and abys-mal silence of that slumber upon which Von Wetzlar intently gazed.

That terrible scourge of New Orleans—the yellow-fever—had visited the city with unusual severity. Magnolia Cottage was situated in one of the least crowded quarters of the city; yet this locality had not exceed the first of the whole was seen as the orlean of the least crowded quarters of the city; yet this locality had not exceed the other orleans. locality had not escaped the fate of the others. Von Wetzlar's young wife had devoted herself day after day to visiting and nursing the sick in her neighborhood, until she herself was stricken down by the disease, of which she soon became a victim. Fate had in its quiver no arrow so poignant as this which suddenly pierced the heart of the fond husband.

Heinrich von Wetzlar was a German, of Hebrew lineage on his father's side. His father, Otto von Wetzlar, had resided in Louisiana for Otto von Wetzlar, had resided in Louisiana for a short time, years ago, and had there married Heinrich's mother, but immediately after this event had returned to his home in Vienna. While Heinrich was a mere boy his mother died; the frail Southern lady pined in vain for her genial native air. Then Otto von Wetzlar married again. This second wife—step-mother to the motherless boy—proved a curse to Otto's declining years. Partly to escape her tyranny, and partly moved by the remembrance of his mother's glowing pictures of Southern life, young Heinrich fled from Vienna to Italy, where he devoted himself to art. Dreamer and poet he had always been. His temperament, inherited from his mother, induced to contemplation; his large, harrous, hazel eyes betokened at once the passicoate eagerness of inquiry and a disposition toward mysticism. His keen analysis drove him from all the ordinary positions quietly assumed by the mass of men as to the great questions affecting human life and destiny; but, as if finding no rest beyond these landmarks, his soul seemed to wander ever in that shadowy borderland where the real blends so readily with the ideal, and the visible receives the mantle of the invisible.

"THERE, ALMOST AT HIS SIDE, STOOD THE LIVING FORM OF LOUISE!"

After a residence of some years in Italy he was seized with an irresistible desire to visit his mo-ther's native land. He came to New Orleans, and there, encouraged by the patronage of a few friends who had known his father, he easily contrived to satisfy his material wants, which were few and simple. Here he met Louise Darvon. At this time he was over thirty, while she was colly sixteen. She was a simple French maiden of Haguenot ancestry—a girl who could scarcely have attracted attention by her beauty; and her parents were plain people with moderate means. Her education had been of the simplest sort, and she had none of that distingues style which often in the world's estimate supplies the want both of wealth and beauty. But Heinrich von Wetzlar judged not after the way of the world. He had lived for the most part a solitary life. He was now in the prime of manhood, but the dreams of his youth still lingered with him, though his youthful enthusiasm had been tempered by a ripened judgment.

ripened judgment.

Heinrich and Louise seemed to be spiritual counterparts; and there was a rare completeness, therefore, in their marriage. She was simple, earnest, and pure in heart. He was noble, and inspired in her a sense of grandeur. His wonderful subtlety of thought, his wealth of emotion, and the swirzinglity of his nature introduced her and the spirituality of his nature introduced her into a new world, where he was always her teach-er. She could liken him to no one she had ever seen or heard of, until he told her of Mendelssohn, whose music they interpreted together, and some of whose literary productions he read to her— then she thought he must be like Mendelssohn. Their chief delight was in music, which became to them a sort of universal language. His very conversation seemed to echo to grand old Hobrew melodies, and as she listened it sormed as if the winds wafted fragrance and repose to her from distant Palestine. If her spirit soured to meet his, so that her love was almost adoration, it was also true that his grand sympathics found through also true that his grand sympathies found through her humble, womanly churity a way to their ex-pression in the troddon ways of life.

This beautiful life they had lived together for six years, and now the each had come. Von Wetzlar was startled, beuildered, stunned. It was as if the repose of heaven had been broken. The dearness of this woman and his need of her had never before been so sensibly felt. He stood mean the brink of an along which his themselve. had never before been so sensibly felt. He stood upon the brink of an above which his thoughts—subtle and deep as they were—could not compass or fathom. His soul was moved to its depths. To such men the tragedy of such infinite loss is not simply solemn. It is a great Agitator. It is not strange, therefore, that to Von Wetslar, in the presence of this mighty sorrow, the great problem of human destiny—as it seemed to him—namely, the question of a future life, presented itself answ. But, cager as were the questionings of his soul, he seemed confronted by a sphinx that answered only in riddles. ed by a sphinx that answered only in riddles. The suggestions of his intellect seemed almost cruel, intruding as they did into the sacred presence-thumber of his tenderest emotions.

"Is this the end?" he asked. "In the midst "Is this the end?" he asked. "In the midst of all this life has my Louise dreoped as do the flowers, to fall away into a mere heap of dust? Even the crazy old alchemists had a funcy that, by some magical process, they could restore from the dust of the rose at least its phantom—a semblance of the real flower. Is not the Divine chemistry as potent as that? It can not be that my rose is best to me forever!" He reviewed in throught the testimony of the race: he recalled rose is seet to me lorever: He reviewed in thought the testimony of the race; he recalled Phrede and the sublime passages in Paul's epistle to the Corinthians. Then that movement of the glorious oratorio of the "Messinh" swept over his soul—so susceptible to the impressions of music—"I know that my Redeemer liveth." But still he was not satisfied. The calm surface of his thoughts had been disturbed by the heavy plummet of Death, and the waves still undulated in ever-widening circles toward an uncer-tain shore. Oh, if the Master could have spoken to his heart as he did to the house of Jairus:

TROLLING FOR MASKINONGÉ ON THE ST. LAWRENCE RIVER, AMONG THE THOUSAND ISLANDS .- SKETCHED BY C. M. COOLIDGE .- [SEE PAGE 500.]

"She is not dead, but sleepeth!"

IL-APOCALYPTIC.

Two dead in this time of peril were hurriedly buried. As the sun declined the face of Louise, after receiving the last fond kisses of the husband and daughter, was hid from their view, and they followed her to her resting-place in the French

Two men met the sombre cortége as it returned from the cemotery whose characters must here be described. They were not together, but met the procession at different stages of its course.

One of these was Doctor Engene Gurdon, who had just issued from his library in his mansion on Carondelet Street. Both by his dress and his walk it could be seen that he was a fastidious gentleman of easy manners and perfect self-possession. In his tastes and mental constitution he was very moth of a Parisian. He was a passionate lover of the beautiful, and shrank from ugli-ness and deformity with almost a shudder. Yet this man, to whom disease was disgusting, made is the great study of his life. This lover of the beautiful spent no small portion of his time in anatomical dissections. The sight of pain was a torment, but he was so skilled in its alleviation that he was the most promising young surgeon in New Orleans.

As he met the procession, and could see through the windows of the leading carriage errow-stricken faces of Von Wetzlar and his little girl, his beart was touched, and he said to himself, "Alas, how sad!" and the frequency of such spectacles in thuse death-crowded days of such spectacles in those death-crowded days did not diminish the profoundness of his sym-pathy. Lacking into his naturally cheerful, but now somewhat pensive face, and into his clear gray eyes that almost changed their color under the influence of emotion, you would have said: "This man is a child of nature—open as men-rarely are to all material influences, palpable or subtle. His smile answers to the faintest gleam of sunshine, and his heart is swaved by cloud subtle. His smile answers to the faintest gleam of sunshine, and his heart is swayed by cloud and storm; and although he is so much of a philosopher, his philosophy affords no shield to cover, no mask to disguise his susceptibility."

The other man to whom we alloded was Pierre Martin. As he met the procession he also looked upon the faces of the chief mourners, and knew that Louise von Wetzlar had been buried. He gazed with stolid indifference upon the ineignia of their great sorrow. He had once been a lover of Louise—if any thing could be called layer. er of Louise-if any thing could be called love which was cherished in Martin's heart: it was certainly the purest and worthiest emotion that had ever entered there. But she, with that un-erring intuition which belongs to such pure, spiritual natures, had avoided him from the first, until at length his passionate love had been turned to bitter hate.

Martin was a thoroughly selfish man. He was endowed with a very fair exterior, with a strong intellect, and with consummate impa-He loved intrigue, and delighted in playing upon other men as upon the strings of an instrument. He had acted upon the stage, had written stray articles for the press, and was now a sort of attaché to the Medical College now a sort of attache to the Medical College which he had entered some years before, and where he still lingered, not as a student, but upon good terms with all.

He had been sauntering along the street, but as the procession passed him his steps were ar-rested as by some suddenly conceived purpose.

"Ah!" he chuckled to himself—"a capital iden!
Bold—hut who not? Visit heart and the street. Bold-but why not? Faint heart nover won fair lady. Eh, let us see!" and he turned down toward the river-side, still chuckling to himself as one might over some splendid joke. Reach-ing the levee, his attention was directed toward a group of seamon lounging about the wharf, where lay a steamer that to-morrow was to take departure for some distant port. A conversa-tion followed in low tones between Martin and two or three of this group whom he had drawn aside. Some bargain was completed, apparently, for as Martin left them he slipped a few gold pieces into their hands. When we left Doctor Gurdon he was on his way to a remote and solitary cottage in the out-skirts of the city, occupied by a young medical student, whose name was Spaulding, and who was a friend and protégé of the Doctor's. This youth ushered the Doctor into a parlor where three or four other students were evidently await-ing him. This was the "Gordon clique," which pursued investigations on its own account: it was a kind of episode, as related to the regular oper-ations of the College. The Doctor was to lecsations of the Conege. The Poctor was to rec-ture to this select company this evening on the Structure of the Human Brain; and Pierre Martin had engaged to provide a anitable "sub-ject" for additional investigations in the apartment adjoining the parter, and which was known as the "Dissecting-Room." He had provided "subjects" in this way on previous occasions.

Doctor Gurdon entered upon his preliminary lecture, which was interesting and decidedly orig inal. An hour passed. It was ten o'clock, and no advices had been received from Martin. But the topic of the evening was one of absorbing in-terest, and the Doctor continued his lecture. It is mind was abundantly stored with narratives of peculiar psychological experiences illustrating of pecuniar psychologisms to knock at the ont-his theories. After midnight a knock at the out-er door was recognized as Martin's. The long-expected Something was hurriedly transferred to the dissecting-room, where the mysterious par-cel was opened by Spandding and Martin. Two dark blue eyes slowly opened that should have harten har - 1 Title

been forever sealed, and Pierre Martin was confronted by a living face that should have belonged to the dead. He gave one look of astonishment and terror, and then, without a word, fied from the house as if pursued by a phantom.

The other students were abruptly dismissed without knowing the details, and Spaulding and Doctor Gurdon were left alone with their strange and unaccountably proceeding Subject,

III .- THE SECOND LIFE.

A TRANSPORMATION had been wrought—a miracle scarcely less wonderful than that of resurrection. It was not simply the awakening, as from a sleep, of one who had seemed dead, and who had been hid away for an everlasting stumber. It was a new life. The eyes so familiar to Pierre Martin had not recognized him. The world upon which they opened seemed as new as it does to a new-born child. The past to this awakened sleeper was literally a blank. This woman was mentally an infant. The words which fell upon her ears seemed meaningless, and she could utter none in roply. She was car-ried away in a carriage, which Spaulding had pro-cured, to Doctor Gurdon's mansion, where she was placed in the care of the Doctor's housekeeper—the only other occupant of his house. In all mental affairs—in all respects, indeed, except as to her age—she was a child; though she learned more rapidly than a child could have Ductor Gurdon's massion was well suited to his character. It was costly and beautiful, was furnished with all the elegance that the most re-fined taste could suggest or that wealth made possible, and was surrounded with beautiful grounds. It was in this bright home of luxury and art that his "patient" began her new life.

The Doctor at first regarded her with a simply speculative interest. She was a case inviting study. He studied it. Very soon, however, science yielded to sentiment. For this woman in her new life was very attractive. She was as different from her former self as a butterfly from the chrysalis. As Louise Darvon or Louise von Weixlar she had been a simple, earnest, spiritnal being, self-secrificing, and the very imper-sonation of charity. The brain is the flower of the body; and it seemed that out of the dust of the flower which had matured and decayed a new and different flower had blossomed. Serious she had been; now she was gay. She had been deep-natured; now the movement of her thoughts was light and airy. Perhaps the change could not be more happily expressed than by likening it to the transformations which have affected whole races, bearing them from their rude Pelasgian life into their Hellenic or artistic era. Only these were gradual changes as compared with that sudden and almost miraculous transformation which had here been effected.

It is not wonderful that Doctor Gurdon found in this woman so much to study, nor that his studies grew to have an additional interest from the beginning of love for her in his heart. But whenever he thought of her past he was puzzled. He did not even know her name. Who had she been? There was no clew to the mystery. She remembered absolutely nothing. It is true, how-ever—and this should be mentioned here for the benefit of those interested in the purely psycho-logical features of her case—it is true that when she happened to be in places that ought to have seemed familiar, there did come to her inner sense a vague shadow of reminiscence—some-thing that could scarcely be called an impression, it was so faint and indistinct. Especially was she hanted by this ghost of reminiscence when she was in the French cemetery (it was there that the Darvons had all been buried), which she that the Darvous had all been buried), which she quite frequently visited during the sammer that followed her strange resurrection. This puzzled her, and caused her to linger about the place, as one which was in some way connected with the inexplicable worder of her life. But the idea was as faint and shadowy as the fragrance of the flowers that decorated the tombs around her.

Doctor Gurdon had never told her of even the single fact of which he was cognizant. He intimated that she had been ill, and had been placed in his charge in so accidental a manner that he in his charge in so accidental a manner that he did not and could not learn her name even. With this she was forced to be content. She knew that the Doctor loved her, and she was perfectly happy in loving him.

But he was troubled by a horrible doubt. He feared some possible interruption of this new life either through her return to her former mental state, or through some intrusive claim from others who had known her, and who might dis-cover her present retreat. He therefore guarded her most jealously, and felt anxious when she was out of his sight. After all, his great fear was Pierre Martin, who must be able, he thought, to bridge over the hiatus between the two lives of this women.

IV .- THE TOKEN.

HEINRICH VON WRIELAR, since the loss of his wife, had again become a recluse. A year had passed, and still the sharpness of his grief had not been diminished. Notwithstanding his doubts in regard to the reality of a future life, he felt that a tremendous affirmative argument now existed for him in the necessity of an unseen world to his individual soul, since his Louise believed at that a that world. longed to that world, The old desire to wander had returned, and he contemplated an early departure for Europe. With this in view he went, toward the close of a mmer afternoon, to visit the French cen for the last time.

This cometery was peculiar. The dead there were not interred underground, but laid away in vaults, one above another, on either side of a long aisle, where one might walk and look upon the outer gates of these silent chambers of the dead, with decorations of flowers and crosses resting upon their projecting marble sills. Along this aisle Von Wetzlar walked until he came be-fore the chamber allotted to his wife. As he halted and gazed upon the portal, stooping somewhat as he leaned upon his staff, one could see that he had grown many years older since that marble entablature had sealed from his vision the dear companion of his soul. As he gazed he seemed to be transported back to that sumhe seemed to be transported back to that sum-mer noon, a year ago, when the shock of death first fell upon his heart. His soil was not now agitated as it had been then. At first the mar-ble repose of the place, though in some sort a symbol of death, soothed and invited him. Then the suggestions of life that were thrown out even here seemed to answer his old doubts and to give him hope. The clambering roses and the trailing ivy towered above the stony silence, as if hinting of ever-flowing change, as if whispering to his heart: "There is no place of rest! For see! out of the very dust life rises tremblingly but triumphantly over the mask of Death."

He remembered how this same idea of life triumphantly over the mask of Death."

He remembered how this same idea of life and motion, as contrasted with deathlike stillness, had once occurred to him in reading that passage in the Twelfth Odyssey, where Homer describes the cave of the Naiads. It all came back to him now—the picture of the Naiads weaving forever at long stone looms, and of the wild bees humming and honer-making round cups and easks of stone, while evermore the waves entered and broke upon the stony floor. waves entered and broke upon the stony floor.

The fading sunlight flashed across the dear name of the departed, and Von Wetzlar still gazed intently as if there were something still to come, and for which he waited. Might not the veil of separation be removed but for one moment! And, as if in answer to his thought, there, in the clear light of day, almost at his side, stood the living form of Louise! There she stood, with one finger raised to her forehead as if she were trying to solve some hard riddle— stood thus for one moment, and then fied as from haunted corridor.

As for Von Wetzlar, astonished at this heaven-sent vision, as it seemed to him, and over-whelmed with the ecstasy of that glorious moment, he sank to his knees and buried his face in his hands. When he left the cometery a few minutes leter his face beamed with the smile of

The next day he sailed for Europe; and on the very evening of his departure Doctor Gur-don gave his own name to the nameless woman who had fallen so strangely in his way.

V .- THE END.

Docton Gunnon had rightly conjectured that Pierre Martin knew his wife's past history. But he had not met Magin since that memorable night at Spaulding's, though he had sought him difigently. Yet the object of his search had all the while been hovering closely about, and had kept himself well informed as to the movements both of the Decter and of his pariety. both of the Doctor and of his patient. It was only now that his time had come-now, when the developments over which he had kept watch had been fully matured, and the marriage had

Martin's original scheme, conceived on that Martin's original scheme, conceived on that avening when he had employed the sailors to assist him in carrying out his design, had contemplated nothing beyond the satisfaction of his malice toward Von Wetzlar and his wife. He was startled—actually confounded at first—by the result of that night's work; and after his astonishment had somewhat subsided he was led by curiosity to see what would follow. We can easily imagine his surprise at the ensuing ovents, and especially at the marriage. Why had not Louise field? Her movements appeared to be free from restraints. Why had she not re-had not Louise fied? Her movements appeared to be free from restraint. Why had she not returned to her proper husband? Was she capable of actual guilt? As a spy, watching from a distance, he could not answer these questions. Martin's plans were soon formed. Doctor Gurdon was rich, while he, poor devil, as he called himself, was in need of money. By working upon the Doctor's fears he might put money in his purse. And as to Louise herself—but she was an impenetrable mystery! A few weeks after the wedding Martin appeared at the Doctor's house to pay his respects to the bride and bridegroom. To his astonishment (was there no end of wonders?) she did not know him. She seemed to him more beautiful and fascinating seemed to him more beautiful and fascinating than ever in the old time. She was the same, than ever in the cid time. See was too same, yet not the same. Her dress, her air, her whole expression had changed. It was the old flower with a new and different fragrance. While he stood entranced with wonder he was aroused by the touch of the Doctor's hand upon his shoulder, followed by the request for a private interview in the library. He readily acceded, and a few words from the Doctor explained the situation. "You know, Martin," inquired the Doctor, anxiously—"you know who this woman was?" "Yes, I know something, not much; but the ure of that little is a serious affair

"It may be serious for me too. And meagre as your information may be it is invaluable to me. I would give thousands to know all, even the worst."

'Oh, it is not so very bad, Doctor. You see, she had been the immate of an insane asylum for a number of years, took the fever, died apparently, and was buried. You know the rest."

This invention of Martin's lulled the Dector's fears, and his gratitude for relief made him generous. So that this brief interview satisfied Martin's cupidity as well as his curiosity, and he left the house with a valuable check in his porte-mornale, one that would go a great way, spendthrift though he was.

But he could not keep away from the larger prize. If the Doctor could win Louise, why need he despair? Had he not rescued her from the grave? Did she not belong to him? Then, he remembered, she had not shown toward him any of that repugnance which she had formerly ex-hibited. In a short time they even became friends, and the Doctor was compelled to suffer this for fear of offending one whom, in his heart, he despised. Evidently, whatever Louise had gained in her new life, she had lost those spirit-ual intuition which had guided and guarded her in her first exists. in her first estate.

in her first estate.

As Martin's power over Louise increased, so also did his hold upon her husband. He professed to be making a more careful investigation as to Louise's antecedents. Little by little the truth came out—that she had been Heinrich von Wetzlar's wife. At first the Doctor would not believe it. But one day Martin took him to the French cemetery, and showed him the empty tomb. That was done in order to obtain more money; but this time the attempt was vain. The Doctor, amazed and bewildered, hurried home. For hours he pared the floor of his liberry in a franzy of agony. He loved Louise as beary in a francy of agony. He loved Louise as his own soul. He could not give her up; and surely it could not conduce to her happiness to surely it could not conduce to her mapped to be restored to a life as alien to her as if it had never been hers. He went out into the open air.

The sound of voices in the arbor, as he walked The sound of voices in the arbor, as he walked down the garden walk, attracted his attention. As he approached, unseen, he recognized the voices; they were Martin's and Louise's. He listened. It was evidently a leave taking. Were these lovers? He peered through the thick leaves of the vine-clusteers, and saw Martin standing by the side of Louise with his way to be the side of Louise with his way to be the side of Louise with his way to be the side of Louise with his way to be the side of Louise with his way to be the side of Louise with his way to be the side of Louise with his way to be the side of the side of Louise with his way that the side of the side of Louise with his way that the side of the side ing by the side of Louise with his arm about her waist, and heard him ask, as he looked plendingly down upon her innocent, upturned face, "Shall it be to-morrow, descest?"

In a moment Doctor Gurdon stood within the arbor. Before those cool, searching gray eyes Martin winced, released his hold upon Louise,

Martin winced, released his hold upon Louise, and slunk away without one word.

And she—she simply cast upon the recreamt one look of scorn and infinite loathing. The scrpent, that just one moment ago had seemed so bold and beautiful with its shining crest, had resumed its natural habit, and was revealed as a creeping thing. Apollo had turned a coward! and she hated him. Turning to the Doctor she fell powerless into his arms.

And as he sat there, holding her to his bosom, he knew for the first time how deeply and tenderly he loved her. And he did her justice. For he knew her as he had not known before. She had been simply a child in all this—free but guildless. This second life, which she had lived before him and with him, was as pure and holy as that of childhood, but also as undisciplined. It was a life in which all that was beautiful and strong called forth a frank and fearless response, strong called forth a frank and fearless response, but in which experience had furnished no principles for guidance and no test against disguised villainy. His own infinence over her, and all villainy. His own infinence over her, and all the circumstances with which he had surrounded her, had tended to the development of such a life, and with just that one woeful deficiency.

While he thought thus she lay prostrate and nerveless in his arms. Gradually she began to realize her husband's presence. Then her apathy gave way to convulsive sobbling.

"Oh! take me away, Eugene; take me any where; I can not stay here!" she cried.

"Yes, darling. I will take you away," he said, kindly. "Do not be troubled. It was only a dream. It is all over now." And he carried her to her own room, where he left her in the care of his faithful old housekeeper.

Yes, he must go away—away from Martin, care of his faithful old housekeeper.

Yes, he must go away—away from Martin, away from that cenotaph in the cemetery, the tablet upon which was photographed in his memory forever. It was now more than a year since his marriage, and a little daughter had been born to him; and here was another reason for flight. In a few days Doctor Gurdon had secretly disposed of his estate; and one evening, with his wife and her infant daughter, accompanied by the housekeeper, now little Gertrude's nurse, he embarked for the North on a Mississippi steamer.

Two evenings later, as he was sitting near the

Two evenings later, as he was sitting near the guard enjoying his cigar and congretulating himwhich had lately beset him, he looked around, and at his side stood Pierre Martin! They were alone. Foiled in his last hope and driven to despair, the Doctor seized his tormentor around the waist and tried to throw him overboard. struggle followed, which resulted fatally for both of the combatants. They went overboard, each grappling the other in a death-struggle. A deafng shriek was heard from Louise's state-room, from the window of which she had witnessed the fatal termination of the conflict. She was found upon the floor of her room apparently lifeless.

Every effort was made to recover Martin and Gurdon, but in vain. Both had evidently drowned.

For hours Louise remained in a trance-like swoon. When she awoke she did not recognize either ber child or its nurse. She did not understand where she was, but murmured, "Hein-rich—oh, Heinrich! where are you?" She was evidently now Louise von Wetnlar again, and in her thoughts was back in Magnolis Cottage. "I have been iil," she murmured. "Who are you? and where is Heinrich?" Gradually the old nurse communicated to her the events of the past two years, so far as she knew them, but Louise comprehended not one word. There was some dreadful mistake; she knew nothing of Doctor Gurdon, or, indeed, of any thing that was told her. Only yesterday, as it seemed to her, she was nursing the sick in New Orleans. It was long before she could believe in a life of which her consciousness gave no testimony. She finally found in Doctor Gurdon's trunk a statement which he had prepared, based upon Martin's story and his own investigations. She learned from this that Von Wetzlar had sold Magnelia Cottage—her parents having fallen victims to the yellow-fever shortly after her own supposed death—and that he had gone to Europe.

MAP OF HEMPSTEAD PLAINS, LONG ISLAND, RECENTLY PURCHASED BY MR. A. T. STEWART.

Him she determined to find if the search consumed all that remained to her of life. For her child's (Gertrude's) sake she retained Doctor Gurdon's property, which was already in her possession, he having converted it all into ready money before his flight; she also kept the old housekeeper as nurse for Gertrude.

We need not follow in detail her search for her husband, which was continued during several years. She went to Vienna, to Rome, and al-most over the entire Continent; to the East, to England; and at last, when she had quite given up in despair, she one day found him almost by accident—or rather is should be said that little Annette von Wetalar found her mother. This child had now grown into a girl of twelve years, and was staying with her father in the English Quarter of Frankfort-on-the-Main. One evening at sunset her attention was attracted by a bright little girl of about six years of ago who was walking by with her old nurse, whom she was teasing by the sauciest gambols. Annette ran up to her and gave her some flowers, reran up to her and gave her some flowers, re-ceiving a kins in return, and an invitation to call and see her at her own home. Amette visited her the next day, and in the little girl found a step-sister. She also found her own mother. They recognized each other at the first, and Amette took her mother home with She spoke to her father at first, that he might not be entirely unprepared.

"Oh, papa," she cried, as she entered his studio; "I have found mamma, and she is studio;

He dropped his pencil and rose to his feet, and there she was before him—his lost Louise. He had no time for astonishment, for her arms were in a moment clinging about his neck, and were in a moment chinging about his neck, and ther were langhing and crying all in one breath. The two step-sisters, Gertrude and Amette, still live together at Frankfort. Louise is dead; but Von Wetslar still lives, and is preparing a grand philosophical treatise on the Individual Human Consciousness, in which, as may be easily imagined, he considers that element of life to have been very much overestimated in its importance—at least in its connection with the vaster cycles of existence.

HON. HENRY T. BLOW, UNITED STATES MINISTER TO BRAZIL.

The benquet given to Hon. HENRY T. Blow, on the 18th of July, in the magnificent dining-rooms of the Southern Hotel, St. Louis, had more than a local significance. It periook of a national, and even of an international character. The very ornamentation of the hall, the intertwining of the Brazilian and the American flags, the mingling of the flors of the American flags, the Mississippi, but, more than all, the presence of the Brazilian Minister Plenipotentiary, Sefor Magazinass (the Londrellow of South America), and other members of the Legation of Brazil, were significant of harmony and good-will between the first nations of the Western Conti-Among the numerous guests were Senaand Representatives of our National Conon of our land, as well as the very elite of St.

Louis, irrespective of political views.

They met to honor one who (as was well said by one of the speakers) "was to represent, in the great Empire of Brazil, the country which he had so realously and ably served at home; to up-hold her honor, to advance her interests, to increase and develop her commercial relations, and to establish sentiments of concord and good-will between her people and those of that youthful and vigorous Empire, whose future seems scarcely less grand than that of our own republic."

Mr. Brow, the object of these honors, has indeed done the state some service—as a private citizen, eminent for his enterprise and broad views, as a patriot in trying times, as a member of Congress, and as a minister abroad. He is a native of Southampton, Virginia, but moved when quite young to Alabama. In 1831 he went to He early became interested in mining lands of immense value, and by manufac-tures and by mines he has accumulated a large

One would have judged, from his birth and as-sociations with the South (spending many win-ters at New Orleans, etc., etc.), that his sympa-thies would have been with the late rebellion. But he was among the first in Missouri to declare slavery inconsistent with republican institutions, and evinced his love of liberty and justice in ear ly life, when he became the security of, and advanced the money to, DEED SCOTT, in order that that slave, whose name has become famous by his suit, might test the Constitution of this country in regard to the stoles of the black man. Mr. Brow took a decided stand in the important events of Missouri during the rebellion. He was the friend and counselor of General Lyon, and enjoyed the most confidential relations with Mr. Lancoux. In 1862 he was sent as Minister, with extraordinary powers, to Venezuela, and filled his mission with such satisfaction that Mr. Lrs-COLN desired to give him a European mission; but, believing that he could serve his country but, believing that he could serve an country better at home, Mr. Brow returned to St. Louis, whore, in 1868, he was elected by a large major-ity as Representative to Congress. In 1865 he was re-elected by such overwhelming odds that was re-elected by such overwhelming odds that his opponent received but 1300 votes to Mr. Blow's 13,700. He was placed upon the two most important committees at the same time, viz., those of Ways and Means and of Recon struction, and served on both with assidnity and

Mr. Brow, with his accomplished family, will do much as the representative of the United States to bind our country and Brazil in closer

THE HEMPSTEAD PLAINS.

Tun purchase of Hempstead Plains—a tract of land in the interior of Long Island, consisting of 7000 acres—by Mr. A. T. Stewart was ratified by the citizens of Hempstead July 17. We give on this page a very full map of this region, showing its connection by railroad with Brooklyn and New York. This tract cost Mr. Stewart $400,000; and we understand that it is his design to geted from six to tee millions of dollars. sign to spend from six to ten millions of dollars in the erection upon it of homes for the working-classes of New York and Brooklyn. This design is so gigantic that it throws into the shade every attempt of the kind hitherto made. The situation of the lands purchased is admirably adapted to the purposes contemplated. They are abundantly supplied with the purest water; the Ridgewood Water works of Brooklyn are fed the Ridgewood Water-works of Brooklyn are fed by the springs of this region. As will be seen by a glance at our map, the Long Island and the Southside railroads (with a branch road connect-ing them, and running across the Plains) afford unusual facilities for communication with the two neighboring cities. With the improvements which Mr. Strawarr will carry out; with a town-ship of beautiful and healthful homes; with parks, gardens, and public buildings for educa-tional purposes and for those of amusement, Hempetsed Plains, hitherto a desert, will be made to blossom as the rose; it will be the most beautiful suburb in the vicinity of New York. God speed the undertaking! God speed the undertaking!

HOME AND FOREIGN GOSSIP.

How shall we keep cool-that is, as cool as it is comibie to doduring the next six weeks? Many solves violently, thus heating the blood ten times more by the exercise than it is cooled by the artificial breeze; then they drink some los-water, or some soda-water; then they say, "How dreadfully hot it is!" and they abandon all idea of doing any thing but to try to keep cook; and it is this persistent effort to keep ery to keep coor; and his time persistent effort to keep cool that makes every body so disagreeably warm. The disconsist from heat is largely the result of a sort of nervous imagination. Not that it is not hot. It is hot; but thinking about it all the time makes it hotter. A few simple rules should be observed during the "bested term." The dist should be light, and chiedy fruits and vegetables. The dress, of course, chically require any vegetation. The dress, or course, should be light, and office changed; nothing wors during the day should be wern at night. Bathe fre-quently, but not to excess. Water will best quench the thirst, and if drank alonely is not injurious. If one will adopt some such simple rules as these, and then quietly and steadily occupy the mind with some topic more interesting than the heat, avoiding excite-ment, and enduring what must be endured with as little fuse as possible, he will find he suffers for less de the whole twenty-four hours in trying to keep cool.

The recent disaster which occurred on the Kan-Pacific Railroad appears to have originated in the ef-fects of the late heavy raise in that section of the con-try. A bridge, only about thirty feet in length, which spanned a ravine from afteen to twenty feet deep, was spanned a ravine from fitteen to twenty feet deep, was the scene of the disaster. The bridge and track were apparently in good order, but no somer had the en-gine moved upon it than the bridge gave way and the locomotive was precipitated into the ravine, followed by the cars. The smash was terrible, two persons being instantly killed and many severely injured. An examination after the accident showed that the giving way of the bridge was caused by what is known as a "bent" having been wrested from under the treetle-work by the flood caused by the heavy rains, and leavwork by the noos caused by the heavy raths, and seav-ing this portion of the bridge unsupported. This was not perceptible before the accident occurred, and the track and bridge were apparently intact. The disaster is believed to have been purely accidental.

The Centennial Commencement of Dartmouth College was celebrated at Hanover on July 21 with great spirit and enthusiasm. The occasion brought together a multitude of the alumni and others from all parts of the country. A large tent, capable of bolding three thousand persons, was erected on the Common, and was densely packed with the graduates and the friends of the College. Many distinguished men were present, among whom was General Sherman. The morning exercises consisted of an address of welcome by President Smith, an historical address by President Brown, of Hamilton College, and the singing of an original ode by one of the alumni. In the afternoon Chief Justice Chase delivered an address, which was fulone by one of the atomat. In the antermoon Chief Justice Chase delivered an address, which was fullowed by a poem. During the latter exercise Hanover was visited by one of the most vigient storms ever known in that section, which caused an abridgement of the performances.

Race-borses from all parts of the country are now daily arriving at Saratoga. The fishionable world is also turning its face Saratoga-ward. August will bring gayety enough—racing, gambling, and beiting, in addition to the neual programme of drinking, dressing, and dancing.

Buffalo River is to be made longer and dee grand arrer is to be made tonger and deeper, to ac-commodate the increasing commerce of the lakes and canals. The work of excavating the rock has already commenced, and it is proposed to excavate to a suf-ficient depth to allow vessels to load with coal at their

It is comforting during this hot season to be assured that the fifthy streets in many parts of our city are receiving some special attention from the Santaary Superintendent, and trecover have been scattered abroad with a liberal band. It is to be hoped that these cleaning processes will con-tinue to go on ad symitmes.

We learn from an exchange that the famed Ameri-We learn from an exchange that the farned American painter, literatait, has met with great encoses in Paris this year. His sales at the Grand Hotel has been a most interesting place both in a social and in an artistic point of view. Celebrities from all quarters of the globe have gathered there. Among the new paintings of this artist is "The Bridal Vell," a view of the Toesmite Valley—a superb work, which was commenced at Rome and completed in Paris. Another painting of great power is " A Storm on the Prairie." We understand from family friends of Mr. Bierstadt that he is expected to return to America about this time; and that he has work in hand, and about this time; and that he has work in hand, and plauned for the future, sufficient to occupy his time

We may expect that some of our art galleries will open rare attractions in the full. Mr. Knoedler and Mr. Schaus are both in Europe, and have already pur-chased many fine paintings, which are on their way to

A French journal bints that if one desires to write a ocument so as to render attempts at altering impossible, it can be done by steeping paper in a very, eak solution of gallic acid. thus obtained upon which ordinary lak makes a mark that defea decritful erasure or alteration, by render-ing any attempt at such easily detectable.

The great centre of interest at Long Branch last week was President Grant. He and his family were located at the Statson House, but every thing concerning them went on in the most quiet and uncetenta-tions manner. The President was destrous of quiet and rest, and evidently designs to secure it if other people do not interfere. He emokes his inevitable cigar, drives, dines, bathes, and walks on the beach, and with his family joins the social circle in the draw-ing-room occasionally. In short, he does just as any gentleman would do who wishes to refrash himself

The Seltan has decided to be present at the opening of the Suez Canal, on the 17th of November next, and ats will be a matter of intense interest to his movements will be a matter of intense many. The Minister of Finance has receive to place 12,000,000 france at the disposal of the Trees of the Privy Purse, and this sum very likely will be devoted only to preparations for the journey.

Magasine literature is the rage in London. No less than six hundred and sixty-five magazines, including quarterlies, are now published in Great Britain. But while there is frequent announcement of a fresh pewhile there is frequent announcement of a fresh periodical, just as often the record of a deceased magnzine is made. Over thirteen bundred newspapers are at present published in Great Britain. In this courtry there are thirty-five hundred, of which five-sevenths are issued in the Northern States.

A Christian bargain or safe is one in which there is neither cheating for profit nor lying for gain. A Christian yard is thirty-six inches, and is not shortened by the bandling of the stick.

A Christian pound weighs sixteen ounces, and is at least evenly balanced.

A Christian bushel contains 505 cubic inches, and is

A Christian ton is 2000 pounds, and is not foughly

It is currently reported that the Emperor of the French will confer the title of "Dake of Susa" on M. Fredinand de Lesseps at the official opening of the Susa Canal, in commemoration of the successful completion of his great undertaking. M. de Lesseps was born at Versalites on November 19, 1806. Perhaps, if November 19 did not happen to come on a Friday this year, the birthday of the great engineer might have been celebrated by the opening of the Susa Canal, which would have been very pleasant and appropriate. But, doubtless, if the thing was thought propriate. But, doubtiess, if the thing was thou, of, popular prejudice against Priday prevailed—so the 17th of November is the great day of ceremonies.

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

THE movement that was "on foot" has taken a car-

"I have very little respect for the ties of this world," as the chap said when the rope was put around his neck.

An intolerable bors, having talked a friend nearly out of his senses, finally struck out on "the oyster," which he called "one of the most remarkable speci-mens of creative windom extent," when his friend in-terrupted him, and "closed the debata," with the ex-claration: "The cyster! Ab, yes, the cyster is a glorious fellow; he always knows when to shut up!"

If the doctor orders bark, has not the patient a right

SONG OF A HORSE.

SONG OF A HORRE.

A poor old stage-horse, leak and thin, Not much size but house and skin, I log along, week out work in. Ricked and carreed and meanly fed, Jammed in the side and jerked by the head. And the thing I can't at all make out, is what on earth it's all about. Why was I made to toil and tag For this little odd human bug, Two-legged, drupp as a jug, Who sils aloft my ribe to batter—Or why was he made, for that matter? And, if I needs must be creased, why is it that I was not fated. To prance and curret, finely-mated, fillwe-harmessed, sleek and fat, With groom and blanket, and all that? Here I go, day sher day, Pounding and slipping down Broadway, Pounding and slipping down Broadway, Pounding these cardons biped things. With fore-legs gone and yet no wings—Where they all go to I don't know, Nor why in the world they harry so, Nor what good use Heaven puts them to! It wasn't my fash, you see, at all, That my joints grew big and my muscles smal and so I misced a rich man't stall. Fin clumsy, struick, excelled, slow, Yet the meancel horse in a horse, you know, An well as the glossiest nags that go. O Lord: how long will they use me so? And when may the equine spirit go Where glorified horses stand in a row, Switching their bright talks to and fro, Cardess of either wheels or whon? Where cats are always apropos, And fine don't grow? Oh no!

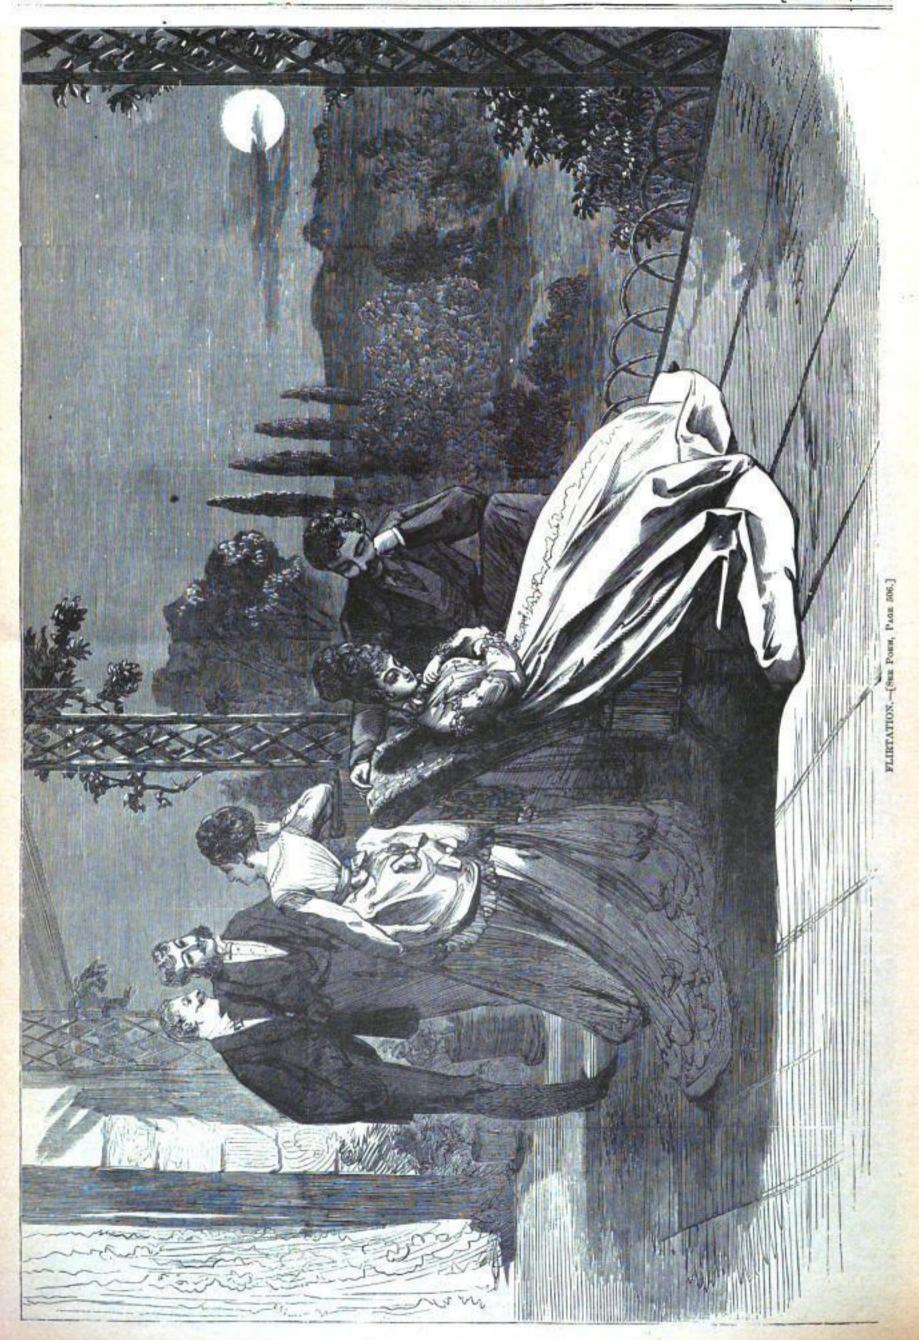

"Why, Sambo, how black you are I" said a pen-tieman the other day to a asgro waiter at a botel. "How in the uame of wouder did you get so black?" "Why, look here, masse, do reason am dis: de day dis chile was born dere was an eclipse."

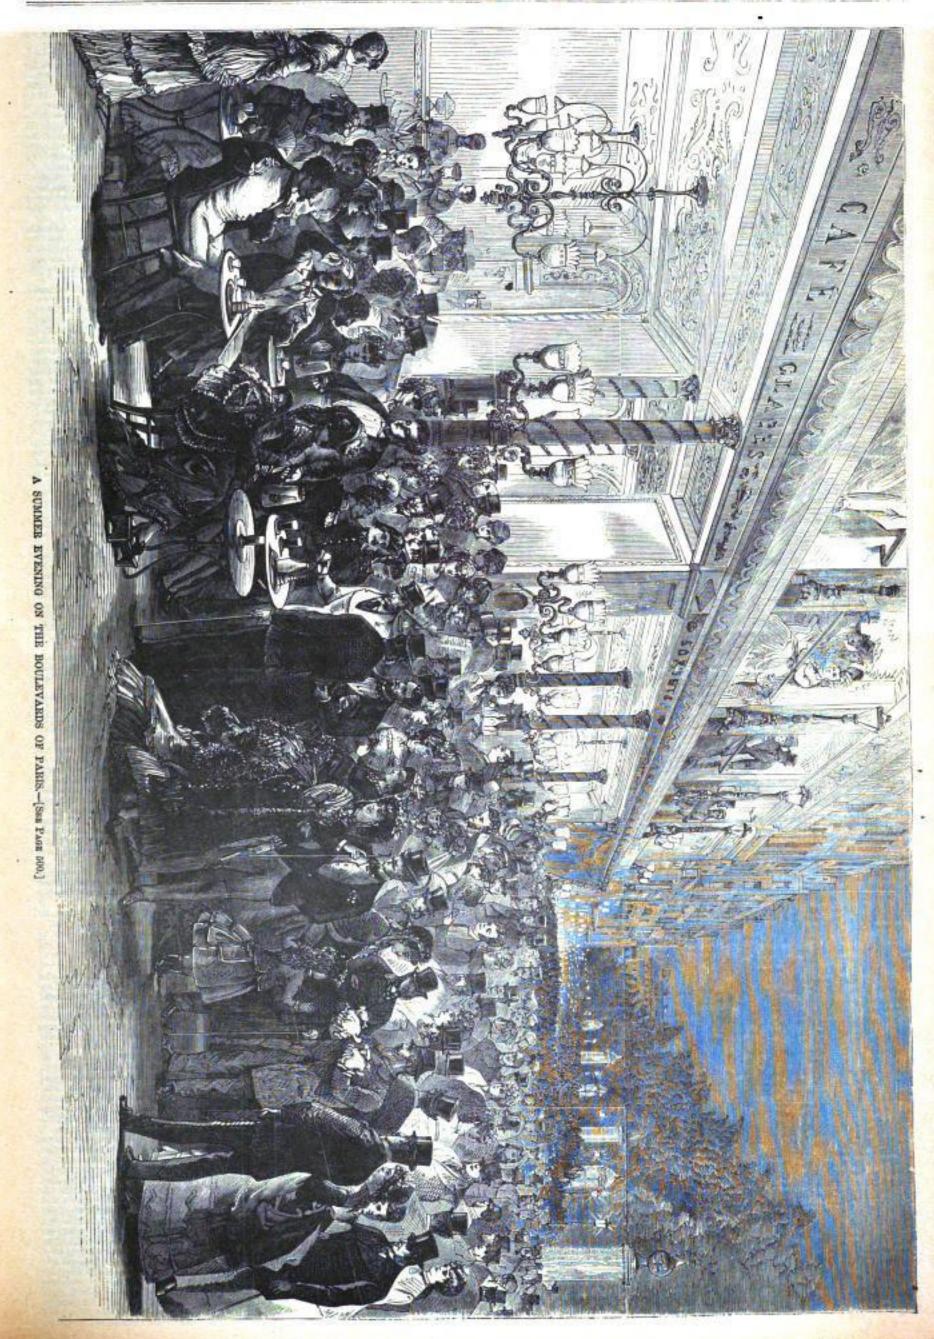

A photographer in Massachusetta was recently vis-lted by a young woman, who, with sweet simplicity, asked: "How long does it take to get a photograph after you leave your measure?"

A hope missionary was asked the cause of his pov-erty. "Principally," said he, with a twinkle of the eye, "because I have presched so much without note."

"Bo you believe in the appearance of spirits, fa-ther !" saked a rather fast young man of his indoi-gent size. "No, Tom, but I believe in their disap-pearance, since I missed my bottle of Bourbon last night," replied the old gentleman.

A Queen loss or Justice.—A blacksmith of a village in Spain neurolecod a man, and was condemned to be hanged. The chief peasants of the place joined together, and begred the alcales that the blacksmith might not suffer, because he was necessary to the place, which could not do without a blacksmith to shoe horses, mend wheels, etc. "But," and the alcales, "how can I fulfill justice?" A laborer answered, "Sir, there are two weavers in the village, and for so small a place one is enough; hang the other."

FLIRTATION. See Illustration on page 504,

FLIRTATION Is a very pretty art: And, on a pleasant summer afternoon, What's nicer than, from others far apart, To utter love's low tune !

Or in a mounlit balcony to talk Delicious nonsense insignificant, While no welrd phantoms of the future stalk,

And amorous bosoms pant? III.

Pleasant but wrong. At least there are some children Whom the delightful, difficult process huris; They find the practice of the art bewildering.... For there are fiirts—and flirts.

Elderly girls there are, and widowe clever, Endowed with every gift save youth's soft charm, Who very willingly would firt forever, Who can not come to harm.

And let us warn the exquisite young creatures, Fresh from their strawberries and cream, and fun, That, when they firt with fools of whiskered features, Often some harm is done.

The innocent child meets with some idlot splendid.
Who makes her warm white bosom paintate—
But with the evening's talk the thing is ended,

And she is left to fate

The empty-headed blockhead finds his victim In shafowy balcony under summer's moon: I wish her brother had been there, and kicked him Into this week's carteon.

SO RUNS THE WORLD AWAY.

CHAPTER XXXII.

HE WOULD AND HE WOULD NOT.

"Wino was that talking to you at the door?" Moore said, with a sudden flash of recollection of some indistinct nurmur which had seemed to come from the porch. "Was it Donglas? why didn't be come in and say good-night?"

The old man's utterance was so confused now that it required a practiced ear to understand his meaning. Azalea's intelligence was aided by her consciousness. "It wasn't Mr. Douglas," she stammered.

"It should have been Douglas," Moore mann-dered; "who else should walk so late with you?"

"It was Captain Mowbray," she explained;
"you know who he is, daddy, don't you?"

Moore shook his head and looked at her fixedly; then his eyes and his thoughts wandered mewhere into the dim realms of imperfect

"What is is? what is vexing you, daddy?" the girl asked, caressing his hand. He touched her hair softly, and said, "It's like Mary's."

Mary was his dead wife, long since forgotten by all excepting him, and even he only remem-bered her by fits and starts. Presently his thoughts reverted to his first question.

"I'm sure I heard some one whispering; why don't you tell me who it was, Azalea? It's dreadful to hear things and not know what you're hearing."

"It was Captain Mowbray and myself," Azalea said, distressed at his manner, which seemed to be more than usually confused.

"I don't like it—I don't like it—harm will come of it. I shall see him, Azalea; you must ask him to come to me. I shall tell him to go saway." Not observing how blank the girl's face grew at this suggestion, he went on: "I shall be happy then, dear; I'm so afraid he might harm you, and I'm not strong enough to help you." He cried a little as he lifted his hands you." He cried a man feebly in illustration of his weakness.

The next morning Douglas came once more to Auriel. He had kept away two or three days, and Azalea, though she commented on his absence, scarcely regretted it; he had become so stern, almost savage, in his manner, so abrupt and bit-ter that, without seeking to account to herself for his conduct, she shrank from him, and the face of the younger man seemed brighter and more goodly in her sight when contrasted with the other's fierce gray eyes and frowning brow. On this morning Douglas did not linger with Moore, his habit ere seeking Azalea; he inquired for her at once, and hearing fro guired for her at once, and hearing from old Sally that "Miss had gone to the apple-loft," he followed her thither.

"I am come to bid you good-by," he said.

abruptly.

Azalea was indemnifying herself for her pre-vious fast by a raid on her favorite fruit. Wit a half-eaten apple in one hand, with the other upholding an apronful of the apple's compatri-ots, she sat in the doorway of the loft, her feet resting on one of the upper bars of the ladder. her hair blown in the wind and bright with sunlight.

"I am going away"—he paused—"for some

Such a yearning, wistful face it was that was upturued to here.

"Going away!" she echoed; "and what will poor daddy do without you?" He lowered his face that she might not see his visible disappointment.

"I shall be back as soon as possible," he said, presently.

"You must tell Moore so, and explain to him the cause of my absence; I have no time to do so myself. There is a man whom I once knew—a comrade in my old hap-hazard life at the Cape; when I last saw him he was a model of manhood, tall, strong, gay, and com-bative: he is dying in an attic in London. He begged his way to this country to seek a relative, and has found a blank instead. His brother was dead; and now I am the only person in this country to whom he is not an utter stranger." He held out his hand and grasped hers; as he looked at her the pain of his impending depart-ure seemed intolerable. It was all he could do to restrain himself from taking her in his arms and crying, "Love me; for pity's sake give me back a grain for my all!" As he lingered a foot-step broke the silence, and Azalea, looking up with a vivid flush on her face, withdrew every thought from Douglas, his intended journey, and its object, and was conscious only that the deli-cious new emotion in her life was before her, personified by the handsome, smiling young man, who seemed in such perfect accord with the bright beauty of the morning.

Douglas looked at the pair in silence for a moment; then releasing Azalea's hand and nodding to Mowbray, he turned to go.
"Hallo! where are you off to?" Thurstan said, pleasantly.

"I am going to town, and am on my way to the station. Will you come a few steps with me?" Douglas answered, after a short pause.

"Delighted! Miss Moore, I'll be back directly, and have a go in at the apples."

The elder man moody and preoccupied, the younger one cheerful and unconcerned, went a few yards without speaking—Thurstan whistling tew yards without speaking—Thurstan whistling a tune and swinging his cane. When they had arrived at the end of the avenue Douglas stopped. "Mowbray," he said, shruptly, "you were once kind enough to say you'd do any thing for me that lay in your power."

"So I would, old fellow," the other answered,

Douglas hesitated, then, without looking at his companion, said, slowly:

"I wish you would hunt more, and look at books and pictures less; pursuing a fox is a bet-ter day's work than hunting down a soul. Azalea is alone, and unprotected. Hitherto she has known neither evil nor unhappiness. Promise me, Mowbray, that you will not harm a thing so defenseless. There are plenty of women in the modern Babylon, yonder, whom you can scarce-ly injure by your attentions. Honor this one by your neglect,"

"I mean her no harm," Thurstan said, reflectively.

"You mean her no harm!" Douglas echoed, hitterly. "I dare say not. People who mean no harm are the accomplices in every crime. What does it matter what the intention was, when the result is a life destroyed or a soul warped? Leave these evil tricks to women, Mowbray. Men should be above treachery. Let this girl be. She and her old father are the only friends I have on earth."

"I wish you wouldn't come down on a fellow so sharp," Captain Mowbray said, uncomforta-bly, "I not only don't mean, but won't do any harm; will that consent you? I am going to town shortly for a few days, and I will take that opportunity of slackening the intimacy a little. Let her down easy, in fact."
"You be d-d," muttered Douglas under his

"Eh, what did you say?" asked his unconscious companion.

"I only wished to know when you were going?"
"Very soon; the fact is, Lady Di is in town,

"What!" cried Douglas, in a tone of mingled seon and wonder; "do you mean to say that cheat has still any delusion for you?"

"Did not Samson find Delilah lovely even to the third treachery?" the younger man said, smiling. Then, with a change of manner, he took Douglas's hand.

"I will lay to heart what you have said. I confess it won't be easy; but I know it's best for her—and I owe you something. You may be easy in your mind. I give you my word Azalen shall meet no dishoorable treatment at my hands. After I have gone a week she will probably forget my existence. Good-by." How she would hate me," thou

"How she would hate me," thought Douglas, as he turned his steps toward the high-road, "did she know that mine was the hand to break down the web!"

Yet his heart felt lighter than it had done for many days past. Love and selfishness are in-compatible. Reason said, "It is for her sake." His heart confessed, "It is for mine."

Meanwhile Captain Mowbray returned to the apple-house, where Azalea was still perched high up against the ivied wall. For a while he was silent and passive, and stood at the foot of the ladder, meditatively pulling his mustache. Then he looked up at the girl and sighed; much such a sigh as a child might give put on his parole not to touch forbidden dainties. She looked prettier than usual, he thought. But what pleasre does not seem at its sweetest when it must perforce be resigned?

There was a pretty girl who, he felt sure, loved him (men "feel sure" on these subjects much him (men "feel sure" on these subjects much somer than women do, although we are accred-ited with the greater share of Vanity), and he would like very much to take her in his arms, and say how "awfully foud he was of her," and now he had as good as promised he was of now he had as good as promised he would throw her over. How on earth was he to explain his change of manner? It was only yesterday he had said he loved her, and now he was going away, to leave her for good and all—and he had never had that kiss! He went a few steps up the ladder, and asked her to throw him some had said he loved her, and now

She held out a basketful, and the contact of her bare, round arms with his sleeve brought him yet a few steps nearer to her. He had found it difficult to retain his coldness of man-ner when he was at the foot of the ladder; now ner when he was at the foot of the ladder; now the difficulty apparently became impossibility; for when he found himself opposite the lovely face he suddenly flung down the apples, and, forgetting all his resolutions, kissed her. Azalea was struck motionless, and on her was the hush of a great shame; but when her lover lowered his face in her hands (for at the tender touch of her ioneart lies his balders water touch of her innocent lips his boldness melted into a softer feeling), and craved pardon for his offense—when he said that he loved her—that she must forgive him—that he was a d—d goodfor-nothing scoundrel—that he must leave her, it was best so—but he loved her dearly—and might he kiss once more before he said good by for good and all?—when he poured out all this with a sort of rough eloquence, Azalea only par-tially understood his meaning. She did not com-prehend the vague self-accusation, or the shad-owy allosions to his departure. She heard dis-tinctly, "I love you.—I love you." And then the sense of shame gave place to another feeling impossible to analyze. It was joy—shy like a child's, but intense as a woman's. A joy so in-effably sweet in its mysteriousness, so vivid in its quality, that she would fain have put out her hands and stopped this golden hour in its prog-ress. Why did not the bird stay its flight; the leaf rest on the bough; the insect hang motion-less in mid-air? Why did not all Nature pairse in sympathy with the charm by which she was spell-bound? with a sort of rough eloquence, Azalea only parspell-bound?

What could have been expected of this creatre, who was little better than a dryad, than that she should sit motionless in the autumn haze, and think that all the world should turn to gold like the beech, and hold its big breath with her

Captain Mowbeny took a more practical and ordinary view of what was to him a not uncommon event.

"What a fool I am!" he said to himself, ruefully, as he walked back to Holme that after-noon. "I might have known I shouldn't keep my word. But what a charming little mouth it is! Who could injure such a pretty child? The devil of it is that I've promised to go there

CHAPTER XXXIII.

AZALEA.

WHILE the two in the sunshine outside parleyed with love, George Moore was communing with death. When Azalea left her foster-father in the morning he was lying on his sofs, more than usually well and cheerful, watching with interest the eccentric motions of a kitten, beating time with his fingers when the clock chimed, and mumbling various directions to old Sally, who rejoiced in Master Moore's asperity, taking it as a sign that he I must be feeling better,

The change came suddenly at last, Azalea returned to his presence she said, with a sudden pang of disquietude:

"I don't think he seems so well as usual,

Sally; do you?"

And Sally, better accustomed to symptoms of disease, shook her head.

"I have made bold to send the little boy who brought the milk to the doctor's to ask him if he can't step this way presently. According to my thinking, Miss Azales, Maister Moore won't trouble us long."

The old woman meant no unkindness. She only spoke after the manner of her class. only spoke after the manner of ner class. To the poor, who have to grapple with life as with an enemy, death does not wear so harsh an as-pect as he does to earth's more pampered chil-dren; but her words sounded horrible to Asalea. With a face bleached of all its glow, and an ex-pression of anguish about her quivering mouth, she flung herself down in a heap by the old man's state.

"Are you feeling ill, father?" she cried; "speak to me, just once." And while, with passionate iteration, she bescught for the comfort of a familiar sone which might ease her sick terror, George Moore looked vacantly at the clock and answered not a word.

The doctor shook his head when he saw his estient's state; and he told them frankly that the old man would not live many hours longer —perhaps not more than twelve. He gave them perhaps not more than twelve. He gave them a few simple directions, the gist of them being at the patient was to be as li possible.

"You can do nothing?"

Azalea repeated the words mechanically, as she sat and stared at the dear face which was so soon to be-What? She scarcely knew. Something which would transfigure the familiar lineaments into awfulness

All through the night George Moore lay motionless, turning upward eyes which seemed to reflect a deeper awe than that of the solemn shadows they gazed on. It was not until dawn that he spoke. Then he muttered, Azalea!

She was at his side in an instant, and was in time to receive the only beritage he could be-quenth her. Even as he looked a blessing on her pale face, the priceless guerdon of endless peace was granted to his own.

Later in the day Captain Mowbray stood in the Auriel conservatory, wondering greatly why Azalea did not meet him as usual. He had come straight to this, their usual trysting-place, and had not heard of the tragedy which had been enacted in one of the chambers of the desolate house. Auriel was ordinarily so silent that even death could not intensify its calm.

Thurstan paced the dull red flags impatiently; but yesterday he had decided to relinquish the temptation of this girl's presence, and now it irked him that his temptation should not fall in his way so soon by ten minutes as he had ex-pected. He had not decided on his plans for the future; he thought he should have to part from her very soon. He intended no evil, he would not act unfairly to her; but it would be brutal to leave her without an explanation and another kiss. Captain Mowbray suffered from the not uncommon delusion that kindness of manner palliates the motive which pains; but who cares how the knife is fashioned that gives the stab which murders? If he vacillated as to what course he should pursue in the future, he was quite certain that he craved her presence now; and he paced the dull red flags impatient-ly, and twitched spitefully at the weltered leaves that trembled with decay on the twisted vineboughs overhead.

When at last Thurstan heard a light step rustle the dead leaves which the rain had clammed together on the threshold his face brightened, and he moved forward quickly, with his hands out-stretched, and then he stopped, checked by the unwented look in the girl's face.

"What is it? what has happened?" Thurstan said, anxiously.

Then, dombly, like an animal which, by the distress in its eyes, draws its master to the spot where its offspring lies hars, the girl led her lover toward the chamber of death. And when Cap-tain Mowheny learned what had happened, and found himself confronted by the unseeing scrutiny of the dead man's gaze; when he realized that, it the whole wide world, this desolate girl had no one but himself on whom to depend protectic. and love, every latent good quality he possessed cross to champion her cause; he could think no wrong to that helpless creature who, after one look of despair at the motionless form on the bed, came to his arms for comfort in her dire agony—for shelter from the nameless terror which was conversion her. The ways was felt which was oppressing her. The young man felt his own face grow hot with tears as he strove to carees away the misery in hers.

"Hush, my darling, hush; don't cry so. I will take care of you...I will love you all my life. Kiss me, Azalea, and be comforted."

Idle words, but none the less honestly meant at the time. That night, when Captain Mow-bray held his last interview with the dead, the oray feed his last interview with the dead, the gentleman made a compact with the peasant now ennobled forever by the hand of God.

George Moore dead shielded Analea even more effectually than he could have done living.
The dumb lips pleaded her cause with all the eloquence of powerlessness. The strangely lustrous eyes reflected Captain Mowbray's conmistree in their light and enterested reserve. science in their light, and entreated mercy for the friendless survivor who had been so dear to the corpse while it was man.

"I will marry her," Captain Mowbray said,
in answer to the ellent interrogation of the dead.
"Please God, I'll take good care of her and "Whatever will Miss Analea do," old Sally said, as the young man placed Azalea in her charge ere he left Auriel that night, "and what will become of me? Muster Moore was as good as five shillings a week to me."

"Take good care of her, and I'll see that you are well paid," Thurstan said, hastily. Then he kissed Azalea's cold cheek and whispered that he would be with her early in the morning.

Thurstan smoked cigarettes with more than usual rapidity in his homeward walk to-night, a symptom with him of mental perturbation.
"Yes," he mused, "I must marry her, I suppose; there is nothing else to be done that I can see; but I must keep it quiet or there'll be a devil of a row with my father and with my cred-

Then he thought of Lady Di, and sighed. The face of an old love is never so vivid in our memory as when its place is about to be usurped by a new one.

"But, after all, this one is far younger, far prettier, and far fonder of me."

CHAPTER XXXIV. WEDDED.

WHEN George Moore was buried, when that solemn presence had passed away from the house, Captain Mowbray breathed more freely, and moved with a gayer step. When he ap-proached the Auriel portals it was a relief to him to think, when he looked up at the windows, that the little bedchamber was no longer tenanted by that soulless effigy of life. Captain Mowbray would fain have treated death as an ill-bred ac quaintance; he would look another way if he met him, he would cut him when possible, ignore his presence on every occasion, and feel more in-jured than shocked when he saw the clownish fellow seize a gentleman's hand, whether the latter willed it or no, and lead him away into the shadows among all sorts of queer company.

The village paster, an eccentric and accomplished man, who occasionally addressed eloquent homilies to himself (at least he was, as a rule, the only member of his congregation capa-ble of understanding any part of his sermon ex-cept the concluding blessing), took an unfair adcept the concluding blessing), took an unfair advantage of Captain Mowbray in the funeral sermon, which was preached the Sunday succeeding old Moore's burial. Thurstan had setself for a comfortable nap; he had assumed that air of profound attention which is the preface to somnoient oblivion; he had lowered his eyes from Azalea's tear-stained face, and was his eyes from Analea's tear-stained ince, and was concentrating his gaze on his boots, when the concluding words of the preacher rang from the pulpit with the solemnity of a storm-bell, whose breath is resonant of shipwreck. He besought his hearers not to walk backward toward the dark road which is the halting-place of all the nations-not to be beguiled by a vain security nations—not to be beguiled by a vain security into forgetting that grim jailer who will, sconer or later, fetter peasant and peer alike in gyves which no mortal hand may unlink.

"Look you, friends, be careful to amend ere the light stiffens in your eyes—ere the poor guilty heart is pulseless, and the lipe vacant forever of their living tenant, the voice—ere you are a carcass for worms to eat and earth to cover as an unsightly object. Make your peace if ye may. Do not barter all for a small part, lest you in the last hour be seized with a pang keener than all life's pleasures were sweet. Infinite hope has been born within us; assuredly infinite mercy will be its reward if we only seek it ere it is too late."

That evening, when Thurstan sought Azalea,

It ere it is too late."

That evening, when Thurstan sought Azalea, he found her writing a letter, on which her tears fell fast. For the first time since this grief had come to her she was constrained to put it into verbal shape. She was telling Robert Douglas that her dear father was dead; and as she traced the letters which recalled to her that nevermore at dawn of sun or shut of eve would she receive greeting from that beloved face—that nevermore, whether in blaze of June or gray of win-ter, would be note with her the full-orbed peonies blush midst the grasses of the lawn, or the rose-trees blacken under the grip of frost—now as she realized all this, the more keenly, perhaps, be-cause the first dumb horror of her anguish was cause one area dome norror of her anguish was passing away, leaving her a prey to vivid mem-ories and tender regrets, Azalea felt that to gain back one blessed hour of her foster-father's com-panionship she would willingly endure the bitterest penance that fate could device. As she sat in the dim shadows of the saloon her wan cheeks and fair hair accorded well with the pale desolation of that faded chamber. Thurstan half started at her waird appearance; in the blur of the half-light she was as undefined as any other

"Don't sit so still," he said, hastily; "yo might as well be one of those creepy ghosts who are supposed to be partial to late hours and dark corners. I should prefer a sunshine myself, if I'd come up from underground. What are you doing?"

"I am writing to Robert," she said, sadly,
"to tell him—all about it, you know; I ought to have written before, but I forgot."
Thurstan put his hand caressingly round her

Thurstan put his hand caressingly round her throat; the touch of warm flesh and blood put all spectral horrors out of his head.

"My darling," he whispered, "I want you to tell Douglas something else; I want you to say that you have promised to be mine—that you will be my wife as soon as possible. Will you say this, Azales?—or stop! I had better write it myself."

Keeping one arm still about her he selzed a pen

Keeping one arm still about her he seized a pen with his disengaged hand, and, under the min-gled influence of generosity and passion, wrote

"Mr DEAR OLD MAN,-Azelea has told you of her father's death. I can't make up my mind to leave her; and as the peculiarity of her lonely position makes it unfitting that our intimacy should continue on any other terms, I propose to make her my wife at once. I hope this will should continue on any other terms, I propose to make her my wife at once. I hope this will meet with your approbation. If it's all the same to you, I'd just as soon keep my marriage dark for a while, as I shall want a little time to prepare my father and my creditors for this news. I fear they'll be dreadfully cut up. I hope you'll be back soon, so that we may make some plans to the plans they had been a plans. be back soon, so that we may make some plans as to what Azalea had best do when my leave is up; I am awfully fond of her, and I dare say every thing will come square at last. I don't know that I should have made up my mind to settle down so soon, but I remembered your advice when I last saw you, and I also remembered that I owed you a debt of gratitude. If I have in any way repaid it by doing the right thing to your friend, I am satisfed; the more so as it is certainly very joily to have such a receive little. certainly very jolly to have such a pretty little girl so fund of one.

"Yours ever,

Thurstan sealed this letter without showing it to Azalea; he meant to post it at once, but for-got to do so for more than a week; and by the time it arrived at its destination Robert Douglas had departed from London, and was on his road to Auriel again.

He reached his cottage late one night, and let himself in uncheeved. He went straight to his bedchamber and unpacked with jealous care an alabaster figure of Psyche, which the accumulated savings of weeks had enabled him to pur-chase; to achieve this he had been obliged to himself all but the barest nece saries of life. He felt himself quite repaid now as he looked at its pure loveliness, and pictured to himself Axa-lea's delight when she received this addition to

As his heart beat fast with the great joy of his has nearer beat tast with the great by of his nearer proximity to her he forgot how unutter-ably weary had been the lonely hours he had passed by the sick-bed of his dying friend. He put it away from him—the sick longing, the heavy despair which had seemed to weigh him to the dust in the arid desert of that time of ab-He could have sang with the birds, have laughed with the children he passed on the roadeide. Had the stars of heaven been within his reach he would have plucked them from their cloudy setting, and cast them away in mere wantonness of sport. So like a madman is the wisest of men when he is bewitched by the radiant insanity of love.

As yet he knew neither of Moore's death nor of Axalea's marriage. The former was dumb, deaf, and blind in yonder church-yard. And the girl—the final hope, the final joy, the one late blossom of Douglas's sterile heart—was sleeping with her head pillowed on her young husband's breast, comforted for her sorrow, and believing that fate could bring her no further woe now that the shield of his love would be evermore about her.

> CHAPTER XXXV. FIRE.

It was night—the night of Douglas's return ome—and Auriel was still as a sepulchre. It was the dumbest, darkest hour of the night, when a red tongue of fiame made a sudden fiash of light through the dark shadow of the wainscot at the foot of the old oak staircase. A smoul-dering beam which had long been threatening mischief behind the panels broke into glaring fury.

While death, the death of suffocation or of scorching agony, was rushing toward them, the pair in the bedchamber slept on, all uncon-The girl was the first to awake; sh smoon. The girl was the first to awake; she awake with a horrible feeling of stiffing, as if some one were gagging her; then she stared round with dazed eyes, and realized that death was in the room with her and with her lover.

"Thurstan," she moaned, "oh, Thurstan."

Then her terror found fuller voice, and she grasped him by the arm, crying:

"Wake up, Thurstan, wake up!"
She did not speak very loudly, but something in the desperate concentration of her tone stirred

What's the row?" He was wide awake now, sitting up like one fearing the sudden attack of a foe, yet uncertain as to what quarter the stroke came from. A hot roll of smoke curling in under the door made him roll of smoke carling in under the door made him-comprehend the nature of the danger. In an in-stant he was at the door, and, opening it cau-tiously, looked outside into a blackened gulf in place of a landing. Then he closed it, shaking his head, and went quickly to the window and threw it open. The ivy leaves which fringed the casement were steeped in dew and moonlight, the sweet cool breath of night poured its halm into the awe-stricken eyes of the pair.

Anales drooped one white arm in the forest of Azalea dropped one white arm in the forest of leaves, then pulled it back, shaking her head. "You see," she mattered under her breath, as if fearing lest the red, furious enemy without should hear and punish her speech, "it wouldn't hold any thing heavier than a bird."

She held in her hand a crooked stem of ivy, graced by a trail of foliage. Thurstan looked at it critically. "It won't hold, but it may aid," he said, briefly. "Let us see." He pulled off the blankets and counterpane, and by his voice and self-possessed manner steadied the girl's trembling hands while she as-steaded the girl's trembing hands while she as-sisted him to knot them together.

"It is still nearly twenty feet from the ground," Thursten said, when the string of blankets had been let down as far as it would go. "What's to be done now?'

to be done now?"

What was to be done? Their eyes began to smart, the girl's face grew more hopeless; there was yet, however, no sign of resignation in Thurstan's face; manhood in its prime of warm blood, an a tace; mannoou in its prime of warm 5500d, fair looks, and eager desires, will not lightly resign the mysterious gift of vitality; he would fight for life inch by inch, he swore in his pride; but when he looked at the girl by his side a softer impulse took possession of him, and, with the reverence of doubt, he added: Please God.

He drew up the blankets again, and folding ne round her, hade her sit quiet on the bed. Then he made another effort at the door; he could see nothing now, not even the shadow of the chasm formed by the falling in of the land-ing-place. The smoke blinded and stifled him. The opposite wall was invisible; so were the mel-low-hued paintings which had adorned its side.

She was conscious that this awful moment might be shadowed by a yet greater despair.
"Together, love, together," she muttered.
"Let us be together, whatever comes."

"It doesn't matter," he said, sadly. "This chance is gone. Look!" The flames had caught hold of the shelf at the opposite end, and were leaping toward them with ferocious gayety. A fresh cloud of smoke made them recoil behind the shelter of the door. Then Thurston cloud. the shelter of the door. Then Thurstan closed it gently, as one who lets fall a coffin lid over a dead face, and bore the girl back to her couch.

Through the open casement came hints of the quiet night. A distant church-bell toiled the hour to its motionless congregation under the turf. Meadows pale gold in the moonlight, long glooms under the elms, sweet dewy airs, the fitful shadow of a bat crossing the moon's face—such was the scene without. Almost all the innocent lives that haunt the air were stilled Almost all in that doep repose; no restless wings fintered the leaves. Only the sleepy crock of a raven answered the preaching of the church-bell.

Captain Mowbray was still too reliant on the vigor of his health and strength to relinquish hope. Die! of course they should not die! True, their best chance was gone; but death was not meant for such as they. He tried the door again, but the outside gulf was wider, the danger imminent than ever.

He palled the rusty wire of the bell violently, in hopes of attracting the attention of the old crone below. He went to the window and shouted until he was hoarse.

He speculated on every possible and impossi-ble mode of escape. He tried to crush in the panels of the wall which divided their room from the saloon; but the tough oak resisted his efforts. He tore up the old carpet into strips and tried to lengthen the ladder of blankets which he had projected. It was not until every effort had ended in frustration that Captain Mowbray began to wonder whether it was of any use repenting of his sins.

He went and eat down by the girl's side, and for a while they spoke no words. Then he broke the silence.

this death, Azalea?"
"Yes," she said, mechanically, "this

Yes,

death."
"It's very hard," he cried, savagely. "I am none toe good; but oh, my little darling, what have you done to deserve such an end?"
"It might be the harder to bear," she said, in the hushed, awed voice in which she had spoken ever since she had become conscious of their

"I don't see how," he answered, gloomily.
"To be burned away to nothing like two help-less idiotic moths, ugh!"
"We are together," she said, simply; and there and then they clung to each other, and were again silent,

Then a reckless mood took possession of Mowbeny.

"What's the use of my playing the saint now, at the last moment, when I've lived as a sinner all my life?" be cried. "What's the use of my all my life?" he cried. "What's the use of my begging pardon now, like a school-boy repenting in sight of the rod? I have lived what men call a 'fast,' and God calls a bad life. I have rarely thought of sacred things except to take their names in vain. My whole life has been for myself. I have given nothing to my God; what should my God give me?"
"Mercy," whispered the girl, clinging tighter to him; "mercy and forgiveness. His forgiveness is not to be measured by man's. It extends to millions, and is infinite. Even at the last moment all that He saks is faith and recentance.

ment all that He asks is faith and repentance.
Oh, my darling! my darling! let us at least pray that we may not be parted for all eternity."

"It's no use, my dear. A man is judged by his life, not by his death. Should I grovel from fear where I did not kneel for love? After all, 'tis but to go to sleep!" He averted his face from her, and broke into a low song, something about meeting death boldly, and fearing neither

His gay tone sounded more ghastly to Azalea's ar than the saddest wail would have done.

"Don't!" she said, piteously.

Then she clasped her hands on his shoulder,

nd prayed:
"Our Father which art in heaven: "Hark!" interrupted Thurstan; "do you hear that?" It was the sound of a beam falling outside.

"Hallowed be thy name," she continued, never relaxing the intentness of her eyes and "The kingdom come. Thy will be done in tone. "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven." Then her voice some-what failed her. A feeling of suffocation choked her accents; but she looked at Thurstan so earnestly that he was fain to finish the prayer for her. It came to his lips mechanically—he had not uttered it since he was a little boy at his nurse's knee, but the sound of it brought a strange sense of comfort to him. She echoed his "Amon" feebly; her head dropped on his shoulder.

"Kiss me, Thurstan; it may be the last, the very last."
He joined his lips to here, and took her in his arms; they said no more; that kiss was their farewell. And, with calmness born of despair, the two clung together as though each would shield the other from the impending horror.

It was about this time that Douglas walked to the window of his bedroom, to look, with a giance which was a strange mixture of passion and rev-erence, a blessing on Azalea's home. Was that mist rising over the Auriel woods? Surely no mist was ever so concentrated over one particu-lar group of firs? Presently the mist rolled away, and was succeeded by a red light, which wavered like a vast torch flared by the wind.

In one brief instant the love in his eyes changed to supor; then a spasm of unutterable anguish convulsed his face.

"My love! my love! oh my God! Azslea!"
To fling off his coat, so that he might run dis-temberated to success the inwates of a neighembarrassed to arouse the inmates of a neighboring cottage, and dispatch them to the village for assistance, was the work of a second.

With a mighty effort he forced his voice into an intelligible order. "Tell them to bring up ladders directly, and send man and horse to ladders directly, and send man and horse to W—— for the engine. Tell them it is life or death. Auriel is on fire!" The astounded cot-tager gaped and queried, but the face, pale as ashes, had flashed past the casement; this ap-parision in the night had pointed its hand toward the red stain in the sky, like a scared spirit indi-cating the awful light of hell, and then had dis-appeared in the miss of distance. appeared in the mist of distance.

Through dewy meadows which seemed heavy with stiffing wind, through thick grass which cumbered the striving feet, over shining roads, through cruel bars made by hedgerows, Robert Douglas ran, his eyes maddened by that terrible light. The mist seemed to cling to him like a winding-sheet; his heart was a burden of stone; yet he did not relax his desperate speed; some-thing within him sustained laboring breath and failing limbs.

more shadowy group of trees left behind On him, and then he leaped rather than ran round the last curve of the path, and Auriel was before him. There was no sign of life about the place where a few half-stupefied birds flew out of the ivy; no symptom of any effort to escape on the part of its inhabitants; either they slept in the part of its inhabitants; either they slept in unconsciousness, or death had deepened sleep. Douglas tried to call, but his lips refused to make any sound; he tried the doors, but they were securely fastened.

He beat his were securely fastened.

He beat his hand and arms against the panels: but they were oak, made strong with nails, which braised his flesh, and against which he could make no impression; then, with the yell of a wild beast, he fied to where he remembered to have seen a tall ladder lying against the ivied wall.

Around this ladder Douglas twined his arms,

"It's very horrible," he said, shivering. "Is | and with an effort-for his strength was wellnigh spent, and the ladder was heavy—dragged it under the window of Azalea's bedchamber. For one brief second he drooped his face against the bars, crying in his heart:

"Help me, O God, lest I fail!"
Then he lifted up his brow, on which the swellen veins stood out like heavy wales, thrust out his arms, and ran up the steps, crying, in a hoarse voice:

"Azəles, child, I am coming to you!"

In another moment he stood in the open case-ment, then recied forward toward the bed, then recoiled, and stood dumb and motionless. On the couch before him were two persons—a girl and a man. Their arms were about each other; the girl's head rested on the man's shoulder; her lips were half open, as though she were still com-muning with heaven; her eyes, lifted up in a sort of stapor, neither saw nor heeded Douglas. her arms.

Douglas drew back as though he had been ruck on the face. "Shall she die?" he mutstruck on the face. "Shall she die?" h tered; "shall I leave her where she is?"

Then he looked at the little fact hanging like two snow-flakes over Mowlerny's knees, and pic-tured them as they might be presently, scorched by the cruel flames.

"I will save her!" he panted; "she shall not be touched! she shall live! but as to

He looked at Mowbray with a glance of inexpressible atersion.

"This smoke will soon kill him," he thought;
"he will be dead—dead "

He repeated the word with vindictive satisfaction. faction. Meanwhile the roar of fiames grew louder, and a portion of the wall near the door fell in. Then a sadden impulse—an impulse born of something greater than human passion—thrilled the miserable wretch who was the only conscious spectator of this strange scene.

"Awake!" he thundered. "Fool! are you going to die like a rat in a hole?" He seized a jug of water and dashed it against the young man's face; then dragged him to the window and left him there, the night-air blowing

Meanwhile the alarm of fire had aroused the sleeping country. From homestead to home-stead, from peaceful hamlets to towns where stead, from peaceful hamiets to towns where vice keeps vigil, the cry of alarm had passed on with the rapidity of a malign rumor. The quiet lanes round Auriel echoed to the gallop of horses, the flower-beds were trampied down by an excited crowd, a roar of voices began to mingle with the roar of fismes, cries of warning and encouragement arose in all directions; presently the crowd, which had surged by to the walls like a disorderly attacking army, paused to serve a strange spectacle.

They saw a man descending the ladder placed against the north tower with a burden over his shoulder. A fair, helpless, half-dead looking thing, whose hair fell around him in a shower of gold; it had white limbs which drooped heavily by its side, and which afforded no sort of aseistance to this perilous descent.

"It's a woman!" cried those below. "Hurrah! he's saved her!"

No, she's dead."

"Not she—only faint,"
"Seemly the ladder; don't you see it's nearly weer?"

Amidst cheers and exclamations, with a sea Anidst cheers and exclamations, with a senof pale wondering faces turned up toward him watching his progress with intense excitement, the man on the ladder came down rapidly and gave the form he carried into their arms; then, before question could be asked, he reascended the steps and disappeared into the cloud of smoke issuing from the casement.

When he was resided he was blackened.

When he was next visible he was blackened, scorehed, blistered. His hair and eyebrows were singed and his face was undistinguishable. He called out:

"There is a man here; some one of you come and take him. I can not bring him further." Instantly a dozen hands steadied the ladder.

Two men ran up the steps and assisted each other in bringing down the helpless figure of Thursan Mowbray.

They laid him on the grass and made a space round him. The girl, who had partially recovered her senses, crawled to his side and bent Her first con him, as had been her last.

She trembled violently when she realized what had been his danger.

It was not until be was sufficiently recovered It was not until be was sufficiently recovered to stagger up from his recumbent position that, following has movement with eyes still jenious with fear, she happened to glance at that casement through which they had evaded death. Then a great shriek burst from her white lips. "Look, Thurstan!" she cried, "Douglas is there. O God! what is he doing?"

Douglas had waited until Mowbray was safely assessed to the ground-waited grait the last conveyed to the ground—waited until the last man was off the ladder—had watched the move-ment made by the girl below as she dragged her-

And then was it by accident that he gave the ladder a push which hurled it to the ground? ladder a pash which harried it to the ground;
Had he anticipated that from its age it was unsound and would enap in its fall? It did so;
and as the people below hurriedly endeavored to remedy the fracture and shouted to him to keep a good heart, Robert Douglas turned his face away from the stars, the fresh air, and the friendly voices of his kind, and disappeared into the interior of the chamber.

Digitized by Google

M. EUGENE BOUREF.

M. ROUHER.

Excesse Rothern, Senator, late Minister of State, Minister of Finance, Grand Cross of the Legion of Henor, of the Orders of Leopold, the Black Eagle of Prussia, the Oak, St. Maurice and St. Lazarus, etc., is essentially a man of the Second Empire. His Imperialism is purely due to the force of events—family connections or political antecedents have in no way influenced the outset of his career, or determined his high advancement. Indeed, his early political convictions, if he had any—which appears doubtful—seem to have sympathized with Orleanism. Endowed with mental powers of a high order, he sought to enter early upon public life, and, conscious of his aptitude for real work, he resolved, on attaining the first step, to trust to EUGENE ROUMER, Senator, late Minister of solved, on attaining the first step, to trust to circumstances to bear him on to the goal of his ambition.

EUGENE ROUNER was born at Hiom, November 30, 1814. At the age of fourteen he was admitted a student at the Naval School of Angoulème; but, fortunately for him, the revolution of 1830 occurred, and the monarchy of July having suppressed that institution his prospects of a naval career were abandoned. On concluding his collegiate studies at Clermont he was sent to the great School of Law in Paris,

"pour faire son droit," without which no French-man's education is considered complete. After being called to the bar he returned to Riom, where he soon acquired a good practice and con-siderable repute by defending the democratic cause in press prosecutions.

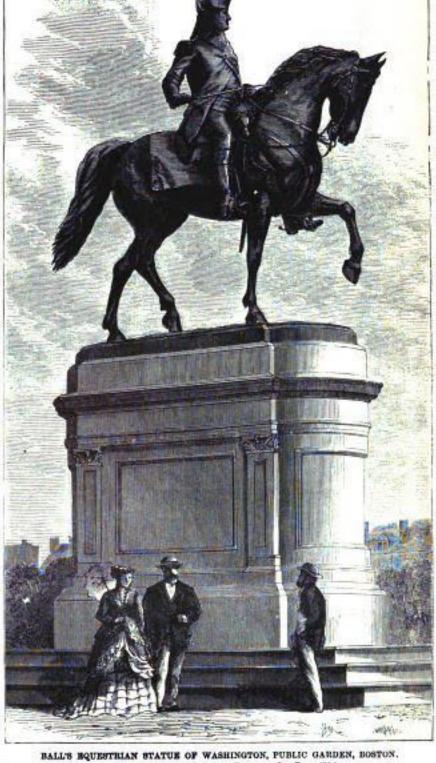

Elected, after the revolution of 1848, a rep-resentative for Le Puy-de-Dome, he favored all measures devised to function the favored all measures devised to frustrate the policy of the "Party of Action."

"Party of Action.

Louis Napoleon, soon after his election to the Presidency, appointed M. Boursen Minister of Justice. From this period Rousen's sptitudes for parliamentary contention were established. He forced through the Chamber the bill known by the name of "Loi do 31 Mai," restricting universal suffrage. He introduced and carried the law limiting the liberty of the press. His name, however, does not appear once in connection with the events of the cosp of that, January 26, 1852, he was appointed Vice-President of the Council of State, and was charged with the administration of the section of Legislation, Justice, and Foreign Affairs. In this new sphere of action his characteristic talents and capacity for work manifested themselves in a conspicuous manner.

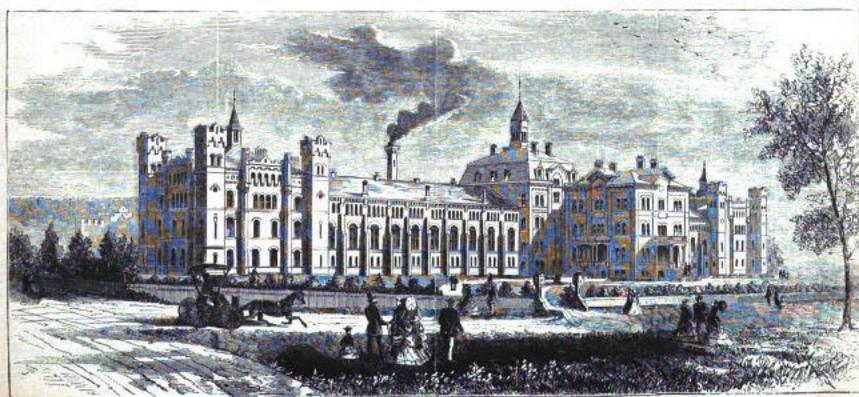

spicuous manner.
M. Rocher was successively President of the Commission of Pensions to aged persons, member of the Commission charged to distribute eight millions of france in execution of the testamentary disposition of the Emperor Navolson, and member of the Commission of the Universal Exposition of 1855. On the 3d of February in that year he accepted the per-folio of Agriculture, Commerce, and Public Works. Under his administration immense reforms have been accomplished, public works and improvements of every kind have been carried out all over the country. By a decree of the 12th of June, 1856, he was raised to the dignity of a Senator. In conjunction with Banocus he negotiated with Mr. Councis the commercial trenty between France and England, which was signed on the 23d of January, 1860. The unexampled impetus given to French trade by the treaty has opened up prospects of prosperity far beyond the most sanguine expectations. Since 1860 he has negotiated the commercial treation of France with Belgium, Prussia, the Zollverein, and Italy, all based on the same enlightened and liberal principles. On the 24th of June, 1863, ROGIER passed from the Ministry of Commerce to the Presidency of the Council of State, to whose functions was added the duty of explaining and defending in the Legislative Chamber, in rescert with the Minister of State, the projects of law and questions of policy submitted to its deliberations. Toward the close of the year be replaced, ad interim, M. Bounar as Minister of the Interior. On the death of M. BILLAULY, ROUMER succeeded him in the Premiership. ROUMER succeeded him in the Fremershap.

PROTOGRAPHED BY J. W. BLACK, BOSTON,-[SEE PAGE 510.]

ALMS-HOUSE, CINCINNATI, OHIO .- [SEE PAGE 510.]

This position he has been recently compelled to resign, owing to the pressure of the Third Party in the Corps Legislatic. He has been called to the Presidency of the French Senste.

M. Roumen may justly be ranked among the great orators who have adorned the deliberative assemblies of France.

THE CINCINNATI ALMS-HOUSE.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, has the largest, the most beautiful, and the most commodious Alms-house in the world. Our engraving on page 509 gives a very fair idea of the architectural beauty of this structure. In this, as in other public buildings recently erected, our Western cities are giving a very suggestive lesson to those in the East,

BALL'S EQUESTRIAN STATUE OF WASHINGTON, BOSTON.

Thus statue, recently crected in the Public Garden of Boston, of which we give on page 509 a faithful representation from a photograph by the eminent artist Mr. J. W. BLACK, had its orlgin in a general desire of Bostonians to have a suitable memorial of Washington by their fellow-citizen Thomas Ball, the sculptor. A committee of prominent gentlemen was appointed, and Mr. Baaa's services secured. This was a little more than ten years ago. Hon. Kowent C. Westman took an active interest in the plan, and initiated the public movement by an address in the Music Hall, in which he expressed the belief that none would have occasion to repent having "set the Bill in motion." Soon afterward a fair was held which added twelve thousand dollars to the find. The city government appropriated ten thousand dollars; a generous amount was contributed from the surplus fund of the Everett statue, and the work was soon placed on a satisfactory basis. The model was completed in 1864, and the custing, in broase, was intrusted to the Ames Manufacturing Compuny, at Chicopee, Massachusetts. The extreme length of the statue is 16 feet, height 16 feet, height of Washington 12 feet, height of plinth 134 feet. The pedestal, which is of Quincy gran-ite, was designed by Hannart Bullings, is 15 feet in length, 74 teet in width, and 14 feet in height. The weight of the statue is 10,600 pounds, and the total cost $42,460. It was un-veiled to the public on the afternoon of July 3, 1869, and was presented to the city by Hon, ALEXASSER H. RICK, Chairman of the Washington Statue Committee, in a brief and appropriate speech, Mayor N. B. SHURTLEFF responding in behalf of the city. It is an orna-ment to the Public Garden, and an honor to

PEARL FISHERY IN THE GULF OF CALIFORNIA.

PRARLS are found in the bay of La Paz, around the little islands at its entrance. The best fishing-ground is between the island of Spirito Santo and the port of Pichilingo, if we can thus style a creek surrounded with a few bamboo huts, which is nevertheless the general rendezvous of the men interested in the pearl fishery for three months in the year, being abandoned the rest of the time to jackals and

The pearl-oyster found in the Gulf of Califorers slightly from that of the Gulf of Ormus nia differs slightly from that of the Gulf of Ormus and the Indian Ocean. The shell, once open, presents two beautiful, almost circular, valves, resembling wings, and lined with a thick, daz-zling, and polished mother-of-pearl, which for-merly gave to the Gulf of California the name of the Vermilion Sea. The animal which has built this magnificent abode differs little at first sight from our d may, be eaten with impunity; it is not, however, agreeable to the taste—raw, it is slimy, bitter, and disgusting; while cooked, it is so hard that it is masticated with difficulty. The fleshy part that adheres to the shell, when thinly sliced and cooked with allspice, is very good eating, but extremely indirectible.

cooked with allspice, is very good eating, but extremely indigestible.

Pearl fishing was commenced in the Gulf of California in 1580, forty-six years after the discovery of the country, by the Jesnita, who discovered the placers and taught the Indians how to dive. From 1580 to 1855, or 275 years, the fishery yielded 1,911,800 cwis. of shells, and 2770 pounds of pearls, worth about $1000 per pound. The average yield during this period has been, therefore, about $50,000 worth of pearls a year. It is necessary to open about seven hundred cwis, of shells to obtain a pound of

The color of the pearl is very variable, and two are rarely found alike. They range from white to black, including every possible variety of tius, but all marked by the changeable reflec-tions of light found in the mother-of-pearl. The most highly prized are spherical in shape; almond, mut, and pear shaped pearls are also very valuable. The rose pearl, a variety only found in the Gulf of California, is always pear shaped.

The best season for pearl fishing is from the middle of May to the middle of August, when the indispensable conditions, viz., no breeze and a dead calm during part of the day, clear weather and a cloudless sky, are usually found in the morning. At two o'clock in the afternoon the northeast wind springs up, and rain often comes on; the evening, therefore, is spent in opening the morning's harvest. the morning's harvest,

Having obtained permission from the Government, which claims one-tifth of the profits, to fish on a certain space, the contractor repairs to Pichilingo, with a vessel laden with provisions clothing, and trinkets, as bribes wherewith to en gage the best divers. The conditions demanded are simple: board during the fishing season, return to their homes at the end thereof, and half the cysters before they are opened. The first few days are spent by the divers in practicing, by diving a little way below the surface and gradu-ally increasing the time of their stay. After three or four trials the diver is master of himself. The average time of remaining under water is two minutes; some few stay three minutes, but never longer. At first the blood gushes from their nose, ears, and even eyes, on reaching the surface, through the compression of blood in the lungs. They use no other remedy than rest and salt-water. These sanguinary emissions soon cease, and those who do not exceed reasonable limits in their stay never bleed again.

At last all is ready: the women are settled in

At last all is ready; the women are settled in huts on the shore, the huts are provisioned, and the divers are inured to their task. The fishery opens with a solemn ceremony. A sorceress ex-orcises the sea, and reminds the sharks of their past misdeeds, adjuring them to behave them-selves in the future, for the sons of her tribe have lungs of steel, a heart of bronze, and an arm of iron.

The divers work in different ways. have a sort of apron with pockets, which holds the oysters and leaves their hands free; others dive naked, and bring up the oysters under their left arm. On the average, a diver seldom brings up more than five or six oysters, and never me than twelve. Some boats have rowers, and others none. Some are moored with an anchor, and others by a stone tied to a rope. Some of the divers go down with a stone, which is drawn up, but the greater part have nothing, either in plunging or rising; a few have a rope passed round their waist and fastened to the boat. In a sea infested with monsters like this, the safest course seems to be to have perfect freedom of movement.

All the divers are armed with a short stick, or estaca, hardened in the fire and pointed at each end. This is their only tool and weapon; they are allowed nothing with which they could open an oyster under water and hide its contents. each boat there is at least one capataz in the stern to watch the oysters, and amother at the bow to warn the fivers of danger. In many there is a sorcerese, generally old, drunken, real ugly, who shricks and raves, and, on the whole, frightens off the sharks by the moise she makes,

Good crews, where there are no novices, are usually divided into two groups, working half an hour in turn. During this half hour the divers on duty merely rest their hands on the edge of the boat, pass their oysters to the capataz, who throws them on their heap, take breath for a moment, and plungs anew into the sea. The less experienced, or those who still bleed, divided into three groups, and rest longer. They always dive fasting from liquids and solids.

On reaching the bottom the diver rapidly detaches the cysters about him with the aid of his estaca, if need be, then rises to the surface, But the opportunities for fraud are numerous. shell giging be quickly opens it by If he sees a introducing the estaca crosswise, and if he finds nothing, comes up with an oyster or two, saying that they were all that he saw. Some who can stay under water three minutes open a shell every time, for the pearl-oyster is easily opened. They time, for the pearl-oyster is easily opened. They are soon suspected by the capatax, who often detects the fraud by finding the end of the estaca notched or broken. The pearls thus abstracted are either swallowed or introduced into the rectum. The first operation is easy; but the pearls are greatly injured by passing through the digestive canal. The second process leaves the pearl all its brilliancy; but it needs extraordinary skill for a diver to open an evitor, extraor nary skill for a diver to open an oyster, extract the pearl, secrete it, and pick up enough oysters not to rise empty-handed, all in two minutes. About noon they return to land. Each man divides his pile into two parts, and gives the contractor his choice, keeping the remaining share. Some sell it on the spot to avoid the trouble and risk of opening, setting on the principle that a bird in the hand is worth two in the bash. The shells belong to the contractor,

There are two ways of opening the oyster: the first consists in doing it immediately with a knife; this is the course employed by contractors who have time and money. The pearls obtained in this way are much more beautiful. The secin this way are much more beautiful. The sec-ond method, employed by the Indians, who keep their shells, is to let them open of themselves by putrefaction. The mollisaks are then torn out one by one, and thrown into a wooden trough; the shells to which a paarl adheres are laid aside, and the whole family, eagerly bending over the trough, sift the miasmatic mass through their fingers. This process generates grave and often mortal diseases. In the fishing season a blind pilot could find his way to the port of Pichi-lingo by the horrible stench which axhales from it.

The Indians who are fortunate enough to find costly pearle waste their money on the spot, and at the end of the season are generally as poor as before. As to the contractors, their expenses are heavy and their risks great; what with their els, crew, and at least sixty divers and their families, whom they have to feed, it is impossible to undertake the business with less than ten thousand dollars; and a man with ten thousand dollars in those countries can find much pleasanter means of investing his capital; the competition, therefore, is very limited.

Attempts have been made at cultivating the pearl-oyster; but where they have been made to live, as in Sweden, the shell has lost its brilliancy, proving that the rays of the tropical sun, which ebod by the oyster, are needed to its radiant tints. In the culture of the pearl-oyster a tropical latitude, a calm san, a special ground, and no interposition of shade between the shells and the sun are needed; and then pearls are only found in cysters seven years

We must say a few words about the monsters which infest the seas, and which, at other times seldom seen in the Gulf of La Paz, swarm there at the pearl-diving season. The sharks are little d; being obliged to turn over before they can seize their prey, the divers, warned by the clam-or from their friends on the boat, have time to escape; or, if attacked, they extend their hand, grasping the estaca, which the shark bites violentby; the hardened wood wounds his jaws, which are very tender, and he lets go his victim with a howl of pain. It is a mistake to suppose that sharks scent sickness on board a ship, and follow in its wake in the expectation of devouring a corpse; a body thrown into the sea is always weighted; and so the shark can not dive, and is obliged to turn over in order to bite, the prey is out of his reach before he can attack it.

But if the Indians care little for the shark, it is not so with the tintorera, whose name he never utters without a shudder. There are two kinds of tintoreras; the first is called by the natives prime (or cousin) to the shark, which it resem-bles in general appearance. It is far more dan-gerous, however, for it swims between two waves, and has its mouth at the end of the muzzle in-stend of underneath, so that it is not obliged to turn over in order to bite. The second, or the tintorera proper, belongs to the species of angel-fish (an odd kind of angels!), and is a lange, broad, flat fish, which can be compared to nothing bet-ter than a great blanket. Both, fortunately, swim slower than the shark, which enables the diver to escape them when the boat is not far off.

These monsters are eager for human flesh, and extremely dangerous through their facility for procuring it. They derive their name, his toveru, or dyer, from a dark, viscous fluid which they emit from their bodies, and which seems to have a stupefying effect. The prima eats nohave a stupefring effect. The prima eats no-thing but living flesh, while the timorera feeds only on putrefying bodies. The latter is very phosphorescent, and is easily seen at night. It flattens itself on the sand and waits for its prey. The first unhappy diver who comes near sees the water clouded around him, and feels his limbs paralyzed by a magnetic influence. The monster envelops him and smothers him as if in a blanket, then drugs him away, and covern himself and his prey with sand. The work of patrefaction soon begins, and, ghoul-like, the monster devours his horrible feast. This fearful drama makes a strong impression on the minds of the divers, who see something supernatural in the phosphorescence and magnetic power of the tintorera. The prima is about ten feet in length; the tintorers covers a space from five to thirteen feet long. Both have several rows of teeth, like the shark, planted not in the maxillaries, but on the lips. There are also the avord-fish and the pieuvre, or the famous devil-fish of Victor Hugo. The latter, though sometimes huge in size, inspires the divers with little terror; they sometimes even catch it and use it for food,

SUPERSTITION IN BUSSIA.

WE hear of horrid sects at present in R. wes, practicing human and cannibal sacrifices, will rites almost more devilish than any recorded in history. It is a strange thing how faith may be perverted, and made to minister to the vilest passions. The "Communion of the Flesh of the Lamb" and the "Communion of the Blood of the Lamb" really seem to have been invent by the lowest demons of the bottomless pit. The subject is too revolting to be pursued into detail; it is enough to say, that an infant seven days old is bandaged over the eyes, stretched over a dish, and a silver spoon thrust into the side, so as to pierce the heart. The elect suck the child's blood—that is "the Blood of the Lamb." The body is left to dry up in another dish full of sage, then crushed into powder, and eaten in small cakes. That is "the Flesh of the Lamb." We must really apologize for stating these frightful things, but they are actually occurring in He in 1869.

SUPPRESSION OF GAMBLING IN EUROPE.

IT has long been a vexed question whether the interests of morality would be better served by suppressing or continuing to tolerate the gambling-tables which still exist in a few towns on the European continent; the advocates of suppression taking their stand on the immorality of legalizing what they are pleased to term dens of vice and iniquity, while the partisans of toleration ascert that the less evil is to be apprehended from a system of gambling conducted fairly and under Government surveillance than from the uniformed and chardestine tripots to which players would resort if deprived of the facilities which at present exist for the indesigence of their panetes. The German hells are all doomed to be suppressed at the expiration of their present leases; a recent vote of the Belgian Chambers has fixed the 31st of October, 1871, as the date on which "Fatal Zero" shall come op for the last time in Spa; and now a petition, signed by 1500 inhabitants of Nice, has been presented to the French Senate praying that body to use its influence to procure the suppres-sion of the great strong-hold of gambling at Monaco. Should their efforts be successful the En-glish settlement in Heligoland will be the last refage of the lovers of rouge-et-noir and roulette.

INFLUENCE OF THE MOON.

MR. R. H. PATTERSON, in one of the magazines, says that Professor Palmieri, who has so closely studied the phenomena of Vesuvius, declares that there is a perceptible relation between the phases of the moon and the developments of volcanic action. Any one who has lived in the South, or even sailed in the Mediterranean, may have noticed how carefully sleepers in the open guard their head and face against the rays of the moon, to avert ophthalmia and other ills. In India, meat exposed to the moon-rays immediately putrelies. The moon's influence produces tides and currents in the atmosphere just as it does in the ocean. Some of these facts indicate a lu-ner action more subtle than science can yet account for.

A NEW BEAUTIFYING AGENT.

ALL dentifrices had their drawbacks until the salubrious bark of the Soap-Tree was brought from the Chilian valleys to perfect the fragrant SOZODONT, the most wholesome, reliable, and delightful article for the teeth that a brush was ever dipped into. - [Com.]

SOMETHING TO Do. - Good wages paid. Send for particulars to the WHITE FAMILY SCALE WORKS, 296 Pearl St., New York.

Despured Tassers cure Indigestion, Beartburn, and Sour Stomach. Pifty Cents per Box. Mailed for 60c. Sold by druggists. S. G. Williams, 571 Broadway.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

See Work... Ready on Suburday, the 24th.

VEDLOCK; or, The Right RELATIONS OF THE SEXES. A Scientific Treatise, disclosing the Laws of Conjugal Selection, and showing who may and who may not marry. By S. R. Wella, Author of "New Physiognomy," "How to Read Character," &c.

"New Physiognomy," "How to Read Character," &c.
This work counting directions by which one may judge of the mental- and physical compatibility of different temperaments, qualifications for matrimosy, rights age to marry, the model wife, the model hashand, marriage creatures of the world, collibery and crime, with the press and postry of love, courtship, and wedded life. One time Vol., 250 pages. Frier, $1.20; in Extra Gilt, $2 on. Sold by Booksetlers and Newsmen. Sent free by return post, by
S. R. WELLS, No. 389 Broadway, New York.

GET IT PURE.

A pint of Pain Paint for $5, a quart for $8, or a gal-lon for $90, double strength, with full directions, will be sent to any person, See of Expess charges, or re-ceipt of the morey at Dr. R. L. Wescow's Office, 181 Chatham Square, New York; or 6 pint bottles of An-nihilator, for Catarrh and Codic in the bend, on re-ceipt of $6. Small bottles sold at all Druggista.

CYPRESS HILLS CEMETERY. OFFICE, No. 124 BOWERY, N. Y., (Corner of Grand Street).

OPPICERS: EDMUND DRIGGS, President.
A. S. JARVIS, Vice-President.
WILLIAM MILES, Transporter,
WILLIAM EDWARDS, Scoretary. HERVEY Q. A.W. WM. J. PEASE, JOHN I. VAN ALST, ALFRED M. WOOD, Trustees. N. G. PALMER, Sup't and Surveyor.

$10 PER DAY GUARANTEED Agents to sell the Hour SETTILE SETTIN MACHINE. It makes the LOCE STITCH, ALKER ON SOTH SIDES, has the under-fred, and is equal in every respect to any Sewing Machine ever invented. Price $50. Warranted for 5 years. Send for circular. Address Journace, Clark, & Co., Boston, Mass., Pittsburgh, Pa., or St. Louis, Mo.

HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK, here just published :

THE DODGE CLUB;

oz.

ITALY IN 1859.

By JAMES DE MILLE. Author of "Gord and Creese," &c.

WITH ONE HUNDRED ILLUSTRATIONS.

8vo, Paper, 75 cents.

It is full of genuine humor. We can not same any thing better calculated to provoke a smile than the veracious history of the travels of the Dodge Cleb through Raly.—N. Y. Herald.
One of the Hvitest, joilinst books for summer reading.—Seaton Advertior.
Clever and fuzzy.—Motion.
Brilliant, eccentric, amusing.—Sedependent.
It is very amusing, overflowing with joility, with "brilliant fasches" of sobriety new and then, and capitally Ulustrated.—Resembles and Chronicle.
Emphatically a joily book.—Now Resemblest Palledious.
The sketches are of the raciont character, and include faithful pictures of social life on the Continent, with most amusing shotches.—Journal (St. Johns, N. B.).

FOR BOSTON

VIA FALL RIVER DIRECT. emed steamer

BRISTOL and PROVIDENCE,
Com'r BRATTON, Com'r SIMMONS,
Will Leave (Alternate Days) Daily,
FROM PIER-30-NORTH RIVER,
(Foot of Chambers Streed, -AT 5 P.M.

DODWORTH'S CELEBRATED ORCHESTRA Grand Promenade Concert

EVERY EVENING.

THE ONLY LINE RUNNING SUNDAY NIGHT.

PROVIDENCE Passengers by the above steamers will leave Full River at 520 A.M.

ARRIVING at 620 A.M.

BETURNING will leave Providence at 5 P.M., making direct connection with the boat, and allowing a good night's rest on board each way.

The splended of the public, The Splended of the Splended of

NEWPORT and OLD COLONY, COMMANDER LEWIS, COMMANDER MILLER, WILL LEAVE (Alternate Days) DAILY,

FROM PIER—28 NORTH RIVER, (Foot of Muray Street), —AT 6:30 P.M.,

BOSTON via NEWPORT.

PREIGHT received at Pier 20 up to 5 P.M., and at Pier 20 up to 6 20 P.M., and evening.

JAMES FISK, Jr., President,
M. R. SIMONS, Managing Director,
CHAS. H. VAILE, General Passenger Agent,
H. H. MANGAM, Freight Agent,
NARRAGAMEETT STRAMBUP COMPANY.

THE CELEBRATED

STERLING

Spool Cotton. EQUAL, IF NOT SUPERIOR, TO ANY KNOWN THREAD.

WELL ADAPTED TO

HAND AND SEWING MACHINE WORK. A. T. Stewart & Co.,

NEW YORK, Sole Agents for the United States.

PIANOS and ORGANS.

Prices greatly reduced for Cash. New Seven-Octave Planos, of first-class makers, for $715 and upward. New Cabinet Organs for $45 and upward. Second-hand Planos, Melodeous, and Organs from $45 to $115, at 481 Broadway, N. Y. HORACE WAYERS.

$9 A DAY POR ALL. Address A. J. FULLAM, 600 Broadway, N. Y.

Agents Wanted.

L OSSING'S FIELD-BOOK OF THE WAR OF 1812. The Pictorial Field-Book of the War of 1812; or, Illustrations, by Pen and Pencil, of the History, Biography, Scenery, Relice, and Traditions of the last War for American Independence. By Benson J. Lossino, Aushor of "The Pictorial Field-Book of the Recolution" With 882 Illustrations on sino, Annor of "The Pretorial Field-Book of the Revolution," With 882 Illustrations, en-graved on Wood by Lossing & Barritt, chiefly from Original Sketches by the Author. Com-plets in One Volume, 1084 pages, large Svo. Price, in Cloth, $7 00; Sheep, $8 50; Full Roan, $9 00; Half Calf or Half Morocco ex-tra, $10 00. tra, $10 00.

Sold by Agents.

At the close of his Prorossan Press-Book or was Ravonerous, Mr. Lossing said: "Should time deal gently with us, we may again go out with staff and scrip together upon the great highway of our country's progress, to note the march of events there." The implied prouses has been fulfilled. More than ten thousand miles in this country and the Canadas ten thousand miles in this country and the Canadas ten thousand miles in this country and the Canadas ten thousand miles in this country and the Canadas ten thousand miles in this country and the Canadas ten thousand miles in this country and the Canadas ten thousand miles places of historic interest connected with the War of 1819, from the great Lakes to the Guilf of Mexico, gathering up, recording, and delineating every thing of special value not found in books and making himself familiar with the battle-fields of that war. Access to the archives of government, state and national, and to private collections, was freely given him; and from the lips of actors in the events of that struggle he received the most interesting information gonoraning it, which might have perished with them.

The rescalls of the author's researches and labors are of that struggle he received the most interesting information concerning it, which might have periabed with them.

The results of the author's researches and labors are given in one imperial octave volume of a thousand pages, containing eight hundred and eighty-two engravings in the style of the Franc-Book or are flavorations, to which this magnificent work is an indipensable companion. It lakes up the narrative of nistoric events where the flormer work leaves it, and in a careful manner gives a lively account of the perils of the country immediately succeeding the Revolution; the struggles of the new nation with the allied powers of the British and Indians in the Northwest; the origin and growth of political parties in the United States, and their relations to the War of 1813; the influence of the French Revolution and of French position in giving complexion to parties in this country; the first war of the Barbary powers; the effects of the wars of Napoleon on the public policy of the United States; the Embargo and kindred Acts, and the kindling of the war in 1812.

The events of the war are given in greater detail than in any work ever published on the subject, and the narrative brings to view actors in the scenes whose deeds have not been hitherto recorded. On this account it is specially interesting to many of the older families of the country.

The Illustrations of this superb work are similar from that only in having historical events arranged in chronostotical order. It forms a continuation of the history of our country from the close of the Revolution, in 1815. Nothing has been spared by the author and publishers in their endeavors to make it the most perfect, attractive, and medal volume on the subject of ever offered to the public.

HARPER & BROTHERS, PURLERERS

HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHERS

PRABELIN SQUARE, NEW YORK.

Removed to 335 Broadway. $15. THE COLLINS $20. WATCH FACTORY.

MADAME FOY'S

Corset Skirt Supporter and Bustle.

D. B. SAUNDERS & CO., BOSTON, Mass.; LEZ, ALEXANDES, BUSCON, Mass.; LEZ, ALEXANDES, BUSC, Co., Philadelphia; Anamo & MOULTON, Bellimore; KAUPPMAN & BLUE, New York, are our Agents.

$100 PER DAY DISCONTINUED.

BAU I EM DAI DIDUCTION DESBaving obtained an extensive and wide-spread sale for our "CENTURY" brand of Fine-Cut Cheering Tabases, we desire to announce that we shall not pack daily $100 in the small tin-full papers after this date, July 1st, 1889, its metha being so favorably recognized that this inducement is no longer necessary. To avoid misapprehension, however, we would add that we shall continue to pack orders for despant Mercachaus. Pipes in our "XACHT CLUB" and "EURERA" brands of Smakiny Tobacco.

The "XACHT CLUB" is develod of Nicotine, and can not lajure the health, and is especially recommended to people of sedentary occupations or nervous constitutions.

IMPROVED ALUMINIUM BRONZE HUNTING-CASED WATCHES.

The movements are well finished, perfectly regulated, and as all these goods are manufactured in my own factory, I am enabled to warrant them as excellent time-keepers.

Further details will be found in my pamphlet, which will be sent, postpaid, on demand.

Goods sent by Express, C. O. D., with charges.

Address JULES D. HUGUENIN VUILLEMIN,

No. 64 Nassan Street, New York.

ONLY ONE DOLLAR

FOR ZION'S HERALD to Jan. 1st, 1870. A first-class Illustrated Heligious Journal of 16 pages, 200 Contributors; 5 Editors. The cheapest paper in the land. $2.50 a year, in advance. Specimen copies free.

E. D. WINSLOW, Publisher, 11 Cornhill, Boston.

Good Boys like Excellence better than Sham.—Inquire concerning

RIVERVIEW MILITARY ACADEMY,

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
A wide-awake, thorough-going School for Boys
wishing to be trained for Business, for College, or
for West Point or the Naval Academy,
OTIS BISBEE, A.M., Principal and Proprietor.

Do IT NOW. Don't delay, but send 25 cents at once and receive MAPLE LEAVES for twelve months. It is the cheapest, the best, and the most popular Monthly published. Specimen copies sent on receive for a store.

popular Monthly punishes.

Proceeding of a stamp. Address
O. A. ROORBACH, No. 192 Nassan St., N. Y.

DARLOR STEAM ENGINE: made entire-ly of Metal | Boiler and Furnace complete; will work for hours if supplied with water, &c.; free from danger; a child can work it. Sent free, with instruc-lions, for $1.00; three for $2.00. Address WALTER HOLT, No. 102 Nassau Street, New York.

Agents! Read This!

WE WILL PAY AGENTS A SALARY
of $30 per week and expenses, or allow a large commission, to sell our new and wonderful inventions. Address M. WAGNER & CO., Marshall, Mich.

A T.DR. HERO'S SCHOOL for YOUNG LADIES are advantages to be found in no other school in the world. EMILY A. RICE, Prin-cipal. Send for circular to Da. J. HERO, Westboro, Mass.

VINEGAR. How made from Cider, White, Mo-vitheon neing drugs. For berms, circulars, de., ad-dress F. I. SAGE, Vinegar Maker, Cromwell, Ct.

$10 PER DAY.—Agents wanted to sell an Amusing Toy. Specimen and particulars on receipt of 1-cent stamp. Address W. East, 96 Leight St., N. Y.

utions, e are invited to send for circulars. P. LORILLARD, New York.

The Improved Aluminium Bronse is a metal differing entirely from any ever offered to the public. Its qualities and resemblance to Geld are such that even judges have been deceived. If has seriously occupied the attention of sejentific men, and has not only called forth the enlogitms of the press in consequence of its peculiar properties, but has also obtained a Gold Medal at the Paris Exposition.

The movements are well fin-

Is just the article needed by every lady who would consult health, comfort, and style. Over 40,000 doz. of these goods have been sold within the past the years, and the demand for them is constantly increasing.

HARMON, BALDWIN, & FOY, Sols Manufacturers, New Haven, Conn.

COMBINED

The Collins Metal and Jewelry Factory has re-moved from 87 Nassan Street to their splendid New Offices,

No. 335 BROADWAY.

These superior Watches have now been in use over three years, and give universal satisfaction; and although sold at so moderate a price, are not surpassed in appearance and for time by gold ones costing $100 and $200. They have been greatly improved, but the price remains the same, $10. Those of extra fine fluish, $20. Gents' and Ladies' store. Jewelry of the richest styles, in every respect equal to the finest gold, at one-tenth the price. We have but ONE OFFICE, NO AGENTS, and are not responsible for the bogns and worth-less goods sold at these lewelry establishments. Our Pactory is the ONLY PLACE where the Gen-nine Collins Metal Watches and Jewelry can be had.

C. E. COLLINS & CO.,

No. 335 Broadway, cor. Worth Street, (Up Stairs).

GRAND EXCURSION TO LAKE SUPERIOR.

The splendid steamer MHTEOE leaves Cleveland, Ohio, on Friday, July 18th and 18th, Angust 18th and 18th, at 8 o'clock, F.M., and Detroit, Mich., the fol-lowing evenings at 10 o'clock, for Superior City, Du-luth, and all points of interest on Lake Superior. Rooms secured and other information obtained by spolication to

application to

HANNA & CO., Ag'ts, Cleveland, O.;

BUCKLEY & CO., Ag'ts, Detroit, Mich.;

or J. T. WHITING, Manager, Detroit, Mich.

SWEET

SWEET

QUININE.

SWEET Quasies is convented equal—does for does—to the subplate (bilite) Quinton, with the important advantage of being sweet instead of biliter.

SVAPNIA.

SVAPNIA.

SVAPNIA.

SVAPNIA.

SVAPNIA.

STEARNS, FARR, & CO., Chemista, New York.

MAPLEWOOD INSTITUTE for Young Ladies, Pittsfield, Mass., commences its Pall term Sept. 15, 1869. Facilities and location un-surpassed. Rev. C. V. SPEAR, Principal.

EMPLOYMENT that pape. For particulars, address 8. M. SPENCER & Co., Bratileboro, Vt.

$15 A DAY. Samples Free. Address, with stamp, RAND & CO., Biddeford, Mc.

HARPER'S

NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE

FOR AUGUST, 1869.

CONTENTS:

CONTENTS:

PICTURES OF THE JAPANESE.

ILLUSTRATIONS.—Japanese Artists at Work.—

Dignituries and Sultors.—Officer, in Rain Coal.—

High Friest, in Full Costume.—Lady's-Maid.—

Mether and So.—Erids and Bridemaid.—Meschant's Family.—Bettos, or Grooms, in Full Costime.—A Eargo.—Beheading.—A Picnic.—Singing Giris.—Doctor of Medicine.—Coolle, in Full Dress.—Merchant, in Winter Dress.—Female Winter Dress.—Japanese Temple.—Bronze Image at Balboots.—Female Hair-Dresser.—The Tycoon, in Court Dress.—Japanese Wreetler.—An Ichiboo.

Elit-Flying.—Frince Satsums, the Prims Minister, and Admiral King.

THE NEW THEORY OF HEAT.

THE NEW THEORY OF HEAT.

ILLUSTRATIONS. - The Rollpile. - Hot-Air Ma-chine. - Section of the Machine. - Joule's Appa-

BETROTHAL.

SOUTH-COAST SAUNTERINGS IN ENGLAND.— (Sounter IV.)

(Seesfer IV.)

Literratrons.—Harmony Hall.—Earl of Bute.

Marquis of Bute.—Glpeles.—William Gilpin.—
Boldre Church.—Robert Owen.—G. J. Holyoske.

William Allingham.—Lymington.—St. Thomas's Church, Lymington.—Robert Southey.—Southey's Cottags.

A BRAVE LADY. By the Author of "Jony Hall-FAX, GENTLEMAN."

ILLUSTRATIONS.—The Rector at Home,—Mrs. Scanlan's Scruples. DRAW YOUR CONCLUSIONS.

THE GRAVES AT NEWPORT. HETTY'S LIBERAL EDUCATION. SLAVERY IN PALACES. A PEEP AT FINLAND.

REMINISCENCES OF OXFORD UNIVERSITY. WONDER

MY ENEMY'S DAUGHTER. By Justes M'Castur. CHAPTER XXII. Rivalry, CHAPTER XXIII. A Defeat.
CHAPTER XXIII. A Defeat.
CHAPTER XXIV. Christina's Intervention.
CHAPTER XXV. In Kensington Gardens.
LLUSTRATION.—In Kensington Gardens.

BORROWED BAGGAGE.

CAN WE FORETELL THE WEATHER? Itareraarona. Register of the Thermometer. Self-Registering Wind-Vane. Register of the Wind. Self-Registering Rain-Gangu. Register of the Rain. Self-Registering Thermometer.

THE NEW HOME. AUGUST DAYS. THE NEW TIMOTHY. PART IX. EDITOR'S EASY CHAIR. EDITOR'S BOOK TABLE. MONTHLY RECORD OF CURRENT EVENTS. EDITOR'S DRAWER

TERMS for HARPER'S MAGAZINE, WEEKLY, and Harpen's Magazine, Harpen's Werely, and Harpen's Baran, for one year, $10 00; or any two for $1 00.

HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHERS, PRANKLIN SQUARE, NEW YORK.

HARPER & BROTHERS.

FRANKLIN SQUARE, NEW YORK,

Have just Published:

PAMOUS LONDON MERCHANTS. A Book for Boys. By H. R. Fox Bounse. With Pertrait of George Peabody and 24 Illustrations. 16mo, Cloth, 81 66.

SIGHTS AND SENSATIONS IN FRANCE, GER-MANY, AND SWITZERLAND; or, Experiences of an American Journalist in Europe. By Euward Gotto Burress. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

FIVE ACRES TOO MUCH. A Truthful Elucida-tion of the Attractions of the Country, and a Cara-ful Consideration of the Question of Profit and Loss as involved in Amateur Parming, with much Valu-able Advice and Instruction to those about Furchas-ing Large or Small Pisces in the Rural Districts. By Research B. Roservan, With Characteristic Il-lestrations. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

THREE SEASONS IN EUROPEAN VINEYARDS.
Treating of Vine-Culture; Vine Disease and its
Cure; Wine-Making and Wines, Red and White;
Wine-Drinking as affecting Health and Morals. By William J. Flago. 12mo, Cloth, $150.

RHETORIC: a Text-Book, designed for Use in Schools and Colleges, and for Private Sindy. By Rev. E. O. Haves, D.D., LL.D., President of the Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill. 12mo, Cloth, $1 90.

A PARSER AND ANALYZER POST BEGINNERS, with Diagrams and Suggestive Pictures. By Fran-cis A. Manou, Professor of the English Language and Comparative Philology in Lamyette College, Author of "Method of Philological Study of the En-glish Language," "Comparative Grammar of the Anglo-Saxon Language," &c. 18mo, Cloth, 46 cents.

THE STUDENT'S SCRIPTURE HISTORY. The Old Testament History. From the Creation to the Return of the Jews from Captivity. Edited by William Surra, LL.D. With Maps and Woodcuts, Large Phuo, Cloth, 25 06. Uniform with The Student's New Testament History.

THE MALAY ARCHIPELAGO: The Land of the Orang-Utan and the Bird of Paradise. A Narrative of Travel, with Studies of Man and Nature. By Alfreso Russia. Wallace, Author of "Travels on the Amazon and Rio Negro." "Palm Trees of the Amazon," &c. With Ten Maps and Fifty-one elagant Illustrations. Crown 8vo, Cloth, 88 50.

FISHING IN AMERICAN WATERS. By General C. Scott. With 170 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, Cloth, 80 90.

HARPER'S HAND-BOOK FOR TRAVELLERS IN EUROPE AND THE EAST. Being a Guide through France, Beigium, Holland, Germany, Aus-tria, Italy, Egypt, Syria, Turkey, Greece, Switzer-land, Tyrol, Russia, Deumark, Seeden, Spaly, and Great Britain and Ireland, With a Hailroad Map corrected up to 1608. By W. PENNEGUX FEVERICE. Revised Edition: Seventh Year, Large 18mo, Leath-er, Pocket-Book Form, $7.50.

HARPER'S PHRASE-BOOK; or, Hand-Book of Travel Talk for Travellers and Schools. Being a Guids to Conversations in English, Franch, German, and Italian, on a New and Improved Method. In-tended to accompany "Harper's Hand-Book for Travellers." By W. Passatoux Favanoux. Assisted by Professors of Heidelberg University. With con-cies and explicit Rules for the Pronunciation of the different Languages. Square 16mo, Flexible Cloth, $1.50.

The New Novels

PUBLISHED BY

HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

HETTY. By HENRY KINGS.EV. Author of "Stretton," &c. Svo, Paper, 95 cents. MY DAUGHTER ELINOR. A Novel of American Society. Svo, Paper, $1 25.

CORD AND CREESE. By the Anthor of "The Bodge Club." Illustrated, 8vo, Paper, 75 cents.

STRETTON. A Novel. By Haway Kisses.ey, Author of "Hetty," "Geoffey Hamlyn," "Ravenshoe," &c. 8vo, Paper, 40 cmbs.

THE SACRISTAN'S HOUSEHOLD. A Story of Lippe-Detmoid. By the Author of "Mabel's Prog-ress," &c. With Effactions by C. G. Bush. Svo, Paper, 15 cents.

THE DODGE CLUB; or, Raly in 1839. By James Dz Malez, Author of "Cord and Crees," &c. With One Hundred Hustrations. Svo, Paper, 75 cents; Cloth, $1 55.

FOR HER SAKE. By FRENERICE W. RORINSON, Author of "Carry's Confession," "Poor Himanity," &c. With 30 Illustrations. Syd, Paper, 75 cents.

THACKERAY'S NOVELS:

New Edition, beautifully printed, with the Author's own Illustrations. VANITY FAIR. Illustrated. Syo, Paper, 50 cents.

THE VIRGINIANS. 150 Engravings. 8vo, 75 THE NEWCOMES. 160 Rogravings. 8vo, 75 cents.

THE ADVENTURES OF PHILIP ON HIS WAY THROUGH THE WORLD; Showing who Robbed him, who Helped him, and who Passed him by. With Pottrait of Author and 64 Illustrations. Syo, Paper, 50 cents.

FF HARPER & BROTHERS will issue termediately New Estitions of Thackersty's other Novels, Hibstrated by the Author, at correspondingly low prices.

CHARLES READE'S NOVELS:

HARD CASH. Illustrated. 8vo, Paper, 35 cents. GRIFFITH GAUNT; or, Jealousy. Illustrated.

IT IS NEVER TOO LATE TO MEND. See, Paper, 35 cents.

LOVE ME LITTLE, LOVE ME LONG. Sec, Paper, 35 cents.

to be followed by Charles Reade's other Novela.

ANTHONY TROLLOPE'S LAST NOVELS: FIRINGAS FINN, the Irish Hember. Historated by Milliate. Swo, Paper, 81 SE, Cloth, 91 S. HE KNEW HE WAS RIGHT. Complete. With 64 Historations by Marcus Stone. Sro, Paper, 51-85; Cloth, $1 50. Part II., separately, Paper, 50 cents, ES" HARPER & BROTHERS will send any of the above books by mail, postops free, to any part of the United States, on receipt of the price.

PACIFIC CHIVALRY.

Encouragement to Chinese Immigration.

The Reason why Every One should buy a Haines Piano:

The reputation of these Pianos is fully established as being unsurpassed by any for a rich, full tone, elasticity of touch, long standing in time, and elegance of style and finish.

Every article used in the construction of the Haines Plane is of the best quality and of thor-oughly seasoned materials.

The prices being reasonable, they can not fall to sult any who may desire to purchase. Circulars and information sent on application to

HAINES BROTHERS, 46 East 14th Street, New York,

Or to Sucru & Nexos, Chicago, His.; H. N. Heses-STRAIS, Milwanker, Wis.; Louis Thurs, Louisville, Kr.; J. A. McClerz, Nashville, Tenn.; Kuschen Bros., St. Louis, Mo.; J. E. Jackson, Sandurky, Ohio; J. E. Govar, Philadelphia, Pa.; Mrs. C. Blone, Pittsburg, Ph.: Brainars & Som, Cloreland, Ohio; Clerty & Soss, Albert and Troy, N. Y.; J. T. Hamsen, Ehlnebeck, N. Y.; J. H. Histermister, Bhacs, N. Y.; White, Switz, & Perry, Boston, Mass.; Matterial Gray, Son Francisco, Cal.; C. M. Mrucu, Cincinnati, Ohio; C. M. Loocis, New Haven, Coun.

With detachable Shoulder-Rest. Most popular arm made for Sporting and Target-Shooling. Surm & Wasson's Havouvers, in any quantity, for each, at bundred price. Williamson's, Derringer's, and other Platols. J. W. STOILHS & CO., M'Tr's Agents, 150 Broadway, New York.

ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS.

Sudden severe pains of the side and back, stitches, spasms, etc. These affections are most troublesome to persons past middle age. Will even come on in bod: are very painful and often dangerous. In damp weather they are more frequent than in dry. These plasters give relief at once, and need to be always in the drawer, handy.

PAIN OF THE SIDE CURED.

Allestown, Press., April 4, 1865.

Moure, T. Allrock & Co. 7. Dear Strs,-My Daughter used one of your Purous Plasters. She had a very bad pain in her side, and it cared her in one week.

JOHN V. N. HUNTER Yours truly,

25,000 SOLD BY ONE DEALER.

Messen. J. Balch & Son, of Providence, R. Nov., 1868: "We have sold the Porous Plasters for twenty years, and, at retail and jobbing, must have sold twenty-five thousand altogether. They are well Blked."

WE PUT GENUINE WALTHAM VV Watches into the bands of purchasers in any state, territory, town, village, or frontier cettlement, at the lowest New Ye ... , satisfiable prices. The Express Companies take them from us and deliver them to the customers in any part of the Union, however resurie. The package can be percel, and the watch examined, and not till them a the purchaser required to pay for it; and if on examination it is not astisched to the purchase of are is no obligation to receive it. Our descrip live and illustrated Price-List gives full information the and litustrated Proce-List gives thit information in regard to the watches, and our plan of sending them by express. Every one should have a copy. We send it postpaid on application; no return stamps required. When you write, please state that you saw this in Harper's Weekly.

HOWARD & CO., Jewslers and Silversmitts, No. 619 Broadway, New York.

FOUNTAINS, VASES, and GARDEN OBNAMENTS.

JANES, KIRTLAND, & CO., 8, 10, & 12 Road St., New York.

RUSSIAN HAIR DYR.—ONLY 50 CTS. The best Hair Dye in the world, without exception. Warranted in every instance. Does no injury to the skin. Price only 50 Cts. Sold by all Designs. Jour F. HERER, Proprietor, No. 8 COLLEGE PLACE, New York, U. S. Pamily Medicine Warehouse.

CATALOGUES SENT FREE. MATHEMATICAL INSTRUMENTS, 119 pages.
OPTICAL INSTRUMENTS, 12 pages.
MAGIC LANTERNS and STEREOPTICANS, 100 pp.
PHILOSOPHICAL INSTRUMENTS, 84 pages.
JAMES W. QUEEN & CO.,
924 Chestant St., Philadelphia, Ps.

Postak & Sos, Manuf'rs of Genu-ine Mecrechann goods. Stores: 523 Broadway, under St. Nicholas Hotel, & 27 John St., middle of block. Sead for new wholesale or retail chrollar to Letter-Box 5344. Repairing and Boiling also done.

For European Tourists,

HARPER & BROTHERS, New York, Publish:

SIGHTS AND SENSATIONS IN FRANCE, GER-MANY, AND SWITZERLAND; or, Experiences of an American Journalist in Europe. By Eswagn Gould Berstun, Author of "Six Months in the Gold Mines," &c. 17mo, Cloth, $1.50.

THREE SEASONS IN EUROPEAN VINEYARDS.
Treating of Vine-Culture: Vine Disease and its
Cure: Wine-Making and Wines, Red and White;
Wine-Drinking as affecting Health and Morals. By William J. Flags. 18mo, Cloth, $150.

THE OLD WORLD IN ITS NEW FACE: Impressions of Europe in 1867-1868. By the Rev. Hawar W. Bellows, D.D. In Two Volumes. 12mo, Cloth, $2.50.

HARPER'S HAND BOOK FOR TRAVELLERS IN EUROPE AND THE EAST. Being a Guide through France, Belgium, Holland, Germany, Ana-tria, Italy, Sicily, Egypt, Syria, Turkey, Greece, Switzerland, Tyrol. Roseia, Domark, Sweden, Spain, and Great Britain and Ireland. By W. Pas-naour Frynness. Large 17mo, Half Leather, Focket-Book Form, §756. Book Form, $7 50.

HARPER'S PHRASE - BOOK; or, Hand-Book of Travel Talk for Travellers and Schools. Being a Guide to Conversations in English, French, German, and Italian, on a New and Improved Method. In-tended to accompany "Harper's Hand-Book for Travellers." By W. Passaous Faranson. Assisted by Professors of Heddelberg University. With con-cise and explicit Enless for the Pronunciation of the different Languages. Square 4to, Flexible Cloth, §1 60.

ENT Harren & Buorness will send any of the above works by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of the price.

"FRESH AS A MAIDEN'S BLUSH" is the pure peachy complexion which follows the use of HAGAN'S MAGNOLIA BALM. It is the true secret of besuty. Fashionable ladies in society understand this.

The Magnolia Balm changes the rustic country girl into a city belle more rapidly than any other one thing.

Redness, Sunburn, Tan, Freckles, Blotches, and all effects of the summer sun disappear when it is used, and a genial, cultivated, fresh expression is obtained, which rivals the bloom of youth. Beauty is possible to all who will invest 75 cents at any respectable store and insist on getting the Magnolia Balm.

Use nothing but Lyon's KATHAIRON to dress the hair.

The Bowels are the Waste Pipes of the System. When they are obstructed the whole vital economy is deranged. If Nature fulls in her duty, restore them to an active, healthy, vigorous condition by the me of Tanaari's Eryeavasous's Saurzez Arzzizer. This can always be done.

SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

TO SPORTSMEN!!

A very superior selection of fine Breech-Loading SHOT-GUNS, RIFLES, and PISTOLS, of our own Manufacture and Importation. FISHING TACKLE, POCKET CUTLERY, and Sportsmen's Articles. Sole Agents for W. R. PAPE'S Celebrated Muzzle and Brooch Loaders.

MERWIN & HULBERT, Circulars supplied.] 285 Broadway, S.Y.

$2000 A YEAR AND EXPENSES to Agente, to introduce the Wilson Sewing Machine. Stitch allie on both sides. Samples on two weeks' trial. Extra inducements to experienced agents. For further particulars, address the WILSON SEWING MACHINE CO., Clereland, Ohio; Boston, Mass.; or St. Louis, Mo.

Musical Boxes

The largest and eldest depot in America. Presh Novelties by nearly every Steamer. Fine Supply of Pancy Goods, Swiss Carved Goods, Pine Gold and Silver Watches. M. J. PAILLARD & CO., 480 BROADWAY, N. Y.

$20 A DAY MADE.—Agents wanted to sell the Novelty Pocket Knife, the Slate-Penell Sharpener and Fen-Holder combined, and the Yosemite Pens. Samples sent of all, including a box of pens, for 50 cts., postage paid. Address MORSE ERASER CO., 404 Library St., Philadelphia.

GOING UP TOWN!

On the let of August we shall remove to 747 BROADWAY, near 8th St., and now offer our present stock of

CHINA, GLASS, AND FANCY GOODS at very low prices.

Davis Collamore & Co., 479 Broadway, near Broome St

IVORIDE

KNIFE-HANDLES.

EQUAL IN

BEAUTY and DURABILITY

TO THE GENUINE

IVORY,

AND AT

HALF THE PRICE.

This material is guaranteed to resist the action of heat and cold, whether of water or of the atmosphere.

FOR SALE BY ALL DEALERS.

J. Russell & Co.,

Green River Cutlery Works,

83 BEERMAN STREET, New York City.

NATURE'S GREAT RESTORER.

GREEN MOUNTAIN MINERAL SPRING WA-TER, Mount Holly, Vt.

This celebrated water cures Dyspepsia, Rheuma-tism, Files, Scrednia, Urinary Diseases, and Female Weaknesses. "It is a tonic and general builder on of the system." Send for Deceler Circular. Soil by Draggists.

McKESSON & ROBBINS, No. 91 Fulton St., N.Y., GEO. C. GOODWIN & CO., Boston, Mass., Agents, F. FENN & CO., Proprietors, Butland, Vt.

MANN'S DOUBLE TROLLING SPOON.

ats Trolling Bait stands unsqualed for catching Fike, Pickeed, Bass, &c. It is far superior to any single spoon ever invented. on the each. JOHN H. MANN, Syracuse, N. Y.

BUT if you want to make money, sell our New Put-ent Foundain Pens—sample box, 32 pens, 25 ets.; Fateat Fenknik and Pencil combined, 10 cts.; Pateat Erneer and Pen-Holder combined, 15 cts. All postpaid, Sell at sight. $15 a day, 500 per cent, predit. Address Crvv Novauvy Co., 404 Library St., Philadelphia, Pa.

HARPER'S PERIODICALS.

TERMS FOR 1869.

Hanpun's Magazine, Ode Year.....$4 00 HARPER'S WREELT, One Year..... 4 00 HARPER'S BAZAR, One Year..... 4 00

HARPEN'S MAGAINNE, HARPEN'S WEEKLY, and HARPEN'S BARAN, to one address, for one year, $10.00; or any two for $7.00.

two for $7.90.

An Entra Copy of either the Manazina, Wreit, or Balan will be supplied gratts for every Chab of Evra Superculains at $4.00 cash, in our remittence; or, Mix Choice for $20.00, without extra copy.

The Postage within the United States is for the Manazina 24 cents a year, for the Wreitz or Banas 20 cents a year, payable yearly, semi-yearly, or quarterly, at the office where received. Subscriptions from the Dominion of Canada must be accommended with 24 cents additional for the Manazina, or $6 cents for the Wreitz or Banas, to prepay the United States postage.

St cents additional for the Manazure, or Weemis for the Wenner or Bazar, to prepay the United States postage.

The Volumes of the Manazure commence with the Numbers for June and December of each year. Subscriptions may commence with any Number. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to begin with the first Number of the current Volume, and back Numbers will be sent accordingly.

The Volumes of the Wenner commence with the year. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to commence with the Number pert after the receipt of his order.

Subscribers to the Manazure, Wenner, or Bazar will find on each wrapper the Number with which their subscription expires. Each periodical is stopped when the term of subscription closes. It is not necessary to give notice of discontinuance.

In remitting by mail, a Post-Office Order or Deaft payable to the order of Hazara & Bacourses is peeferable to Stank Notes, since, should the Order or Deaft be lost or stolen, it can be retroyed without loss to the seader.

In ordering the Manazure, the Wenner, or the Bazar, the name and address should be clearly written. When the direction is to be changed, both the old and the new one must be given.

TERMS FOR ADVERTISING IN HARFER'S PERSONNEARS.

Harper's Manetise.—Whole Page, $200; Half Page, $200; Cuarier Page, $200-each insertion; or, fer a less space, $2 50 per Line, each insertion; or, fer a less space, $2 50 per Line, each insertion.

Harper's Weekly—Inside Pages, $1 50 per Line; Cutside Pages, $2 00 per Line—each insertion.

Harper's Esser—$1 00 per Line; Cuts and Display, $1 25 per Line—each insertion.

Address HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

Vol. XIII.—No. 659.]

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, AUGUST 14, 1869.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1869, by Harper & Scothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the United States, for the Southern District of New York.

MEDAL PRESENTED TO MIDSHIP-MAN MASON.

In our issue for April 24 we gave a portrait of young Midshipman T. Balley Myers Mason, who on the 8th of February saved the lives of two seamen of the Guerriere, off Rio Janeiro. On that day Mr. Mason was sent ashore in charge of the steam launch of the Guerriere, to search for and bring off the men who were on liberty. Five of the men were found and placed in the launch, and being intoxicated and riotous were put in irons. One of them jumped overboard with his irons on, and would have been drowned had not Mr. Mason jumped after him and rescued him, with imminent peril to himself. Scarcecued him, with imminent peril to himself. Scarce-ly had Mr. Mason got aboard with his man than ly had Mr. Mason got aboard with his man than another, also in irons, jumped overboard; and although Mr. Mason was greatly exhausted by his first effort, he jumped after and rescued him. For these two acts of gallantry he was most highly commended by his commanding officer, by the Admiral of the station, and by the Secretary of the Navy; and the Life Saving Benevolent Association of New York ordered a gold medal to be struck in his honor, and to be presented to him. Shortly after the arrival of the Guerriere at this port the medal, of which we give an illustration on this page, was presented to Mason by the Rev. Hexar Warm Berchers, who read to him the following letter: following letter:

Lers Saves Secures are Association of New York, Fe T. Barker Myses Masociation has inscribed on on of its gold medials the following testimonial: "Prosented to Midshipman T. Bankr Myras Mason, of the United States Navy, who, with generous hereism, twice in succession, hazarding his own life, recovered from drowning two of his shipmates, cullsted menfor the Oserviere, in the harbor of Rio de Janelro, February 8, 1808." The signal acts of unseitist galantity thus sought to be commemorated have their chief reward in the consciousness that, upon the impulse of a humane and noble courage, you delivered from sudden death two human lives. They have also been recognized in the report of your superior officers, and the special commendations of the Secretary of the Navy, and we would not attempt to expected or odd to the high meed of praise thus awarded by the nation through its official representatives. But it is one of the chartered privileges of our Association to encourage meritorious conduct in the dis-charge of the sacred duty of saving lives exposed at sea, and by a suitable and enduring record to mark and perpetuate its just appreciation of acts of self-sarrifice and heroism. In obedience to this the Association has caused the medal to be so inscribed, and to be herewith transmitted for your acceptance. Respect-fully, your obedient servant, Royat Paxtre, Secretary.

MEDAL PRESENTED TO MIDSHIPMAN T. B. M. MASON BY THE LIFE SAVING BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION OF NEW YORK.

Mr. Bescher followed with a few appropriate words, to which young Mason made a modest and brief reply. After the presentation of the medal Admirals Strenoman and Davis stepped forward and shook hands with Mason, complimenting him on the honor he had received, The medal is of fine gold, and is worth at least

MERCANTILE LIBRARY, PHILA-DELPHIA.

This Mercantile Library of Philadelphia, hav-ing outgrown its quarters on Fifth Street, below Chestnut, has been removed to a large building on Tenth Street, above Chestnut.

The new premises were inaugurated on July 15, with speeches from the President, T. Mon-RIS PRIOT, ESQ., BENJAMIN H. BREWSTER, Esq., and others.

Members and visitors have free access to the books. The amount of loss to the property of the Company is found to be very inconsiderable under this system—far less than would be represented by the expense of hiring clerks to wait upon the public.

upon the public.

In a circular issued by the President of the Company it is stated that the library contains about 50,000 volumes, and is constantly receivworks; and in order more fully to supply the wants of readers, many copies of popular books are procured; and there is in successful operation a system by which, for a small sum, books are delivered at the residence of members.

The reading rooms leaved in a scaleded work

The reading-rooms, located in a secluded part of the building, are specious and convenient, and are furnished with about 150 reviews, magazines, and papers. They offer advantages for reading and quiet study such as never could be enjoyed at the old building, and such as are seldom found in institutions of this kind.

THE NEW MERCANTILE LIBRARY BUILDING, PHILADELPHIA. - [PHOTOGRAPHED BY WENDEROTH, TAYLOR, AND BROWS, PHILADELPHIA.]

The newspaper-room, which occupies the second story, and is wholly separated from the library proper, is supplied with nearly 200 newspapers (American and foreign), representing all political and commercial interests. The chessroom, in the second story of the building, is furnished with twenty-four tables.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 14, 1869.

TENNESSEE AND MISSISSIPPI.

But the policy of reconstruction, of which the suffrage of the freedmen is so vital a point, evidently contemplates a rapid political restoration of the whole disaffected population of those States. It was felt that a long disfranchisement of the late dominant class would be impolitic, and yet that their resumption of political privileges would be dangerous. As a matter of high expediency, therefore, as well as of justice, the colored citizens were enfranchised; the loyalty of the new vote being properly expected to nullify the possible peril of the old. The fact has thus far justified the wisdom of the radical system of reconstruction. Nor is it easy to see in what other way the complicated difficulties of the situation could have been so readily adjusted. The happy working of the system was so clearly seen by the Convention that nominated General Graser that it did not hestinate to pronounce, in the words that we have quoted, for the speediest possible removal of disabilities.

It was not, however, surprising that in the States themselves there should have been very warm and serious differences. The bitter lo-cal and personal hostilities of the war, envenomed by many of the events that immediately succeeded, and by the conduct of Axpansw Jonsson, prevented unanimity of sentiment among professed loyal men, so that a division loyal party was probable, and has oc-This division also was determined by curred. the very question we are considering—that of immediate political restoration. In Virginia the late election turned upon the point of entire amnesty, and the result there has undoubt-edly settled the question in the other States where it is not yet formally determined. In-deed, the position of the party at large, and the tendency of public opinion generally, had virtually decided it; and even in Virginia Mr. Wells was understood to have conceded the necessity of amnesty. In the uncertainty, however, enough Republicans voted for Mr. WALKun to elect him, and the Fifteenth Amendment has been secured, with general amnesty.

There is now really no reason for farther division in the Republican party of the unrecomstructed States; and those who act with its opponents, and thus conspire to weaken the party and the Administration, should be very suspi-ciously watched. Thus, in Tennessee, there is a fierce contest in the party. Neither of the candidates was regularly nominated, and there is apparently very little to choose between them politically, as neither were original Union men. Nor is there any essential difference between the platforms, as both declare for amnesty. Under these circumstances, and at a distance from the scene of the contest, it seems to us that the sympathies of Republicans elsewhere naturally incline to the candidate who is supported by the great body of their friends, as against him who is sustained by all their enemies. If the friends of Mr. STOKES declare for amnesty, and heartily support all the other measures of the party, why should a Republican elsewhere rejoice in the favorable prospects of Mr. SERTER, who also declares for amnesty, but who, if successful, must be elected by the votes of those who as beartily oppose the measure of the party? In other words, why should a Republican wish to see his party succeed in Tunnessee by the votes of its enemies when he knows that their object is not the triumph of Republican principles? Does he fear the Greeks less because they bring gifts? If, in Virginia, Mr. WALKER and Mr. WELLS had represented the same principles and policy as Mr. STOKES and Mr. SERTER do in Tennessee, should we not all have preferred to see Mr. WELLS succeed by the Republican vote rather than Mr. WALKER by that of our opponents?

The question is still more emphatic in Mis-issippi. In that State the Republican party is well organized and harmonious, and it is supported by a larger proportion of native white men than in most of the Southern States. The Republican platform is liberal and wise, declaring against proscription and disfranchisement, and favoring universal suffrage and universal amnesty. There are a very few, and only a very few, Republicans who have withdrawn to ally themselves with the Democrats in a movement called "Conservative" Repub-licanism. This alliance has nominated Judge DENT for Governor, whose claim to be considered a citizen of the State consists, as we understand, in the fact that, in 1866, he occupied an abandoned plantation in Coahoma Coun but, his enterprise proving unsuccessful, he left the State at the close of the year. His nomination, like the alliance, would seem to be a device of the enemy to conquer under other colors than their own. But can any body give any good reason for withdrawing national Repub-lican sympathy from the Mississippi Republican party, which stands firmly upon the national platform? Certainly Judge Dunt's letter of-fers no reason. If he could have truly said that those whom his candidacy opposes advocate a restrictive and vindictive policy, he might have shown the wisdom of supporting his nomination. But he could not do it, and of course he did not attempt it. It was probably supposed that as Judge DEST is a relative of the President, and as WALKER's election in Virginia was called a triumph of the President's policy, his candidacy would be regarded as representing the same principles, and as involving the sympathy and support of the Administra-

The circumstances, however, being absolutely different, we warn our friends in Mississippi that the resemblance must not be assum The President of the United States is not like. ly publicly to declare himself upon the subject, nor should we wish him to do so. His sympathy, however, naturally belongs to those who maintain the principles upon which he was elected, including that generous disposition which the Chicago platform expressly asserts. And who maintain those principles in Mississippi? Those who would have voted for Mr. SETMOUR, and who denounce the whole policy of reconstruction, or those whose votes were sure for GRANT and equal rights? It seems plain that the national Republican press should distinctly sustain by its sympathy the party in Mississippi which has proved its faith in the principles that it professes, which is not nar-row and prescriptive, and which supports equal rights not from compulsion but from convic-tion. Our principles and our policy are cer-tainly safer with our friends than with our ene-

CUBAN AFFAIRS.

In speaking of Senator Summer's opposition to any relaxation of neutrality in the Cuben question, the Tribuse very truly remarks that the Alabama question has nothing to do with Our neutral duties do not depend upon the Alabana claims. The Tribuse also says: "We do not suppose, however, that the Senator de-sires the inference to be drawn that merely for a selfish aim of our own we should sacrifice a struggling cause." We venture to speak in this instance for the Senator, and to answer, certainly not. But if the faithful observance of neutrality sacrifices a struggling cause which ought to succeed, our duty is evident-we ought to recognize the belligerence or the independence of Cuba. The question of Cuban independence, however, is very different from that of the relation of the United States to the Cuban revolution. It does not follow, because the Cubans are justified in asserting their independmce, that the United States authorities would be justified in evading the laws of the country to help them. And this point has been curiously confused throughout the whole Cuban dism; and those who have de President for not privately instructing his deputies to comuive at the violation of honorable laws which he was sworn to execute have certainly a very remarkable conception of official er and of national rectitude.

If, instead of reviling the officers of the United States for enforcing the laws, the Cuban Junta had been advised to confine themselves wholly to securing the recognition of Cuben belligerence, we are not sure that they might not have succeeded. But they have been advised that the sympathy of the people was such that the Neutrality laws could not be enforced. and that they might make war from the United States. It was bad advice, for two reasons. In the first place, the extent and the character of the sympathy have been erroneously repre-sented to the Cubans; and, in the second place, it is a great mistake that any large part of the American people will complacently see their laws openly defied, except, as in the case of the Fugitive Slave law, from a profound conviction of the wickedness of the law and the practical impossibility of its repeal. Nobody believes that the Neutrality laws are wicked; and if their operation is ever likely to sacrifice a just cause, the remedy is immediate.

The dispersion of the RYAN expedition seems to have settled, at least for the present, the question of warlike movements from this port. Meanwhile the news from Cuba is as unsatisfactorily vague as ever. But the situation apparently remains substantially unchanged. The essential reasonableness of the revolution, however, and the prolongation of the struggle, have led to various propositions of a peaceful solution. One of these is, that Cuba shall buy itself, with the United States as inderser—and, we presume, broker. This last is the important point of the proposition.

we presume, a common and present the United States proposes merely to guarantee to Spain the purchase money, upon condition that Spain will sell, the affair is simple enough. But we presume that, as a preliminary, Spain would require that arms should be laid aside, that her new policy for the island should be announced and understood, and that an honest vote should be taken.

But would the United States be content to make the proposition merely, and politely withdraw if Spain should reply that it was not inclined to the bargain? Or would the envoy suggest peculiar reasons for compliance, reasons that are obvious enough? And if he should, what would the whole proceeding be but a more carefully veiled Ostend policy? If the United States say to Spain, "We shall be glad to guarantee the terms that the Cubans may propose"—very well. But if the United States say, "If you don't accept the terms, and us as security, we must really acknowledge the belligerence or the independence of Cuba," it would be a very courteous, but a very unmistakable coercion.

Of course the result is evident. Cuba has no ready money. If the bargain is made the United States would advance the money. Caba would be virtually mortgaged to the United States as security, and on some not distant day Caba would be annexed to satisfy the mortgage. The grandeur and magnanimity of such a scheme are not apparent. It would, indeed, be magnanimous for Spain to concede the independence of Cuba. It would be a magnanimity unprecedented in history. It would also be becoming in the United States to propose such a concession in the interest of justice and peace, provided it carefully refrained from annexation afterward. It would also be a good thing to save bloodshed by the paying of money, and, of course, by guaranteeing its payment. But that the United States should be the broker of a bargain by which they expected to gain is no more a subject of rhetorical congratulation than that they paid sundry millions of dollars for Alaska.

THE ENGLISH TRADES-UNION BILL

The Trades-Union bill, which is favored by Parliament, and which even the London Twees welcomes, is the breaking of another feudal chain. It is simply an assertion of the freedom of bargains for labor. The state, which has renounced the folly of attempting to fix the price of other commodities, now agrees that it will not attempt to regulate that of labor. Combinations of labor are as lawful as these of capital. If, indeed, they become conspiracies to invade the rights of others, they may justly be suppressed, but not before. They may, in certain instances, be huge mistakes. They may react to the injury of the workman. But it is not the business of government to defend him against his blunders in political economy more than to furnish him bread. He must instruct himself by thought and experience, as he must feed himself by his industry.

By the present common-law of England, if the workmen of a factory agree to work only upon such terms as their body may determine, they are doing what is unlawful. Their agree ment is void, and all that depends upon it. Therefore, if they form a mutual aid society, with sickness and burial funds, and with a fund to support them while waiting for their terms work to be accepted, and the funds are stolen, they can not sue the thief. If those who have agreed not to work, except upon cer-tain terms, attempt to hold their fellows to their engagement without any specific breach of law, they are liable to punishment for a misd meanor. Then comes the statute law which nonishes "intimidation." "molestation," or obstruction," leaving those elastic terms to be interpreted by judicial authority; and that has already decided that the statute covers the following cases: respectful notice to an employer that his workmen will leave at the end of their contract, unless a certain workman is dismissed; to tell a workman that he will be considered "a black;" to shout, "Bas, bas, black sheep!" to workmen going to a shop; to tell a workman that if he goes to work "there will be a row;" coercion not extending to abusive language or gestures; a public notice to workmen not to engage with a particular mester. These are exceptional crimes for workmen only; and it is not surprising that the common-sense of England demands a

· According to Mr. FERDERIC HARRISON, to whom we owe these facts, the present bill, which was prepared by Mr. Thomas Hughes and Mr. MENDRELA, asks no new law whatever. It meroly proposes the removal of a bad old law. The ordinary law of assault remains untouched; and assault in law means to offer to do any bodily hurt, even by gesture, when the means of hurting are present; and an assent in pursuance of any conspiracy is still punishable by two years' imprisonment. The reform pro-posed, therefore, is twofold; it abolishes the interference of government in matters where it ought not to be felt, and it abolishes one form of class legislation. It is also a recognition of the Trades Unions, as entitled to the rights of all voluntary associations for legitimate purposes; and it is a renunciation of the right of government to regulate the methods by which those purposes shall be furthered, until the rights of others are actually infringed. It is, in fact, another of the measures by which radical changes are being peacefully accomplished

POLITICS MADE EASY.

A Lively gentleman in Buffalo, who signs himself "A Republican Office-bolder," has written a letter upon the relation of office-bolders to politics, which is very comical reading. "It is asking too much," he says, "of private citizens occupied by the cares of complicated business matters to be constantly attending to the details of political machinery. They do their duty when they give their sympathy, their money, and, at the proper time, their vote, and to others must be left the preliminary work." This is truly a labor-saving system. There are those, indeed, who suppose that the business of the custom-house and of the revenue officers is to collect the revenue, and of the United States. But this excellent correspondent corrects their mistake. The persons, he informs us, who are appointed to collect the customs and assess the taxes are also to nominate candidates for office, and we "private citizens" are to vote for them and to pay all expenses.

Nothing could be easier—for the managers. Of course the office-holders would do it all for love. They would have no private axes to grind. They would select all the candidates for their ability and honesty, and without the slightest reference to their friendship for the office-holders. There would be no understandings, no arrangements, no rings. A system in which the "Central Committees" dictated their subordinates to the office-holders, and the office-holders nominated the candidates for the Committees, would be plainly free from every kind of collusion, and the public service in the mean while would be immensely benefited.

The correspondent complains that the city papers ridicule the "energy, organization, and disinterestedness of all who subordinately work to sustain the party in power." But if by these fine words be meant such a system as be proposes, what is ridicule for except to expose it? The "private citizens" attending to their business justly expect the custom-house and revenue officers to attend to theirs. If it is desirable to have a certain number of persons to manage politics, let them be devoted to that business. But the officers of the United States are employed for other duties. "A Republican Office-holder" writes in good faith, and does not seem conscious that he is proposing the most stupendous system of political corruption. He would reduce Mr. Maxor's "spoils" theory to a science.

In one thing, however, we fully agree with him. "A man," he says, "who holds a government office, and faithfully performs its duties, is as honorable as if he were working for any other employer." Undoubtedly; and when he leaves those duties to manage politics for the rest of us, he makes the faithful performance of his duties impossible. He is undoubtedly to take his part with his fellow-citizens in the government. But he may be very sure that the State of New York will never be "redeemed" if the mass of "private citizens" care no more for its welfare than to vote for candidates of whom they know nothing but that they are nominated by those who are selfishly interested in the success of the ticket.

COOLIES.

A cooter is a Chinese slave, bound for a longer or shorter time, and in February, 1862, Congress very properly forbade the importation of coolies from China. This was done because the ceolie trade was already large and increasing; and one firm in California is understood to have imported more than 30,000 during the last eight years. This fact alone would go far to prove their value as laborers, which is, however, otherwise fully attested, the most interesting article upon the subject being one by Mr. Pumpelly in the Galaxy for July. The Chinese laborer, it appears by conclusive testimony, is industrious, docile, faithful, efficient, and works for small wages, as is to be expected of those who can live at home upon two dollars a year. In the Flowery Kingdom of more than 200,000,000 inhabitants, which it is supposed might be conquered by an army of 50,000 | tary and unofficial, the adoption of a resolution trained European soldiers skillfully led, there is, of course, an exhaustless supply of such laborers : and, as Mr. Anams well says, when we break down the Chinese wall to let ourselves in we let them out.

A person named Koopmanschaar, a Hollander by birth and a coolie contractor, was recently the lion of a day in New York, hav-ing previously been the hero of the Memphis Convention which assembled to devise means of supplying the Southern States with labor. The sentiment of the Convention seems to have been expressed by Mr. J. W. Charr, who remarked that "the South" did not wish European laborers, as they wanted to own while, in his opinion, "the South" preferred labor that could be managed "as of In other words, be thought that "the South" wanted an ignorant, brutish, servile population of laborers, instead of intelligent, industrious, self-respecting workmen. KOOPMANSCHAAP was evidently the right man to gratify such a desire. In reply to the ques-tion of a reporter in New York, the coolie contractor said that in the Southern States "nothing but coerced labor will bring about pros-perity." Mr. KOOPMANSCHAAP had apparently overlooked the law of which we spoke, and which forbids any citizen or foreign resident in this country to prepare any kind of vessel for the purpose of bringing coolies "to be dis-posed of, or sold, or transferred, for any term of years or for any time whatever, as servants or apprentices, or to be held to service or la-Of course the law does not forbid free and voluntary emigration.

The inducements for honest emigration to this country are so palpable and persuasive, the flood is always sure to be so large, and the difficulties incident to a rapid increase of the resident foreign population in the present circumstances of the country are so evident, that nothing is more imperative than the prevention of this illicit emigration. America has an endless welcome for the industrious laborer who comes hither to secure larger opportunities for himself and his children, but no country welcomes an inundation of foreign barbarism. Nothing, indeed, can be more absurd or more characteristic than the resolutions of the Democratic Convention in California virtually denouncing the Chinese laborers who have been brought here; for they are innocent, and the resolutions merely stimulate a local hostility already enough inflamed. Besides, the Chinese movement has begun, and will not be stayed. The wise course is to restrain it within its natural limits by rigidly preventing the opening of a new slave-trade under the name of encouraging emigration.

Meanwhile any artificial and immense increase of a population in the Southern States which, as Mr. Koopmanschaar remarks, must supplant the colored laborers, with the probae annexation of Cuba and a million and a half of Spanish ereoles and slaves, opens a prospect which need dismay no one, but which is not necessarily delightful. It is not the number of the population but its quality that makes a great nation; nor do abundant labor and cheap wages announce an imminent millenni-The power of assimilation of a nation like ours is indeed immense; and all that can be asked is that it be reasonably treated,

FALL TRADE.

Important and jobbers are now removing from the floors their spring goods, and those for the fall are taking their place. The total imports for the month of July of dry-goods amount to nearly eight millions of dollars as against about seven millions for July of last year. Of last month's importation about three-eighths were entered for warehousing and the balance for consumption. The importations of dry-goods for the first seven months of the year amount to about fifty-seven and a half millions as against nearly forty-five millions for 1868. These values are estimated in gold, exclusive of freight and duty, which probably amount to about six-ty-five per cent. It will be seen, therefore, that portion of which is sent here on foreign account -can not be expected.

No deficiency is looked for in the quantity of domestic dry-goods, with the exception, perhaps, of cotton fabrics, which are beld firmly on account of the low stocks of raw cotton both here and abroad. The stock of cloths is increasing again, although some of the manufacturers continue on short time; but as the new croy will begin to come forward in October, it is supposed that work will be generally resumed in the fall. Cotton came forward last year late in September, but crops generally are not as early as they were then.

The cable telegram of July 30 states that the "Cotton Supply Association have adopted a resolution looking to the speedy development of railways in India in order to facilitate the exportation of cotton from that country. This course was taken in consequence of the insufficieucy of the supply from the United States. The stock of American cotton is not large enough to keep the mills of Lencashire fully engaged."

As the Cotton Supply Association is volun-

for the development of railways would amount to no more than a recommendation on the sub-It is the India Board which must act ject. upon the question before any thing effectual can be done. We have from time to time given accounts of the proceedings of the Cotton Supply and other private associations; and although they possess great interest, and perhaps may be relied upon to show a present deficiency in the quantity of raw cotton necessary for the manufacturing establishments of the world, their action does not deserve to be telegraphed over the United States, and may be attributed to cotton

Whether or not the price for our cotton fabrics will be maintained depends upon the time at which the full trade will be active. If activity shall not commence till late in August the market is almost certain to be, as the dealers express it, "soft;" but there are indications of an earlier and a considerable demand. The crops over the United States are tolerably good, and there is no apprehension of any important change in the money market. Money, however, is not abundant among the farmers, and they seem disposed to exercise a corresponding

The reason for this closeness in money is very apparent. The Southern people have taken away a large amount of legal tenders-the erofits of their cotton crop for 1868-69; and as this crop has produced a substantial addition to their wealth, the money will be retained to answer the numerous purposes of their improved situation. They will be the purchasers in our market for the numerous articles required on their plantations; and their strength will contribute to that of the whole country, and will be halled with real satisfaction.

The progress of the English in aiding the cultivation of cotton in India, by providing railroads for its export, can not be effectual for several years; and it may therefore be assumed that the Southern planters will enjoy remunerating prices for raw cotton.

We have endeavored to show that the true policy of the English is to abandon their attempts to add to the quantity in India, and to rely more, if not mainly, upon this country, on the ground that the climate of India is not perfectly adapted to the purpose, while that of the Southern States is exactly what the cultivation requires; and it would be competent for the South, but for the anxiety produced by opposition, to grow enough of the raw material to supply the mills of the world, and, when cultivated to this extent, competition would insure reasonable prices.

The efforts of the English in thus encouraging India, founded as they unquestionably are on a supposed insufficient supply, justify the South in proceeding with this culture to an increased extent, as it is not probable that the time will soon be reached when the quantity will be much above the wants of the world, only with respect to cotton, but also as to grain, the English expect that the producer will meet them in the Liverpool and London markets, and they feel so outraged at having to seek and pay liberally this year for cotton that they see making unusual, but they will be fruitless, ef-forts to produce enough in India to enable them to command the whole market.

The reduction of the rate of interest to 3 per cent, by the Bank of England is an indication that business has not resumed sufficient activity to employ the bulk of the capital at home, and inasmuch as the crops of grain are not promising, and manufacturing industry, particularly in cotton goods, is not profitable, the re-sumption of business on a scale to require an inconvenient amount of gold from this country may not happen in time to interfere with bonds was taken abroad on the last days of July, and the exchange was sold by cable trans-

The movements of Mr. Bourwell have given improved standing to our securities in foreign markets, and they have reached the highest quotations known since the war. But imports made by no abproceeds are applied to what we consume; and the result will be, that, instead of imparting strength, we shall presently be obliged to ship more specie than would otherwise be required. It is exceedingly difficult, so long as we have a much larger amount of paper-money in proportion to the number of our population than any commercial nation permits, or than we had before the war, to have any substantial advantage from the sale of our securities in foreign markets—such is the extravagance which attends excessive issues of paper. But yet a contemporary urges in a mercantile journal that gold and silver shall hereafter be treated merely as articles of commerce; and that paper-money, not re-deemable in the precious metals, but convertible into bonds and the bonds into them, shall constitute the sole money of the United States. No greater delusion than that paper-money not instantly redeemable in coin can be permanently relied upon was ever indulged in, but yet the policy has had its advocates ever since the time of Law and his grand speculations, which in-volved thousands in ruin. There being no probability of the adoption of this monstr scheme, the trade of the country will not be affected by the proposition.

It would appear, therefore, that we enter upon the fall trade without any serious embar-rassments present or immediate, foreign or domestic, and with the advantage which results from the promise of reasonable crops in all parts of the Union.

NOTES.

THE French cable has been landed at Duxbury, with a modest salvo of speeches, and the President and the Emporor have exchanged con-gratulations. The message of his Majesty, whose other enterprises upon this continent, such as the dissolution of the Union and the Mexican empire, have woefully miscarried, was very formal. The response of the President was cordial and The response of the President was cordial and becoming, containing a courteous allusion to the liberal policy of the United States in permitting the landing. That liberal policy is reciprocity; and we trust that, if the Emperor does not mod-ify the monopoly which he or his legislature has granted to the managers of the cable, this enter-prise also will miscarry. It is very desirable to have another cable to Europe, but it is still more desirable not to have it upon disastrous terms.

SIR CHARLES W. DILKE has presented the petition of 25,000 women to Parliament asking for the franchise. This, however, is not the whole number of Englishwomen, and we presume therefore that it will have no weight with those who are willing to do something whenever "the wo-men themselves" wish it and ask for it. If in the ancient days Mr. Summen had presented the pe-tition of 25,000 slaves asking for their personal freedom the Senate would not have granted its prayer, but the fact would have been very imposing and significant; and if next December Mr. Janekus should present the position of 25,000 citizens asking for a reform in the Civil Service it could not be said that the country de-manded it, but it would be a very decided symptom. Let us hope that those who are waiting for the women to ask will see in the petition of 25,000 women at least the parting of the lips preparatory to the question.

GREAT railway companies will of course continue to roast passengers at their pleasure, but does a citizen lose all rights whatever merely because he pays a round sum for his transportation Are we not only to be mangled and fractured and roasted, but must our families also be deprived of all knowledge of our number? A correspondent of the Times asserts that two dis-patches addressed to Mrs. HALLECK, the widow of one of the victims at the late Mast Hope mesupon the Eric Road, were not even for warded. The Times remarks that it has heard before of similar incidents upon the same road, and adds that it is always difficult to get a telegraphic message sent from any point where an accident has occurred. This is both outrageous and amusing. It is an outrage that a company should try to concoal the accident, but it is even more amusing that the public should submit to it. We shall be surprised and consider it quite unbecoming the enterprise of the direction of the Eric Rond, which Governor HOPPMAN has, with characteristic "Defluerney," continued in office for a term for which they were not elected, if they do not vindicate their independence of com-mon humanity still further. Let them arrange to roast ten passengers a week upon the cele-brated Delaware Division—the ria mair of the beated Delaware Division—the rio mais of the road—and then require the survivors at the end of the journey, under pain of a similar fate, to sign a certificate expressing their admiration of the scrupulous care, intelligence, and honesty with which the road is managed. There is no reason whatever to suppose that it would not be done. A public which patiently submits to the burning of travelers alive will hardly object to exponenting their executioners. exonorating their executioners.

We read with great edification the discussion in the Convention of Christian Young Men at Portland upon the question of the Christianity of Unitarians; and we observed that, after settling that point, the Convention appointed among the chief officers of the Association Mr. Frank W. Ballarn, of New York. It was the next day, we believe, that the sad and surprising an-nouncement of his defalcation was published; and then came the astonishing statement that he had lost the $68,000 in stock speculations, but had appropriated nothing to his private use, and that he was "at his home in Connecticut, and, it is said, is deeply mortified at the position in which he finds himself." This is too melanoboly which he finds himself." This is too melanoboly for comedy; but we presume the facts have al-ready suggested to the intelligent members of the tion a suspicion that it is hardly worth while to pronounce upon the religious character of strangers when they may be so profoundly mistaken in that of members of their own house-For we shall not accuse them of trusting the old plea that the crimes of the Pope were the s of the man and not of the Holy Fathe They will not have forgotten the trenchs

Twe Board of Education in this city have re-The Board of Education in this city have received and are considering a very important report from Mr. Maowus Gaoss upon the ventilation of the public schools. Mr. Gross is a gentleman who is able to express positive convictions in the most unmistakable language, as those know who, in the Constitutional Convention, heard his plea for equal suffrage, and his denunciation of the Metropolitan police when executing the Excise Law. Mr. Gnoss recently defended classical studies in the College of the City of New York against the valuement assult of Mr. Natharies. Same; and whatever be undertakes he executes with energy, ability, and intelligence. Mr. Gaoss protests against the suf-focation of the children in the public schools, and all honest citizens will sustain him. Most of our halls are pest-houses in this respect, and it is shameful that we should compet children to sit for hours in a poisonous atmosphere. The case needs no argument, and the Board of Education could no more satisfactorily prove its efficiency than by radically reforming this evil. If, how-ever, is should not be reformed, we hope that Mr. Gaoes will report to the public.

How the heart warms to a hero! And al-though, as Mr. White tells us in his "Age of Burlesque," it is the fashion not to express emotion, we defy any one not to exclaim with admiration when he sees, not in famous verse but in the blurred small type of a newspaper, the de-scription of an incident that recently occurred scaption of an increase that recently occurred bear Malone, in New York, upon the Ogdens-burg Bailroad. The train was coming on at full speed when the engineer saw a child of two years' upon the track. He sounded the whis:le for the brakes, and the mother ran screaming to save her child; but the fireman, W. LAYANWAT, see-ing that she would be too late jumped from the locemotive, and running shead, snatched the lit-tle one from the track just as the keomotive was about to crush him.

IN Mr. WHITE'S article, of which we just spoke, he calls the London Saturday Review spoke, he calls the London Saturday Review
"the greatest literary power among Englishspeaking men." His assertion upon such a subject is certainly very weighty; but we doubt if it would be generally accepted as true by the best judges in this country. Whether he means that its criticisms are more stared, in the manmer of the old Blackwood, or more influential, we should chirch his weights mich. we should think his verdict might be successfully disputed. There is, indeed, a certain sparkling persifinge in the tone of the Saturday Review as well as great knowledge and evident culture in many of its articles; but we are very sure that any really eminent American author would much more dread the censure and enjoy the praise of the Formishily Review, for instance, which speaks to a smaller audience, but expresses the thought that really moulds the England of to-day.

The Pennsylvania Registry law has been sus-tained by the court of last resert, to the great satisfaction of all who honestly wish to do something to secure the purity of the ballot-box. Judge Sitanswoop opposed it upon the ground that it destroyed the freedom and equality of elections, which the State Constitution guarantees. Judge Agraw conclusively disposed of this shallow subtenfuge by asking to whom are the elections free? "They are free only to the qualified electors of the Commonwealth; clearly they are not free to the unqualified..... It is the duty of the Legislature to secure freedom and equality by such regulations as will exclude the unqualified and allow the qualified only to vote." Judge Aonew then adds, in words that have pungent meaning in Pennsylvania and New York, and for which every good citizen in the land will thank him :

"It is true there is a kind of liberty this Registry law will destroy. It is that licenticeness, that adul-terous freedom which surrenders the polls to hirelings and vegsbonds, outcasts from home and honest in dustry, men without citizenship or a stake in the sovernment, men who will commit perjury, violence, or marder licels."

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

A versure accident occurred on the Memphis and Louisville Esilence at a point eight miles from Clarksville, Tennessee, July 28. In crossing the bridge or treatle over Budd's Creek, the greater part of the structure gave way. The entire train was peccipitated into the bed of the creek from an altitude of about thirty feet. Four persons were killed outright, and from forty to fifty were more or less seriously injured. The train consisted of locomotive, caboose, express and baggage car, two passenger coaches, and one sleeping our, all of which were dashed almost to splitters, and afterward, with the exception of the sleeping-car, suitrely destroyed by fire. The loss of property amounted to $200,000.

Hos. Issue Toucey died at Hartford on the morning of July 50.

Hos. Issue Toucey died as assessed on the Solid St. O'July 36 a severe earthquake shock was experienced at Meraphia, Tennessee, accompanied by a nectoorie above.

The farms along the entire breadth of the valleys of the Colorado, Brazos, and Guadaloupe Rivers, in Texas, have been entirely swept away by the recent floods. The estimated damage on the Colorado alone is not see.

FOREIGN NEWS.

FOREIGN NEWS.

We learn from Liverpool that the Cotton Supply Association have adepted a resolution looking to the speady development of railways in India, in order to facilitate the expertation of cotton from that country. This course was taken in consequence of the insufficiency of the supply from the United States. The stock of American cotton is not large enough to keep the mills of Lancashire fully engaged.

James Gordon Bennett, Jun., has been elected a member of the Royal Yacht Cinh.

A man has recently committed encide in England, upon whose body were found securities stolen from the Ocean Hank.

The Irish Church bill has been signed by Queen Victoria, and has thus become a law.

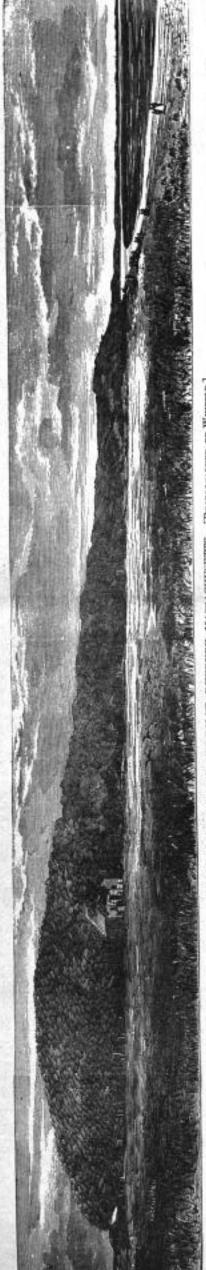

The University of Oxford has conferred upon Henry W. Longfellow the degree of Doctor of Laws.

The British House of Commons has refused to sholish the death-penalty.

All Spaniards between the ages of fifteen and sixty in the jurisdiction of Trinidad, Cuba, have been ordered to duly by the Governor. Those if for active service are to be sent to tap field or placed in the reserve corps, and those unfit are to garrison the towes.

A French paper, the Fatric, state that the political reforms soon to be proposed to the Bernate will be more Remain than the Emperor's message to the Corpe Legislictif intimated. Among other changes, it is thought that the stiftings of the Senate will be made public.

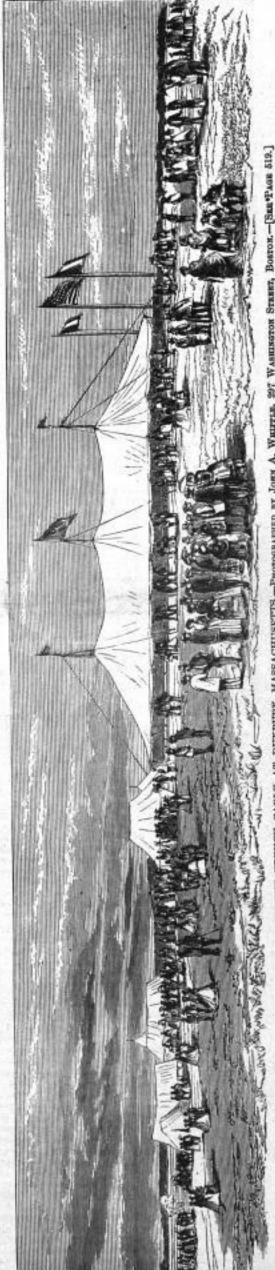

The estimates for the cost of the Spanish Government in Cuba decing the month of August have been fixed at $5,50,500.

LANDING OF THE FRENCH CABLE AT DUXBURY, MASSACHUSETTS.-[PROTOGRAPHED BY WRIPPLE.]

HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW.

HENRY W. LONGFELLOW.

Now that LONGFELLOW—the most popular of American poets—is in England, the question is naturally asked, What do Englishmen think of him? In reply it may be said that LONGFELLOW is, in England, more popular than TENNY-SON. It is also true that TENNY-SON is more popular in this country than LONGFELLOW. This seems strange at the first glance; but the reason is obvious. Lossawellow's poems are cheaper in England than here; and Tennyson's may be bought here at a nominal price as compared with their cost to the English reader. Is there not here a strong argument against an international copyright, which would exclude both Tennyson and Lossawellow from the poorest classes?

Henry Wadsworth Lossawellow was born at Portland, Maine, February 27, 1807. He is now, therefore, nearly sixty-three years old. His father, the Hon. Stephens Lossgellow, was an eminent lawyer. He entered Bowdoin College at the early age of fourteen, and during his course he gave evidence of those abilities which have given him such high distinction both as a scholar and a poet. Among his productions at this period may be mentioned his "Hymn of the Moravian Nuns," "The Spirit of Poetry," "The Woods in Winter," and "Sunrise on the Hills." After his graduation he seems to have had some vague idea of adopting the legal profession. But a more congenial occupation offered. He was appointed Professor of Modern Languages and Literature at Bowdoin College, with the privilege of residing some years abroad. In 1826 he sailed for Europe, and during that and the two following years he made a tour through France, Spain, Italy, and Germany. He returned home in 1830, and entered upon the duties of his Professorship, which he held for five years, when he accepted a similar position in Harvard College, succeeding Mr. GEURGO TECKNOS. He, in 1835 and 1836, made another European tour through Denmark, Sweden, Holland, Germany, and Switzerland. In 1854 he resigned his position, and has since resided at Cambridge.

switzerand. In 1835 he resided at Cambridge.

In 1835 he pethished his "Outre-mer," followed by "Hyperion," in 1839. His "Voices of the Night," published in 1839, first gave him an extended reputation as a poot. These were followed by "Ballads, and Other Poems" (1841); "Poems on Slavery" (1842); "The Spanish Student" (1843); "Poets and Poetry of Europe" (1845); "The Belfry of Bruges, and Other Poems" (1846); "Evangeline" (1847); "Kavanagh," a novel (1849); "Seaside and Fireside" (1850); "The Golden Legend" (1851); "The Song of Hiawatha" (1855); "The Wayside Inn" (1863); and "The New England Tragedies" (1868). Besides these, a number of poems from his pen were scattered over numerous periodicals.

The tendency of Lossgruzzow's poetry, like that of Gorties, is for the most part objective, dealing with things of real existence, or such as may be conceived to exist outside of the poet's mind; it is therefore healthy and cheerful. We all know "The Village Blischsmith;" and the man who hears it well sung may feel himself a stronger and happier man than before. This is what the genuine poet can do for mankind—to create, and to impress forever upon that memory of the heart, which is called imagination, some true type of our common humanity, in the recognition of which we forget and forgive each private grief, as we feel "the whole world kin." Who can not sympathize with the blacksmith? We see him bravely standing at his forge, "week in, week out, from morn till night;" and, with his heavy hammer, heating on the anvil, in a storm of sound and flame and flying sparks, to shape the work of his life:

"His boow is wet with honest sweat, He earns whate'er he can; And he looks the whole world in the face, For he owes not any man!"

We see him again on the Sunday morning, in the gallery at church, with his boys; "he hears the parson pray and preach," but he also hears his little daughter in the choir, "singing with her mother's voice;" and the blacksmith's hard, rough hand wipes a tear of sweet sorrow from his honest eves:

Has earned the night's repose;"
In his discursive prose essays and romances, "Hyperion" and "Outre-mer," we may observe his ubiquitous scholarship of the different European languages and their legends. The Rhineland and the old cities of Germany; the old provinces of France, the Netherlands, Switzerland, Spain, and Italy; Sweden, Norway, and Denmark, including Iceland, are made the alternate houses of his traveling Muse. She nevertheless comes faithfully back to Massachusetts, and there sits down to relate some characteristic tale of the Pilgrim Fathers, the Puritans of the old colonial time, or the sturdy patriots of the American Bevolution. The educated New Englander is thus a cosmopolitan, or complete humanist, in his range of intellectual sympathies. Mr. Longuitous is, indeed, as one might say, an omnivorous translator of foreign poetry and adapter of foreign themes. These versatile performances do not much concern our estimate of his merits as an original poet. His versions from the French, German, and Italian are usually both more accurate and more graceful than any versions of the same texts by another hand.

the same texts by another hand.

In that unique mythological epic of the North American Indian heroic age, the romantic poem of "Hiawatha," with its masterly appropriation of a large store of ethnological learning, he has produced a charming poem and an instructive monoment of human life. The first reading is seldom quite satisfactory. One is teased by the amhittude of queer, ordinadish names; the frequent repetition of phrases and epithets, as in Himmer; and the peculiar versification, an unrhymed octosyllabic chant, which resembles, in its lilting strain, the rude metrical compositions of the old Anglo-Saxon form of our language. But we seen become aware, upon a second reading, that the rhythmic cadences of "Hiawatha," whot run lightly and trippingly off the tongue, are perfectly musical; the strange words are explained by their immediate context; while the air of more than rustic, more than boyish aimplicity, given by the artiess mention of so many unessential details, is found at last not more wearisome than in the "Hiad" and "Odyssey" of the immortal Greek. The poet who speaks to us here is not the highly educated Professor of Harvard University, but the unlectured Indian singer NAWADAHA, dwelling in the Vale of Tawarentha, and warbling "his native wood-notes wild" as freely as those he heard from the birds of the forest primeval, or in the moortands and the fetdands, and on the shores of the Great Lakes:

大···

"Whence these legends and traditions, With the odors of the forest, With the dew and damp of meadows, With the curling smoke of wigwams, With the rushing of great rivers, With their wife reverbeations, As of thunder in the mountains?"

In order to enjoy this noble poem we must exert the active faculty of imagination. We must try to feel in ourselves what the poor savage Ojibbeways and Dacotahs must have felt, supposing them to have really been favored by divine appointment with an inspired chief of their race; a demi-god, a son of the west wind, sent to be their leader and teacher; one accredited by miraculous signs and gifts of power, and enlightened by a special revelation of heavenly wisdom. Such is Hiawatha; the bravest, kindest, strongest, and eleverest of men; the best of friends, the best of lovers and husbands, the darling of Nature; the comrade of all living creatures, talking with every beast and bird; the valiant champion, the author of laws and learning, of arts and manners; yet still a mortal, heir to all human sorrows; and doesned to vanish mysteriously from among his people when he had welcomed the advent of the first Christian civiling mission.

yet still a mortal, heir to all human sorrows; and doomed to vanish mysteriously from among his people when he had welcomed the advent of the first Christian civilizing mission.

The story of "Evangeline," belonging to the history of the French colonists in Nova Scotia, has a gentle pathetic interest, which tends, with the refined purity of sentiment, the grace of innocent maidenhood, and harmless, guileless rural life, the tender affections of the heroine, and the descriptions of American scenery, to make its perusal very agreeable. But it seems ever haunted, like that of "Hiawatha," by an air of mortal sadness, which breathes the spirit of humility and resignation, not the spirit of despair. Listen to the mouraful refinin:

"While from its rocky caverns the deep-voiced neigh-

"While from its rocky caverns the deep-voiced neighboring ocean Speaks, and in accents disconsolate answers the wall of the forest."

wall of the borest.

The remembrance of this plaintive note besets us all the way, as we follow the wandering pair of lovers, in their ever-failing pursuit of each other, from north to south, and from east to west, and back again, from the far west, to the city of Penn the apostle, till they find rest in the little Catholic church-yard behind the crowded street. As in a grand diorams of the greatly-diversified scenery of North America, the descriptive passages of this beautiful poem unfold in succession before our eyes the Atlantic shores of a cool and temperate region, between forest and sea, inhabited by farmers, woodsmen, and codfishers; or the broad-spreading Mississippi, in its lower course, beneath a semi-tropical sky, with cotton-trees, or groves of crange and citron, growing on the banks; with cypresses or cedars on the higher ground, and with flocks of pelicans wading in the tepid lagoons; or the pathless, endiess, expanse of the vast Western prairies, with their "billowy bays of grass ever rolling in shadow and sunshine," bedeaked with an infinite variety of brilliant flowers, the haunt of buffalo herds, of the elk, the wolf, the wild horse, and the vulture; or the deep ravines and gorges of the Rocky Meantains, which lift their jagged tops above perpetual snows. Mr. Longenthow has certainly done his best to sing the picturesque features of his mighty mative land.

Another good example of his poetical patriotism is "The Courtship of Miles Standish," which Another good example of his poetical patriotism is "The Courtship of Miles Standish," which is a narrative in the same style and metre as "Evangeline," a stouter, manlier, and livelier tale, if not so delicately sweet. This story, too, is founded on fact, belonging to the early years of the Puritan settlement at Plymouth, in Massachusetts Bay. The character of the brave, honest, headstrong, angry, and sometimes ridiculous Englishman, a soldier of freedom with the experiences of a soldier of fortune, is worthy to have been drawn by Sir Walters Scott. That of the true English maiden Priscilla, with her delightful frankness and archness, her womanly indignation at the clumsy manner of his wooding, and her undisguised liking for John Alden, is worthy of companionship with Mistress Anne Page. Any artist who wants a pretty subject for a charming little picture of figures in a woodland scene may be advised to try his hand at one of John Alden leading the white built, with his bride seated on a crimson cushion and saddle-cloth, homeward on a wodding-day beneath the foliage of an American autumn, colored with the golden hoes of that clime and season.

In these last-mentioned poems Longrettow is characteristically American, both in the subjects selected and in his treatment of thom. His countrymen may well be proud of him.

SOUTHERN SENTIMENT.

THE REV. NEWHAR HALL well illustrates the sentiment of the Wade Hampton class of Southern citizens by the following anecdote:

In Electration of Southern sentiment, I will relate an incident which occurred in a railway car near Richmond. The Governor of Virginia, Mr. Pierpoint, had beepfably entertained me at his official recidence, and was excerting me to view the great hattle-field near Petersburg, where at length Grant broke through Lee's lines, at the distance of fifty miles from the Confederate capital. The Governor introduced me to a Southern planter and ciergyman, who was in the carriage, and who at once addressed me in a very accited manner and with loud tenes, so that he attracted the attention of upward of thirty people who were in the art, and became his audience. He at once plurged into the subject of the war; denouncing the Innkees, their folly in trying to educate the niggers, and the doings of the Freedmen's Aid Society; saying that the Routherners knew best how to treat their own servants, that they would not be interfered with, and that the Yankees should never govern them. He added, "I was a rebel—I've no applicy to make—I'm not sahamed of it—I avow it." I ventured to interpose the remark that at least he must admit that the conquerors ruled very mildly when an avowed rebel was allowed to talk so strongly against the Government in the presence of a promisenous company, and before the Governor braself. At this the planter became furious, and standing up at his atmost height, denothing his fast and shaking it at the Governor Pera as good as any Governor —I'm as gentleman of Virginia I' lie then went on to denounce Engiand, and said he hoped to see the day when the Republican movement would cross the Astantic, beaded by Yankee ginboats, and carrying devastation all round our costs. Buch a creased would make the North and the South one again. I said, "This seems hard. The North searcy with us because we sympathised with you; and you seem to give us no thanks for it, but hair us for our supposed good-will." "Yes, said be, "and it's the fiele of all trimmers. Why didn't you recognise us, and break the blockade? But, life al

AT SEA

Ws sail from the island (he, My love, slept all too sound To come with us to sea From the gardened burial-ground),

We travel the various earth,
We tarry a little while
And go—in his death and birth
He is claimed for her own by the isle.

On its hills he opened his eyes,
And their shapes seemed strange and bright,
Sinking beneath the rise
Of the sudden and ruthless night.

His eyes looked up to these grown Grave faces of ours, the flower Of life that was overblown Grew sweet as a rose in a shower.

Our lives held his like the woods Hold hirds in the summer days, Stirred with their singing moods, Traversed a thousand ways.

But the rain is dried in the rose, And the song has ceased in the trees, And the petals cleave and close, And the forest is ill at ease.

When the noon is flooded with light, One cloud, no more than a hand, Hides half the heaven from sight, And makes a shadowy land.

To our knees in the world's fair walk Bloom flowers, but we pass by them To gather the broken stalk, The snapped and the headless stem.

We look down into the deep Of days as for something lost, We start from the restless sleep Of night by the same dream crossed.

The grasses over his head In a small wave rise and meet, As water under the tread Life gave to his little feet.

He sleeps, we wake for a time; But our sleep shall be as long; Some raining of pleasant rhyme, Some chining of gracious song.

Ah, well! we sail to the east, The day goes down on our track, When your love-soft eyes have ceased From longing and looking back;

Turn round, I am here, be brave!

Nor murmur of happier fates,
Lock over the uncut wave!

Look on to the white-cliffed straits!

Take heart! keep courage! the skies, New ever us day by day, Stoop down their delicate dyes, But the sea is blue as they.

And whether by sea or shore
Two glad good things have we,
One sweet thought, and one more,
Thy love and mine for thee.

MY LOUISE. By JUSTIN M'CARTHY.

Bur yes! I have suffered much, soi, and have exten the bitter bread of exile, as Dante says it; but now it is not bitter any more, and I am very happy. I have lived nearly twenty long years in New York, and for ten years of that time I was more poor, look you, than one of Mürger's Bohémiens. And, tener, it is not so pleasant to be poor in New York as it is in the pleasant to be poor in New York as it is in the Quartier Latin. I did much complain myself at one time because one can not have the wine seed naire in New York unless he shall pay for one bottle more than would cost for a pleasant dinner near the Pautheon, Church of Sts. Geneviere now, bah! or even in the Palais Royal. I do not love the ale of Philadelphia, nor the lager-beer not the ale of Francuspies, not the Bourbon—that mounts to the head! Never any thing with the rame of Bourbon was to be trusted. We say, in my country, of the Bourbons, that they never learn any thing and never forget any thing. The Bourbon of New York makes people forget ev-ory thing and learn great many things one had better not know. No, the carries is not good here for the poor; and the beverages are—ah, well— detestable. Even a glass of the via blew of the old Quartier would have been a pleasant treat for me here in New York, not so long time ago. But now things are all different, and I can have the good Bordeaux when I will; and my daugh-ter is very happy, and her husband loves her; and I have such a charming little grand-daughter, and a great boy-a grandson. Yes, I am an exile, and I shall never perhaps see Paris any more; but the breed of exile is not bitter now, and I love America, and I am as happy as any worn-out old Republican can be who lives far from his own country and knows that it is under the sceptre of a tyrant.

I am an exile of 1848. I fought for the Ré-

I am an exile of 1848. I fought for the République Sociale et Démocratique; behind the barricades I fought for it; first against the tyranny of kings, then against the treason of egotistic and cellish, false Republicana. I fought for the cause of the proletaire. I am an old man, and I have memories. I have walked with Beranger in the alleys of the Luxembourg, and I have known Lafayette. I can remember to have seen Dumouries in London; and much later than that I have known Armand Cavier, and the great, good Godefrot Cavalgnac. All these were men, look you; though not all thought as I do, or would have flung up their chapener for the République Sociale at Démocratique and the cause of the proletoire. But Paris now! Grand Dibu, what a descent terrible! Tyranny of the bayonet; despotism of the cotillen! Heign of the gendarms and the cocotte! Nouvelle Babylonne, the brave Eugene Pelletan calls it. Nolonne, the brave Eugene Pelletan calls it. Nothing free but morals?

Well, pass from that. It is not worth the pain to any much of it. Let me tell my own little history. I left Paris when Louis Blanc and Victor Hugo and the rest found it right to leave it. I was not arrested—no one cared about me. I had my revenge when, from the deck of the steamboat leaving Calais, I waved my hat and cried Vice is Republique Sociale et Démocratique! I went to England—to London—but could not stay there. The heaven was all too dark; one saw not the asure sky nor the sun, but only fog; and my poor wife could not bear the heavy clouds and mists. We voyaged from Liverpool to New York. Par Dies, what a voyage! Seren, eight weeks on the ocean; and we were crowded up, my wife, our little daughter, and myself, with hundreds of strange men and women, emigré like ourselves. I tell you, it did try the souls of people! And we were sick, my wife and I, all the time—all the time. Eight weeks! To us it seemed more like eight years. But the days rull on, and the ocean; and one morning I hear a noise and commotion more than the ordinary on deck, and I mount there, very miserable—that goes without sevine—and I see the able—that goes without saying—and I see the shore, and I give a sigh, and say to myself, Enfin!

Then we live some time at Hoboken, and then in Brooklyn, and again in New York—in a street that debouches on Bleecker Street, which was then far up town, and did not have its present atmosphere of easpicion over it. I tried to teach French and Italian, and to translate for some of the journals; and my wife would give instruction in the music, and would also wash the chircts of gentlemen, and make the fine lineus and laces of the ladies look good as new. The music lessons did not bring great reward, and I did not for long time have many pupils to instruct in French. Some of the parents were a little, just a little, brutal, you know—no, I don't mean brutal in your some, but rather, perhaps I would say, brusque. Just a little brusque, yes; and when they came to speak of their children learning French from me, they would say they could not comprehend my English! Truly that was long ago. I have caltivated the English tongue since, I tell you. Wherever I go now they always believe that I am native of England—one true-born

John Bull.

Four years passed away, and my poor wife died. Ah, that was a hard proof, a heavy trial! Never had we had a word of quarrel—but once, only once. That is to say, once when we were very poor—ah, nearly to famishing, one might say; and I earned a little money by unexpected fortune one day—only a dellar or two—and brought home some milk and food for the infant, and a small morsel of meat—of tender-loin, you know—to nourish my wife. I made two portions of it, and one was larger, and—ah yes—we almost quarreled over it. For I had made the one portion larger that she might have it, and she would not, and she would put it on my plate, and I demanded had she forgotten her duty as wife, and would she not obey? and she said no, she had not forgotten her duty as wife, and would she not obey? and she said no, she had not doey; and we had a little argument; but after all it was not quite a quarrel, thank God!

I was left alone with my little girl. It was a

I was left alone with my little girl. It was a hard struggle. For years I did every thing for her; then she began to do almost every thing for me. She was a very pretty girl, my Louise—a charming girl, every body said. She is beautiful now—much more beautiful than ever, I think, with her two children at her knees. But it is certain that she was very pretty then, and she had many admirers, whom, however, she did not encourage. She was always sage and gentle, and she loved her father, and cherished always the memory of her mother. I am not what you call a pious man, I am sa pes Voltairean. I have seen so much of priesthoods at home that I am like the brave Swiss who excused himself for not climbing the hill on the hot day by saying he had seen tent des montagnes. But I have always taught my child to love the good God, and to have trust and faith in Him, and to cherish the memory of her mother, who has gone to heaven. For I believe in heaven. Were there no heaven, where now were my wife, after all her hard proofs and sufferances here below?

It seemed strange to me for a long time the liberty accorded to young girls in New York. In France the young girl never promenades alone; never is alone in a chamber for a moment even with her finned; never has any acquaintance except through her parents, and with their approbation, and in their presence. It seemed as if I was in some land of a wild race when I saw all the young girls circulate, without restraint through the promenades, talk with the young messicurs, accept and give invitations, and bear themselves in every way as if they were married women. Form to yourself some idea of my surprise when, one evening, having been invited by a kind pupil to a grand reception in Fifth Avenne, I saw a lady whom I knew to be a fills wearing diamonds! Nanasoins my daughter liked the ways of freedom very well; and I do not think the American denoteciles are less sage and virtuous than even our French girls, after all. Under this reign of liberty my daughter made many acquaintances, although she kept admirers at a distance, and she was much loved by parents, and had many invitations; and I was happy of it, for I feared that our life at home was colorless and triste for a young girl. Eh bies! it was when she was passing an hour at the house of a lady to whose daughter I gave lessons in French—I was beginning now to have many pupils—that she first saw a handsome young man, Biew-art Gardner, one of the jewness dords of New

It was not long after this that Stewart Gardner came to me to take lessons in French. My faith! I was a little astonished, for he spoke French so well. He said he desired to have the true Parisian accent. "Mousieur," I said, gravely, "o'est impossible. Only un Parisien can have the true Parisian accent. You will lose your time and your money." He smiled and said he did not hope for perfection absolute, but to approach a little nearer to perfection. I did these graves more to the control to the c then engage myself to do with him all that one could; and for an American his accent was not to despise. Truly, he had lived some years in Paris, and had been there more lately than I. But I engaged myself to improve his accent— and I did.

and I did.

When I told my Louise that evening she was not so glad as I had anticipated. She said, "Oh, papa, why does he come?" And I said, "But it is to acquire the Parisian accent, my child." "Oh, papa, don't!" "Don't what, child." "Oh, papa, don't!" "Don't what, petite!" "Don't have him coming here for lessons; he does not need any." "My dear, which is the better able to judge of his needs—you or "My dear, which he? Have you ever observed his accent in speak-ing French?" "Oh no, paps." "Well, then, what do you know? C'est fini." She only Assessed see speaks, and said no more. So Stewart Gardner came and took lessons; and I did perfection his accent very much; and be came often in the evening, and I played the violin for him, and told him of the Revolution, and sometimes my daughter would sing, and he would sing with her, and I grew to love him very much, and to be glad always when he came. I found afterward that he did sometimes chance to meet my Louise in the streets, and that they would promenade together; but this I did not then know of. If I had known of it I would have severely reasoned with her; because Scew-art Gardner was the son of rich parents, and would be rich himself, and my poor girl would have no dot but her virtue.

I was very blind. Perhaps that we are all blind when it acts of seeing our own daughters. I did not see that we petite and this youth were drawing every day closer and closer to each other. As I look back now I marvel where my eyemer for I see weed in memory hundreds of were, for I can recall in memory hundreds of traits and incidents which might have taught me that these two were in love. But then she was so wise and modest, and so loving to her father; and he was so loyal, frank, and honest that I could have suspected nothing. So they became lovers, and I never knew! One day I went out very much in the morning -very early, I would say. I did not return to my home until night. It was late in summer, and as I came up the street I looked for ms petite at the window, with her bright face among her flowers. She was not there! I entered our room; it was desert! All there seemed desolate! No sight of my daughter! Never, never before had I returned home after my day of la-bor and not found her there to give me a welcome! I was going to rush down stairs and ask the good woman who kept the house whether she knew any thing of my daughter, when my eyes turned to the chemisee, and I saw a letter there in her handwriting, and addressed "To my dear father." Think if I tore it open, and rend:

"Oh, my dear father! we love each other, Stewart and I, and can not live asunder! Forgive me that I leave you for a moment—only a moment. We could not selt your consent, because we feared your high, Parisian sense of honor would compet you to withhold your sanction from a step which to many eyes must seem calpable. But you will forgive us yet, and all will be happy.

Ever your devoted daughter, "Locus."

I dropped the paper on the floor. The cham-er seemed to revolve itself. My daughter had fled with Stewart Gardner-my poor, dear, de-ceived daughter was dishonored! Oh, my wife! Oh, mother of my infant! In the heavens above us, I thought, what canst thou say to the unthink-ing husband, the unwatching, blind father, who has allowed this calamity to fall on thy child?

I had no clew to where the fugitives had gone. I wandered about hopeless and wild for two or three days. I inquired at Stewart's house; I saw his parents. They were angry, hitter, fa-rious; and we only quarreled; and they were as ignorant as myself whither the hapless pair had ignorant as mysen wanner and took down a pair of fied! I went home, and took down a pair of near: I went home, and took down a pair of rapiers I had, and I felt a pleasure all grim and sangulnary as I looked at their points. Par Dieu, I am not yet so old! A vieux nowelacks can even yet do something. I can not save thee, my daughter; but I can avenge thee, or I can Thus I sat, evening after evening. Behold that one bright summer evening I heard on the stairs a step I knew too well. He has come, that one bright summer evening I heard on the stairs a step I knew too well. He has come, then, this insolent seducer, to defy me, or per-haps to buy me off with money! In New York, perhaps, they think all can be paid with their deested dollars!

-and behold Stewart Gardner The door openssmiling, though looking we peu abashed, and holding out his hand.

"You will forgive me," he said, "whatever others may do.

"Traitor, deceiver, coward, monster!" were my frantic words, and I sprang for my rapiers

He fell back astonished-as I then thought,

" I debe !" I cried.

"But, Monsieur, you surely are not serious?"

You are not so unforgiving for a little deception?"

"Coward, it must that we battle ourselves! We must cut the throats together! Take your weapon!"

But, good Heaven, Monsieur, will you not 'On guard, coward!"

"What on earth have I done?"

"Betrayed me! deceived me! betrayed and deceived my poor petite, my cherished Louise!"
"But this is madness! You can not believe it! Why, Monsieur, do you not know—

My rage only grew the more stormy as he spoke. I thrust a weapon into his hand; I struck him with mine across the breast; I cried to him that if he did not defend himself I would traverse him with my sword through There was now something like a the beart. smile on his lips, which truly inflamed me. I rushed at him. Were he not quickly on guard, credit me, he would have had my sword in his breast. But he sprang to defend himself with a celerity all marvelous.

That was a combat! Once I boasted myself to be a master of my weapon; and even still, look you, my arm is not quite weak, and my wrist has not lost its seeplesse. Mos Dies, I did my utmost possible to kill him! I almost shudder now when I think what in my madness I might have done! If I had killed him-ah, then what would have been left for me, miser-able, but to slay myself? Grace d Dies, I did not kill him, nor even inflict a wound on him. He had learned the use of his weapon in a good Paris school; and he had youth. His arm was supple, and his wrist was steel. He only guarded himself, and the more I grew hot the more did he grow cool. At last he met a wild advance of mine with a parry truly brilliant, and my sword flew out of my hand and dashed against one of the walls of our chamber.

the walls of our chamber.

He sprang at the weapon and seized it,

"Either kill me," I cried, "or let us still battle ourselves. It is always a combat à ostrance!"

"My good, dear Monsieur," he now asked, with a calmness all provoking, "what are we supposed to be battling ourselves for?"

"But, maileareau, do you pretend, then, not to understand the feelings of a father?"

"My faith. I profess so be all unable to un-

"My faith, I profess to be all unable to un-derstand the feelings of a father who seems to have set his heart on making his daughter a wid-ow before she has half passed through her month of honey.

widow! Have you not betrayed-"A widow! Have you not betrayed—"
"My dear father-in-law, how can you talk in such a way? If our darling Louise only heard you! It would bring the blash to her checks, matron though she be, I assure you."

"Then, Stewart—Stewart, mon goryon, Stew-art, my son—Louise and you are married?"
"Dear, Sir, what did you take us for—her or me? She is indeed Madame Stewart Gardner; and I only wish it were certain that she would come into better fortune by her marriage. But we trust to time to soften my people and reconcile them; and once they see my darling Louise they will love her just as her father and her husband do For the rest, we love each other, and you love us, and we can be happy, and wait."

"But why did you not tell me all this before now, my son?"

"Well, Louise wished at first to tell you. But then we know you were scrupulous and punctili-ous in the affairs of honor; and you might fancy that you were bound to withhold your consent, because of the reluctance of my parents; and we thought it better to say nothing, even to you, un-til the knot was tied and could not be untied."

"My Stewart, I am the most happy of men! Ah, if only my dear wife were living! But where is my ...ughter, my mgel Louise?"
"I thought she would have been arrived here

throught are would have, been arrived here before now. She will not be long. What would she have said, my father-in-law, if she had come in a few minutes ago, and seen you charging me, à brake-pourpoint, sword in hand? Eh, wox beanpere f

" Coquin, not a word of that to Louise! How could she ever forgive her father for raising harsen hand against the life of her husband? Of yes, you smile, because you think you were well able to defend yourself; but you must not to too arrogant in your victory, my son-in-law. 1 ad mit you can hold your sword well for at. American; but then you have been trained in the first schools of Faris."

You comprehend that I was not willing to allow my beas gargon of a son-in-law any triumph over my country, however he might triumph over myself.

Even while we were thus gayly talking, behold there comes a fron-fron of robes and jupon: up the staircase and into the chamber. And I start and turn round, and my eyes fill, and my limbe tremble, and for a moment I see nothing, but hear a voice that cries, "Oh, my dear father! but I And my Louise flings her arms round my neck; and first we cry, and then we langh, and then we cry again; and Louise embraces her husband and we are all as happy as the birds in the trees. I recover my breath, and look at Louise, and she is dressed like a grande dame! And I think to read her and her husband a lecture on economy, but I delay it for some time more favorable; and we begin to make arrangement for a joyous little souper. Ah, that night—but it was happy.

Many happy evenings followed. The parents of Stewart (inrefier were not bad persons au fond, but indeed all to the contrary; and they soon for-gave him his little escapade. M. Gardner pers came himself one day to see me in his carriage, and brought Madame his wife with him. They were a little nervous and abashed in manner at first, because they remembered how rude and insolent they had been to me; and the manners of the elder generation of Americans have not a quite Parislan grace. But I received them as a man who remembers not injuries, and we were soon warm friends. Medame Gardner had the grace to say that when she saw Louise she only marveled how her son had not married the dear child long before; and Monsieur Gardner, when parting, said to me :

"You must permit us to make you very happy, Monsieur. We are all happy now." "Monsieur," I reply, "I thank the good God, and you, and Madame your wife; and I am very happy. Hail Columbia!" happy. Hail Columbia!"

"Thanks," he answer, smiling. "Vive l'Em-

"Pardon, Monsieur," I say, gravely; "Vice ls République Sociale et Démocratique, if you

"Sir," be answer, "Vice any thing you like, only regard me as your warm friend; and come and dine with us a often as you can. I have dined with him often, and I have always been made welcome. I have seen how he and Madame his wife love and cherish my little Louise. And now Louise—who was a child the other day—has two infants of her own, and they are dearly loved by the parents of her husband. I scarcely feel my exile any more, although I grow old. Louise and her husband have been to Paris, but I think not not there are those and her all ones of the second. to go there any more. After all, one's country is where his child and her children are, and where the ashes of his wife repose, and where he hopes that some day his ashes may mingle themselves with hers.

RESCUED.

A rooms is sweeping a-down the street, With mien all rigid and ireful feet; Its eyes are a-dash with withering scorn, Its lips ourl high in the gray-lit dawn.

The figure is lithesome, the face is fair, And scattering from it is gold-brown hair: But ruffled and strayed are the garments wild, And bared arms are gripping a fear-waked child.

Fierce faming and glistened athwart the sky, And had had rang a passionate cry— "Of all ye base giri-men is there not one Will dare the bisse for the outcast's son?

"On shame! oh shame! when the mother is sped To soothe the mounters of shipwrecked dead? Oh shame on yet shame! shall her tapling die, And all ye cowards shuddering by?

"Will none of ye stir? Must be mine the arm? Mine the danger? Ye rickiese of harm? Oh dastarts "—and brave young footsteps had flows Through blinding fire they would enter alone.

And fleetly the figure holds to its quest, Clutching the babe to its awollen breast; it is heedless of taunt, its head reare high, lin cheeks burn blood-trimson wrathfully.

But lo! a-ment are the quivering eyes! Decoping the head: After it descries
The mother affright; and yielding at last,
When, bosom to bosom, death-chance is pu
The limbs full flexile, the terrs flow fast;
For 'tis a woman this, serving man,

Baring in peril, scoruful of ban; Woo ber! and win her! and wed—if you can!

LANDING OF THE FRENCH CABLE AT DUXBURY, MASS.

THE landing of the French Cable at Duxbury, Massachusetts, was colebrated with great enthu-siann by the citizens of that place, July 27. Sir James Anderson, Mr. Warson, and Mr. Brows were present as the representatives of the French Telegraph Company, and President Brassrow, of the State Senate, and Mayor SHUKTLEFF, of Boston, were among the others of note who took part in the festivities.

There was a battery down from Boston to fire the salutes, and a tent was erected on Abram's Hill, where dinner was served; and after the banquet a number of speeches were made by the most prominent gentlemen present. Duxbury is an old Puritan town, settled originally by the Plymouth colonists, and numbering among the names of its original settlers those of CARVER and BREWSTER, of STANDISH and BRADFORD, of Winslow and Alders. It is near to Ply-Louth Rock, so rich in lofty associations. In ago: 1s Clarke's Island, where the first New Englan's Sabbath hymn was sung-

When the stars heard and the sea,
And the scanding aleles of the dim woods rang
With the anthem of the free."

It is fitting that this spot should have been chosen for the American terminus of the French Cable. A message was received from the Present of Paris, which was replied to by hayor Sauar-Lers, of Boston. Our pictures on page 516 show the inoding of the Cable at Rouse's Hum-mock, and illustrate some features of the grand mock, and illustrate some feat of the grand celebration.

THE GRAND BALL AT LONG BRANCH

A PASHIONABLE ball at Long Branch is always a great event. There are half a dozen or more hotels filled with the votaries of fashion, who come to the beach not for health, not for relief from the tumult of city life, so much as because there they find a new field for display, a fresh season of excitement. Now a grand ball, under these circumstances, is just the thing. Hotel-keepers enjoy it, for they make money out of it. The ladies enjoy it, because bey have an opportunity to show themselves 'at their prettiest" with their splendid dresses and costly di monds. The gentlemen enjoy it in a lazy sort or way, especially if they are rich, or handsome, or can appear upon the committee list.

The fashionable world has its competitions, and they are not less acrimonious or less inter-esting to those engaged in them than are the strifes of politicians. Many a dandy prides himself as much upon his spotless white vest or his graceful dancing as Mr. SUMBER might upon his most elaborate periods. And do you suppose that the gentlemen upon the "Ball Committee" or the "Floor Committee" would change places, even if they were offered positions on Congressional Reconstruction Committee? abt it.

It can be imagined, then, what excitement was occasioned by the announcement of a hell at Long Branch, on the evening of July 26, in honor of President GRANT. The event took place at the Stetson House, and the entire es-tablishment was devoted to it. It was a grand affair. The President, of course, was there; and there were ex-Secretary Borne, General Sherman, General Sherman, and other prominent personages. The grounds about the hotel were illuminated with calcium lights, and the stream of fashion powed endlessly on and emp-tied itself out at the doors of the Stetson House.

tied itself out at the doors of the Church Education on page 520 shows the first dance. The President danced with Mrs. Boars, General Sherman with General Sherman's daughter, General Sherman with Mrs. Grant, General Comstock with his wife. After this General Comstock with his wife. After this dance President Grant became a martyr, as he has so often done before, and shook hands with about four hundred of the guests. Then the dance went on again. The President retired to a sofa, but General SHERIDAN took part in every dance. About midnight supper was served on a table 190 feet in length. The most prominent of the guests then retired, but others returned to the festive dance, and kept it up till morning.

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

"Withtam Street, what do you understand by an eclipso "

"An old race-horse, Sir."
"Silence I Jack, you are a scholar; what is an eclipse "

clipse I"

"An eclipse is a thing as appears when the moon ets on a bender and runs against the sun; conseinently the sun blacks the moon's face."

Pedagogue looks amazed. Dismisses the class.

Tue Batance or Narras ... It will be found, as a ule, that after "bot words" a coolness springs up.

A FRAGMENT.

Broke! broke! broke!
And "the world" has gone flown to the sea,
And I would that my wallet could furnish Wherewithal to transport thither ms.

Oh, well for old Spriggins's heir, He can drive with his chesteat and gray; Oh, well for old Robinson's son, He can sall in his yacht on the bay;

White a little only sits there, In his shop at the foot of the hill, And he says that I owe for the cost on my back. Well, I think I shall owe for it still.

Becke! broke! broke! Ob, wouldn't I go down to the sea, If the vanished stamps of a day that's dead Would only come back to me!

"As to being conflicted with the goat," said Mrs.
Fartington, "high living doesn't bring it on. It is incoherent in some families, and is handed down from father to som. Mr. Hammer, poor soul, who has been so long ill with it, disinherits from his wife's grandmother."

A young lady with a "switch" trailing fashionably down her back was somewhat startled, while waiting at a railroad depit the other day, by a kindly old lady who was not "up to the latest styles" approaching her and whispering. In a tone sudible all over the room, "Your back hair is coming down, Miss."

"Shut your eyes and listen mit me," said Unele Van Hayde. "Vall, de first night! I opens store I counts de mosies, and finds him nix right; I count him and dere be tree dollar gone; and vot do you tink I does den!" "I can't say." "V, I did not count him any more, and he come out shoost right ever since."

THE DOCTOR'S PRESCRIPTION FOR A LOQUA-

"Pray, doctor, give me, if you please, Some medicine for my disease: My health and courses all are gone, And I am weak and feeble grown."

The doctor felt her pulse, and said,
"There is no cause for fear or dread
You've no disease, be not distressed,
You need no medicine but rest."

*I've no disease! why, how you talk? Just see my tougue—it's white as chalk? Look at it, dector—look, indeed— And say in truth, what does it need?" "If you will keep it still and quiet, "Its all it needs: pray, Madam, try it.
You overtask it at the best,
And, like the body, that needs rest."

Many years ago Rensselser County was dependent upon Vermont for teachers of common schools. A promising young man from that State presented himself to the trustees of a school district, and was examined. He was asked, "How much would nine and three-quarters pounds of wheat flour bring at four-pence-halfpenny a pound?" He considered the question, existivating his head meanwhile with his fingernals, and at last answered that they never relacd wheat where he came from, and therefore he couldn't tell how much it would bring. The situation remained vacant.

TEN TROUSAND HANDS WANTED .- It wasn't such a had notice on the part of a glover who hang up in his shop the following placard: "Ten thousand hands wanted immediately."

Hoursculvenal Max.—The real gardener does not care to witness "the turning over of a new leaf"—when it is done by a caterpillar,

When is a man obliged to keep his word !-- When one will take it.

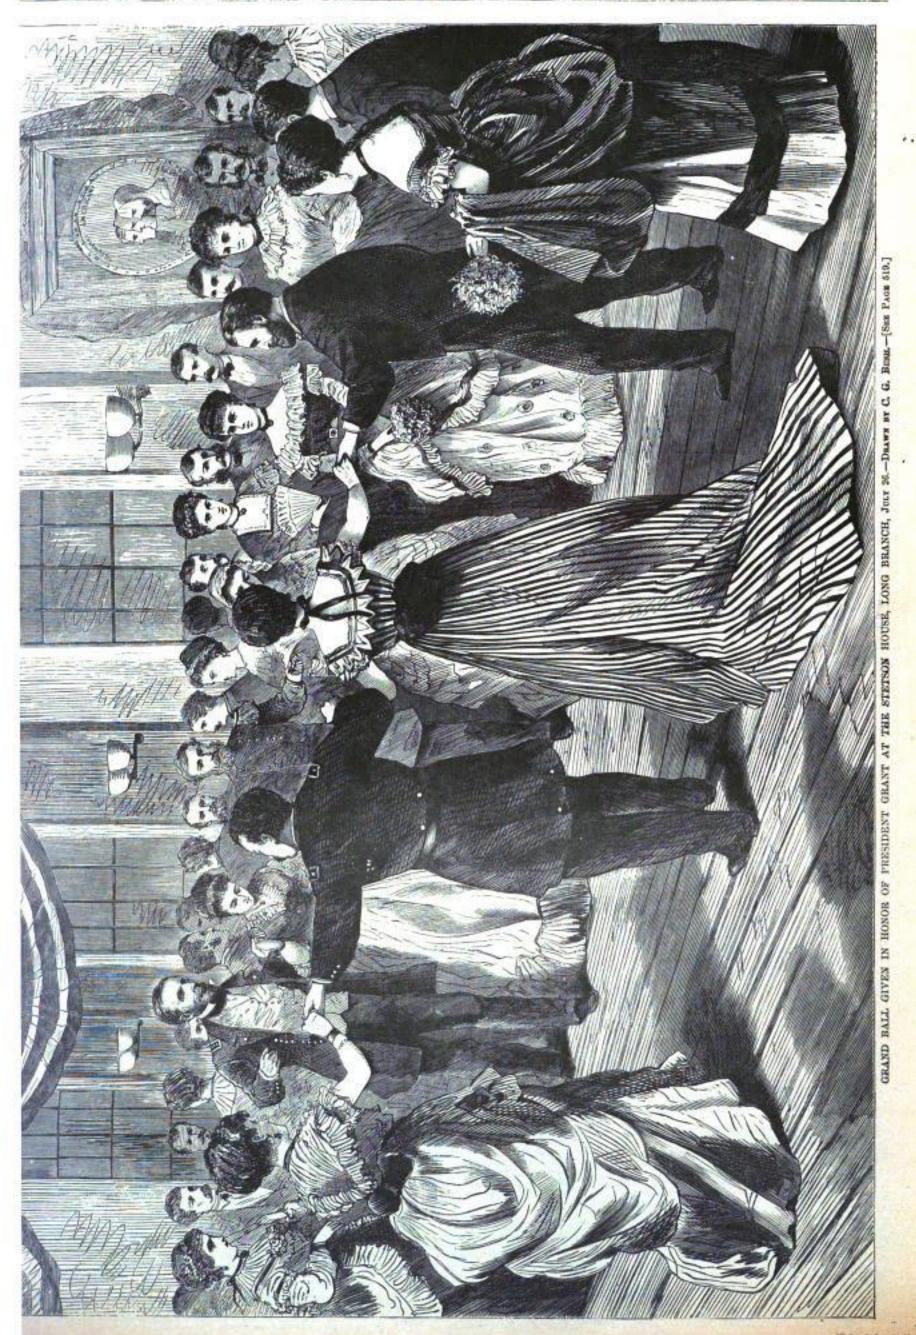

"I don't want mother to marry again," said a little boy one day at breakfast. "Why not?" was asked with some surprise. "Because," said he, "I've lost one father, and I don't want the trouble of gatting ac-quainted with another."

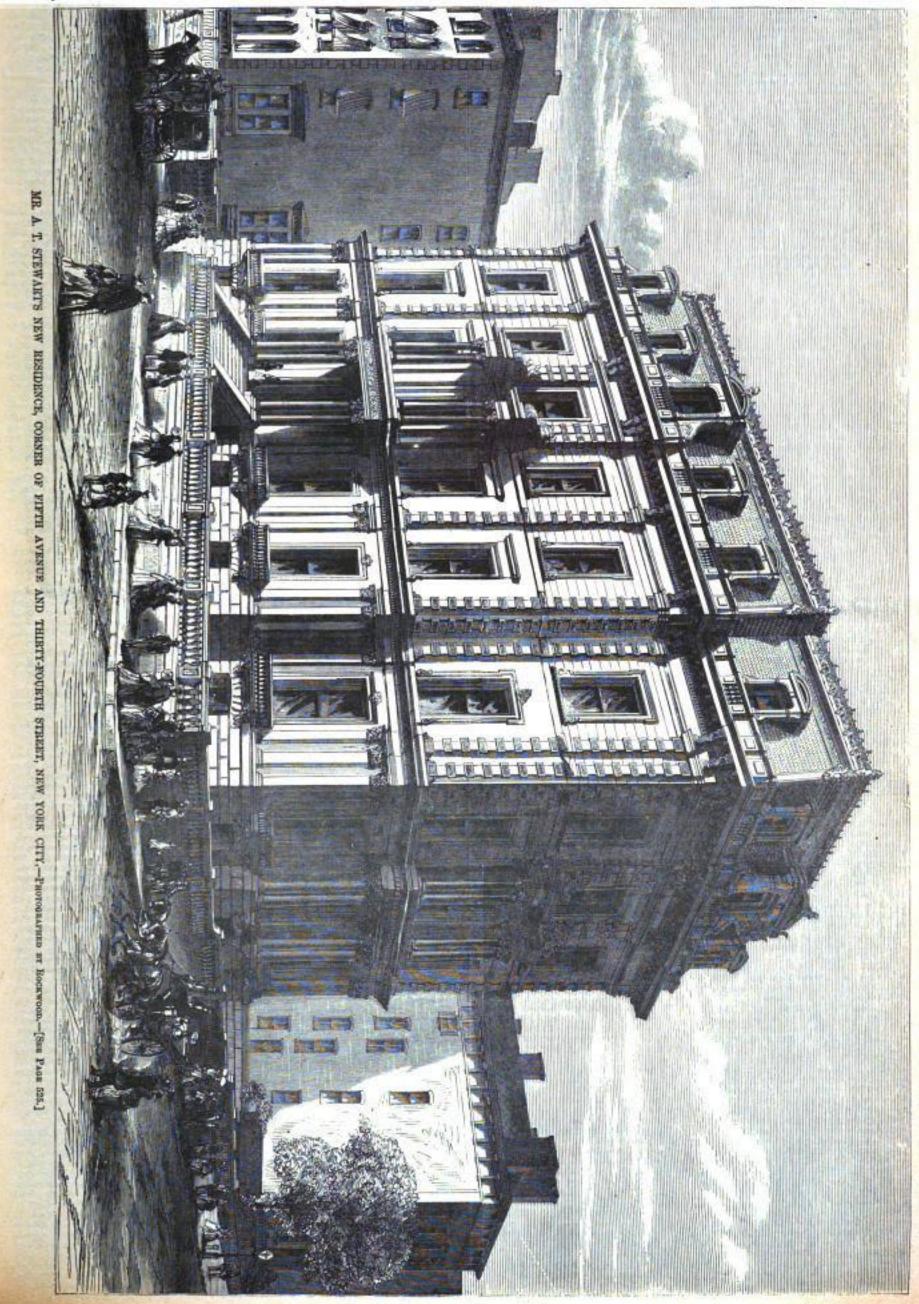

Let woman not for voting stir, But learn the barber's trade instead So shall the Poll be brought to her, To razor o'er her bushand's head.

A wealthy merchant who had become a bankrupt was met, some time after his misfortimes, by a friend, who asked how he was going on. "Pretty well," said be; "I am on my lege again." "How I already?" "Yes, I have been obliged to pers with my carriage and horses, and now must walk."

The young man who stood on his own merits became very much fadgued with the performance.

Josh Billings says: There is lots of folks in this world who, rather than not find any fault at all, wouldn't hesitate to say to an angle-worm that his tall was altogether tow long for his body.

THE RED BREAST OF THE ROBIN. AN IRISH LEGEND.

Or all the merry sintle birds that live up in the tree,
And carol from the sycamore and chestness,
The pretitest little gentleman that dearest is to me
Is the one in cost of brown and scarlet waistcost.
It's cockit little Robin 1

And his head he keeps a-bobbin'.

Of all the other pretty fowls I'd choose him;

For he sings so sweetly still,

Through his tiny steader bill,

With a little patch of red upon his becom.]

When the frost is in the sir, and the snew upon the

when the most as greated, and the process of the pr

When the changing leaves of autumn around to thickly fail,

And every thing seems sorrowful and eaddening,
Robin may be heard on the corner of a wall
Singing what is soluting and gladdening,
And sure, from what I've heard,
He's God's own little bird,

And sings to those in grief just to amuse 'em; But once he sat forlorn

On a cruel Crown of Thorn, And the blood it stained his pretty little boso

SO RUNS THE WORLD AWAY.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

"Her eys, her lip, may, her foot speaks." It was about two weeks after the fire at Auriel that, in the words of the Court Newsman, Lady Diana Merton, Lord Orme, the honorable Orme, and the honorable Amelia and Rosa Orme, joised the distinguished circle enjoying Lord Airdale's hospitality at Holme Park, Lady Diana had arranged with Lord Orme that she should accompany his party to Holme Park, because she averred it was so dull travel-Park, because she averred it was so dull travel-ing alone; the truth being that, extravagant to profligacy in the matter of lexuries obtained on credit, she yet had a magpie-like regard for small coins, and hated being obliged to disburse them. Traveling in Lord Orme's society implied that a large portion of the expenses of the journey would fall to him. She appropriated the most comfortable seats in express trains and hackney-carriages with an air of unconsciousness which carriages with an air of unconsciousness which nearly goaded Amelia Orme into rebellion.

"I know she's only coming because Captain Mowbray is to be there," that young lady said to her sister, wrathfully. "I hate such mean underhand ways; and see how she twists pepa and Conrad round with her little finger."

"I indeed Conrad who had moulted short

And, indeed, Conrad, who had moulted short jackets, and was showing first symptoms of longtailed costs, more than once announced to his bosom-friend, young Spenser, Lord Airdale's son, a fellow-Etonian, at whose especial request Conrad had been invited to Holme, that Lady

Di was "quite his style, by Jove!" Mowbray was not present to welcome his friends when they first arrived. Mowbray was out hunting, the ho et said, in answer to a casual inquiry from Lord Orme; doubtless they would meet him at dinner-time, as well as Clairveaux and some other fellows, who had also gone out. But ere Lady Dinna had been a few hours at Holme she was better informed as to the real cause of Thurstan's absence. What scouts are to a general, so is a quickwitted lady's maid to her mistress. Lady Diana rarely revealed her own plans of operations to rarely revealed her own plans of operations to her subordinate; but she made use of her to ascertain those of the enemy. Every one at Holme was talking of the disaster at Auriel. Captain Mowbray's gallantry was the theme of every tongue. Had be not, when taking a moon-light stroll, and while discussing his nightly ci-gar, been attracted by the sight of the burning house, and entered it at the risk of his own life to save that of the poor girl who was its only to save that of the poor girl who was its only tenant? Something was said about that odd man, the schoolmaster, having given Captain Mowbray material assistance; but then the said schoolmaster lost his with at last, and let the schoolmaster tost his wits at last, and let the means of escape slip out his fingers; and then, did not Captain Mowbray, having pieced a broken ladder with rope, secend the walls of the house, and again impecil his life to save that of the poor fool who had been too stupefied to think of self-preservation? Had not the fire-engines arrived opportunely both must have perished; for it second that Cartie Mowbers with med that Captain Mowbray could not persnade his companion to make any exertion to save himself, and both men were half suffocated, and one much injured, when the firemen extricated them from the burning pile at considera-ble risk to themselves. The whole of the house was not destroyed; the south wing was only partially injured, and the schoolmaster—it was he who had been hurt—was lying there was he who had been hurt—was lying there now, attended by the girl who kept the house. The old woman who ordinarily lived with the girl had gone home to her cottage to see a sick grand-child on the night of the fire; and had it not been for Captain Mowbray's timely interposi-tion the poor solitary inmate of his ancestral home might have become askes, like the family portraits on the staircase, without any one be

All these details were collected by Lady Di-All these details were collected by Lady Di-ana's maid, Letty, and by her repeated to her mistress while the latter underwent the sooth-ing process of having her hair brushed. Lady Diana mused deeply on what she heard; then she lifted up the gray eyes, and asked: "Is the girl pretty whom Captain Mowbray sawd?"

"Well, James" (James was Lord Airdale's valet) "do say she's a niceish seet of looking girl," Letty admitted, reluctantly; "but I don't consides he's no judge. Captain Mowbray rode over there to-day to inquire after her."

"That will do; you may go," Lady Diana said, quietly. Then she clasped a necklace of brilliants round her white throat, and went down stairs to the drawing-room so preoccupied that stairs to the drawing-room so preoccupied that she never observed that she had pinched her fair skin in the fastening of the necklace, and that a tiny spot of blood was staining the brilliancy both throat and jewel. Lady Di eneconced herself in one of the old-Lady in ensourced herson in one or are un-ing-room; she was a good judge of effect, and knew how alluring she seemed when the damling whiteness of her bust and arms were brought into relief by the dark crimson settee that supported her; when her half-averted head showed the exquisite contour of her throat, and her hair me mellow glow against the cold shadows of the

She was looking more than usually beautiful to-night she knew, and she did so wish that all her admirers in esse and in posse could witness her leveliness. Few things irked Lady Di more than to find her sweetness wasted in a desert drawing-room, wherein there were no men. She felt on such occasions as a Soyer might feel who had provided an exquisite repeat of which no greets came to partake. Lady Di's attitude would have done equally well for Thurstan or Lord Orme or Clairveaux. As it happened, Captain Mowbray was the first to enter the

Thurstan flushed at the right of her. "By Jove!" he thought, "she is hand

Lady Di on her part greeted him with genu-ine satisfaction; all the languor in her eyes, all the indolence of her movements, gave way be-fore the brightness of her pleasure. As she sat fore the brightness of her pleasure. As she sat there respleadent in her gracious leveliness, bringing to bear on him all the attractions of her wit, beauty, tact, and experience, Thurstan became fairly dazzled.

"I have never forgotten you," he said, in an-wer to one of her half-playful reproaches; and Lady Di smiled a little scornfully to berself, for she knew well that her former lover had entirely forgotten her for a space, and it was only the power of her presence now which made him fancy that her attraction had ever been equally

Suddenly Lady Di asked:

Soddenly Lady Di asked:
"What became of that man—the schoolaster, whose life you saved?"
A deep gloom fell on Thurstan's face as be

"He left Auriel for his own cottage, despite our earnest entreaties, this morning; he was quite unfit to move, but he persisted in going. Do you know, Lady Diane, that men is one of the noblest fellows on God's earth? He saved my life twice. And yet it is very strange; but when I sought to repay him, by dragging him out of the smoke that night, he struck at me fiercely, and said something which sounded like a curse. I think he must have slightly lost his "Very likely," Lady Di said, indifferently.

Then, looking keenly at her companion, she added, "And what about that girl?"

Thurstan drew his hand away quickly (it had been resting on the back of her chair, in near proximity with her shoulder), put both hands in his pockets, and walked to the window; his sudden recoil from berself was an answer to Lady Di's suspicions; she had judged so many crim-inals at the bar of her beauty that she was quick to detect the slightest evidences of guilt—she to detect the slightest evidences of guilt—she perfectly understood that she had recalled another love to Thurssan, and that sudden remorse at his forgetfulness of the duty he owed that love prompted the withdrawal of his hand.

"There is nothing to see out of the window," Lady Di said, dryly; "it is pitch dark. Do you not think you would be better occupied in fastening my necklace? it is unclasped." She lifted up her chin, still dimpled and white as that of a child, as she moke, and he was fain to obey of a child, as she spoke, and he was fain to obey her reque "You have hurt yourself," he said, suddenly, as his eye fell on the ruddy spot of blood; and as he spoke his voice involuntarily took that in-tonation of tenderness which not uncommonly graces a strong man's lips when he refers to any injury, however slight, done to the beauty of a woman. Lady Di, with half-closed eyes upturned face, had the attitude of a cat sidling up its head to be stroked, and Thurstan Mowbray looked as if he were not far off granting the responding caress, when the door opened, and Amelia Orme estered the room

"Let me do that for you," she said to Lady Diana, in a tone of quiet malice, "men are so stopid about such things; see how clumny Cap-tain Mowbray's fingers are, and what a long while they take to accomplish their task."

"So you found them when he entangled your hair in the clematis!" Lady Di said, giving back the blow with a smile. "Men's fingers are stupider, but so much pleasanter, don't you think?" she added, placidly. "Please go on, Captain

Captain Mowbray hurriedly clasped the neck-lace, and Amelia retired scowling. She had all the will but not the ability to cope with the graceful effrontery of the elder woman.

The rest of the guests now entered the room. Any novice in the art of coquetry might have taken a useful lesson from Lady Di's on such occasions as these. Numbers did not dismay her. With exquisite tact she contrived to make each comer believe himself favored beyond all others; she looked tenderly at one, she murmuranother some apparently trifling words, which, in fact, had reference to a by-gone mutual flirtation. She contrived in the most masterly manner to make all discussions, whether on lit-erature, politics, or fashion, incorporate some personal reference to berself. Did they speak of a new mode of wearing the bair? Sh aged to remind Chairveaux of a certain day when he had accidentally touched the soft beauty of her own tresses. Did they mention the last new novel? She referred to some passage in it which treated of the desirability of second marriages, and entreated Lord Orme to read it; and when the budget was discussed, and Lord Airdale grew elequent on the subject of naval estimates, Lady Di imperceptibly led the conversation toward our coast defenses. Then she spoke in a low voice to Thurstan of the Sussex coast; hinted voice to Thurstan of the Sussex coast; hinted of a certain hour when she had stood there in the blaze of noon with her heart cold with de-spair; hinted of the tears she had shed when she returned to her solitary home, feeling that life had become a weary blank, that all its brightness had passed away after that moment of sun-glow, his lips pressed her own in the last bitter-caress. She did not allude to the concern sweet careas. she showed at her overdone sweet-bread, or of the useless expedition she made to Italy in pursuit of Lord Orms. Lady Di never talked about her failures.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

JEST AND BARNEST.

Twar night when the party was breaking up Lord Orme came up to Thursten, and said, with

"Did you really save that poor girl's life at Auriel?

"On the contrary," Captain Mowbesy explained, "it was a great friend of mine, a fellow called Douglas, who saved us both."

"But you were the first to enter the building with the view of reacuing her," Lord Orme said, eagerly. "It was a noble act, Mowbray; you needn't look so ashamed of it." Lord Orme eagerly. "It was a noble act, Mowbray; you needn't look so ashamed of it." Lord Orms took the young man's hand and shook it warmly. "God, bless you!" he mutreed, and turned away, somewhat confused at his own enthusiasm. Captain Mowbray stared after him blankly. "What the dence was I to say?" he thought, ruefully; "its very awkward being thanked when you don't deserve it; but how could I explain matters without letting the cat out of the bag. Poor little girl! she must be dull, now Douglas is gone. I will go there early to-moruglas is gone. I will go there early to-mor-

"What shall I give you for your meditations?" Lady Di stood before him with outstretched hand, and the faintest suspicion of a yawn revealing her pearly teeth.

"What shall I ask?" he said, drawing nearer

She looked at him with an indescribable expression—a delicious combination of shyness and passion—of doubt and confidence. Suddenly the expression found voice.

"You know well that sight you chose to do for me would meet with any requiral you could name. You know that I can not forget, that I have never ceased to represent myself for my fol-ly in letting my happiness slip out of my hands. Can you forgive me, Thurstan?

ry were standing on the landing-place outside the drawing-room door. She herself partly concealed by the heavy curtains of a window near which she leaned; her beautiful shoulders were shadowed by the exotics that were placed on the window-sill; the light of a lamp overhead shed a subdued glow over the fairness of her round a subdued glow over the fairness of her round arms, half extended in supplication. Thurstan looked at her with a vague idea that some evil fascination was dragging him down to hell. He wondered if the air there was thick with the per-fume of flowers; if the light was dim, and re-vealed beautiful women instead of ugly flends; if the music in those lurid glooms resembled rich low tones, full of subtle temptations, such as had just now trembled in his ears. as had just now trembled in his cars.

Then he grasped her wrists, and cried, "You try me too far, Lady Di. You tempt only to disappoint, you inspire hopes only to baf-fie them. Now, I will be honest with you; not that you deserve honesty of me, but because I will not fight you with your own mean weapons. When you first taught me to love you I paid back your lie with truth; I loved you as sincero-ly as ever man loved woman; I would have made you a good husband, although I was, as you said, too young, as you meant too poor, to marry a wo-man of your age and prudence. You threw me man of your age and prudence. You threw me over because I wouldn't be content with the husks of a heart; because, being a chivalrous young fool, I insisted on an honest, substantial proof of the devotion which you had pretended to feel for me. Well, there's no need to talk any more about the past. Only tell what do you want of me now. If you wish to lure me back to the state of semi-madness about you, you are yet beautiful and charming enough to succeed, but I warn you fairly I can not woo you on the same terms, for I am no longer free; and if you tempt me to woo you I swear that I will win you. Do you think that a man is to be tortured, wounded, and goaded like the poor brutes that writhe under the skill of the matadore? and do you think the metadore always escapes without injury? I think it kindest to tell you, without equivocation, that if you persist in giving me en-couragement I shall, whether you like it or no, take any advantage of you circumstances may put in my way."

All the color had faded from his face. There All the coor had raised from his race. There was a threat in his eyes which she had never seen there before. Lady Di became conscious that she had raised in this man the latent tiger which now and then shows its teeth between human lips, through all the smiles of civilisation. The brute had often showed its face to her before; she rather liked dealing with this savage phase of a man's nature. She showed a certain cious courage in fighting these iniquitous duels, which would have been worthy of admiration applied to a nobler end. Had she been a man she would have been a great blockward or spend to a noticer cod. Had see been a mass she would have been a great blackguard or a great hero—perhaps both. History has taught us that the combination is not impossible. She did not cower before the storm she evoked;

but when she looked up at this man's face and saw how handsome it looked in its menace, she thought that she had never liked any one so well as she did him. She liked him better in his wrath than ever she had done when he woodd her with smile and entresty. And he said he was not free! Then her suspicions were correct about that girl; and at the thought of her rival Lady Di felt as though a knife were thrust into Lady Di felt as though a anno were many other ber-beart, I should say, if speaking of any other woman; but in this case I ought, perhaps, to substitute the word "vanity" for "heart."

woman; but in this case I count, pernaps, to substitute the word "wanity" for "heart." "Forgive me," she said, beseechingly. "Bah!" he replied, impatiently; "that's what you always say. Women are the most unreasonyou always say. Women are the most unreason-able devils in the world; they seem to think that civil speeches will compensate for any thing. I dare say that the daughter of Herodias thought that an apology would comfort John for the pros-pect of her taking his head as a guerdon for that grim revelry of hers. I do forgive you, Lady Di; but I must punish you; and you may be sure that if you offend again you will not escape so easily.

Without further words he took her in his arms

Another woman might have reddened under that caress, which was almost as menacing as passionate, but this one paled visibly. Lady Di could no longer blush, although she could fear. could no longer blosh, although she could fear. She did not fear Thurstan, but she was appre-hensive of any one of her admirers appearing suddenly on the scene. She could explain away most things, but even she could scarcely have given a satisfactory reason to Lord Orme or to Clairveaux for her being kissed on the stairs by Thurstan Mowbray. The latter caught her quick glance directed toward the drawing-room door, and laughed grimly. and laughed grimly.

"I prefer to bully you here," he said, "because you can not, for your own sake, make a noise. However, I won't be ungenerous, Lady

i. You may go." He released her, and she looked at him wonderingly. "How changed you are!" she mut-

And in truth Captain Mowbray was far more eloquent in the face of opposition than he ever was when lapped in content. The suspicion of intended injury, combined with the recollection of his past suffering, made him speak in a very different strain from what he usually indulged in. The woman who had said him nay had seen a phase of his character utterly unknown to single-hearted girl who had but one word, the ever ready yea of love, for him.

Fortunately—or as Lady Di said piously, providentially—none of her other admirers made their appearance on the scene, and the two parted wishout their interview being detected.

Thurstan thought a good deal of Azalea to-night, not that he felt conscious of having done her any especial injury in that little matter of the kiss he had given Lady Dians. A man may feel some conscientious scruples when he first goes into debt, but after a certain amount of time and experience insolvency seems a natural and not dishonorable condition. A man when he first goes on the turf may mean to keep on and not disnonorable condition. A man when he first goes on the turf may mean to keep on the square, but he must be a very exceptional character if, after a while, he does not trick his best friend, and think himself a very ciever fellow in so doing. And a man who has come to look on women in the light in which they were regarded by Thurstan Mowbray would scarcely feel much compunction in adding one more to the number he had already distinguished by his osculatory attentions. Do not think that I defend or admire him: I think that he represents a low type of man. I know that he has nothing but a few ordinary virtues, such as courage and good-nature, to recommend him. Compared to his moral stature, Douglas was as a Than. But did not Helen prefer that stopid fair-faced boy, Paris, to the gallant brother of Agamemnon? Was not Menclaus, vulgarly speaking, worth two of that stripling chepherd? All loveer can't be herees, nor does it seem that the greatest heroes have been most tenderly loved by women. Did not Marie Louise, after having been one with Did not Marie Louise, after having bee the greatest hero (in a mundane sense) that ever plucked off other men's crowns to place them on his own head, condescend to her chamberlain? Was Crear as lovable as Antony? Let the spirit-rappers interrogate the chade of Cleopaira, and hear what the screent of old Nile has to say about it. Nevertheless, if ancient scandals are to be credited, our Laureate has no foundation for calling the head of the Julian family dull or cold-blooded. Perhaps these epithets in Cleo-patra's mouth are merely intended as natural exsinine malice uttered in revenge ioms of fe for the imperial contempt.

One of the most distinct signs of Captain Mowbray's moral obtuseness was his utter in-nocence of the wrong he was doing Azalea in thus renewing his intimacy with Lady Diana. He would not willingly have vexed that dear little girl who was sitting alone in the Auriel shadows, dreaming of him and him only. Had she known, and seemed much cut up at any of his proceedings with regard to other women, very likely, would have altered his ways for her sake; but, as it was, the reflection that the heart doesn't grieve for what the eye doesn't see was an unfailing salve to such trifling wounds as his conscience sustained. He was still very fond of Azalea, and you may be sure he will not kiss her any the less warmly to-morrow because he her any the less warmly to-morrow because he has been faithless to her lips to-day.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

OF SWEET CAME SOUR, OF DAY CAME NIGHT. WHEN Robert Douglas recovered his hurts sufficiently to crawl away to his own home be wrote a few words of farewell to Azalea, in which he entreated her not to break in on his solitude

some little while to com

He avoided seeing her before he went, alleging that he was not strong enough to sustain even the slightest excitement. Since that terrible night, when mental anguish surpassed the animal fear of death, when all life's miseries seemed culminated in the burden of that fathomless despair, Douglas had never spoken to or looked at her, whose very presence was in itself a wound to him; the sound of her voice made him wince. He had come to regard her with ee was in itse somewhat of the shrinking aversion a caged lion feels to the hand which has subjugated it with a burning rod. He turned his face from the light and from her; he would admit of no attendance save what old Sally could render him. He felt that a glance at Azalea's face, insolent in all the radiance of happy love, would madden him be-yond endurance; all he asked for was solitude and silence, and those obtained he sat and watched his pain from dawn to eve, his eyes dull with sathon as those of one who can not turn his gase from the horror of a corpse. When the sun was brightest his lids were closed; when the air was loud with the eestasy of birds he was mute.

A stranded wreck makes no response to the soothing ripple, the whispering kiss of summer-warm waves; the dismanded hull, victim to the brief mad passion of a stormy hour, is merely a t on the golden sands; personify disaster, it seems to brood over its tragedy of the past. The desperate effort—the wail of de-spair—the unhelped supplication; these are its memories, and so it lies between the glows of aky and sand—a darkness in the sunshine—a silence in the murmuring tides. Ever mutable waves play round its despondent sides. The silver frings of the surf sports over it ere rush-ing back to the deep bosom of the parent ses. Gray dawns look coldly on its sombrous shadow; red eves flush it with tawny glory; winds sigh or storm over it; shalls cling to it; fresh scent-ed sea-flowers throw themselves into its lap. Ships come and go; greeting and farewell echo over it; but it retains that calm which succeeds destruction, that spathy which marks decay.

It is a pause in the midst of life's eloquence. It is a paralytic mocked by the sound of a dance and song; through all the mutable vitality of nature it is dumb, deaf, and immovable. It worse than periabes—it stagnates. Douglas's farewell to Asales ran as follows:

"Mr DRAR CHILD,—I am quite well enough to move now, and I fancy that I shall get well scenest in my own little home, so I leave you; and do not think me unkind if I say that, for a time, I shall prefer utter solitude to any society however agreeable. I am much staken by the terrible events of the last few weeks; and I would fain forget, if possible, some of the horror attached to this place. I do not apologize for leaving you, for a note I received from Captain Mowbray a few days after the fire informed me of the reation which subsists between you—a woman blessed with a young husband who loves her, and whom she loves, does not need to be trou-bled by the light of a weary old face like mine. I shall so far interest my-sif in your future as to try and induce your husband to communicate his marriage at once to his family; and in other his marriage at once to his family; and in other respects I shall try and fill the place of your dead father—but I need not dwell on these things to you: may God bless you more than he has seen fit to pardon me. If ever you are in trouble if you ever need comfort or assistance, write but one word, 'Cone,' and you may command the presence of Yours faithfully, "Romert Douglas."

Azalea wondered and grieved a little over Douglas's absence. Sometimes, when Thurstan was not there to banish the thought, the dreary winds of evening seemed to whisper to her of something which she had lost—something of shelter, of protection and of love, which had away into her foster-father's grave, and into that homely cottage in the Auriel lane. But her lover's voice, her lover's touch were sufficient to woo her back into the beautiful dream, which she, in her ignorance, mistook for reality; and in that dream the melancholy of osolation was not pro could she guess, inexperienced in all hearts but her own, which was as true as her life had been sinless, that Thurstan was already a little uneasy of the prize he had won without a struggle—that his sometimes restless manner and thoughtful eyes harbored treachery to herself; that he did not understand her, and that the enigms which had possessed its charms at first became fatiguing in its unintelligibility? Lady Diana was never hard to understand. She had the art of making her own intellect subservient to that of her lover's. She conveyed ideas to him in such fashion that he was deluded into believing that he himself had engendered them. No one can deny that it is far pleasanter to have a mistress who makes you feel her superior than one whose genius is distinct and the calable as a monolith. Thurstan understood that Andrews Thurstan understood that Azalea was very pret-ty, and that she worshiped him, in considera-tion of which he overlooked her peculiarities of mind; but then Lady Di was also very lovely, and......at this dangerous point of his meditayou ever suffered the inconvenience of loving two women at the same time? If so, you can sympathize with the perplexity of the ass when trying to make a choice of thisties, or the vacillating of Alexander between his rival queens. The situation is not an uncommon, although it may be an undignified, and not altogether one undecerving of sympathy.

deserving of sympathy.

Meanwhile, when Lady Diana watched Thurstan break away from the toils she was beginning to wind round him with all the gentle tact of an experienced spider making advances to it fly, and leave her for the tenant of that black-ened ruin at Auriel, she bit her pink lips until they bled, and swore that come what might— whatever trouble it entailed on herself—whatever disaster it inflicted on others—she would win back this man to bondage so complete that he should sicken at every hour spent out of her presence, and weary of the cause which thus

You see, one of those misfortunes which overtake the most hardened coquette had fallen on Lady Diana. She was really in love-not for the first, or even the second time, you may be sure, but she felt it none the less keenly for that. After all, she was at this moment more deserving of pity than her younger rival. Love to Assless was Faradise—to Lady Di, Purgatory. Assless believed in all things, more especially in her lover—Lady Di believed in few things, least of all in human faith. The rat which undermines many a stout ship can scarcely have much con-fidence in the stability of timber. Lady D Lady Di would have given much to be able to have a good hearty belief in any man. She would fain forget the inevitable ducline from the heights of a grand passion to the dregs of a spent one. She knew too well how in the most constant breasts the sweet tumult of passion—passion which is like the beautiful storm of the tropics, where strange phantages and colors of unspeakable glory are incorporated with the wild splendor of the tempest—dies to calm, and from calm to -dies to calm, and from Even in victory she tasted defeat; while in defeat she suffered as severely as though its names were unforeseen.

Thurstan's dereliction wounded her vanity more, it wounded her heart-she loved him. The sight of his face was sweet to her; his voice gave a charm to the day; his eyes haunted her like a pleasant dream; she knew that he would be nothing more than a dream in her life altogether for she was in truth too old to marry him had be been free (and he had insinuated to her that he was bound by more than ordinary ties to an-other), and she was too poor to retain him long as a lover; for her pecuniary circumstances were as a lover; for her pecuniary circumstances were becoming desperate, and every time a fresh dun knocked at the door she looked at Lord Owne and thought, "Marry me you must—whether you like it or not." So Thurstan would be no-thing but a phantasm of pleasure; but when a mirage was lovely to her she judiciously avoided looking at it too closely. Experience is a lens through which we see with painful clearness all the defects of the present.

the defects of the present.

Lady Di wisely shut her eyes and opened her mouth to take the bonbon which Fate sent in ber way.

A NAUTCH DANCE.

WHORVER has not seen a Nautch dance has something yet to see. Some three or four sets of Indian dancing-girls had arrived in Zanzibar; and having told our tall, gawky Arab conductor that we wished to see these peculiar beings, he made the necessary arrangements with them. In the creeing we repaired to his house, and were ushered into a long, narrow room, covered with a Persian carpet and cushions, and in the centre a brass lamp with a number of burners.
The spectators scated themselves at the farther end of the room, leaving the divan for the Nantch girls.
Shortly our tall Arab enters, ushering in some half a dozen creatures clothed in cloth of gold, followed by half a dozen Indian musicians bearing their instruments, consisting of a peculiar kind of drum, a guitar, and an instrument of the flageolet kind. The ladies divested themselves of their outer scarf of red silk and gold, and lounged on the divan opposite to us—their arms bare, bosoms nearly, and legs quite so. Their heads were ornamented with wreaths of jewels; gold ornaments, studded with precious stones hung from one side of the nostril, pulling down the lobes.

One looked rather old, say twenty-eight; the Hindoo cast of countenance, and very dark under the eyes. They lounged on the cushions in the most fiscinating manner, as they apparently thought, gently puffing the cigars we had given them, every moment casting up their large black eyes to us languishingly, lovingly, enchantingly, and sorrowfully.

The musicians strike up a semi-dismal, senti-mental sound. One of them has a peculiar mall semicircular drum made fast to his waist, mental sound. which he sounds by striking with the palm of hi hand, obtaining the most peculiar but not unmu-sical sounds. The others have instruments more common.

The girls now begin to cast off their outer garments, and bind round their ankles tinkling chains. This done, they advance, tap the heels, then the toes, tinkling the chains to the time of the musicians. The dance, we think, is doubtless to follow. Wriggling about (there are no other words that describe the motion), throwing out their arms, and peeping beneath their scarfs, they advance and retreat. They then sing lovesomes, containtly with the musicians, who acreech songs, conjointly with the musicians, who screech in their care, gradually increasing the loudness of the music; the girls advancing and receding, their eyes alternasely full of passion and sorrow, and then whirling away, disconsolate, at length

And this actually was the dance, and all there was of it.

During the dancing and singing they frequently lifted the nose ornament to wipe their stream-ing faces. Right glad were we to pay an aggre-gate of eight dollars for the entertainment, to leave the house, and get on board the steamer.

HOME AND FOREIGN GOSSIP.

Evzar week or two some luckiess visitor at Niagara. Palls ofters, through the newspapers, a dismal note of warning it, regard to the impositions practiced upon innocent strangers in that vicinity. Doubtless the writers of these warnings here been victimes but, from our own recent experience, we should almost fancy that some of the "Notes from Ningara Falls," artisted narious distinct the profess date of 1868, were made as from the profess date of 1868. printed under date of 1860, were made up from old manuscripts written years ago. Our week's visit at the Palls falled to entangle us in a sing a trick. The hotal charges were in no wise more exorbitant than at other summer resorts; and if all the hotels are as well appointed as the one where we happened to be, there can be no cause of complaint. To be sure, when you linger at the windows of the Indian shops, some pretty girl will pop out of the foor with an urgent in-vitation to enter; but if you pay no attention to her she soon retires. Hackmen, too, as in other places, are fond of informing you how reasonably they will show you the eights; but they are easily ellenced by anow you take signed; but they are easily shenced by quiet disregard. Only in one instance were we perti-nationally followed. Our party, having taken the usu-al drives, resolved one moraling to walk over to the Canada side and only the view on foot. Eaving crossed the New Suspension Brid a, a hackman as-salled us with, "Take you to T hie Bock for fifty results." and notwithstanding both effect and cents;" and, notwithstanding both affent and exed refusale of his offer, he followed in our wake, present reheals of his otter, he sources in our wants, kindly decreasing his price as we resented the dis-lance, until he was ready to sacrifice himself and horses for "ten cents?" At that juncture one rentle-man of our party turned round and said, in a on-light-man of our party turned round and said, in a on-light-man of our party turned round and said, in a on-light-man of our party turned round and said, in a on-light-man of our party turned round and said, in a on-light-man of our party turned round and said, in a on-light-man of our party turned round and said, in a on-light-man of our party turned round and said, in a on-light-man of our party turned round and said, in a on-light-man of our party turned round and said, in a on-light-man of our party turned round and said, in a on-light-man of our party turned round and said, in a on-light-man of our party turned round and said, in a on-light-man of our party turned round and said, in a on-light-man of our party turned round and said, in a on-light-man of our party turned round and said, in a on-light-ter our party turned round and said, in a on-light-ter our party turned round and said, in a on-light-ter our party turned round and said, in a on-light-ter our party turned round and said, in a on-light-ter our party turned round and said, in a on-light-ter our party turned round and said, in a on-light-ter our party turned round and said, in a on-light-ter our party turned round and said, in a on-light-ter our party turned round and said, in a on-light-ter our party turned round and said, in a on-light-ter our party turned round and said turned round ro fully cool tone: "We calculate to walk up to Table Block if it costs us fire dollars!" The backman disap-

Visitors to Nisgara would be better satisfied it they Visitors to Niagara would be better satisfied if they should bear in mind that considerable expense is involved in preparing such places as "Goat Island," "The Three Sisters," and "The Care of the Winds" for safe and comfortable inspection. If bridges, etains, etc., had not been built we should lose glorious views, which are well worth the fee demanded. Nor abould we find it as pleasant if the various arrangements. which facilitate access to points of interest were suf-fered to go to decay. Improvements are made from year to year which increase the attractions of the place; and, under a new and efficient police, there is far less annoyance than formerly from the importuni-ties of hackmen. No lover of the grand in Nature can visit Risgars and not rejoice that an opportuni is so easily obtained for viewing the glorious Palls so many different aspects.

Extensive preparations have been made for observ-ing the solar solipse on the 7th of August. Many dis-tinguished scientific gentlemen have gone to Iowa for this purpose: also a company of government officers, under the direction of Professor William Harkness. A temperary observatory, and all necessary instruments, will enable them to make general observations, as well as to take photographic views.

Another railroad horror! On the New Orleans and Ancest rained a passenger train falls through a treetle bridge, the cars take fire, three persons are burned to death, and many wounded. The bridge had given way before, and the officers of the road are "constrad." Is this all? Are the public altogether hardened to "railroad horrors?

Any one who has contemplated the grand drinking m which is on free exhibition from seven until tanjean which is on free extitution from seven initi-eight o'clock every morning at Congress Spring, Sara-togs, will appreciate what an exchange says: "We this morning saw an advanced female gulp five glasses of Congress-water in quick succession, without any difficulty; and another sutumnal creature absorbed difficulty; and another autumnal creature absorbed four glasses, and then remarked 'she would walk through the park before drinking any more.' A little specimen of crinciline, with most improbable curls, drank four glasses without finching, while an old-school Congress-water fowl, standing at her elbow, soothed himself with five full glasses 'before taking his constitutional walk,' as he said. The pensive young lady, who has been here a month awaiting on offer, drinks only one ulsas of the Compress daily. an offer, drinks only one glass of the Congress daily, not because she likes it, but because it is fashionable."

More than one-half of the entire revenue of the kingdom of Bavaria is from beer, although it is but lightly taxed. Beer is emphatically the national beverage, and its consumption, particularly in Munich, is some thing wonderful. Over a hundred million gallons are every year, and even women and children inbabe freely.

A water-spout near Nashville, Tenne cat up some mischlerous prants. A whirlwind formed on the Cumberland River which was so powerful that a water-spont seven feet high was developed, and swept along the river. A party of a dosen men and buys were bathing in the river, and had hung their clothes upon some evergreens, which formed a screen thing-boat on the landing where they performed their tollets. The water-epout came and unceremoniously whisked away trees, clothes, and all; and away went the raineest of the astonished bathers, sailing high in air, until it disappeared from their anxious gase! All called loadly for clothes, and finally a sufficient number of articles of apparel were Report says that the Adirondack wilder Report says that the Adirondack wilderness is altogether too fashlomable. Tourists can not get guides, can not get deer, nor fish, nor hotel accommodations. There are so many people about the lakes that one discontented sportsman said that he could not fire at a deer for fear of hitting a man. Whether this melancholy report is wholly true can only be ascertained by those who are willing and able to "rough it," and to go to the lass frequented sections, where still, as Mr. Murray says, "the air is literally full of jumping trout," above the lakes, and game is abundant enough to extisfy the most enger sportsman. isfy the most eager sportsman.

One of the horrors of long railroad journeys in the United States has been the want of proper arrange-ments and sufficient time to partake of meals confortably. The shouted announcement, "Fiftee fortably. The another another than the control of t ently have an attack of dyspepsia. This style of things ently have an attack of dyspepens. This expect strongs is rapidly being changed. On some Western roads the trains do not stop at al. for meals, a Fullman betal car affording passengers an necessary refreshment. These care are made so steady by a combination of springs that there is no danger of unsetting a dish. Small tables, with shundant space for four persons at each, are nicely lain for those desiring refreshment. The kitchen is in the middle of the car, but so inclosed and wantifacted that one would scarcely essent it use. and ventilated that one would scarcely suspect its use. Yet it is provided with ice-boxes and every thing nee eccary in the way o, edibies to supply a most excel-lent dinner or a sight innch, at the option of the trav-cier. The cost of each article is upon the bill of fare, and is as reasonable as at any good city restaurant.

Noble traits of character sometimes show themselves midst the first confusion and terror of dire ...assec. Hiver train a Jaurence brakeman, hanging - the knob of a car door, said to the brother brakeman who came to his assistance: "Dick, if any one case is burt worse than I am, help him first." On the same day an accident occurred on a Butland (Vermont) train, and the first words of a severely injured engineer were: "Are any of the passengers burs!"

The organization known as the "Woman's Bo-rees," located at No. 47 East Twenty-third Street, is designed, as we understand it, to ferrolah common head-quarters to all those societies which have in view the amelioration of the condition c. wromen. By thus centralizing the whole work it is believed in t each specific work may be prosecuted to better edvantage.

M. Pouchet, in the Arener Estional, relates the fol-M. Poutlet, in the Areas Associations, relates the blowing singular incident: in February Colonel Franks was engaged near the village of Chamba with a bod; of rebols, and many prisoners were taken. One of them, a Bengales, aged about fifty-four, was conducted before the anthorities to undergo interrogations. ed before the anthorities to undergo interrogations. The prisoner for the first time appeared to realize the danger of his situation when he found himself stripped and surrounded with solditors. He trembled violently, terror and despair being deploted on his counternance, and when replying to questions appeared absolutely simpeded by fear. Then, in the space of half an hour, his hals, which had been of a brilliant high, became gray on every part of his head. iant black, became gray on every part of his head. The sergeant who had charge of the prisoner cried out, "He is turning gray," and called attention to the singular phenomenon, which was observed by many one through all its phases.

The New York City Directory for the present year contains 139.463 names—an excess of 36s over last year. The name of Smith occurs 256 times, while there are 808 Browns, 345 Greens, 357 Whites, and a moderate number of Grays, Blacks, and Blues. There are 157 Poures, 81 Wolfs, and only 2 Bears. A sindy of the Directory is a carious anneanment.

The prospect is that there will be an abundant crop of peaches this season. Delaware and Maryland are the great peach-growing States, though New Jersey sends a goodly quantity into the market. Some of the largest peach-orchards contain over 190,000 trees, spread over many acres, the trees being planted in regular rows about twenty-dve feet apart, and yielding often a bushel and a hall apiece.

Accounts of the immense damage caused by the foods in Texas continue to be received. Among the incidents mentioned is that of a lady near Belton, who, with six small children, driven from her house, which was event by the high water, took refuge in a tree with all her little ones. As the food brought along fence-mills and drift-wood she caught them, and constructed a next of year and the tree, so that when constructed a sort of raft around the tree, so that when one of her children slept and fell it was caught by the platform below. Here the herois mother, with all her pectous treasures, remained for twenty-four hours, until a neighbor constructed a boat and took them all safely to shore.

Prince Alamayoo, son of King Theodore of Abys-sinia, is represented to be an intelligent and lovable child, with great quickness of observation, and a somewhat excitable temperament. His tietes, as far as they are yet developed, are on the side of manil-ness and muscularity.

A German chemist recommends that those who find Epsons saits too disgusting should boil ordinary con-free with the sait solution, when all disagreeable tasts is removed, and the mixture becomes actually pleasat removes, and are mixing occases actually pleas-ant. The proportions may be, by weight, one of cof-fee to three of salls, to ten of water. It would not be strange, however, if one, following this recipe, should find coffee specified for them forever afterward.

"Prevention is better than cure." At this season, "Prevention is better than cure." At this season, when the sun's rays pour down with the grentest intensity, all precautions which may save persons from sup-stroke should be understood, and taken by those exposed to intense solar best. It is said, on good anthority, that the man who abstalts from all spirit-uous drinks during exceedively hot weather is vastly loss liable to sun-stroke than one who drinks habitually. Regular hours for sleep and meals, and the avoidance of all irregularities and excesses, are among the other preventives. Bathing or sponging the skin all over in the moraday is a wholesome p antion. Every one employed outdoors, that can possible do it, should wear a light, easy-fitting, broad-brinsmed hat. Bricklayers, carpenters, labours, morta-makers, hodearriers, and all others working in the sun, should have some kind of shed or shade at hand, where they can rest for a few minutes at short intervals. One of the bast acceptable to you dishable a section of the best preventives to sun-stroke the next preventives to sun-stream as said to be a thin plece of sponge loosety sewed in the top of the hat, and occasionally moistened with water in the course of the day. A bandkerchief, dampened and laid in the top of the hat, will answer a very good temporary рагрове.

According to an exchange, it is easy enough to kill quark or twitch grass if you only go to work right. First dig it up with a spade, then rake it out carefully with a succession of tools, beginning with a three-legard stool and ending with a fine-tooth combagliating the soil to the depth of two feet. Take the grass and roots and ran them through a strawculter, ruit them with meal and feed them to your pig, and then immediately sell the pig out of the country. Seed down your garden to clover, and take your neighbor's cow or william-goat to pasters, and you will be hor's cow or william-gost to pasture, and you will be troubled with quark grass no more—that year. This is the only sure cure—all other methods are quarkier

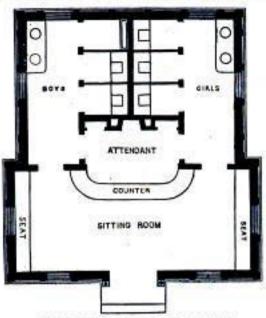

Two Japanese, by the name of Yoshida Hicomara and Chara Reynoske, lately graduated at Muneou Academy, Massachusetts. The first delivered a disof the "Introduction of Christianity Japan," and the other on "Japan as it Was and is,"

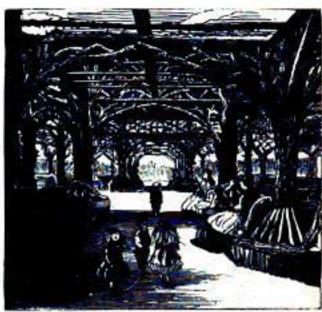

Digitized by Google

FLOOR PLAN OF CHILDREN'S COTTAGE.

CHILDREN'S SHELTER.

NEW VIEWS IN CENTRAL PARK.

EVERY year witnesses new improvements in the New York Central Park. This is very evident to the merely occasional visitor, who al-ways finds some novelty that did not meet his eve upon former visits. We give some illustra-tions on this page of the latest novelties intro-

The most interesting of our sketches are those of the Children's Shelter and the Children's Cottage. For several years the children of our schools have been allowed the use of the play-grounds of the Park, Any child attending the public schools of the city may have the privilege of the play-grounds, upon application to the Commissioners of the Park, with a certificate from punctual attendance of the applicant upon the school and of good char-acter. We also give an illustration of the Boys' Play-Ground. By congrounds to school-children the practice of adult clubs of match games, and the objectionable features that have be-come the frequent attendant of these games, have been effectually pre-vented. Croquet - play upon the girls' ground has been initiated, and several swings have been erected for the use of children. A great variety of an-imals have been added to the zoological collection in the Park-among them a fine specimen of the American buffalo;

the American bullado;
a toucan; an American black bear; a cinnamon bear, from India; a white-lipped peccary; a fine Mexican lion, two years old, captured on the upper Rio Grande; a magnificent grizzly bear from the Rocky Mountsins; a Brazilian and two South American cetriches; a pair of Rasse cats from Java; a beautiful Angola leopard; a pair of prairie-dogs, and a number of Java sparrows and chaffinches.

a number of Java sparrows and chaffinches.

The formation of a Zoological Garden has been included in the plan of the Central Park. A beginning has been made in the collection of animals, and it is designed in time to develop this feature of the establishment into a completer form. Beyond its use as a never-failing source of interest and pleasurable gratification to the public will be its value as an addition to the educational resources of our city.

An important branch of Natural History of almost romantic interest is that relating to the forms of life that once existed upon the earth, with reptilian characteristics, twenty-six feet in length and fourteen in height, was found at Had-donfield, New Jersey.

MR. STEWART'S NEW RESIDENCE.

New York is not a picturesque city, like London or Paris, or a dozen other European cities thousand years?" How few, indeed, are built with any idea of permanency!

But there is one edifice in New York that, if not swallowed up by an earthquake, will stand as long as the city remains, and will ever be pointed to as a monument of individual enterprise, of far-seeing judgment, and of disinterested philanthropy. This is Mr. A. T. Stewar's new and palatial manson on Fifth Avenue, of which we give an illus-which we give an illus-tration on page 521.

There is nothing like it in the world, not even among the palaces of the European nobility. That is the impression which first strikes us as we enter the building. Thearchitect, Mr. KELrun, had a difficult problem to solve. He was to make an eternal monument which should also be fitted for a temporal habitation. He has admirably succeeded, we must admit; but still every one who looks upon the result must feel that this splendid palace was never designed primarily for a private dwelling. It is a temple rather than a mansion.

The very first glance at the building suggests a fault in architectural design—at lenst, we deem it such. The claborate system of pillars at the two main entrances support nothing. They constitute an architectural conundrum. For, if there is any well established canon of architecture, it is the law that no column should exist without supporting something—some-thing more than an entablature; something port. Then, again, it cems unfortunate that such an edifice should not be surrounded by spacious grounds. But Mr. STEWART evidently looked forward to the time when the pushing looked forward to the time when the pushing commerce of the city would make its demands felt even in Thirty-Fourth Street.

This building is constructed of marble, but of that enduring kind of marble which appears to the eye very much like granite. It rests upon hewn masonry, which in turn lies upon a solid rock-basis. The finishing inside is throughout

PALBONTOLOGICAL STUDIO AT THE CENTRAL PARK MUSEUM.

but are now extinct. Mr. WATERMOUSE HAW-EINS has been selected to attend to the restora-tion of fossils illustrating ancient life upon this continent. We give an illustration of the Pa-leontological Studio at the Central Park Museum, with models of animals of ancient times now being restored from the fossils by Mr. HAWKINS, including the skeleton of the Hadrasonrous Foulkii, which forms the centre of the group. This gigantic and remarkable animal, a creature which we might name. It has no great antiquity, and has, therefore, little regard for what is old. In Lendon or in Paris you may see some relics of past centuries; these are reverenced and preserved as long as they endure. But New York is a series of experiments, and every thing which has lived its life and played its port is held to be dead, and is buried, and over it grows a new world. Of how few buildings in this city can it be said, "Here is something that will last for a

BOYS PLAY-GROUND, CENTRAL PARK

THE CASCADE, CENTRAL PARK

SHEEP ON THE GREEN, CENTRAL PARK

of beautiful Italian marble, the work upon which was done in Italy. The style of architecture is purely Corinthian. The building does not strike one as extraordinarily large at the first glance. It is only three stories in height. But it towers above all the surrounding structures. For each story is over twesty feet in height. So the sev-eral apartments do not at first seem to be of more than ordinary size until we know their

The entire structure, external and internal, is destitute of showy ornamentation. The style of beanty adopted is very chaste and severe. It is grand without being heavy; it is fine and elabo-rate without being fanciful. This will appear even more to be the case when the walls are fin-ished and subdued in color, so as to harmonize with the blue-veined marble. The doors are to be of rose, wood be of rose-wood.

The building, with scarcely an alteration in the arrangement of its rooms, could be transformed into a magnificent art-gallery. It almost astonishes us to hear the architect speak of this as a reception room, of that as a breakfast room, and of another as the parlor. The beautiful ward-robe and bath-rooms are the only portions of the house which distinctively suggest the idea of a private residence. The vista of rooms is one of the most remarkable features which strike the eye. From one end of the building one looks through to the other. The grand hall leads to the marble staircase—the most beautiful speci-men of architecture of that kind in the country. Passing become this we care the string of the country. Passing beyond this, we enter the picture-gallery, which is to be adorned with the finest speciment of statuary and painting that Mr. STEWART has been able to obtain during a search of several

The windows throughout the building consist each of a single pane of glass. There is an elec-trical apparatus for lighting the gas. The entire structure in its design reflects great credit apon Mr. STEWART, and as a work of architecture it is equally creditable to Mr. Kellum.

THE DRIVE AT NEWPORT.

Our illustration on page 524 of the Drive at Newport is engraved from a drawing by Mr. C. G. Busst. It is a very full and characteristic representation of one of the most prominent featuses of this fashionable summer resort. The Drive has recently been greatly extended, so as to lead round the Point and back again, making a circuit of about on miles.

ANTIPATHIES.

Wa can readily understand that the olfactory powers of nature in man or woman recoil with outhing from disagreeable or offensive odors; but it is less easy to believe that this objection can in any degree apply to the sweet fragrance of the Queen of Flowers. Yet we have well st-tested instances, and Pope probably had some of these in his mind when he used the expres-

"Die of a rose in aromatic pain!"

According to Sir Kesselm Digby, if the Lady Henengs, of the bedchamber to Quoen Eliza-beth, Isid a rose upon her cheek when she composed herself to rest, that cheek became immedistely blistered. Cardinal Don Enrique de Car-dona west into a swoon upon encountering the smell of A rose, and Laurentius, Bishop of Urat island, was killed by the same cause. During the season of roses Cardinal Caraffa inclosed himself in a chamber in his palace, and suffered no one to approach him who carried one about his person.

"I knew a stout soldier," says Donatus, "who could not endure the smell or sight of the herb rue, but would instantly betake himself to flight on his first notice of its presence."

Chesne, secretary to Francis the First, King of France, a Parisian, was forced to stop his nostrils with bread when there were any apples at table, and so offensive was the smell of them to him that if one was held near his nose it began to blend almost instantaneously.

to him that it one was held near his nose it began to bleed almost instantaneously.

"I have seen," we are told by Brassavolus, as quoted by Schenck, "the younger daughter of Frederick the First, King of Naples, who could not eat any kind of fish, nor even taste the smallest quantity. As often as she put a bit in her mouth she was seized with vehement fits, and folling to the earth and relling besself these. and falling to the earm and some out. This she upon, would lamentably shrick out. This she would continue to do for the space of half an hour, after which time she would return to herself."

Guarnerius relates that hog's flesh was so disand falling to the earth and rolling herself theregusting to him that it produced the effect of poison, although he never used it but in broth or sauces. When his mother, on a particular occasion, gave him a dish of that ment without his previous knowledge, minced into the small-est hits, and he unwittingly are some, within an hour after he was seized with a violent pulpita-tion of the heart, fell into fits, and concluded with a vomiting of blood.

Schenck also says a learned person once told Schenck also says a learned person once told him that he knew one at Antwerp who would immediately swoon as often as pork was set before him upon any table at which he was present. Further, that he was also acquainted with a person of high quality who fainted at the sight of an eel; and even if one were inclosed in paste, or otherwise covered up, he fell down as dend, and was unable to return to himself until the obnoxious dish was removed. Germanicus could noxious dish was removed. Germanicus could not endure the sight or voice of a cock, and the Persian Magi had an intense horror of mice. Henry III. of France could not sit in a room with a cat. The Duke of Schomberg had the same aversion. This is by no means an uncom-mon antipathy. A gentleman in the court of the Emperor Ferdinand would bleed at the nose when hearing a cat mew, no matter how great the distance might be that separated him from the obnoxious animal. Mathiolus tells of a German, who, coming at winter time into an inn to any with him and some other friends, the woman of the house, being acquainted with his temperament in this particular, put a young cat in a chest in the same room where they sat at their meal. But though he had neither seen nor heard of it, after a little time a sudden paleness came over his face, and he cried out that in some corner or another a cat was concealed. A more recent instance may be quoted in the case of the late Mr. Vandenhoff, the celebrated tragedian, which came within the notice of the present writer. Walking with him one day in the Zoo-logical Gardens at Liverpool, and being in close conversation, Vandenhoff suddenly stopped, grasped the arm of his companion almost convulsively, and pointed forward with some nearly inarticulate exclamation. A cut was hobbling toward them, a noet of huma notures, without hind-legs. It was chased away, and after a theet interval the translater reserved his ordinary. short interval the tragedian resumed his ordinary demeanor. On another occasion the writer happened to sit next to him at a dinner-party. Suddenly he turned pale, dropped his knife and fork, fell back in his chair, and said, faintly, "There's a cat under the table!" The brute had brushed by his legs, and the effect was in-stantaneous. Shakspeare, as we all know, says,

"Some men there are love not a gaping pig: Some that are mad if they behold a cat;"

and then he adds, as a commentary, "There is no firm reason" to be rendered for these strange loathings.

Among the records of antipathy we find one of a man who could not endure that an old wo-man should look upon him; of another, that if he met the smallest dog he was seized with con-vulsions in the left hand; of a young girl who swoosed at the sound of a bell, or of a lond voice speaking or inging; of a non-who perspired vio-lently if she saw a beetle; of a nobleman of Mantua who became paralyzed at the sight or contact of a hedgebog, and for two years imag-ined he was grawed internally by such an am-mal; and of a maid-servant in Flanders who had lived entirely on milk, without any other kind of food. She was not able to endure even the smell of bread, and if the smallest partiely of it was put into her busin, even at a distance, abe detected it immediately. Ambrose Pard, the celebrated French surgeon, mentions a gentle-man who never could see a carp without faint-ing. Also a lady on whom a boiled lobster had the same effect. Erasmas, though a native of Rotterdam, had such an aversion to all kinds of fish that the smell of it gave him a fever. Jo-seph Scaliger never could driek milk. Cardan was particularly disgreted at the sight of eggs. There are some persons who can not bear to look on spiders; others have been known to eat them as a laxury. John Rol, a gentleman of Aleantara, would swoon on hearing the word days (wool) pronounced, although his clonk was made of that material. M. Vangheim, a great hunts-man in Hanover, would ran away to avoid faint-ing at the sight of a roust pig. M. de Lançre, in his "Tableon de l'inconstance de toutez Choses," gives an account of a very henve officer who never dered to bold et a pour l'inconstance de l'inconstan dared to look at a mouse, it would so terrify him, unless he had his sword in his hand. M. de Langre adds that he knew him perfectly well. The great Marshal Saxe looked under his bed every night to see that no animal of any kind was there. The philosopher Chrysippus had such an aversion to be saluted that he fell down if any one paid him that respect. The Duke d'Eperson fainted at the sight of a leveret. Marshal d'Albret turned sick at table if a sucking pig was served up. Tycho Brabe felt his limbs sink under him if he encountered a hare or fox. La Mothe le Vayer could not endure the sound of any musical instrument, yet had exquisite pleas-ure from the noise or thunder. This anecdotes has been fathered on Dr. Gregory, the celebrated Edinburgh physician, who, being asked by a lady if he liked music, replied: "I like it, Madam, as well as thunder or any other noise." Some-thing to the same effect was said by Dr. Johnson to another lady, who observed that a con-certo he had just heard was very difficult. "Med-am," growled the philosopher, "I wish it had been impossible." An Englishman in the last century was near expiring whenever the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah was read to him. We could musiciply similar cases of antipathy almost ad infinitum, but enough have been adduced.

LITERARY FRIVOLITIES

UTILITY is not always the chief object of literary labor, and neither is "value received" always its aim and end; for in this kind of work, as in other kinds, difficulty and expectant applause is frequently a great incentive. With many writers, more particularly in former times, various curions styles of composition were much in favor-one, for example, would have a predilection for composing verses with the omission in each stanas of a particular letter; others would write in such a way as to enable their writing to be read from the end to the beginning of the line, or vice versa, as the reader chose; while a third, again, vexed himself in the composition of allisaguin, veces inimises in the composition of allis-crative, or, perhaps, anagrammatic, poetry. An-other class of literary triflers, among others, might be named those who chose to display a microscopic skill by writing so small that their work appeared to the naked eye only a mere wavy line. Laborious ingenuity of these kinds, so far from being discouraged, was rather pleasu-rably indulged in by some of the best critical. urably indulged in by some of the best ancient writers, of whom might have been expected other and better things. Take as an instance of one of shese literary frivolities, for which the author seldom, if ever, receives either fame or emob ment, many of the works of Lopes de Vega-works now never heard of, and, perhaps, better so, since many of them were of a character un-worthy of their author. The Spanish poet wrote no less than 1800 plays, of which only about a fifth occupy a place in the literature of his country; and among his other writings were five novels, from each of which one of the five vowels were excluded-a conceit which must have cost their author considerable labor. Of this kind of literary work, which has been called Lipogrammatic, there have been many instances — Tryphiodorus, for example, composed a Greek Hed, from the first book of which the letter α was excluded, the second book excluded b, and so on throughout the alphabet in succession. Pindar, too, wrote an ode from which he omit-ted the letter s; and Fulgentius, a monk, pertest like letter x and x ingenties, a mone, per-formed a similar test to that of Tryphiodorus in the sixth century. It has been recorded also of a Persian poet that he read a poem to the king in which the letter a was altogether excluded; but his royal highness speedily wearisd of hear-ing it, and instead of complimenting the poet more his skill and insecutive blundy recommend. upon his skill and ingenuity, bluntly recommend-ed that all the other letters should be sent to keep company with the exiled a.

In relation to those who have chosen to exert themselves in the way of microscopic writing, the fact that the Riad of Homer has been writ-ten in so small a compass as to be wholly in-closed in a nut-shell has been often referred to as one of those things which would require to be seen ere it could be believed. However doubt-ful much a feet way account. ful such a feat may appear, it is certain that one Huet, who at first thought it impossible, demon-strated by experiment that it could be done. A piece of vellum, 10 inches in length and 8 wide. would hold 250 lines, each line containing 30 verses, and thus filling both sides of the vellum 15,000, the whole number of verses in the Isad, could be written upon it; and this piece of vellum, folded compactly, would go easily into the shell of a walnut. It is nothing unusual to find nowadays writing of a still more minute character than this, seeing that the Ten Commandments have been written in a compass small enough to be covered by a sixpence. There is a portrait of Queen Anne in the British Museum, on which appear a number of minute lines and senteches, which, when examined through a microscope, are shown to be the entire contents of a small folio book which the librarian has in his possession. A similar effort in the way of microscopic aslienced was a small folio as the contents of the croscopic caligraphy was some years ago discor-cred in London by a gentleman who had bought at a sale a pen-and-ink portrait of Alexander Pope, surrounded by a design in scroll-work. Examining it through a glass, in order, if possible, to discover the artist's name, he was astun-ished to find that the fine lines in the surrounding scroll was nothing less than a fife of the soot, so minutely transcribed as only to be legible by the sid of a magnificr. This was an evident imitation of a similar effort in the way of portraiture which was at one time in a library at Oxford, where a head of Charles L was drawn in minute characters, so fine as to resemble the lines of an engraving, but which, when closely examined, were found to be the Book of Psalms, the Creed, and the Lord's Prayer,

FACTS FOR THE LADIES.

I have bad a Whillier & Wilson Sewing Machine for more than fourteen years, and during that time it has been in almost constant use, without even the most trifling repairs. Many thousand dollars' worth of work has been done with it in furnishing my hotel, and my wife says she would not now exchange it for any other machine she has accurately machine she has ever seen.

New York.

DVEPERSA TABLETS CUTe Indigestion, Heartburn, and Sonr Stomach. Pifty Cents per Box. Mailed for 60c. Sold by druggists. S. G. Welanne, 521 Broadway.

Augura Wanted.—Hinkley Knitting Machine. Knita every thing. Send to office, 176 Broadway, for Circulars.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

GRAND EXCURSION TO

LAKE SUPERIOR. The splendid steamer METEOR leaves Cleveland, Ohio, on Friday, July 16th and 8th, August 18th and 2th, at 8 o'clock, F.M., and Detroit, Elch, the following evenings at 80 o'clock, for Superior City, Deliath, and all points of interest on Lake Superior. Rooms secured and other information obtained by application to

HANNA & CO., Ag'ts, Cleveland, O.;

BUCKLEY & CO., Ag'ts, Detroit, Mich.;
or J. T. WHITING, Manager, Detroit, Mich.

WEDLOCK;

Or, The Bront Briarrices or the Saxes, is a new and popular Summer Book, giving practical—scientific—instruction as to who should not marry. Booksellers have it: 31 50, or in extra git; $8. Sent, first post, by S. R. WELLS, 389 Broadway, N. Y.

GET IT PURE.

A pint of Pain Paint for $5, a quart for $5, or a gal-lon for $20, double strength, with full directions, will be sent to any person, free of Express charges, on re-ceipt of the money at Dr. H. L. Woucour's Office, 181 Chatham Square, New York; or 6 pint bottles of An-nihilator, for Cutarrh and Colds in the head, on re-ceipt of $6. Small bottles sold at all Druggists.

A T DR. HERRO'S SCHOOL for YOUNG A LADRES are advantages to be found in no other school in the world. ERILY A. RICE, Prin-vipal. Send for circular to Ds. J. HERO, Westboro, Mass.

FOR BOSTON VIA PALL RIVER DIRECT.

BRISTOL and PROVIDENCE, Com'r BRAYTON, Com'r SIMMONS, Will Leave (Alternate Days) Daily, FROM PIER—36—NORTH RIVER, (Fost of Chambers Street),

DODWORTH'S CELEBRATED ORCHESTRA Grand Promenade Concert

THE ONLY LINE RUNNING SUNDAY NIGHT.

PROVIDENCE Passengers by the above steamers will leave Fall River at 820 A.M.

ARRIVING at 429 A.M.

RETURNING Will leave Providence at 5 P.M., making direct connection with the boat, and allowing a good night's rest on board each way.

To better accommodate the public,

THE SPLENDID STEAMERS

NEWPORT and OLD COLONY.

NEWPORT and OLD COLONY, NEWPORT and OLD COLONY, COMMANDE LEWIS, COMMANDER MILLER,
WILL LEAVE (Alternate Baye) DAILY,
(Sundays excepted),
FROM PIEL 28—NORTH RIVER,
(Foot of Murray Street),
—AT 6:30 P.M.,
—
BOSTON via NEWPORT.
FREIGHT received at Pier 30 up to 5 P.M., and at Pier 39 up to 50 P.M., and at Pier 39 up to 50 P.M.,
JAMES FISK, Jr., President,

M. R. SIMONS, Managing Director, CHAS. H. VAILE, General Presenger Agent, H. H. MANGAM, Freight Agent, NARRAGANSETT STRABBUT COMPANY.

SEWING MACHINES.

The HARTLETT Revensible Machines, as now being made at their new factory, with new machinery and selected weckmen, will surpass every thing in completeness, simplicity, and low cost for family sewing. They will be made for use by hand or foot. Ladies need not be obliged to use a treasfle to their injury. The machines for use by hand will have Bartlett's patent "speed" wheel, with which they may be run as rapidly as other machines are by treadle. Every machine will be warranted perfect, and kept in order for one year. Price, with all improvements and with attachments, $30. Address, for machines or appearing. The Bartlett Reversible S. M. Co., 569 Broodway, N. Y.

GROCERS, DRUGGISTS, HARDWARE and FURNISHING STORES sell

TIN, BRASS, IRON, WINDOW GLASS, MARKLE, KNIVES, FORKS, MACHINERY, and general METALLIC WARE.

Removes all Rust or Stalus. Gives a Brilliant Polish. Better, cheaper, quicker than any other substance. Contains no poisonous or injurious ingredient. Is elegantly wrapped. It is to the interest of Storekeepers to sell it.

Depot, 211 Washington St., New York. SCAPS OF ALL KINDS FOR FAMILY USE. Established 1809.

PIANOS and ORGANS.

Priors greatly reduced for Cash. New Seven-Octave Planos, of first-class makers, for $355 and upward. New Cabinet Organs for $45 and upward, Second-hand Planos, Melodeons, and Organs from $45 to $15, at 481 Broadway, N. Y. HORACE WATERS.

HARPER'S PERIODICALS.

TERMS FOR 1869.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE, One Year......$4 00 Harpen's Werkly, One Year...... 4 00 Harpen's Baran, One Year...... 4 00

HARPEN'S MAGAZINE, HARPEN'S WREELE, and HARPEN'S BARAN, to one address, for one year, $10 00; or may two for $7 00.

two for $1.00.

An Entra Copy of either the Managers, Werenz, or Baxas will be supplied gratts for every Club of Five Scascinions at $4.00 esch, in one resultance; or, Sin Copies for $20.00, without entra copy.

The Postage within the United States is for the Managers Meests a year, for the Werenz or Baxas 20 cents a year, papilic yearly, semi-yearly, or quasterly, at the office where received. Subscriptions from the Dominion of Canada must be scoompanied with 94 cents additional for the Managers, or 30 cents for the Werenz or Basas, to prepay the United States postage.

the Werkly of Basas, to prepay the United States postage.

The Volumes of the Managers commence with the Numbers for June and December of each year. Subscriptions may commence with any Number. When no lime is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to begin with the first Number of the corrent Volume, and back Numbers will be sent accordingly.

The Volumes of the Werkly commence with the year. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to commence with the Number next after the receipt of his order.

Subscribers to the Managers, Werkly, or Bazas will find on each wrapper the Number with which their subscription expires. Each periodical is stopped when the term of subscription closes. It's not necessary to give notice of discontinuance.

In remitting by mail, a Fost-Office Order or Draft payable to the order of Harrie & Harrier or Draft be lett or stolen, if can be renewed without hose to the sender.

In ordering the Managers, the Werkly, or the

the sender.

In ordering the Manazine, the Wessix, or the Basax, the name and address should be clearly written. When the direction is to be changed, both the old and the new one must be given.

THREE POR ADVERTORING IN HARPER'S PERSONDALS. Harper's Hauszine.—Whole Page, $550; Half Page, $150; Quarter Page, $70—each insertion; or, for a less space, $1 50 per Line, each insertion; or, for a less space, $1 50 per Line; each insertion.

Harper's Waskly.—Inselie Pages, $1 50 per Line; Outside Pages, $5 00 per Line—each insertion.

Harper's Basse.—$1 00 per Line; Onts and Display, $1 50 per Line—each insertion.

Address HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

THOMSON'S

"GLOVE-FITTING"

The Most Popular Corest over introduced into the American Market.

The strongest proof of the excellence and popularity of this Cornet is found in the securous attempts to palm off vertiless incidences as the penume expected "Gloss-Piring." We therefore call special attention to our stamp, which is always to be found on the penume goods, and of which we give a fac-simile below.

TRADE MARK THOMSON'S PATENT

N.B.—All infring-ers of Patent or of our Copyright in Name, "Glove-Fit-ting," will be pros-ecuted.

THOMBON, LANGDON, & CO., 391 Broadway, N.Y.,

Sole Importers and Patentees for the United States.

CYPRESS HILLS CEMETERY.

OFFICE, No. 124 BOWERY, F. Y., (Corner of Grand Street). OFFICERS:

EDMUND DRIGGS, President.
WM. J. PEASE, Vice-President.
WILLIAM MILER, Transpore.
WILLIAM EDWARDS, Secretary.
A. S. JARVIS, HERVEY G. LAW, JOHN I.
VAN ALST, ALFRED M. WOOD, Trustees. N. G. PALMER, Sup't and Surveyor.

SWEET
QUININE,
QUININE,
SVAPNIA,
SVAPNIA,
SVAPNIA,
SUBJECT SUPPLIES A PROPERTY OF CONTROL OF CONTRO

ONLY ONE DOLLAR

FOR ZEON'S HERMALD to Jan. 1st, 1870. A first-class Illustrated Religious Journal of 16 pages. 200 Contributors; 5 Editors, The cheapest paper in the land. $2 50 a year, in advance. Specimen copies free.

E. D. WINSLOW, Publisher, II Cornhill, Boston.

$15 A DAY. Samples Free. Address, with stamp, RAND & CO., Biddeford, Me.

BOOKS FOR THE COUNTRY.

HARPER & BROTHERS, New York, Publish the following Works:

ROOSEVELT'S FIVE ACRES TOO MUCH. Five Acres Too Much. A Truinful Elucidation of the Acres Too Much. A Truinful Elucidation of the Astrontions of the Country, and a Careful Consideration of the Question of Profit and Lose as trovied in Amateur Parming, with much valuable Advice and Instruction to those about Purchasing Large or Small Fisces in the Rural Districts. By Resears B. Reseavana, Author of "Game Fish of North America," "Superior Fishing," "Game Birds," &c. With Characteristic Illustrations. 12mo, Cloth, $1-60.

FLAGG'S BURGPEAN VINETARDS. Three Seasons in European Vineyards. Treating of Vine-Culture: Vine Bissass and its Cure; Wise-Making and Wiles, Red and Walte; Wise-Drinking as affecting Bealth and Morals. By Winizak J. Flagos. 12mo, Cloth, $1.80.

SCOTT'S PISHING-BOOK. Pishing in American Waters. By Garno C. Scott. With 179 Illustra-

MEAD'S GRAPE CULTURE. An Elementary Treaties on American Grape Culture and Wine-Raking. By Parza B. Maan. Profusely Illustrated. Svo, Cloth, 50 06.

VAUX'S ARCHITECTURE. Villas and Cottages: A Series of Designs prepared for Execution in the United States. By Canvers Vaux, Architect (into Downton & Vaux), New Edition, Revised and En-larged. Hinstrated by nearly 500 Engravings. Svo, Cloth, 85 90.

THE AMERICAN HOME GARDEN. Being Principles and Rules for the Culture of Vegetables, Fruits, Flowers, and Shrubbery. To which are added brief Notes on Farm Grops, with a Table of their average Product and Chemical Constituents. By Annanta Warson. Several Hundred Illustrations. 19mo, Cloth, $5.00.

WOOD'S HOMES WITHOUT HANDS: being a Description of the Habitations of Asimals, classed excording to their Principles of Construction. By J. G. Wood, M.A., F.L.S., Author of "Hinstrated Natural History." With about 140 Hinstrations engraved on Wood by G. Pearson, from Original Designs made by F. W. Keyl and E. A. Smith, under the Author's Superintendence. Svo, Cloth, Bereied Riggs, $4 59.

EF Harris & Hayrrisas will send any of the above tries by most, postage from to any part of the United Steel, on receipt of the green.

Removed to 335 Broadway. THE COLLINS $15.

n: is connis

WATCH FACTORY.

$20.

The Collins Metal and Jewelry Factory has re-seved from 81 Nassan Street to their spleudid law Offices,

No. 335 BROADWAY.

No. 330 BECADWAY.

These superior Watches have now been in use over three years, and give universal satisfaction; and aithrough sold at so moderate a price, are not surpassed in appearance and for time by gold ones costing $150 and $200. They have been greatly improved, but the price remains the same, $15. Those of extra fine finish, $20. Gents' and Ladies' sizes. Jewelry of the richest styles, in every respect equal to the finest gold, at one-tenth the price. We have but

ONE OFFICE, NO AGENTS,

and are not responsible for the bogus and worth-less goods sold at chean jewelry establishments. Our Factory is the ONLY PLACE where the Gen-vice Collins Metal Watches and Jewelry can be

C. E. COLLINS & CO.,

No. 335 Broadway, car. Worth Street,

(Up Stairs).

DO YOUR OWN PRINTING.

MINTHAT

The Novelty is the best Press ever invented with which to do your own princting, and is second to none for the use of General Job Printers.

Price of Presses, $15, $30, $30, $50.

建100 (1)

Seed to BENJ. O. WOODS,
Seed to BENJ. O. WOODS,
Proprietor, Ed. Federal St.
Buston, Mass., for descriptive circular constaining testimonicies from all parts of the tounitry, with specimens of work done on the press, and specimen sheets of Types, Ceta, Borders, &c.

The following correspondence is self-explanatory:

The following correspondence is self-explanatory:

Executive Marsion,

Wannisorce, D. C., June 3, 1860.}

Benf, O. Woods, Eng., 551 Peteral St., Soston;

Stx.,—Please send by express, "Collect on delivery," one of your "Norelty" Printing Presses, complete, price 513.

This press is for the son of the Precident, Please address it to "The Precident, Executive Mansion,

Washington, D. C." Very truly yours,

O. E. KallCOCK, Secretary.

Excourses Massion,
Washington, D. C., June 21, 1869.

Sea, O. Foods, Ray, 351 Federal St., Society.
Sea,—The Freedent requests me to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 18th inst, and also the receipt of the prese and material by Expense.
The Freedent wishes me to thank you for the kindness in supplying so much material for his son. Master Jessie is stock pleased with it all.

I am, siz, your obt seevit,
O. E. BABCOCK, Secretary.

The Novelty Press, wherever used, has given gree satisfaction; doing excellent work, and being a mar-vel of simplicity. Merchants, drugglets, and business men generally can make a great saving of time and expense by its mes.—Boston Journest, June 16.

Owner or the New Bedneswick Water Co., }
New Supervice, N. J., June 28d, 1869. }
Benj. O. Woods: Dear Sir,—The Octavo Press and familiare came safely to hand, and works, upon the first trial, to my entire satisfaction. Yours, &c.
THOS. N. DOUGHTY, Secretary.

IMPROVED ALUMINIUM BRONZE HUNTING-CASED WATCHES.

The Improved Aluminium fromate is a metal differing en-Bronzo is a metal differing en-tirely from any ever offered to the public. Its qualities and resemblance to dold are such that even judges have been deceived. It has seriously oc-cupied the attention of scien-tific men, and has not only called forth the enlogiums of the press in consequence of its peculiar properties, but has also obtained a Gold Medal at the Paris Exposition.

The movements are well fin-

at the Paris Exposition.

The movements are well finished, perfectly regulated, and as all these goods are manufactured in my own factory, I am enabled to warrant them as excellent time-heepers.

Further details will be found in my pamphiet, which will be sent, poetpaid, on demand.

Goods sent by Express. C. O. D., with charges.

Address JULIES B. HUGUENIN VUILLEMIN,
No. 44 Nassan Street, New York.

FOR PIANO-FORTE INSTRUCTION There is no Book equal to it,

There is no every one who has had my experience with BICHARDSON'S NEW METHOD, the most popular, thorough, and attractive volume of Stadies, Examples, and Exercises ever published. Price 26 75 Sent post fee. Bold by all Masic Dealers.

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Publishers, 217 Washington St., Boston.

DO YOUR OWN PRINTING. Chespest and Best Portable Presses.

MEN AND BOYS MAKING MONEY. Price of Presses, $5, $18, $16. Offices, $15, $26, $50. Send for a circular to LOWE PRISES CO., 15 Spring Lane, Boston, Mass.

$10 PER DAY GUARANTEED

Agents to sell the Hour Surveys Savino Macuina. It makes the near struct, attack on norm store, has the under-feed, and is equal in every respect to any Seving Machine ever invented. Price 250. Warranted for 5 years. Send for circular. Address Jourson, Claux, & Co., Boston, Mass., Pittsburgh, Fa., or St. Louis, Mo.

PARLOR STRAM ENGINE: made entire-A by of Metal; Solies and Furnace complete; will work for hours if supplied with water, &c.; free from danger; a child can work it. Sent free, with instruc-tions, for $1.00; there for $2.50. Address WALTER HOLT, No. 108 Nassen Street, New York.

Agents! Read This!

WE WILL PAY AGENTS A SALARY
of $30 per week and expenses, or allow a large commission, to relie our new and wonderful inventions. Address M. WAGNER & CO., Marshall, Mich.

VINEGAR.—How made from Cider, Wine, Mo-without using drags. For berms, dreaker, &c., ad-dress F. I. SAGE, Vinegar Maker, Cromwell, Ct.

This is acknowledged to be the best saw and in more general use than any other in the United States. For Sale by all first-close Hardware Desires. Made by the LIVINGSTON MANUFACTURING CO., 80 BEREMAN ST., N. Y.

MADAME FOY'S

COMBINED

Is just the article needed by every lady who would conselt health, comfort, and style. Over 46,000 does of these goods have been sold within for them is constantly increasing. HARMON, BALDWIN HARMON, BALDWIN, & FOY, Sole Manufacturers, New Haven, Coun.

D. B. Saustern & Co., Boston, Mass.; Let, Alexander, Bens, & Co., Polishelphia; Abant & Moutrow, Bens, & Co., Polishelphia; Abant & Moutrow, Baltimore; Eavyman & Barn, New York, are our Agents.

$100 PER DAY DISCONTINUED.

Eaving obtained an extensive and wide-operad sale for our "CENTURY" brand of Fine-Oot Cheering Tobacce, we desire to amounce that we shall not pack daily 2100 in the small tin-foll papers after this date, July 1st, 1800, its meetis being so favorably recognised that this inducement is no longer necessary. To avoid misapprehension, however, we would add that we shall continue to pack orders for elegant Marshaven Pipes in our "YACERT CLUB" and "RUBBERA" brands of Necking Tobacce.

The "YACET CLUB" is devoid of Nicotine, and can not injure the health, and is especially recommended to people of sedentary occupations or nervous constitutions.

The trade are invited to send for circulars.

The trade are invited to send for circulars.

P. LORILLAND, New York.

DSYCHOMANCY. Fascination; or, Science of the Soul, as applied to the purposes of life. 400 pages, Cloth. By Humany Hammon, H.A. A curious book for inquisitive people. It contains complete instructions to acquire this wooderful power over men or animals. Can be obtained by sending postage stamp and address to T. W. SYANS & CO., 41 South 5th Street, Philadelphia.

MAPLEWOOD INSTITUTE for Young Ladies, Pittefield, Mans., commences its Fall term Sept 16, 1889. Facilities and location un-surpassed. Rrv. C. V. SPEAR, Principal.

EMPLOYMENT that pass. For particulars, address S. M. SPENCER & CO., Bratileboro, Vt.

$10 PER DAY.—Agents wanted to sell an Amosing $10 Toy. Specimes and particulars on receipt of accent stamp. Address W. Raws, 26 Leight St., N. Y.

$9 A DAY FOR ALL. Address N. Y.

"As natural as Thackeray, and more real than Dickens,"

HARPER & BROTHERS, New York, have just published:

My Daughter Elinor.

A NOVEL

8vo, PAPER, $1 25.

A good American novel, presenting life and society in the United States—the life that we live and the society of which we are a constituent part—has long been the decideratum of publishers and the despair of novel-readers.  A story in which the characters are types of the American people at large, differing from the same social representatives of other countries, is rarely issued from the press. Such a story is "My Daughter Elinor," which is destined to atting a wide popularity, because delinesting with naturalness and vertsimilitate the life that is around as. It is from such books that the historian gathers the habitation of the age of which he writes. The style is cany and manfacted, at times straining overmuch at optoma, and again running a little into sitpshod; quid the dialogue is rapid and effective, never tottaring with obvious comment or basing with inevitable inference.—Reening Post.

EF HADEN & Burness will send the above work by mail, postage propole, to any part of the United States, on receipt of $1 55.

HARPER & BROTHERS.

PRANKLIN SQUARE, NEW YORK,

Have just Published:

FAMOUS LONDON MERCHANTS. A Book for Boys. By H. R. Fox Boysses. With Portrait of George Peabody and 54 Illustrations. 16mo, Cloth, $1.00.

SIGHTS AND SENSATIONS IN FRANCE, GER-MANY, AND SWITZERLAND; or, Experiences of an American Journalist in Europe. By Edward Goold Buyens. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

SANDS'S PHILOSOPHY OF TRACHING. The Teacher, the Pupil, the School. By NATHANIEL SANDA. STO, Cloth, $1 90.

PIVE ACRES TOO MUCH. A Truthful Elucida-tion of the Attractions of the Country, and a Cara-ful Consideration of the Question of Profit and Loss as involved in Amsterr Farming, with much Valu-shie Advice and Instruction to those about Purchas-ing Large or Small Places in the Bursi Districts. By Rouser B. Rooseverr, With Characteristic H-lustrations. 1800c, Cloth, $1.50.

THREE SEASONS IN EUROPEAN VINEYARDS.
Treating of Vine-Culture: Vine Disease and his Cure: Wine-Making and Wines, Red and Walte; Wine-Drinking as affecting Reach and Morals. By William J. Placo. 12mo, Cloth, $150.

RHETORIC: a Text-Book, designed for Use in Schools and Colleges, and for Private Study. By Rev. E. O. Haves, D.D., LL.D., President of the Northwestern University, Evanston, III. 19200, Cloth, 31 50.

A PARSER AND ANALYZER FOR BEGINNESS, with Diagrams and Suggestive Partures. By Fancou A. Masou, Professor of the English Language and Comparative Philology in Language, andhor of "Method of Philological Study of the English Language," "Comparative Grampur of the Anglo-Seron Language," Sc. 16mo, Cioth, 40 cents.

THE STUDENT'S SCRIPTURE RISTORY. The Old Testament Bistory. From the Creation to the Roturn of the Jews from Caputrity. Edited by WILLAR Serve, LL.D. With Maps and Woodents. Large Bine, Coth, $2.90. Uniform with The Enderfo New Testament Mistory.

THE MALAY ARCHIPELAGO: The Land of the Grang-Usan and the Sird of Paradise. A Narrative of Travel, with Sudden of Man and Nature. By Alexan Rossel. Walleto, Anthor of "Travels on the Amazon and Rio Negro," "Palm Trees of the Amazon," &c. With Teo Maps and Fifty-one elegant Illustrations. Crown 8vo, Cloth, $3.50.

PISHING IN AMERICAN WATERS. By GREED C. Scott. With 176 Illustrations. Crown Sto. Cloth, $8 50.

HARPER'S HAND-BOOK FOR TRAVELLERS IN EUROPE AND THE SAST. Being a Onide through France, Beigins, Holland, Gernany, Aus-tria, Italy, Egypt, Syria, Turkey, Greece, Switzen-land, Tyrot, Busels, Denmark, Sweden, Spelle, and Great British and Ireland. With a Railmond Meg-corrected up to 1858. By W. PERSENER, Parison, Ravised Bullion: Severally Fast. Large 1800, Leath-er, Pocket-Book Form, $1.56.

HARPER'S PHRASE-BOOK; ce, Hand-Book of Travel Talk for Travellers and Schools. Being a Guide to Conversations in English, Freeth, German, and liafian, on a New and Improved Method. In-tended to accompany "Harper's Hand-Book for Traveliers." By W. Passessons Frammas. Assisted by Professors of Heidelberg University. With con-cise and explicit Ruies for the Procunciation of the different Languages. Square 16mo, Flacible Cloth, $1.50.

The New Novels

PUBLISHED BY

HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

HETTY. By Husur Kussener, Author of "Stret-ton," &c. 8vo, Paper, 35 cents.

MY DAUGHTER ELINOR. A Novel of American Society. Seo, Paper, $1 25.

CORD AND CREESE. By the Anthor of "The Bodge Clab." Illustrated. 8vo, Paper, 75 cents.

STRETTON. A Novel. By Haver Knrostev, Author of "Heety," "Geoffrey Hamlyu," "Ravenshoe," &c. 6vo, Poper, 40 cents.

THE DODGE CLUB; or, Italy in 1830. By Jawas Du Mille, Author of "Cord and Creese," &c. With One Hundred Bustrations. Syc, Paper, 15 cents; Cloth, $1 25.

THACKERAY'S NOVELS:

New Edition, beautifully printed, with the Author's own Hinstrations.

VANITY FAIR. 22 Illustrations. 8vo, Paper, 50 cts. THE VIRGINIANS. 100 Dinstrations, 8vo, Pa-per, 75 cents.

THE NEWCOMES. 163 Blustrations. Svo, Paper,

THE ADVENTURES OF PHILIP. Portrait of Author and 64 illustrations. 6vo, Paper, 50 couts. 29" HARPER & BROTHERS will form t See Billions of Timbergy's other Novice, by the Author, at correspondingly less pric

CHARLES READE'S NOVELS:

HARD CASH. Illustrated. Svo, Paper, 35 cents. GRIFFITH GAUNT; or, Jealousy, Blustrated. Svo, Paper, 25 cents.

IT IS NEVER TOO LATE TO MEND. 8vo, Paper, 85 cents. LOVE ME LITTLE, LOVE ME LONG. 870, Pa-

FOUL PLAY. See, Paper, 25 cents.

ANTHONY TROLLOPE'S LAST NOVELS: PHINEAS FINN, the Irish Member. Hinstrated by Millals. 8vo, Paper, $1.50; Cloth, $1.70. HE KNEW HE WAS RIGHT. Complete. With 44 Hinstrations by Mayora Stone. Svo, Paper, $1.00; Cloth, $1.50. Part II., separately, Paper, 50 cepts.

EW HARPER & Buoymens will send any of the slo books by mail, postage free, to any part of the United States, on receipt of the price.

TO AGENTS. L OSSING'S PICTORIAL FIELD-BOOK OF THE WAR OF 1812 is now ready for delivery to Agents. Price, in Cloth, 57 60: Full Rose, 50 60; Raif Cast, $10 60. HARPER & BROTHERS.

Digitized by Google

AFTER SUPPER -- STRANGE ADMISSION!

Mn. S. "May I have the pleasure of Waltzing with you, Miss Jones?" Miss J. "I would with pleasure, but unfortunately I'm quite Full!"

A Seven per Cent. GOLD LOAN.

$6,500,000.

The Kansas Pacific Railway, now in successful op-ration from Kansas City to Sheridan, proposes to salid an extension to Denver, Colorado. The Govern-nent has granted Three Millions of Acres of the finest ands in Kansas and Colorado, which are mortgaged or the security of a loan of $6,500,000.

This loan is secured in the most effectual manner. It represents a road in profitable operation, and will spen the trade of the Rocky Mountain Country, and connect it with the great markets of the East. It is madered to be one of the best loans in the market, EVEN BETTER IN SOME RESPECTS THAN GOVERNMENT SECURITIES.

The loan has thirty years to run, principal and in-erest payable in gold, semi-annually, seven per cent. The coupons will be payable semi-annually in either frankfort, London, or New York, and will be free from lovernment taxation. The bonds for the present are old in currency at 86, with accrased interest.

Circulars, maps, and pemphiets sent on application.

DABNEY, MORGAN, & CO., 53 Exchange Place, N. Y. M. K. JESUP & CO.,

Why Languish with a Sick Headache when one or two doses of that pleasant remedy, Tan-tant's Erreavescent Service Arguient, will remove he pain and leave the brain cloudless? KEPT BY DRUGGISTS ALL OVER THE WORLD.

TO THE BOOK TRADE

Dr. Chasa's Recepts; on Information for Every Book, a book of 184 pages of practical information for Physicians, and all branches of Mechanics, Far-tiers, Farmers, and for general family use, is now OPEN TO THE TRADE.

This is the most practical Book of Recipes in the WOILLD. Evidence—over 384,000 copies of the work have been sold. Every Bookstore should have from a decen to 100 copies.

For one copy enclose $1.25. For Price-List to Dealist, send for a Circular.

Editors who will give this advertisement one insertien, and send us a marked copy, will receive the book postponi.

THE JUDG PARILY: OR, AN EVENING VISIT, AND WHAT CAME OF IT, Will be ready for Agents in August. Address A. W. CHASE, M.D.

Ann Arbor, Mich. July, 1869.

A, 1.-Fragrant as the Lily of the Valley is the Monna of Barry's Tricophereus.

Mrs. Kara, Willoughby Ave., near Reesson Street, Becoklyn, says, "BARRY'S TRICOPHEROUS is the most beautifying Hair Bestorer I have ever used."

FOUNTAINS, VASES, and GARDEN ORNAMENTS.

JANES, KIRTLAND, & CO., 8, 10, & 18 Read St., New York.

"FRESH AS A MAIDEN'S BLUSH" is the pure peachy complexion which follows the use of HAGAN'S MAGNOLIA BALM. It is the true secret of beauty. Fashionable ladies in society understand this,

The Magnolia Balm changes the rustic country girl into a city belle more rapidly than any other one thing.

Redness, Sunburn, Tan, Freckles, Blotches, and all effects of the summer sun disappear when it is used, and a genial, cultivated, fresh expression is obtained, which rivals the bloom of youth. Beauty is possible to all who will invest 75 cents at any respectable store and insist on getting the Magnolia Balm.

Use nothing but LYON'S KATHAIRON to dress the hair.

STEVENS POCKET RIPLE.

With Detachable Shoulder Rest. Most popular arm made for Sporting and Target-Shouting. Surrer & Wisson's Brivar was, in any quantity, for cash, at handred price. Asson's Drammeres, and other Fistols.

J. W. STORES & CO., HT's Agents, 1985 Broadway, New York.

Hemestere's Hars Colorine.—The best and most reliable Hars Restorative ever effected to the public, PRICE ONLY 50 Crs. PER BOTTLE, or large bot-tes for $1.00. Satisfaction guaranteed in all ciace. Sold by all Druggists, and Wholesale by Jones F. Buxer, at U. S. Family Medicine Warehouse, No. 8 College Place, New York.

FISHERMEN! TWINES and NETTING, MANUFACTURED BY

WM. E. HOOPER & SONS, Bend for Price-List.] Baltimore, Md.

CATALOGUES SENT FREE. MATHEMATICAL INSTRUMENTS, 112 pages,
OPTICAL INSTRUMENTS, 72 pages,
MAGIC LANTERNS and STEREOPTICANS, 100 pp.
PHILOSOPHICAL INSTRUMENTS, 84 pages,
JAMES W. QUEEN & CO.,
104 Chestnut St., Philodelphia, Pa.

MANN'S DOUBLE TROLLING SPOON.

This Teolling Bult stands unequaled for catching Fike, Fickerel, Bass, &c. It is far superior to any single spoon ever invented. Price Ibc. each. JOHN H. MANN, Syracuse, N. Y.

HUBSON RIVER INSTITUTE and CLAVERACK COLLEGE offers a Four Years' Collegiate Course for Ladies. Graduates receive the Baccalagrants Degree. A Three Years' Seminary Course for Ladies and Gentlemen. The best college preparation for young men. Board and tuition in the entire course $200 a year. Re-opened September 5. Address Rev. ALONDO PLACE, A.M., Claverock, N. Y.

$2000 A YEAR AND EXPENSES to Apenta, to introduce the Wilson Sewing Machine. Sitch alite on both sides. Samples on two weeks' trial. Extra inducements to experienced agenta. For further particulars, address the WILSON SEWING MACHINE CO., Cleveland, Ohio: Boston, Mass.; or St. Louis, Mo.

The Reason why Every One should buy a Haines Piano;

The reputation of these Pianos is fully established as being unsurpassed by any for a rich, full tone, elasticity of touch, long standing in tune, and elegance of style and finish.

Every article used in the construction of the Haines Piano is of the best quality and of thoroughly sessoned materials.

The prices being reasonable, they can not fall to suit any who may desire to purchase.

Circulars and information sent on application to HAINES BROTHERS,

46 East 14th Street, New York,

Or to Saire & Heros, Chicago, Illa.; H. N. Herrstran, Milwankee, Wis.; Lovis Thirr, Louisville, Ky.; J. A. McCleur, Nachville, Tenn.; Kungers Broa., St. Louis, Mo.; J. R. Jackson, Sandusky, Ohio; J. E. Goule, Philadelphis, Pa.; Mrs. C. Bures, Pittsburg, Pa.; Brainvan & Scos, Cleveland, Ohio; Cleure & Sons, Albany and Troy, N. Y.; J. T. Hamston, Rhinebeck, N. Y.; J. H. Hintermister, Ithacs, N. Y.; White, Saite, & Perry, Boston, Mass.; Hatthias Gray, San Francisco, Cal.; C. M. Munoz, Cincinnati, Ohio; C. M. Leonie, New Haven, Coun.

IVORIDE

KNIFE-HANDLES.

EQUAL IN

BEAUTY and DURABILITY

TO THE GENUINE

IVORY,

AND AT

HALF THE PRICE.

This material is guaranteed to resist the action of heat and cold, whether of water or of the atmosphere.

FOR SALE BY ALL DEALERS.

J. Russell & Co.,

Green River Cutlery Works,

83 BREEMAN STREET, New York City.

NATURE'S GREAT RESTORER.

GREEN MOUNTAIN MINERAL SPRING WA-TER, Mount Holly, VL

TER, Mount Holly, Vt.

This celebrated water cures Dyspepsis, Rheumatism, Piles, Scrobia, Urinary Diseases, and Female Weaknesses. "It is a tonic and general builder-up of the system." Send for Descriptive Circular. Said by Druggists.

McRESSON & ROBBINS, No. 21 Fulton St., N.Y.,
GEO. C. GOODWIN & CO., Boston, Mass., Agents.

F. FENN & CO., Proprietors, Entland, Vt.

GOING UP TOWN!

On the 15th of August we shall remove to 747 BROADWAY, near 8th St., and now offer our present stock of CHINA, GLASS, AND FANCY GOODS at very low prices

Davis Collamore & Co.,

479 Broadway, near Broome St.

IN REMOTE SETTLEMENTS OF UNTOLD VALUE.

Food makes blood; blood makes the body. If the blood be pure, the body is healthy. So if we are not in health, we know some impurities are lurking about which must be removed, and the scoper the better.

Brandreth's Pills remove all from the system which nature needs no longer.

The wonderful cures effected by Brandreth's Pills have arrested the attention of enlightened physician Upward of five thousand now use them in their daily practice, and two hundred have given their written testimony as to their innocence and value as cleans of the bowels and blood.

Their untold value is to those living in settlements where doctors can only be had at great expense. For if you are sick, you have only to take one or more es of Brandreth's Pills to get cared. Full Directions are with each box. Sold by all Druggiets.

Pottax & Son, Manuf're of Genu-ine Heerschaum goods. Stores: 128 Breedway, under St. Nicholas Hotel, & 97 John St., middle of block. Send for new wholessie or retail circular to Letter-Box 8848. Repairing and Boiling also done.

R. HOE & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS OF WARRANTED

Extra Cast-Steel Patent-Ground Circular, Mill, Mulay, and Gang Saws.

CIRCULAR SAWS,

WITH MOVABLE OR INSERTED TEETH.

We claim for dur Patent Circular Saw the following advantages over all others:
The shanks of the teeth are elastic, and exert a uniform distension in the sockets.
The stability of the plate is in no way affected by inserting new sets of teeth.
Each tooth, independently, may be adjusted to the catting line.
No rivets, keys, or other objectionable appliances are employed in connection with the teeth, which are as simple in construction and as easily used as a sut for a boit.
In short, all the difficulties heretofore experienced in the use of movable teeth for saws are fully met and obviated by this invention.

TUTTLE PATENT "CHAMPION" CROSS-CUT SAWS.

CROSS-CUT SAWS OF ALL KINDS.

SAW MANDRELS, CUMMING MACHINES, &c.

Send for Catalogues and Price-Lists.

R. HOE & CO.,

Printing-Press, Machine, and Saw Manufacturers, NEW YORK; BOSTON, Mass.; and LONDON, Eng.

THE REISSUE OF

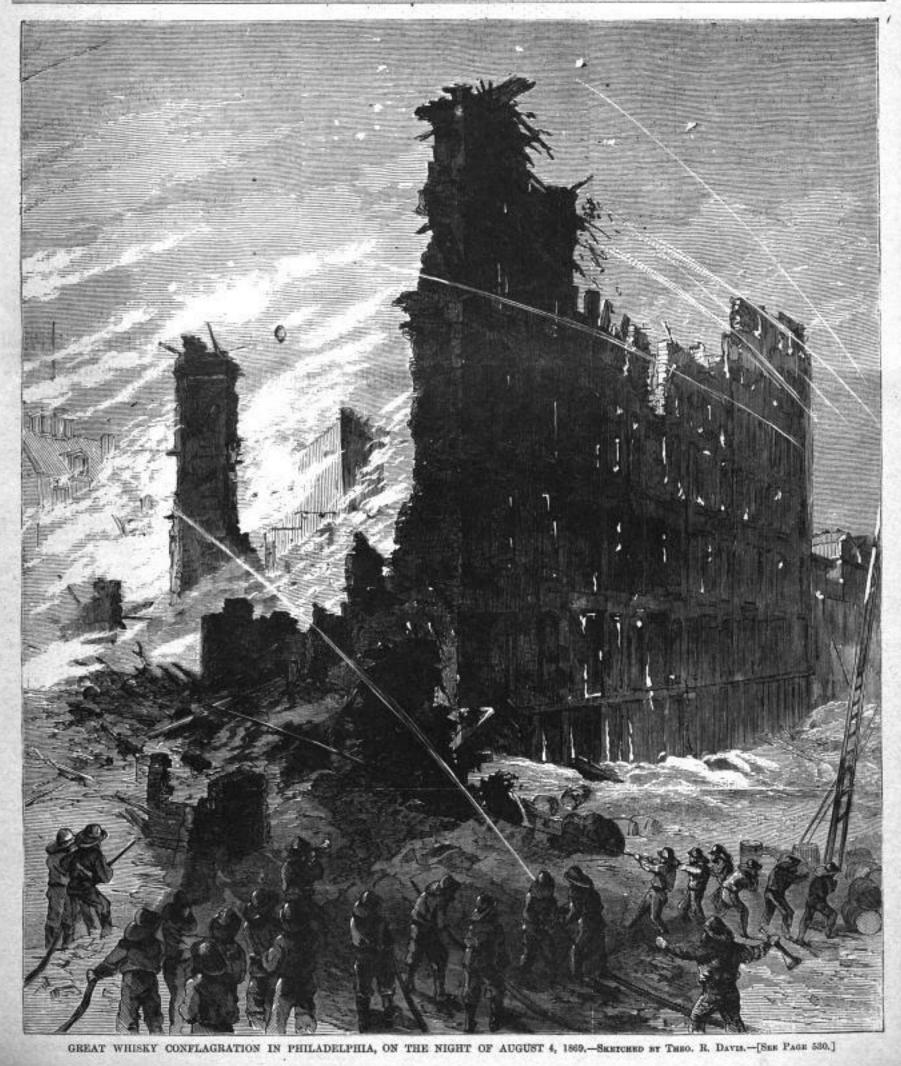

YOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION

Vol. XIII.-No. 660.]

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, AUGUST 21, 1869.

SINGLE COPIES, TEN CENTS. 54.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1868, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the United States, for the Southern District of New York.

THE FIRE IN PHILADELPHIA.

Turn late fire in Philadelphia was the most destructive that ever occurred in that city. The buildings consumed constituted the largest warehouse in the United States. They possessed an enormous capacity, and were considered by their architects to be so completely proof against fire that they advised the owner to avoid the expense of insurance.

of insurance.

These buildings were erected for Colonel W.C.
PAYMERSON in 1854; they were nine in number, situated on Front Street, extending east to Pann Street, and having also a front on Lombard.
They were of brick, with iron columns on the first story, and with walls eighteen inches in

The fire originated in the section on the corner of Lombard Street. About seven o'clock a large portion of the wall on Lombard Street fell to the pavement with a loud crash, supposed to have been pushed out by the weight upon the floors. The whisky steered went down with the rains, and in a few moments a terrific explosion took place, throwing down every wall of section H, sentering bricks, timbers, etc., in every direction, while the flames shot up in a solid body far above the surrounding buildings, creating a general consternation among the residents of the entire contents of the warehouse on fire, and soon burning whisky ran down the gutters in Swanson Street to Pine, and thence into the sewer leading to the river.

The fiames extended until they involved the entire block. The firemen from all quarters of the city were soon upon the ground. Shortly after midnight their efforts were materially aided by a shower of rain. By daylight the fire, though far from being extinguished, was under control. There were 25,000 barrels of whisky stored upon

There were 26,000 barrels of whisky stored upon the premises. The entire loss of property is estimated at between $8,000,000 and $4,000,000, on which there was insurance to the amount of $2,299,000. The largest loss is suffered by the Imperial of London, namely, $319,000.

Imperial, of London, namely, $319,000.

William Albungua, one of the firemen, was so seriously injured by falling from a ladder that he died. A large number of persons suffered injuries.

This fire will lead to an investigation as to the propriety of storing large quantities of whisky in a single warehouse; it will also tend to diminish the confidence hitherto felt in fire-proof buildings—at least in those where combustible matter is stored.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 21, 1869.

THE UNITED STATES AND SPAIN.

THE revolution in Cuba has now continued for ten months. The intelligence from the island is always confused and uncertain; but there has been no report of any serious and decisive bettle, and the military operations have been apparently confined to skirmishes and guerrilln warfare. The form of a civil government has been proclaimed in the Cuban camp, but there is no evidence that it falfills any functions. The "Grand Congress" on the 18th of April unanimously declared that the revolutionary party is fighting for independence of Spain and annexation to the United States; and the Jenta in New York from time to time announces that it has very good news, and that decisive events are about to happen.

Meanwhile the wrongs under which Cube suffered from the government which Spain has overthrown are notorious. The island was squeezed to furnish money for the Spanish treasury, and was controlled wholly by foreign interests and influences, so that every kind of progress was hopeless. For many years there has been profound discontent; and if the Cahan revolution had not been simultaneous with that of Spain, and the character of the population had inspired more confidence in the practicability of a wise and liberal political system, the revolt would have commanded the unmin gled sympathy of civilized countries. But the events in Spain promising great reforms naturally suggested waiting to learn whether terms of conciliation might not be offered which would be agreeable to the Cubans, while it was diffiieve that would do more than establish a South American republic upon the island. This last consideration does not, indeed, affect the right of the Cubans to establish their independence of a harsh foreign rule, but it does necessarily affect the feeling with which the effort is regarded.

During the ten months of the revolution Spain has been busy at home remodeling its government, and has finally adopted a liberal Constitution, with general suffrage and freedom of the press—indeed, with the usual asfeguards of liberty, but with a royal head of the system. Unable to agree upon a King, the Assembly appointed a Regent, and the present political situation of the country is therefore temporary. But in a country so long subject to ecclesiastical domination as Spain has been there is an ignorance of the kind that is most difficult to remove or to control. There have been plots and risings, and although order has been generally maintained the country is still disturbed, and its situation is far from satisfactory. The last least for the public expenses was taken at 30 to 40 cents on the dollar, and the deficit this year must be many millions of dollars. More troops for Cuba can hardly be spared, and those upon the island are evidently unable to subdue the revolutionists. It is reported that a general levy of the Spanish population in Cuba is now to be made for a final effort against the revolution. Should that fail the result would seem to be inevitable.

Marking ...

Under these circumstances it is reported that the United States have proposed to the Spanish Government that Cuba shall be relinquished upon the payment of a certain sum, for which the United States shall be security. And it is added that this proposition is accompanied by the threat that if Spain does not accode, beliggerent rights or the independence of Cuba will be acknowledged by this Government. It would be better, however, for the United States to offer to mediate than to make a distinct proposition of this kind; because if accompanied with the threat named it is virtually an intervention. Recognition of belligerent rights to Cuba would be a preliminary recognition of independence. Such a concession, as Mr. Summan truly says in his speech upon Our Foreign Relatious, "bears the same relation to acknowledged independence as gristle bears to bone."

An offer of mediation in Cuba would proceed with peculiar grace from the United States This country has honestly and trito Spain. umphantly maintained its neutrality in the contest. Its neighborhood to Cube and its old amity with Spain indicate it as a friendly me diator. If Spain declined the offer we should of course reserve to our discretion the acknowledgment of belligerent rights or the recognition of independence; and when either course should be adopted it would appear as the result of the actual situation, and not as a penalty imposed upon Spain for not accepting our advice. It is, indeed, reported that this offer has been made by this Government upon the suggestion of the Spanish Minister, and with the knowledge that it would be accepted. But in that case the threat would be wholly unnecessary. To grant belligerent rights to Cuba when we were satisfied that it was entitled to them would be merely the recognition of the situ tion, and not an unfriendly act to Spain. But to tell Spain that it must accept certain terms that we offer, or we will virtually take Cuba, is merely an insult.

TEMPERANCE IN POLITICS.

Typ Massachusetts Democratic Convention meets on the 24th of August, and will doubtless nominate Mr. Jone Quincy Anama, who will get a much larger vote than he did last year, because of the Temperance complication. A few years since there was virtually a probibitory law in Massachusetts. Then came a reaction; and after some delay a law was passed, like that recommended by the committee of the late Temperance Convention in this State, which authorized each town to determine for itself whether to license or prohibit. That, again, was superseded at the last session of the Legislature by the present law, which is prohibitory of all the ordinary drinks except cider. Even lager beer is forbidden. This, however, was against the advice of Governor CLAPLIE, of Senator Wilson, and of Mr. W. B. SPOONER, the President of the Temperance Alliance, who was in consequence asked to resign,

But the law was no sooner enforced by the seizure of Mr. PPAPP's supplies of lager beer than there was such a protest of public opinion that, after the delay of a day or two, there came a written opinion of the Attorney-General, under which the liquor was restored and the procecution ahandoued; and presently Mr. Spooses: was invited to resume the Presidency of the Temperance Association. Meanwhile Judge PITMAN, the leader of the prohibitory party and late President of the Senate, had been appointed by Governor CLAPLIN to the beach, and a lager er seller at Arlington was convicted bed him, and received the whole sentence of the The feeling of the State is aroused, and the Temperance question will inevitably be an important element in the election.

It is, of course, a question within the Republican party. The liquor interest organizes, subscribes, works, but is much too sensible to nominate a separate ticket. It throws all its votes for the party which is most favorable to its purposes; and that is the Democratic party. The temperance men, whether moderate or thorough, are Republicans. Many of the most ardent are anxious that the Republican party should declare for prohibition; and this year many of the moderates, unwilling that the party should fall under the control of the thorough temperance leaders, will either not vote at all, or will vote for Mr. Adams as a protest and warning. The papers are discussing vigorously the proper policy for the party Convention to pursue. The Commonwealth—a radical Republican but not a radical temperance advocate—thinks that it will be neither possible nor reputable for the Convention to avoid the question, and urges a plain declaration of principle.

Hitherto the party has refused to make pro-

Hitherto the party has refused to make prohibition a test; and it should reflect very carefully before it decides to do so now. Of course no well-informed man, Republican or not, supposes that a majority of the voters in the country are now, or will be for a long time, in favor of a prohibitory law. The reason of this is by no means that the relation of drunkeaness and crime is not well understood; but it is to be sought in opinions as to the most efficient remedy of the difficulty, and of the rightful function of government. A Republican, therefore, who urges that the party shall make prohibition a party principle, proposes that the party shall re-tire from the control of public affairs; and his course can be justified only by the conviction that the ascendency of the Democratic party will be more serviceable to the country, and directly or indirectly to the cause of temperance That it would be better to call the Democratic party to power in the present situation of the country, although the great debate of the last few years is passing away, no Republican believes. If, however, he would make prohibition a party principle, it can only be because he holds that Democratic dominance, with unre-strained license of drinking, would be a greater blessing than the supremacy of the Republican party with moderate temperance legislation. His policy would be to increase drunkenness in order to stimulate public opinion to its legal prohibition.

The better plan, it seems to us, is to maintain the organization of the great and powerful party whose sympathies are with all humane reforms, to which the temperance legislation hitherto is due, and which will unquestionably advance as public opinion advances upon the subject. Paster than that no party and no law can go. The Committee of the Temperance Convention of New York most truly remark:

"Prohibitory legislation as the fruit of more political organisations, either through pressure upon those already in existence or by the creation of new ones, would prove a failure except as the people gave it efficiency by the force of a popular verdict, and by the enforcement of adequate penalties for violating such a law."

But thus far the advocates of prohibition mistake the point upon which to concentrate their efforts. If their policy is sound they should strike at the root as well as at the branch of the mischief, and prohibit the manufacture and importation as well as the sale of intoxicating liquors.

VIRGINIA REPUBLICANISM.

By the universal consent of the stanchest Republicans in the country the division of the party in Virginia eaght no longer to continue.

If the supporters of Mr. WELLS had persisted in denying the validity of Mr. WALKER's election, and in contesting the result before Congreas, there would have been reason for main taining the two organizations. But the result of the election has been honestly accepted by the late opponents of Mr. WALKER; and as an earnest of their good faith the chairman of the WELLS Committee, representing, as he truly says, a hundred thousand Republican voters, proposes a union with he WALKER organiza tion, remarking that the late division was a question of men rather than of principles. It may be regretted that, if this were so, the union had not been effected before the election; but it was not, and we must therefore deal with the actual situation.

The election, as will be remembered, was carried by the secession of about twenty thousand Republican votes, which were cast for Mr. Walker. The bulk of his vote was not Republican, and when the representative of the unmixed Republican vote proposes a union upon an honorable understanding there should be no hesitation upon the other side. If there be hesitation it is suspicious, and the reply of Mr. Gilmum must therefore be considered unsatisfactory. Mr. Gilmum asserts that the party which he represents is the National Republican party of Virginia; and he asks whether the fact that many who were lately secessionists acted with it makes it less Republican.

The reply to this is, that those who were professedly and notoriously not Republican voted for Mr. WALKER. The bitterest enemies and revilers of the Republican policy were his sup-porters. Such persons as the correspondent of the World, whose remarks we recently quoted, were among the WALKER voters. Does Mr. Republicans? The very number of the World which contains the letter of Mr. GILBER says, derisively: "The Democratic party had no-thing to do with the Virginia election." Certainly not! Mr. O'GORMAN exclaims exultingly to a crowd at Tammany, in whose name Mr. GARVIN nominates JOHN T. HOFFMAN for President, that Virginia has done well. The Republican policy was carried in Virginia mainly by the votes of its opponents. That fact is universally known and acknowledged, and Mr. GILMER has no right to claim that such a body of voters is the Republican party of Virginia merely because from the necessity of the situ-ation they sustained the conditions imposed by Congress. When he says to the hundred the sand undoubted Republicans who voted for Mr. WELLS that he will "gladly welcome" them to a party of twenty thousand Republicans, plus four times as many of their opponents, he may insist that he represents the friends of General GRANT, but he must remember that those friends support Temmany Hall, Mr. O'GORMAN, and Mr. GARYIN in denouncing General GRANT.

The plain duty of Mr. Gillaria was to have accepted immediately and heartily the proposition of Mr. Jaszens, and to have secured the organization of all those who, however previously differing upon the question of amnesty, differ no longer, and who have no difference whatever upon the other great points of Republican policy, equal suffrage, the Fifteenth Amendment, and all that they imply. His refusal prolongs the perplaxing situation. He, indeed, gladly welcomes the most earnest Republicans to the fellowship, among others, of those who remark that "we have had to shut our eyes, hold our nose, and swallow the black dose of negro suffrage." But that is evidently not a promising method of uniting a Republican party.

Is will be necessary for the friends of the Administration and its principles to watch the course of affairs in Virginia with great attention. Governor Walker speaks very fairly. But when he says that equal rights must be maintained, it is for him to consider by whom they are most likely to be honestly maintained; by their proved and professed friends, or by their ancient and open enemies.

GEORGE PLABODY.

Ms. Groups Pranour has been again publicly honored for his generous gifts to the in-terests of labor in England and of education in this country. At the completion of the Pea-body Institute in Danvers a few weeks since there was a meeting of distinguished persons, who said and sang very pleasant things of Mr. PRABODY. At the White Sulphur Springs, whither he had traveled by easy stages, the railroads furnishing him special and comfort-able cars, the guests from the Southern States, through a committee, of which Mr. HESEY A. Wisz was chairman and Mr. James Lyons orator, presented him with congratulatory resolutions and a speech. Meanwhile, in London Mr. STORY's statue of Mr. PRABODY has been erected, and unveiled in the presence of the Prince of Wales, the United States Minister, the sculptor, and other distinguished personages, and with some very friendly speech-making. Mr. PRABODY has the estisfaction of knowing how fully and gratefully appreciated his benevolent purposes are, and of seeing them in course of happy accomplishment.

It is to be regretted, however, that amidst all this deserved congrutulation the formal expression of thanks upon the part of any number of citizens of the Southern States should have fallen to such a gentleman as Mr. James Lyons. It might as well have been Mr. HENRY A. Wish, who was present and approving. Mr. PRABODY gives an immense sum to support schools in the Southern States. Therenpon Mr. James Lyons, lifting his wings, begins to flap and soar: "I take leave to say that down-trodden and oppressed as never a Chris-tian people were before—placed below the ne-gro, and stripped of all their constitutional rights, the Southern men pevertheless retain the lofty instincts which made their soldiers brave, and their women more than Spartan wives and mothers-" and so on. This was peculiarly graceful and tasteful and conciliaory and appropriate. The President of the United States, the chosen representative of the policy which Mr. JANNA LYONS denounced, is one of the managers of the Peabody fund; and these remarks addressed to Mr. PEARODY could only be considered an elaborate insult, if they were not ludicrously childish. Why is it that Americans living in the Southern States must always abandon themselves upon oratorical occasions to this absurd provincial rant about "the Southern people" and "the South?" When the men of the generation of Mr. HENRY A. Wish have passed away their sons will be proud of being citisens of a great and beneficent nation, and we shall hear no more of this sectional gasconade, which always recoils in ridicule upon the speaker.

In London the Prince of Wales spoke in a friendly strain of this country, of Mr. Prancuty, of Mr. Story, and of Mr. Motley. Mr. Motley's little speech was peculiarly felicitous in its allusions to Mr. Prancuty. "Most fortunate as well as most generous of men, he has discovered a secret for which misers might sigh in vain—the art of keeping a great fortune for himself through all time. For I have often thought of a famous epitaph, familiar, no doube, to many who now hear me, 'What I spent I had; what I gave I have; what I kept I lost.' And what a magnificent treasure, according to these noble and touching words, has our friend, and the poor man's friend, preserved for himself till time shall be no more, and "Tongues to be his bounty shall rehearse, When all the breathers of this world are deed."

A JUNKETING TYRANT.

Is the good old Democratic days which were so piteously bemoaned the other evening at Tammany Hall, and whose return is so ardently desired by the disinterested patriots there assembled, there could be no such grave and withering charges as "junketing" brought against the President of the United States. The innocess recreations of that great and good man, the penultimate Democratic President, PIRROR, were co-operating with Border Ruffians led by the Democratic Arcutson, and shooting free settlers in Kansas. The relaxations of his successor, and the last blessing in the form of a Democratic President that has been vouchsafed to us, Mr. James Buchanan, were barboring rebels in his Cabinet, and wringing his hands over the beginnings of civil war, with the maundering complaint that nobody had a right to do so, and nobody had a right to stop it. These were the reasonable and humane diver-sions over which Tammany was vocal with Alas! alas! we have fallen upon evil days! The President of the United States, no longer gayly causing American freemen to be shot. and propagating slavery—no more sirily regret-ting that rebellion can not be stopped—sbandons himself to breathing the ocean air at Long Branch and recoperating at Saratoga. Since Transmitted disported himself at Capri there has been nothing so odious as the "junketing" of the gloomy, imperial GRANT at the sea-side. Such is the emergency that Democratic patriots hasten to the city to denounce the President for going out of town. Leaving the "two-forty" in the wagon, the feed Champagne in the goblet, and the pate untouched until the end of their speeches, they arraign in far-resounding rhetoric this feasting tyrant. What was NERO'S fiddling while Rome was burning to GRANT'S "junketing" while the rights of American citisens are every where despised?

It is notorious, it is flagrant, that since GRANT destroyed the renown of his country in the field he has ruined its influence in the Cabinet, and that no American any where is longer safe. A hundred thousand Americans are wandering around the world, and every body knows that they may all be roasted at slow fires by the effete Despotisms, while the tacitum GRANT, unconcerned, will still twist his scornful heel around in the Lancers, and loll and languish in the lap of Sybaritic delights. Oh, for an hour of the Spartan Prence! of the beroic Buchanan! of the spotless FLOYD! of the incorruptible Cons! of the patriotic J. Davis, of Mississippi! of the liberty-loving Mason! of the honorable Str-DELL! of HENRY A. WISE! of WIGHALL! of VALLANDIGHAM! of H. CLAY DEAN! of all the noble Democratic host whose names and deeds are the national glory !

For farther particulars of our progress to ward soluptuous empire, and of our fatal tend-ency to selfish and corrupt politics, inquire at the office of the Mayor, of the Corporation Attorney, and of the District Attorney. The latter, in the intervals of its public advertisem at Tammany Hall, will be glad to show to all interested an infallible remedy for junketing at Long Branch, which its name is Jonn T. Hopp-MAN, that only junkets at Saratoga.

THE CROTON BOARD.

Thus is one of the few distinct portions of the city government which has the confidence of tax-payers, but yet it is the only one whose salaries are not paid by the tax-enters who control the affairs of the city. The officers of the Board are Thomas Stephens, President; ROBERT L. DARRAGH, Assist. Commissioner; and General GRORGE S. GREEN, Chief Engineer. The latter succeeded Mr. CRAYEN, who is now in Europe, and possesses all the requisites for the station-engineering skill, official integrity, and high personal character - and doubtless exercises the same influence over the action of the Board which was allowed to Mr. CRAVEN. Its duties are of the most important character. A reservoir for storing ter in Putnam County, to maintain during the heats of summer the requisite daily supply of sixty million gallons of water, is now being constructed-work with which General GREEN is perfectly familiar; but the importance of the Board is most felt in the arrangements necessary for the distribution of the water, in which they are brought into contact with every citi-

If this duty were not performed impartially misgovernment with a severity not yet known, as there is the widest opening for favoritism and oppression in fixing the charge upon each citizen, and particularly among those whose supply is special, arising from some industry in which they are engaged. The persons con-stituting the Board are in the constant and diligent performance of their duties, and would unquestionably be paid but for the want of agreement in the distribution of patronage between them and those who pay the salaries. The grounds alleged, however, are the litigation set on foot by John J. BRADLEY to oust Mr. STEPHENS from the office of President, and a supposed illegal construction of the Board, resulting from their refusal to recognize him in that position. The Supreme Court here, after Mr. BRADLEY had abandoned his claim to the office as hopeless, on a renewal of it found no difficulty-such is its construction-in supportlast position; and the case now remains in the Court of Appeals, Mr. STETHENS being the appellant waiting for its decision. Mr. Brantany bases his claim on a supposed ap-pointment by the Board of Aldermen, in December, 1866, made on the nomination of the | Mayor; and Mr. STEPHENS, appointed originally in 1860, holds, on the strength of two successive acts of the Legislature since passed, which leave no doubt of their intent.

By the first of those acts, passed in May, 1866, several months in advance of Mr. Bran LEY'S appointment, it was declared that "the Engineer and Assistant Commissioner of the Croton Aqueduct Department shall continue in office for the term of three years from and after the passage of this act, and any vacancy in their number shall be filled by the members of the Board remaining in office," etc., a provision which divested the Board of Aldermen of the right to appeint Mr. BRADLEY, if the act is valid.

Mr. BRADLEY, immediately after this supsed appointment by the Board of Aldermen took the oath of office and applied for a mandamus against Mr. STEPRESS to remove the latter on the ground of such invalidity; but the case was decided against Mr. BRADLEY, and no appeal was taken. The title of the act re-lated exclusively to the tax levy.

In this state of things, and while Mr. STE-PHESS was actually occupying the position-no one contesting-the Legislature, in 1867, passed a further act that "the term of office of the persons now severally discharging the duties and exercising the powers of President Commissioner, Assistant Commissioner, and Chief Engineer Commissioner of the Croton Aqueduct Department, is hereby fixed for the term of five years, from the first day of January, 1867," etc.

It was not until May, 1868, a year and a half after Mr. BRADLET's supposed appointment, and long after his acquiescence in the decision made against him, and also after be had withdrawn his protest against the payment of Mr. Stremens's salary, and openly consented to its payment, that he commenced new proceedings to remove Mr. STEPHERS from office.

The ground now alleged is the same originally taken-that is to say, that the first act of the Legislature is void because it was a local matter and appeared in what he terms a local bill, the tax levy for 1866; and further, that at the time of the passage of the act of 1867, au-thorizing the Board to hold over, Mr. Sympuses was a usurper illegally occupying the office: that BRADLEY was then its legal incumbent, incapable of vacating it without resigning to the Mayor and Board of Aldermen, and also that the act of 1867 violates the Constitution,

The two provisions of the Constitution relied upon are, first, "that no private or local bills, etc., shall embrace more than one subject, and that shall be expressed in the title;" and, second, that "all county officers, etc., shall be elected by the electors of the respective countics, or opposited by the Boards of Supervisors or other county authorities, as the Legislature shall direct," etc.; but this provision was added, that "all officers whose offices may hereafter (Constitution of 1846) be created by law shall be elected by the people or appointed, as the Legislature may direct."

If both acts are void, then Mr. BRADLEY claims that the former acts creating the Croton Aqueduct Department are unrepealed, and that was appointed pursuant to this authority,

The answer to this ground, if his long acquiescence in the decision against him, which still stands as a complete adjudication, is not fatal, is this, that the Croton Board is not merely confined to the city of New York, and hence is not local. The works extend through Putnam and Westchester counties, where large and important duties are constantly to be performed, and the Board stands on the footing of the Board of Health, which derived its authority from the Legislature, and was sustained by the courts for the reason that its duties extended to adjoining localities. Nor is the tax levy local; on the contrary, it partakes of the character of a public and general law. This has been decided in several cases, though not by the Court of Appeals. To extend the term of an incumbent has also been held not to violate the latter constitutional provision. By the amended charter of 1849 the Croton Board was constructed anew, and, having been created since ovision that t as the Legislature shall direct would seem to apply. On these grounds it would seem to be clear that the Board will be sustained. If one is custed the others must speedily follow.

This attempt to reconstruct the Croton Board, so that it shall be in harmony with the abuse which appertain to the whole city government, is part of the scheme for making the city indedent of the Legislature. The city owes the same allegiance to the State which may be exacted from any county. The government of the State is a unit, and each city is a mere part of its political machinery for earrying into effect its public powers, and it may legislate for the city at its pleasure within the limits which the Constitution prescribes. The tax-payer finds protection nowhere else than in the Legislature, and although it is not ample trembles to think what will be his condition if the court of final resort in this State shall sweep away this weak but only safeguard.

But there can be no doubt that the warrant to pay the salaries of those who perform the duties of the Croton Board would readily be signed if they possessed that happy facility of disposition, elsewhere so general, which allows the property of tax payers to be consumed with an unappeased appetite by those who now control our local affairs for their own selfish interests.

It is very amusing to observe the kind of criticism which is lavished upon the movement for the extension of political rights to women. They hold a Convention in this country, and they are told that when they wish the suffrage they will have it, but that women ought to speak for themselves. They hold a meeting in London at which Mr. Mr.L., Mr. Monley, Professor Fawgerr, Lord Hougaros, and others speak, and thereupon it is said that the willingness of English women to hold their tongress is the reason of the women to hold their tongues is the reason of the greater diguity of the cause in England. Wheth-er they speak or whether they forbear, they are equally criticised. But it would certainly have been comical if the American Sons of Liberty had been told that if they would only hold their tongues they would serve their cause better.

A DÉMOCRATIC organ of General ROSECRANS for Governor of Ohio says, that "it will be a glorious day for Catholics when, under the blows of justice and morality, our common-school sys-tem will be shattered to pieces." Massimo D'AZEGLIO, always a Roman Catholic, who was for some time Prime Minister of Victor Eman-uel, says, in his memoirs: "My education was governed by the Jesuit system, and the problem it has always so admirably solved is this—to keep a young man till he is twenty constantly employed in studies which are of little or no value in forming his character, his intelligence, and his jndgment.

Two Government of the United States recently forbade the departure of thirty gun-boats now building for the Spanish Government with the supposed intention of making war upon Peru. Those who are resolved not to be satisfied that the Administration is either vigorous, sensible, or honorable, thereupon shouted that they were not meant for Peru at all, but for Cuba; and that, wishing to help Cuba indirectly, the Gov-ernment professed what it did not believe. If the Cabinet of General GRANT wishes to recognize Cuba as a belligerent, it will do so, and do it openly. If it does not, it will continue to regard its neutral duties as honestly as heretofore. It certainly will not resort to such an elaborate and clumsy expedient, which could be instantly exposed. Those who hall the arrest upon this theory as an indication of a laudable intention to assist the Cuban revolutionists must entertain very remarkable ideas of honorable national and official conduct.

THE Free-Trade League has opened a most vigorous attack in "Notes on Fallacies peculiar to American Protectionists," by Dr. Francis Lieber. Dr. Lieber is one of our profoundest students of political and economical science; and his brief and pointed pamphlet is a magazine of hand grenades. The most popular arguments in favor of protection are skillfully refuted and with force and knowledge. The wide circula-tion of the pamphlet can not fail to be of great service to the cause of Free Trade, and the friends of Protection will find it necessary to oppose this brisk and telling volley by something equally trenchant and striking,

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

Tus public debt statement shows a reduction of the Government indebtedness caring the month of July amounting to $7,430,744.29.

The Chicago City Government have ordered the building of a second tunnel under the river, similar to that at Washington Street. The new tunnel is to be made at La Saile Street.

In the election which took place in Tennessee August 6 Mr. Senter, the Conservative candidate, was chosen Governor by a majority of about $0,000.

General Researans wheely declines the nomination of the Oho Democratic Convention for the Governorship of that State.

General Rosscraus wheely declines the nonmation of the Othe Democratic Convention for the Governorship of that State.

It never rains but it pours. The success of the French cable has led to a shower of projects for new cosm rable lines. An "American" line is projected, for communication with some friendly European power, probably Pressia. Another line is proposed to connect Scotland with Quebec. The Fortuguese Chambers have adopted a resolution granting concessions to companies destring to lay schmarize cables to or from the shores of Fortugal. Then, again, a Weet ladia and Panama Telegraph Company has been organized to connect South America with Europe and this country by means of a cable from Cohe to Central America. Less directly connected with American interests than these projected lines is the line that will be laid early next year between Falmouth (England), Gibraliar, and Malia-which latter point is already in telegraphic communication with Egypt, from which a cable will be laid to Bombay next April.

FOREIGN NEWS.

As international exhibition is to be held at Turin in 1875, to commemorate the completion of the Mont Conis Tunnet.

A terrible socident occurred near Dreeden, in Saxony, Angust 2, in the coal mines of the mountain districts. Over three hundred persens were killed.

The preliminary serveys for a ship cannot through Schleswig-Hebistein, to connect the Baltic and the North Seas, have been completed. It is thought the Prussian Government will undertake the work.

At the opening of the session of the French Senate, Angust 2, M. Rouber made an address. He referred to the duty devolved upon that body of examining the proposed reforms, and said they should inquire whether they were popular enough to go hand in hand with liberty, and at the same time strong enough to resist anarchy. He was confident the Senate would enter upon this discussion with the firm intention of interpreting the will of the country, and that by the combined efforts of the Government and the Senate a more genuine harmony would be established between the powers of the State and the Institutions of the Empire, and both would acquire renewed strength, hastes, and popularity.

A slight fire in the Cathedral of Trani, Stelly, recently, during the celebration of a great feetival, caused a panic in the congregation, and sixteen peo-ple were trampled to death and others were badly in-

The British Government has refused to recognise Mr. James Haggerty, the new United States Consulto Glasgow, on the ground that he is in sympathy with the Fenisms.

On August 6, during the session of the British Parliament much commotion was caused by a lond explosion, and the discovery of a canister which had contained powder.

plosion, and the discovery of a contained powder.

The Calana have lately received reinforcements, and appear to take a bogeful view of the situation. They have taken Rolgain, and propose to make it their seat of government. The order of Secretary Fish relating to the settings of Spanish vessels non-inally intended for operations against Fero, and the recall of Rear-Admiral Hoff from his post in Cuban waters will do much to encourage the revolutionists. Admiral Hoff was suspected of active sympathy with Soain.

Assimal from was enspected of active sympathy with Spain.

M. Lessey's Succ Canal seems to have a little upset the Egyptian Viceroy. His prophetic eye catches a gillupee of the Egyptian suppre to be, and he is impatient of the Turkish Sultan's supremary. He has had a quasel independence for many years, but this not satisfactory. His pretensions, displayed during his hite European tour, displayed the fallan, and the fet the intervention of the great Powers war might have followed. This intervention, and the poverty of both the Egyptian and Turkish exchequers will undoubtedly secure peace.

THE ECLIPSE.

The eclipse of August T was a complete success. The weather was maintainly anaptelous for scientific observations, particularly along the line of total obscuration, extending from Alaska to Scott Carolina. At Des Moines, Iowa, Springfield, Illinois, Louisville and Shelbrytlike, Kentucky, Cincinnati, Guio, Terre Hante, Indiana, and Wilmington, North Carolina, the rose-colored protuberances were observed. Mercury and Venus were visible to the naked eye. The result of these scientific observations will probably be soon given to the world in a compact form.

We give below four cuts showing the appearance of the actipes at New York city during the several stages of obscuration. Our diagrams are from photographs furnished by Rocawoon, of this city.

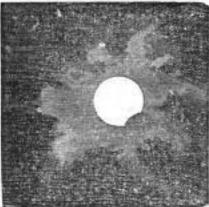

Fig. 1.—Solan Ectorus, New York.

Fig. 1.-Sonan Benress, New York.

Fig. L.—Solan Bolives, New York.

THE AMERICAN TRIUMVIRATE—MEDALLION PRESENTED TO MRS. GENERAL GRANT BY EX-SECRETARY BORIE.

THE AMERICAN TRIUMVIRATE.

THE AMERICAN TRIUMVIRATE.

A MEDALLION has been recently published by MILLION & CO., Artists, of Philadelphia, give in a single view the heads of Wassenworow, Nedella, and Grant. The idea of combining see three heads in a single piece of art reflects sopular concuption. Wassenworow, Lancoux, d Grant were made Presidents at the three sat critical cras of our history. Wassenworow the Virginian gentleman—is the characteristic presentative of our colonial period. Lescound Grant belong to that new era in which the gantic West plays so important a part. Histy will record that General Grant was the ardian of our liberties even before he was lied to the seat of Executive power. Truly assensorow will ever stand upon record as the other of his country, Lancoux as its Savior, d Grant as its Preserver.

d Gillary as its Preserver.

This medallion is of brouze, the heads being life-size. It was privately presented to Mrs. meral Gillary at Long Branch by ex-Scoretary sairs. Mesars. Millary & Co. are executing number of artistic pieces of this character, sich are of great beauty and value.

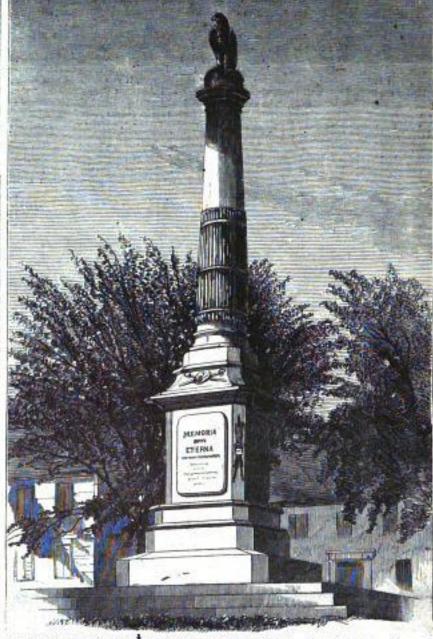

SOLDIERS' MONUMENT AT PLY-MOUTH, MASSACHUSETTS.

On Monday, August 9, the Soldiers' Monu-ment at Plymouth, Massachusetts, was dedicated. The location of a monument commemorative of The location of a monument commemorative of the heroes of the war for the Union upon a spot which was nearly two hundred and fifty years ago rendered sacrod by the landing of the Pil-grims makes this dedication an occasion of great popular interest; and we have, therefore, given an illustration of the monument on this page.

HARVESTING ON THE BATTLE-FIELD OF BULL RUN.

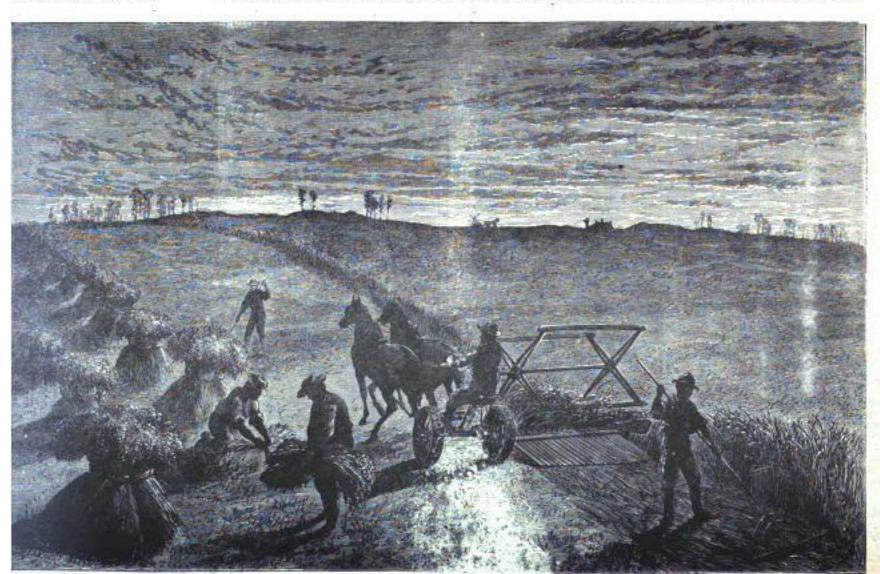

How rapidly the wounds of war are healed! Half a million of men are swept from the earth by a civil war; but before a grateful people have done writing their epitaphs their places are more than filled, and the census scarcely notes the increase of mortality on their account.

Eight years have passed since the battle of Bull Run, and to-day there is left scarcely a trace of this early conflict of the war. Where the youth of the North and of the South met in array of battle eight years ago, there to-day the farmers are harvesting the cereals of August. The field

THE SOLDIERS MONUMENT AT PLYMOUTH, MASSACHUSETTS .- (PHOT. BY LOCKE AND ROSSINS.)

HARVESTING ON THE BATTLE TELL WILL RUN.

FOOT OF THE MOUNTAIN.

INTO CLOUDLAND BY CARS.

Was started (six of us, including our driver), after an early breakfast at Littleton, hoping to reach the foot of Mount Washington in time for an afternoon train to the summit.

an afternoon train to the summit.

Our twenty-mile ride—with the grand mountains rising before us, changing in form with every turn of the winding road, swelling and substiting like gigantic sen-waves, as the varying cloud-shadows mored across them—had intensified all our previous desires, and the ladies vowed with great rehemence that to the top they would go, though they should do it upon their hands and knees. And so it seemed they must, for when we reached the toll-gate at the commencement our eyes: piles of lumber, new-ly-erected sheds, workmen going and coming and plying the hamer and the saw, but, alas! no cars. We went into the log-cabin, where the ladies were amused to find telegraph - office, store-room, par-lor, and sleepingroom in a curious state of admixture, where we informed меге that the Super-intendent of the road, Mr. J. J. SANBORN, Would soon be down with the train from the sum-We found mit. here Mr. MARSH, the projector of the road, and the road, and from him gained some idea of what an under-taking it had been. When, twelve years ago, he applied for a charter from the New Hampshire Legislature, a worthy member proposed to amend Mr. Marsu's petition by substituting "the moon" for "the top of Mount Washing-ton." Where is that member, and those who laughed with him?

Mr. Mansa obtained his charter, purchased 17,000 acres of land from the base to the summit, broke ground, and built a mile of the road before railroad men could be convinced of its

Then a company was formed, and under Mr. J. J. Sansonn, the present Superintendent, the work slowly but surely progressed. Driven differs from the Mount Holyoke Railway, where a stationary engine pulls you up by a long rope, and from the Mount Cenis Railway, where two little wheels, griping the third rail, propel you by means of friction only. Looking up the track, and realizing that it is really as steep in some places as an ordinary flight of stairs, we al-most doubted our courage, and we listened eagerly to Mr. Mansu's kind and detailed explanations of the means which are used to secure the safety of the trains. Morethan once the ladies MOUNT WASHINGTON RAILROAD.

shook their heads and turned away from the track, made almost dizzy with looking at it from below. Hark! a whistle! We run to see a black dot smoking a very minute cigar. It comes nearer, and, as we see men and women there, we hold our breath, and when they safely there, we hold our uream, and water feel like reach us, strangers though they are, we feel like congratulating them that they have safely passed through such an awful experience. We are through such an awful experience. We are somewhat rebuffed by seeing them step calmly out upon the platform as if from an ordinary carriage. We are not willing to be outdone, so we think of the atmospheric brakes, of the friction-brakes, of the rachet-wheel, and the cogs, and look very brave. Mr. Sannonn, in spite of some difficulties in the way, most kindly ness inspires us with courage, and we dare to look off, and then-we forget all fears. We are look off, and then—we forget all fears. We are ascending so precipitately that unless we look directly behind us up the track, we seem to go up from the middle of a great valley. Hills and valleys, streams and lakes and distant villages, spread out before us with a wonder of beauty that beguiles us of all fear.

Suddenly we become conscious that there are no more black flies. The sun seems not quite so bot. Our wraspings are not quite so oppessive. The trees are not so large. We are still creeping up, up. There are no level places. When we stop to water the engine, it is on a steep grade, and we wonder whether we shall not go whizzing down. But no! We start of the turnpike, near the old Fabyan stand, the of the turnpike, near the old ranyan stane, one good-natured gate-keeper, with many sympathizing regrets, said the cars had gone up. A glance at our disappointed faces induced a doubtful "perhaps they may go up again this afternoon." This, with a tin cup of delicious mountain strawberries which he had just gathered cave us some mecouragement. On we ered, gave us some encouragement. On we went by the beautiful Ammonoosue, calculating our chances, and watching the thread on the mountain, searcely believing it possible any thing more than Queen Mab's fairy coach could descend upon it, but each moment hoping to see the smoke, which would show us the train was descending, and might therefore be ready to take us up.

ON THE WAY UP.

Arriving at the dépôt (we speak prophetically) away from their work early in the fall, and not able to recommence until another summer was almost at hand, there were very few weeks of each year in which any work could be done. Last October the laborers were interrupted by a sudden snow-storm without having time to gather up their tools. Under the snow they laid all winter, and not until June could the men go up to lay the remaining five hundred feet of track. In less than a month it was com-pleted; and by the opening of another season there will be a comfortable depôt and small hotel at the foot.

We took our lunch, sheltered from the sun, and partially protected from the numerous black flies, in one of the rough buildings put up for the workmen. We availed ourselves of the opportunity to study a little the con-

a little the construction of the cars and track, and carried off of KILBURY Ввотикия' ndmirable stereopictures, transferseopie which, red by the artist to these pages, our investigations better than we can do in words. A third track, laid between the other two, is fitted with cogs. A third wheel, both in the engine and the cars, is nished in like manner. The teeth of the one fitting into those of the other pro-pel both car and engine steadily up the steepest grades. It thus made up a special train. The old and smaller engine, and a common platform-car, with a rough tier of seats upon it, were soon ready. The seats were arranged to be level on an as-cent of one foot in five, and when the car is on cent of one loot in five, and when the car is on level ground the seats present that angle. While we were arranging ourselves upon them our pre-decessors on the road stood by giving us the benefit of their recent experience—counseling sundry tyings on of hats, cost-battonings, and extra wrappings. But the sun is so hot! Never mind; wait and see how long it will be so. We start. There are no word—seels looks

JACOB'S LADDER.

We start. There are no words—only looks, one at another, and underhand graspings of the seat; and up, up we go, as if pushed from the earth into the air. No place to step off upon. On a treatle-work, sometimes more than twenty feet high, we seem entirely severed from the earth, The stoutest of the party looks a little pale; but we feel the firm grip of cog upon cog; we remember that the wheel is so clamped upon the pin-rigged middle mil that neither the engine nor the car can be lifted or thrown off; that the pawl dropped into the rachet-wheel would hold us in the steepest place; that the shutting of a valve the atmospheric brakes effectually stops the wheels from moving; we look at our Superintendent, who stands composed-ly watching the engine; his calm-

again, and still up we go. The horizon extends. The trees appear smaller. The flowers are such as bloomed with us two months ago. Admiraas doomed with its two montas ago. Admire-tion gives place to awe. There is no room in our bearts for fear. We care not if the wind is chilly—we drink in the wonder. Another stop for water. There is some consultation between Superintendent and workman. Water is short. Why? Frozen up. Frozen up in July? Sure enough soon we come to a laborer with red, cold hands, who reports frozen ground only a foot hands, who reports frozen ground only a foot below the surface. Think of it, you who were sweltering in the city. But look off: Youder are distant lakes, lifted up by the sunlight. The mountains about us shrink into small hills, and still we are not at the top. It begins to feel damp. We come to a cloud. What is it like?

TIP-TOP HOUSE.

AMONG THE CLOUDS.

100 200 A LL JAN

Like rain? No. Like fog? No. We are saturated, permoated with moisture. It seems almost to drive through us. But now it lifts, and how gloriously the sun lights up the valleys? There are no trees about us, only dwarfed tempts at trees. Now only moss covered rocks, in bare rocks. Just beside us winds the carrge-road. Now we pass poor Lizzuz Bounna's ric but most appropriate monument. Now we are at the top. Cloud-wrapped, we see nothing we the rocks just about us. Steeping off the we are almost thrown down by the wind. ightly drawing our wraps about us, shutting indriving water out of our eyes, we acramble to the Tip-Top House, and by the blazing fire we have time to consider what we have done.

In an hour and a half we have climbed by cam a ladder nearly three miles long. We have escended in that time over 3600 feet. We are more than 6000 feet above the level of the sea. We have passed from the atmosphere of July to that of January. The stanted vegeta-tion just below is not that of New England. It is the vegetation of Labrador. Shall we dare to go down again, to drop, in some long grades, at the rate of one foot in three? The Superintendent tells us that a car set free would make the descent in less than three minutes. We shudder at the bare thought. He tells us that he can load that car with stone, adjust the brakes, and leave it without a man to operate them, and it will make the descent in safety. We are re-assured. There are the atmospheric brakes—if one gives way there are three more to hold; there is an ordinary friction brake with which the engincer tells us he can stop the train in four inches; there is the ratchet-wheel that stops it instantly; and there is the steam in the engine, never used in the descent, but always ready as an additional protection; and, finally, the mach-nnism is so adjusted that it seems as though not even carriesaness in the engineer could well be faral. It is only the novelty of the situation which inspires fear. That novelty is already And after a good breakfast we descen the mountain-tide, exchanging the piercing winds and yet more penetrating clouds for sunlight, throwing off our wintry wrappings, coming from the region of barren rocks to that of stunted vegetation, and from that of stanted vegetation to that of noble forest trees, with less tremos than we often have experienced on the top of an old-fushioned stage among the precipitous hills of Major.

THREE THREADS.

WHAT would be do? Mattie watched him in a secret tremble. Of what was he thinking as he swung in the hammeck? She had taken up her position, and she would stand by it. But supposing he should do something final and desperate? What was it all about? Nothing! a trifle in the beginning. Mattie was sometimes unreasonable, and had taken upon herself to be jealous.

"You are your own master," she had said to him. "You can do as you like. If you act-ually prefer Miss Grierson I have nothing more to sny-only, you can not wear her colors and mine, you know!"

"Wear her colors!" repeated Tom. "I was rivil to the girl. What would you have me do?
Conduct myself like a Hottentot to every woman

This was provisely, I am afraid, what would have saited Mattie; but of course abe answered, briskly,

"Conduct yourself as you choose! I am not directing to you. I only propose to regulate my behavior by yours."

"I think you are trying to make me angry."

4: Not at all."

"But what have I done? Is it because I played a game of croquet with her when she "She asked you! But I dare sny; the is bold

"She is a very nice girl;" and Tom's eyes began to sparkle.

"She has fine taste. She admires you."

"As I do her."
"Oh, very well! I have no wish to inter-fere," retorted Mattic, bravely forcing back a tear or two; and just at this most unsatisfactory stage somebody interruped them, and Tom walked away not a little augry. He vowed to himself that Matrie was a fool, and he would never have believed it of her! at the same time he was inclined to humor her in a sulky way. He would take his horses and drive ever the country for a day or two. Mattie could hardly te came back she might be civil. But where there is gunpowder the spork is sure to full. At any other time he would have met old Mrs. Simpson; but then and there, Matrie looking on from the pinaza, he encountered Miss Grierson going to croque Miss Grierson was a coquette, and she hated Matrie. Quick as thought she handed him her

"I sm so glad I met yon, Mr. Musgrore. I was looking for a champion to fight my battles. Edna and Major Willis have challenged me, and declare they will bent me and any partner I may find out of the field. You will belp me, won't you? I have wagered Edna a box of gioves on

As Tom said, what could a man do? He would rather not have gone with her under Mattie's very eyes, and he did determine to treat her with polite indifference. But Miss Grierson made the most of her opportunities, and after all Tom was not the man to bear too heavy a hand on the curb. When she poised her little arched on the carts. When she poised her little arched foot on the ball was he not to admire? When she laughed at him with merry malice, and followed him about the field with playful taunts, and tensed and badgered him as every stroke, making all the time the prettiest little picture herself, his grim look softened in spite of him-self; and how could be help it? Where one pretty girl frowns the next who smiles looks so e sweeter, you know.

Bright State Control

Or, at least, Tom thought so. These are the arguments from his side of the question, you understand. Mattie's view was different. When he shouldered Miss Grierson's mallet she took it as a defiance, and was strongly tempted to go away and cry; but pride told her to stay and lool away and cry; but pride told her to stay and look on, and pride proved an unwise counselor. Ev-ery pretty art in the Grierson was a fresh stab. Every gesture of "Rom's a fresh proclamation that he cared nothing about her. He had nev-or looked better in Mattie's eves, but she told herself that "this was the end." She did not really believe that it was the end. Somewhere looked a belief that Tom would humble himself and make his peace. But she was careful not to and make his peace. But she was careful not to put this belief in words, and only to say to her-self over and over that all was done between them; and when Tom came in, very nearly restored to good-humor, and began to pull over her speeds, she took them away from him and rose at once.

"I told you," she said, in a low, steady voice,
"that you could not wear both colors, but must choose. I understand that you have chosen, and I withdraw my claims." And with that she slipped a certain ring from her finger and dropped it into his hand.

or a moment Tom sat looking from the ring to her, in a sort of stupid surprise, and Mattie's heart beat high. Now would be seen how much be loved her; and I suspect that something like triumph showed, after all, in her face, pale and quivering as it was, for his smouldering wrath uddenly blazed. He rose also, and with a look in his eyes that she had never seen before.

"It shall be exactly as you please," he said.
"I disdain to justify myself. But if, at any time, you should repent of your present injustice, you will find me, as you have always done, at your command."

Then he made her a low bow and walked away, Then he made her a low bow and walked away, leaving her very much as if the earth had suddenly swallowed every one who belonged to her. Miss Grierson called to him, but he passed her without answer, and flung himself into the hammock swinging between the two maples; and Mattie stood looking after him, as we found her at the beginning of our story. What would he do? beginning of our story. What would be do? Should she go to him? No, never! It was be who had offered the offense. Meantime, if she could but have known it, these were precious moments, for as Tom lay suikily swinging to and fro a cheery voice hailed him.

"Good-by, Tom; I'm off in an hour."

"Off!" echoed Tom; and then, struck by a

"' ecnoed rom; and then, struck by a sudden thought, "How will you get off?"
"'Why, in the stage, to be sure. You must be dreaming to ask that question."
"' An hour, you say?" and Tom came out, on his feet. "I will go with you."
Woodford's jolly face put on a look of intense.

Are you sure you are serious? How about

"Never mind that," cut in Tom, sharply.
"They are all slike. Give me a house and a bost, and the girls may take care of themselves.
I have had enough of them."
And with that is translated off to make

And with that he marched off to pack his trunk. When Mattie came down to dinner abe found an empty chair beside her.

found an empty chair beside her.

"Mr. Musgrove and Mr. Woodford are both gone, dear," said Miss Grierson. "They left regards for you." And the spiteful little coquette was half consoled for the loss of their two best men by Mattie's look of blank dismay. Poer Mattie! the blue in her sky had turned gray in-

Now, one would hardly have supposed that these threads, snapped abort at Shorespoint, could have altered in any way the pattern of Kate Blodgett's life at Fern Cliffe. It was Kitty's first season. The world was all before her, to be tried: a world in which, as she knew by dint of much reading, were numberless good-looking young men, ready to fall in love, and to pursue, through no matter what difficulties, damests bis.—well—say Kitty Blodgett. Hanny sels like—well—say Kitty Blodgett. Happy Kitty! only seventeen, her trunks full of fresh tollets, and no doubts or fears assailing her. She came so sirily through the halls, she was so fresh and sparkling, she looked at every thing with such pleased eyes, she was so self-conscious, yet so unconscious, that even Toes, lounging on the piazza, looked after her with something like interest, and asked Woodford to introduce him.

Woodford caught eagerly at the request. In ent humor Tom was a nuise the first day or so he had been in rather extrav-agent spirits, booyed by the consciousness that he had asserted his rights like a man; but reaction had set in, and Tom was so surly that Woodford felt he should not be sorry to make Miss Blodgett bear-leader, and took Tom up at once.

Kitty, dear little thing! saw the and knew they were coming to her. She did her best to look unconscious, like the other girls; but that requires practice to be well done, and Kitty failed utterly. She blushed before they reached her, and was very nervous on being in-troduced; and because of her nervousness her tongue ran all the faster. "Did he like Fern Cliffe? She did. And the hotel? It was splen-did! She liked traveling; that is, she liked traveling now. Last summer she traveled with ness; and Miss Frowse was always say-her governess; and Miss Frowse was always say-ing, 'You must not do this, it is not proper!'

Kitty pursed up her mouth at the "proper," and gave herself a little jerk, a la Frowse, and Tom, to his astonishment, found himself laugh-ing. This fresh little girl amused him. Every thing also had freeted him. The next morning found him writing to take her in to breakfast, and she allowed him to see that she had expected him. He monopolised her on the same princi-ple that he would have tried for the monopoly of any thing else that pleased him, and without thinking very much about it; and she was quite satisfied. There was every reason why he should please her. He was the best-looking man at Fern Cliffe. His natural easy composure, weight-ed by his constant regret, became an Indifference that excited her respect. She thought he was superior to herself, became he only smiled at what stirred her. Above all, the dear little soul had discovered that Tom had his religious doubts. what surred ner. Above all, the dear little soul had discovered that Tom had his religious doubts. Need I say more? Is it not already known the ardor with which young ladies take up missionary work when the convert to be made is a good-looking young man? When she first touched on this subject Tom was inclined to be bored and

"To tell the truth," he said, carelessly, "I doubt if I know very much about such things. Why should I?"

Why! oh!" Words failed the little preacher before such enormous confessions. because it is wicked, you know, not to care;" and catching just then the shadow of a smile on and catching just then the shadow of a smile on Tom's face as he lay on the ground looking up at her, her brown eyes brimmed with tears.

"I don't know how to argue," she said, sim-ply, "but I am so sorry. I would give a great deal to make you good;" and here the little mouth began to quiver in sympathy with the eyes, making Tom vow, in secret, that he was a brute. And if this pretty, innocent little creat-ure chose to interest herself in him—well, why not? Was there any thing better for him now? not? Was there any thing better for him now?
"And— If I were always near you," he said, softly, "I might be a better man."
And then the foolish little heart thrilled with sudden hope. What if she could convert him? And the two were at once on a more familiar and friendly footing than they could have reached in a month of flirtation.

So the days slipped into weeks, the weeks into a month. A year was rolled up in that month for Mattie. Now that she had lost him she found how much Tom had to do with her life. Under this tree they had quarreled. Near those rocks he had told her "that no other woman could have said such things and been forgiven, and—forgiven her. Over every walk was written remember! The very empty chair beside her caused her a throb of pain. He had ant there! caused her a throb of pain. He had an there i All her songs—be used to sing them with her. She sang them now with Charlie Grierson. In fact, she firsted with that misguided young man, and then, when he presumed, sent him over without remores. She was quite determined to make no sign; but all the time she failed in health and looks, and when her elder sister, Mrs. Hesperia, came down she found Mattie in rather a pitiable case.

Mrs. Hesperia was emphatically a woman of tnet. Finding something wrong with her favor-ite sister she asked no questions, but used her eyes and ears. Of course it did not need quite eyes and ears. Of course it did not need quite half a day to discover that Miss Grierson hated Mattie. She could never leave her alone.

"You could hardly believe, Mrs. Peri, how Mattie has ffirted," said Miss Grierson, on the pixzzs. "Now you need not look at me, dear. You know you did, though I admit you have behaved much better lately. Indeed, we have all been dull enough since Mr. Musgrore went all been dull enough since Mr. Musgrove went away. He was our nicest young man. We used to call him the Inimitable; slyly, you know." Mattie cast a quick glance at her sister. She felt that she winced and blushed under the Grier-son's stab; but Hesperia, wisest of women, un-derstood nothing. None so blind as those who will not see. She remembered that Mr. Musgrove had been Nellie's pet partner last winter. The hotel books told her when he had gone away, and while she was waiting for further rev-elations somebody wrote her a letter from Fern Cliffe, and that Tom Musgrore was stopping at Fern Cliffe. "He is at our petits soins with a protty little Miss Blodgett," wrote the fair gossip, "but in a melancholy way. It is the common belief here that your sister Mattie threw him over. If she did I wonder at her. He is the best young man I have seen this season."

And now Mrs. Hesperia had the whole story. That was a cool season; and in August they had fires at Shorespoint. So one evening found the two sisters sitting in the twilight before a flicker of flame on the hearth while the rain beat

"What a weary world!" murmured Mattie, dolefully, wondering where Tom was now.

"What weary people, rather!" snewered Hesperia, lightly.
"Depend on it, Matzie, half our peria, lightly. Depend on it, Mattie, half our weariness is of our own seeking and boying. I have just had a letter from Maria Hunter, bewailing herself. You remember she quarreled with her flance, Arthur Slade; and now they are both miserable, because both are too proud to make advances to make advances."

"And quite right!" cut in Mattie. "I mean she is right. It is the man's place to make them."

"Are you sure of that?" returned Herperia, quietly. "Suppose it is the woman who is in the quietly. "Suppose it is the woman who is in the wrong? But granting it, for the sake of argument, do you really think it worth while to pay over the whole happiness of a life to make good woman's place? Maria knows that Arthur loves her. One word from her would end it all. If she refuses to speak that word, is it not because she loves her pride better than her love? If so, let her go. There will be no heart-break in the case. But if it were my case, if I thought a man worth lov-ing, and believed that he loved me, I should not be turned out of Paradise so easily. Nothing should stand between us—not even my own self-

Mattie started, and looked curiously at her sister, for Hesperia had spoken with rather re-markable energy. But Hesperia went on in her ordinary manner:

"I was reminded of Maria's case by getting a letter from her, about which I wished to consult you. She is at a place called Fern Cliffs, and is anxious that we should join her. What do you say? It seems to me dell enough here."

Again Mattie looked hard at her sister, but she could read nothing in that artiess woman's face. Three days later they were at Fern Cliffs. Mattie's pride rebelled sorely. The move looked so much like following Tom. But Hesperia's words rang in her ears: "Nothing should stand between us—not even my own self-love."

Are there brain telegraphs, more subtle than those worked by electricity? All that day Tom's thoughts had been busy with Mattie. Kirty was pretty and fresh, but he was a little tired of being listened to and admired. Mattie kept him on his mettle. With her he must prove himself what she wished him to be. Kitty and he were what she wished him to be. Kitty and he were not betrethed, spite of the gossips of Fern Cliffe, but they were close on it. He knew all the few possibilities of her child's nature, and what answer she would give if he should sak her; but how could he ask her, when it made him catch his breath only to think of the romance that he and Mattie had lived together? Something of this sort he was thinking, Kitty on one arm, her pink and white shawl on the other, as they came up from the beach, when he caught a glimpse from the piazza that made him start. A dainty little figure, marked by a certain saacy selfwhat she wished him to be. Kitty and he were from the planta that made him start. A dainty little figure, marked by a certain saucy self-assertion in every gesture; a mass of blonde hair, a brilliant face, not altogether regular in ure, nor with set color, but a face that bloomed like a pink-tinged leaf; and a peculiar, distinct, deliberate intonation—a little dash of affectation about it (but such a pretty affectation!), as she stood talking with a very handsome woman, also a stranger; in brief, Mattie and Mrs. Hesperia. There was just one course for Tom. He seat-of Kitty, went up to the two ledies, and took off his hat. The muscles about his mouth did quiver a little, and Mattie did turn pale, but both acquitted themselves very well. You could hardly have said that they were pledged to each other, much less that each was on the rack. Tom was introduced to Mrs. Hesperia, and then he went back to Kitty.

"Your new friend is not pretty," remarked

Kitty, unskillfully; "or is she an old friend?"
"Pretty! No! She is beautiful," retorte "Prenty! No! She is beautiful," retorted Tom, dryly; and then Kitty felt that she hated the new-comers, and she went past them with rather a showy unconsciousness, and with an air of having absolute possession of Tom. "What an underbred person!" and Mattie, looking after the little figure, and as if in echo of her thoughts.

"That will be a match," said Maria Hunter's ice close in her ear. "I never saw such a voice close in her ear. "I never saw such a flirtation. They are hardly a moment apart." "And I came to Fern Cliffe!" thought Mattle, bitterly, darting in spite of herself a look full of reproach at Hesperis, who, on her side, if it had been lady-like, would have been pleased to box the unconscious mischief-maker's ears. The quiver in Tom's face had told her a most convincing story, but it would be useless to repeat it. Mattie pow had the bit between her teeth, it. Martie it. Mantis now had the bit between her teeth, and her only endeavor, as Hesperia foreaus, was to prove herself indifferent. She could not even be persuaded to treat Tom civilly. He asked her to drive. She was engaged. "Tomorrow, then." "That is promised too." Then she turned her back on him to pin a bouquet in Mr. Duncan's button-hole; and a very pretty picture it was; for she had the smallest hands, and could make the most bewitching face, of our civil in Nam Cliffe. but Tom was furnish. and could make the most bewitching face, of any girl in Fern Cliffe; but Tom was turning away, with something like an oath, when he met Hespetia's friendly eyes, and some irresist-ible impulse made him go up to her with, "I beg your pardon, but did Mattie—I mean did Miss Mattie receive a letter from me just

"I seg your pareon, but did matthe—I mean did Miss Mattie receive a letter from me just before you came to Fern Cliffe?"

Then Mrs. Hesperia was triumphant. That night's mail took out a letter to the postmaster at Shorespoint, and a day or two after Mattie found a note on her table, bearing a double postmark, and indorsed as "forwarded from Shorespoint." Something in the handwriting reads. Something in the handwriting made Mattie start and change color. It was only a copy of some verses from the "Lovers' Quarrel:"

"Woman, and will you cast,
For a word, quite off at last
Ma, your own, your you...
Since, as Truth is true,
I was you, all the happy past...
Mc do you leave aghast,
With the memories we amassed?

"Love, if you knew the light
That your soul casts in my sight—
How I look to you
For the pure and true, For the pure and true, And the beauteous and the right— Bear with a moment's spite, When a mere more threatens the white."

And at the foot of the page, "Remember your

But then, months before, Tom and Mattie had read those lines together, and been forced by them into a sudden seriousness.

What if we should quarrel?" he asked.

"But we can not," she answered, lightly.

"But we may," he persisted. "You are teasing and capricious. We are both obstinate. Let us make a compact. If such a time should come I will send you these verses. If I send them, promise you will come to me. Not to forgive me—only to come to me."

And Mattie had promised, premising, of course, that it was abourd; but she had promised. She would never have made the first advance—but ber promise. It is astonishing what an iron shackle a promise is in some cases. Really, you see, she had no free-will in the matter. And so Tow, standing gloomily and alone at a little window, felt a hand on his arm, and turning quickly, saw Mattie holding out a letter, half aby, half hangity. - --- - - seller mi

"It only came to-night," she said; "and-

"It only came to-digit, and takin; "and you see I keep my promise."

Tom's arms were around her in a moment.

"Thank God!" he said, haskily. "I was going away to-morrow. Your indifference drove me med, my darling."

"But I was not indifferent," whispered Mattie; "and I am very sorry, Tom. I believe I was quice wrong, after all."

The two were more in love and happier than ever. Nothing is quite so sweet as love's young dream, except perhaps love's young quarrel. It was not to be marred even by Miss Grierson's charitable comment, that "It would be strange charitable comment, that "It would be strange if Mattie had not caught Mr. Musgrove, when she went after him, with her eister to help her."

And Kitty—Kitty was hard hit, no doubt; but in the merciful ordering of events she had been endowed with an excellent appetite and a perfect digestion, and nobody can accuse. been endowed with an excellent appetite and a perfect digestion, and nobody can actually pine on a series of good dinners. Nobody without a reliable dyspepsia is capable of a three-volume romance. And, after all, these little affairs are romance. And, after all, these little affairs are to a belle what measles and hooping-cough are to one's childhood. So, by degrees, Kitty ral-lied, and is, I hear, the reigning belle at the Sea-shore House this summer.

THE MONEY-DIGGERS.

Tur moon just emerged from behind a cloud, and the shadow of the blasted tree stood boldly right across the stone.
"Time!" cried the leader.

The three men stooped down and picked up

They stood on the edge of a deep hole—so deep that three men must have spent many days in working at it. A ladder projected days in working at it. A ladder projected above it. Trees grew around. It was the hush of midnight. It was a lonely cliff projecting far into the sea, whose waters washed it, and now, in dashing against it, made the only andible sound. Over their beads was the blasted trunk of a venerable tree, with one black-need breech projection contact. ened branch projecting outward.

These three men stood in the moonlight and prepared to descend. They were about as ugly a collection of human beings as it was possible to find.

"We ought to reach it to-night," said one, as "We ought to reach it to-night," said one, as he began to descend.

"Well, Dick," said the last one, "when we get it we won't think of our labor."
"Out of the way, Bill," cried the third.
"There's no time to lose. Let me down."
"Are you coming, Sam!" cried the first man, his voice sounding deep down in the pit.
"All right!" cried Sam; and in a few minutes the two men were at the bottom.

The third man, called Bill, stood at the top.

He was watchman for the night. He lighted his pipe and walked about, looking around in every direction. It was a glorious night. His eye wandered every where. All around him, ex-cept on one side, spread the ocean, calm and still, sleeping in the moonlight. From the pit below the incessant noise of the falling pickaxes came up, and the scraping of shovels. The men came up, and the scraping of shovels. The men were working busily. Tired of walking about, were working busily. Tired of walking the watcher sat on the edge of the ho-looked down. It was wide and deep. At the bottom the men were digging by the light of a lantern. They were making a narrower exca-vation, and throwing the earth out into the wide loor of the pit.

Any signs yet?" cried Bill,

"Not a sign." Silence followed, and the men continued to dig: again the dull sound of the pickaxes alo broke the silence

"Dull work this," at length exclaimed one of the men, resting on his spade. Nucldenly the other uttered a wild cry, and instantly checked himself.

"What?" cried both the others.
"Look!" cried the first.

He pointed to a brass rod projecting from the

"It's the bracen rod, by all the saints! Dig!

dig! dig!" dig! dig!".

The two men turned from the hole, and tore away with their picks into the side where the rod projected. In their anxious labor not a word escaped them. The watcher above clung to the edge of the pit and looked down. His heart best fast. Strange thoughts rushed tumiltuously through his mind.

The men's axes flow like light. The earth was uncovered more and more.

At last the pick of Sam struck something, which gave forth a metallic sound.

The two men trembled. They dropped their axes and looked at one another Go on ! go on !" roared Bill from the top of the pit.

The men sprang to work. The earth was thrown out in great masses. Soon an iron place appeared. Beyond a doubt it was the side of

"Go on! go on!" cried the watcher above them, impatiently.

A few minutes more and the iron chest sank down, and seizing it with a violent jerk the two men drew it out into the large floor of the pit. "There's treasure there, any how!" cried Dick, sinking down upon the ground. The two men, evercome with fatigue, lay on the earth for many tes, panting. Come—there's no time to lose!" eried the "Come—there's no time to lose!" eried the strcher. "Hurry up—hurry up!" The two men jumped up. "How are we to get it up?" cried they. "The tree!" cried Sam. "The tree!" cried Sam.

"What shall we do, then?"

"Why, I suppose we'll have to dig a sluice and pull the box up."
"Nonsense!" cried Bill. "That will take us forever. This is the way;" and, seizing the lador, no pulled it up by a sudden exertion of Her-culean strength. While the others looked on si-lently he slid the ladder over the top of the pit so that it came out altogether. Then raising it up he placed it across the pit against the trunk of the tree.

"There, boys!" he cried; "I'll fix the tackle-block now, and we'll pull it up."

He ran up the ladder, tied a block firmly to it, through which he passed a rope, and let it fall down into the pit.

"Have you got the rope?"
"Yes—all right!"

"Yes—all right!"
"Then fasten it to the box and pull it up."
The men did as they were bid. Soon the ponderous chest began to ascend. In a few minutes it hung in the air at the top of the pit. Bill reached forward and caught it.
"Lower!" he shouted.

The men let go.

In a moment the heavy mass descended on the ground, and as it fall the rope was jerked up out of the pit and pulled upon the ground.

The two men below looked at one another.

Some time clapsed. They beard a noise above as Bill penied and tugged at the chest. "Make haste there!" cried Sam at last.

There was no answer.

The hearts of these two men throbbed violently; a terrible suspicion darted through their minds. They were not long in suspense.

Suddenly an enormous granite rock fell over the edge of the pit. Had not Sam violently pulled Dick aside he would have been killed. As it was, his elbow and foot were fearfully in-

"In there, for your life!" cried Sam, as he pushed his greening companion into the side ex-cavation where the box had been.

The two men crawled in, and barely in time.

m came the rush of falling rocks beams. A moment later, and they would have Buried alive-but what else were they? Down into the pit fell immense quantities of earth, closing them in forever.

The lantern was not yet extinguished. By its light the men looked at one another with pallid faces and staring eyes.

"He's played us foul. He is going to bury us alive!" cried Dick, with a groan. um was silent.

Sam was ellent. "Good Heavens! what a just punishment!

cried Dick again.
"Yes," growled Sam; "we drowned young Cooledge, and now we're catching it in turn."
"Better to have let young Cooledge come and taken all he wanted than this."

The voices of the men ceased. Both were lost in gloomy reflections. Still the stones fell. but after about an hour there was silence. By the flickering light of their lantern they could see that the mouth of the place where they sat was nearly filled up. They could breathe, however, even though they could not escape. In the deep silence of the night they could hear the noise made by Bill above them as he tugged at

"He's getting the box down to the boat," said

"Yes," grouned the other.
The sounds grew fainter and fainter. The long weary hours of the night rolled slowly along. The men sat as though paralyzed. Sam still held his pick in his hand, having picked it up preparatory to his expected ascent.

At last the sounds, to which they had listened like men in a dream, ceased utterly.

"Come!" at length cried Sam; "what shall we do? I'm not going to sit here and starve, or

"It's morning. Look!" eried Dick.
Sure enough, looking through the small opening still left, they could see faint daylight in the "Hush!" exclaimed Sam, clutching Dick's arm and listening.

To their strained ears a low meaning sound was plainly audible.

"What's that?" cried Dick.

"What's that?" cred Dick.
Sam clasped his hands and looked up.
"It's the surf!" he cried.
Seizing his pick in both hands he struck at the end of the passage. For half an hour he dug vigorously. At last, with a tremendous blow, he struck his pick against the passage. The earth yielded, it loosened, and with a mighty fall caved. In a huge mass it all fell down before them, and there appeared the glorious light of day, the blue vault of heaven, and the mirror-like sea. "Now for vengeance!" cried Sam.

wly and stealthily the men crept out. The pit had been dug in the middle of a lofty tongue of land. They had dug down for sixty feet, and then on one side altogether for as much as thirty feet. This had brought them out on the steep side of the cliff. The shore lay at their feet.
A little distance upward they saw the boat. Bill was in it. He had just put the iron chest on board, and now, panting from the tremendous exertion, he sat on the bottom of the boat. Holding his pick in his hand. Sam came on followed by Dick. Bill did not perceive them. They came nearer. They were close to him.

A splash which they made on the water aroused him. Suddenly turning he saw the burn the him. Suddenly turning he saw the huge twm of Sam standing erect before him with the rick with a loud scream of terror Bill seized and fined with a load scream of serror Ball sensed a brace of pistols, one in each hand, and fired. At the same moment Sam's arm descended. The pick fell and pierced Bill's shoulder. He tumbled out of the boat on the beach, and lay writhing in agony. Sam, too, fell at the same moment mortally wounded. Dick was struck by the second bullet in the arm. Faint from the loss of blood, he too sank down.

There were the three men, each wounded in a different degree, writhing in pain, from which two at least would never recover.

A loud cry from behind them made them all start. A young man came leaping down the steep cliff and rushing toward them. The sight arrested Sam's dying gaze, made Bill utter a cry, and Dick rise to his feet in terror.

"Young Cooledge!" cried Dick.
"Wretched men!" cried the youth, coming "what have you done?"

up; "what have you done?"
"Are you from the grave?" gasped Dick.
"No. Heaven delivered me. I floated on a "No. Heaven delivered me. I floated on a board to this island. Here I have been witness of your strocities. You have all mot a just retri-

He moved to the boat. "Save me! Oh, save me!" cried Dick. The others had sunk down with a groun. "No," said the youth. "It was I who told you of this others man some units and the points and the youth. "It was I who told you of this treasure. Wishing to have it all for yourselves, you tried to murder me. Heaven has put it in my way, and I will take it. As for you, wretch that you are, hope for no mercy from me, but be thankful that you are not as these lying dead at

And the boat sailed away, leaving the wounded man alone with the dead.

PREPARATION OF PRECIOUS STONES.

ALL the black and white onyxes of the shope are colored artificially by being boiled with sugar or oil, and then with sulphuric soid; orange so-paxes are "pinked" by heating them red-bot; bad turquoises are improved by a solution of copper; chrysoprases are boiled in sulphate of nickel; and blemished diamonds even may be sometimes improved by treatment with chlorine; opals, too, may be warmed before being shown, by which means their fire is often notably inby which creased; and poor stones may be much paint, or foll, or colored glass. But there is another trick, which, though rarely practiced, is very ingenious. A murky greenish gem from India and Ceylon, called the zircon, or jargoon, the color-white decolor-white decoloris the subject of the experiment. These stones are occasionally found capable of being decolorized by heat. A suitable cut specimen is selected and placed in a crucible full of sand; then it is heated to full redness for some time. The stone when cold is found to have lost its color and its cloudiness, and then approaches in lastre, hardness, and play of colors, or "fire," to the diamond itself. It is set in a massive ring of good gold and pawned for several times the value of the metal. The ignorant pawnbroker has mis-taken the stone for an inferior but large diamond. Of course, as the jargoon has little commercial value, though of high scientific interest, the ring is never redeemed.

THE INQUISITION IN SPAIN.

DUBING the debates on the Constitution in the Spanish Cortes an event occurred which stirred deeply the national feeling. When leveling the ground for the large new square of the Dos de ground for the large new square of the Dos de Mayo the workmen came upon the old Quema-dero de la Cruz, the "Smithfield" of Madrid, where the bodies of heretics used to be burned, the victims of the Inquisition. Layers of black dust, with remnants of bones and other relies, turned up at every stroke of the spade. People crowded to the spot, and the grim Quemade with its ghastly diggings, became the wonder and talk of the capital. A speaker in the Cortes took up the theme, and dwelt upon it with a vivid power and painful minuteness galling to the Ecclesiastical party, but cheered to the echo by the Liberals. As the assassination of the Prefect in the Cathedral of Burgos helped to rouse popu-lar feeling at the beginning of the debates, so this lacky, or let us call it providential, discovery gave new force to the enemies of despecism and gave new force to the enemies of despection and intolerance. All Spaniards who can read know that multisudes perished by fire in the outes do for at Madrid, Seville, Valladolid, and elsewhere; but now there was visible evidence of the fact. Besides, many Spaniards can not read, and the traditions of the old cruelties of Rome had grown faint. The history of the past will now help the progress of the future.

The Inquisition was first founded by a Spanisted Dominic of Carella for the state of iard, Dominic, of Castile, for the suppression of the Albigonsian heresy. The poor Albigonses were persecuted every where by the Dominicans, like sheep by wolves. The formal establishment of the secret tribunal took place after Dominic's death, in 1229, at the Council of Toulouse. It took root as a permanent institution in Spain and Italy more than in France. Its second founders were Spaniards, Torquemada and Ximenes, the former being the first Grand Inquisitor. He had earnestly labored, in Isabella's early days, to infuse into her mind the same spirit of relig-ions intolerance which possessed his own. He strove to obtain from her, while yet a girl, a pledge that, "should she ever come to the throne, she would devote herself to the extirpation of heresy, for the glory of God, and the exaltation of the Catholic faith." When Issbells ascended the throne of Castile, Torque-mada urged her to fulfill this promise, and was seconded by Ferdinand. Long did Isabella's womanly heart resist the fiendish instigation of Torquemada; but at length she was passive in his hand. A bull of Pope Sextus VI, author-ized Ferdinard and Isabella to appoint "inquisitors for the detection and suppression of heresy in their dominions." In 1480 two Dominicans were appointed, with vast and irresponsible powers.

The story of the Inquisition in Spain is too well known to need to be repeated here. In Protestant countries more is known than in Spain itself. But there will be publicity enough now, and it will be well to recall the dark records of Rome's crucity.

Liorente, who himself had been secretary to the Inquisition in Spain, and who, in that expected the Inquisition in Spain, and who, in that expected the Inquisition in Spain, and who, in that expected the Inquisition is the Inquisition of th ity, had enjoyed access to its records, gives, in his history, a statement of the number of the victims whose punishments are therein registered. The details are too large to be inserted here, but the general results are as follows:

oument 971,490

"The Inquisition," continues Llorente, "ruin-ed and branded with infamy more than three hundred and forty thousand persons, whose dis-grace was reflected on their families, and who bequeathed only opprobrium and misery to their children. Add to these more than one hundred thousand families who emigrated in order to escape from this blood-thirsty tribunal, and it will be seen that the Inquisition has been the most active instrument of the ruin of Spain. But the most disastrous of all the acts which it occasion-ed was the expulsion of the Moors. If we add to those who were banished from Spain the counts numbers who perished in the insurrections of the sixteenth century, and the eight hundred thousand Jews who left the kingdom, it will be seen that the country lost, in the course hundred and twenty years, about three millions of its most industrious inhabitants."

It is well, therefore, to revive in Spain this history of the past, so that the ashes of the martyrs may, as it were, be "sown o'er all the fields where still doth sway the triple tyrant." Let the young especially be taught the story of the mar-tyrs, that they, having learned the way of truth,

"Early may fly the Babylonian woe."

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

A BOOK ALL TITLS PAGES... The Peerage.

Morro von a Harn-nunsum..." Parting is such sweet normoover (from Sait Lake). "Give me through use for fifteen grown persons and thirty-nine chilren." New Trouse Clean (from Massachusetts), "If it's a shool or an asylum we can make them cheeper to you." Excessioner (indignately). "Sir 1 It's my own pri-vate family, Sir t"

LONG BRANCH.

Long Branch has the misfortune to be in New

Long Branch has the measurement to be a factorized by the said against it.

Any body can go to Long Branch who has a mind to.

And has got pleasty of money.

Before starting it is advisable to draw all your capital out of the bank.

Raise all you can on mortgage on your property.

Collect all the money that is owing to you.

Borrow all you can of your friends.

Tog will find no difficulty in spending it all at Long Branch.

From the number of the period of the strategram of the strategram of the hotels.

It is botche run along the beach, and the beach runs in front of the hotels.

If you want a map of Long Branch, just draw a chalk line as long as you like, and suppose the betch are on one side, the beach on the other.

The broad Atlantic rolls along the beach, and makes rollers into which the festive betters plunge.

The beach at Long Branch is quite a philosophic study at bathing-time.

You see wonderful sights.

The gorgeous batterfiles have changed into shabby-looking gruts.

And where, oh where, have those lovely figures gone?

one?
There is no delusion about the hotels.
They take you in, in the most hospitable manner.
They are wonderful hotels, some of them.
Thece seems to be no end to them.
The length of the buildings is to be compared to nohing, unless it be the length of their bills.

THE GIRL FOR ME. Just fair enough to be pretty, Just gentle enough to be sweet, Just sancy enough to be witty, Just dainty enough to be near.

Just tall enough to be graceful, Just slight enough for a fay, Just dressy enough to be tasteful, Just merry enough to be gay.

Just teers enough to be tender, Just sighs enough to be sad, Tones soft enough to remember Your heart through their cadence made glad.

Just mock enough for submission, Just bold enough to be brave, Just pride enough for ambition, Just thoughtful enough to be grave. A tongue that can talk without harming, Just mischief enough to tease, Manners pleasant soongh to be charming. That put you at come at your sase.

Disdain to put down presumption, Sarcasm to answer a fool, Contempt enough shown to assumption, Proper dignity always the rule.

Plicate of fair fancy ethereal Devotion to actence full paid, Staff or the sort of material That really good bousewives are made.

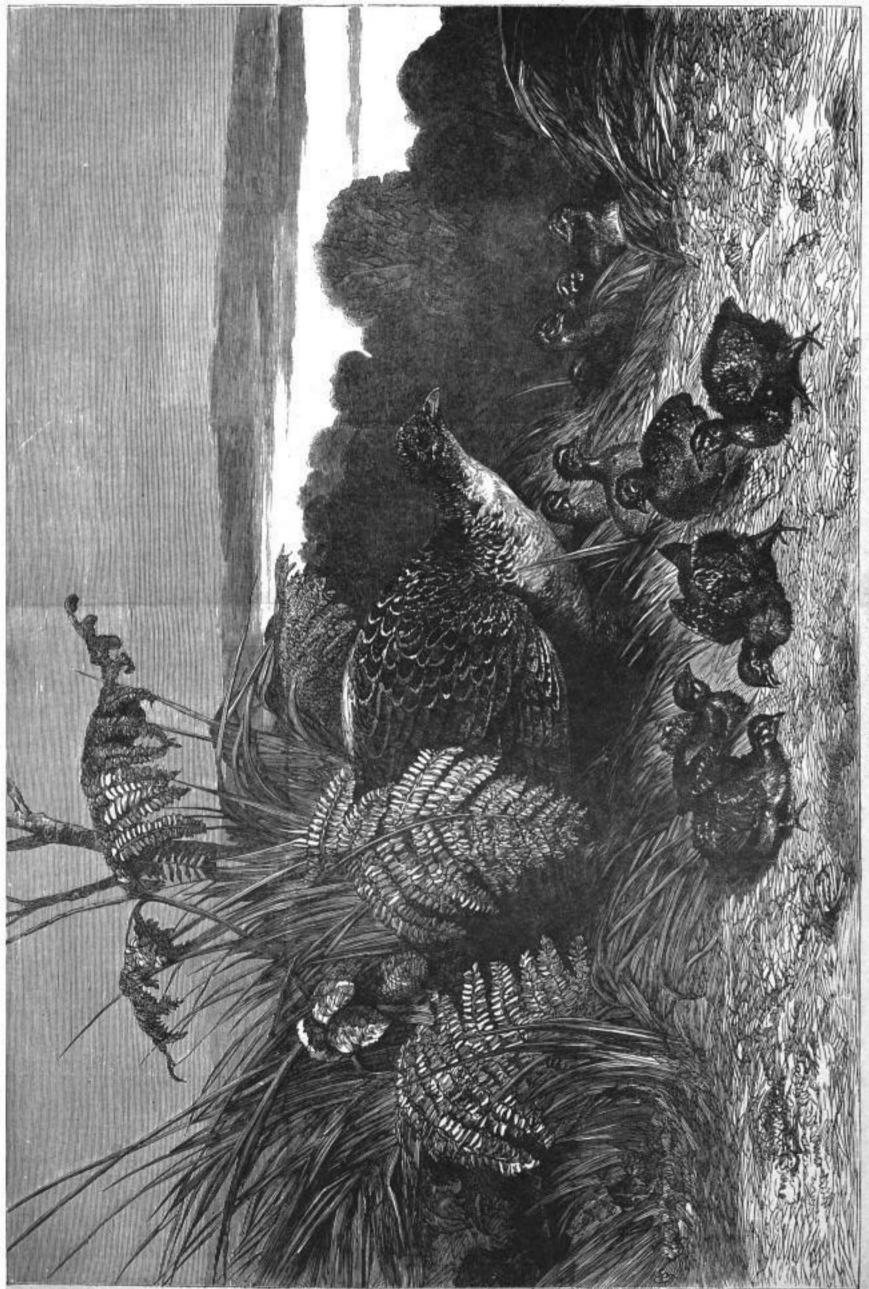

Generous enough to be kind-hearied, Pure as the angels above— Oh! from her may I never be parted, For such is the maiden I love.

A writer saks, through the Farmer's Department of contemporary, if any one can inform a pose men the set way to start a little nursery. Get morried!

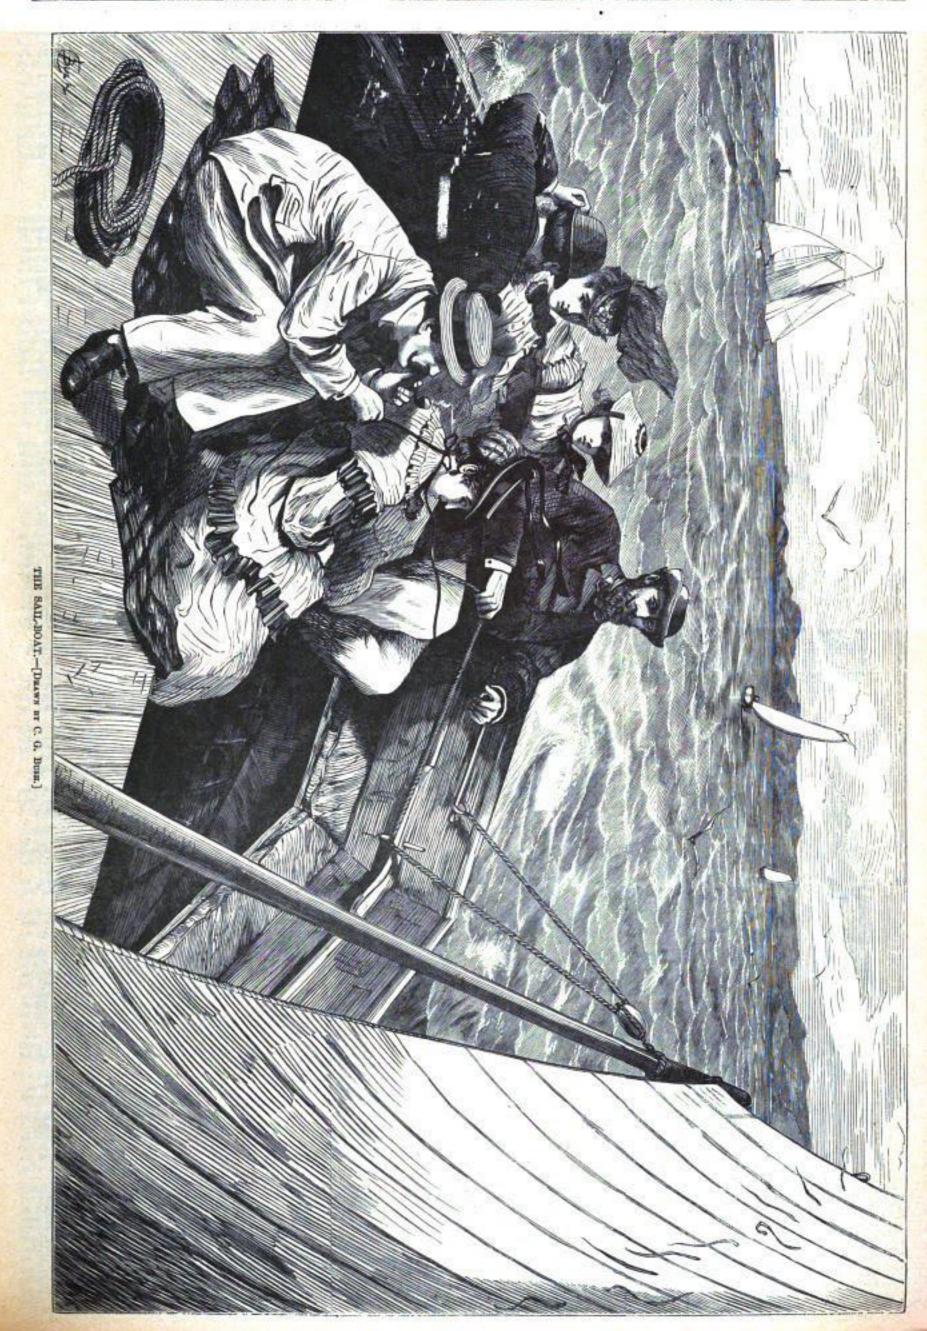

Ladies wear occuets from instinct—a natural love or being squeezed.

There is a story of a little girl who was affected to team on being shown the picture of Daniel in the den of flons. On being told that she need not cry, for the prophet was not devoured, it inrued out that she was distressed for fear that one little flon in the corner would not get any thing to eat, Daniel evidently being too small to go round.

Why is a cantle-maker the worst and most hope-less of men f.—Because all his works are wisked, and all his wicked works are brought to light.

IEN PHEASANT AND YOUNG.-[SEE PAGE 540.]

- New All Stewarts of the

THE MINER.

Inyo the ground be plunges his pick, And well to knows the artful trick Of sliding the prong between the rocks, To sear it away in p nderous blocks.

Among the rocks his clear voice rings, As over his work he mercily sings: "What care I for wealth or power, When the giant rocks before me cower, And quiver and quake in dread alarm At the powerful blows from my stalwart arm?"

Deeper and deeper down he goes, As crumbles the rock before his blows; For little heeds he the darkness and col As he delves away for the precious gold.

The sun on the earth its bright rays sheds, And Nature her glocious beauties outspreads, Yet down in the ground he burrows away, While the trembling rock-elves cease their play, And gaze with surprise at the mortal bold Delving away for the precious gold.

And Hope alone with its feeble ray Cheering him up from day to day, Whispers again the tale oft told, "To-morrow may bring the precious gold."

The months and years roll slowly along, And still be labors steady and strong, With pick and gad, hammer and drill, Making the iron-veined mountain thrill; All alone save that voice of old Whispering still of the precious gold.

In his lonely cabin at dead of night He dreams of that fairy form so bright, In the church-yard lying still and cold, By his lust for finding the precious gold.

With steady strokes, and iron nerves, He never once from his labor swerves, Till some giant rock upon him falls, Or crumbling earth from mouldy walls Entombs him living in its grave-like fold, And ends forever his search for gold.

SO RUNS THE WORLD AWAY.

CHAPTER XXXIX. THE WOMAN TEMPTED ME.

"I sometimes wish that I were somebody else, that I might have the pleasure of finding myself out," said Lady Di, softe voce, the morn-ing after that brief interview with Thurstan on the stairs. She was looking pensively at Amelia Orme, and thinking how very obtuse and slow-witted that young lady was not to detect in Capwatted that young may was not to select an Cap-tain Mowbray's preoccupied manner, and in the smallby glances he cast toward the object of his thoughts, the real state of affairs. Amelia, hap-pily unconscious of the events of the previous evening, was airing her prettiest allurements to attract Cuptain Mowbray's attention. She drank her tea with a stratagem, she sighed over her dry toast, played with her butter, and repressed a naturally good appetite in a manner that moved naturally good appetite in a manner that moved Lady Di's pity.

"My dear child," thought the latter, as she composedly made an excellent meal. "It is of no use giving up one's little comforts on the off chance of attracting a lover. I don't believe that a man likes you the better for your abstinence, and if you fail in your designs on his heart his a painful aggravation to your sufferings to feel physically as well as mentally an internal blank."

Lady I'd did not allow her appreciation of her breakfast to interfere with her keen observation of Thurstan's movements. She noticed that he of Thurstan's movements. She noticed that he looked moody and troubled, and that the trouble was not entirely of a nature personal to herself.

With a little pang of jealousy which all but neutralized her enjoyment of a delicious morsel of pace, she recognized the probability of his thinking of that other one.

Laser in the forenoon she scandalized Miss

Laser in the forenoon she scandalized Miss Orme by the deliberate manner in which she strolled out on the terrace with the evident intention of joining Captain Mowbray, who was talking over his perplexities with Nis cigar, "Shall I go over to Auriel this morning, or shall I stay here, with—with—her?" Such was the burden of his thoughts. He had half promised he would be with Arales early to-day, but then he knew he should feel sorry for himself when he found himself walking away from Holme. He knew now that if he sought Aralea's society he should still be yearning after that of Lady II. "He could see Aralea any time," and herein lay some of the secret of Araand herein lay some of the secret of Azatime," and bettern lay some or use secret or Anales's failure. With petty natures, security in possession is an antidote to passion; the more be thought he ought to go to Auriel, the stronger grew his inclination to remain at Molme. Nevertheless, so much do men resemble cass, he no sooner caught sight of Lady Di than he prepared to the cought stage to an opposite dispection; but he time, to walk away in an opposite direction; but he moved at a slow pace, and that wily factitian saw through and smiled inly at his feint of re-"Thurstan!" He turned and bowed gravely, and seemed about to pass on.

"Men's affects "Men's affectations are very clumsy," Lady Di thought; "he wishes to go through the form of staying at my persuasion. Well, we can af-ford to save their dignity in trifles, when in essentials we grind their pride to powder beneath our heels. I have never yet known a man whom Love could not make a blackguard of."

Unconscious of the self-condemnation implied in this cynical reflection, she proceeded gently with her work of demorphisation.

"Look here," Thurstan said, abruptly, after the had urged various pleas to induce him to stay at Holme to-day; "I will stay, but on one

"You are very peremptory."
"No master so brutal as the rebel who has been a slave," be said, with a short length. "Come in here; it is raining:" be pointed to a summer-house close by, and his companion obeyed his gesture, partly because heavy raindrops were beginning to splash her hair and shoulders, partly because she was awed into subjection by his imperiousness. If men and houses were but conscious of their own power, and knew how to use it, it would be a bad time for women and equestrians. The summer-houses at Holme were not the ordinary combinations of mouldy walls, sticky seats, green slime, and ear-wigs. As a rule English arbors seem built for the express accommodation of centipedal hermits—spiders sulk in the corners, wood-lice lurk under the stones in a perpetual state of squash, and toads meditate "You are very peremptory.
"No master so brutal as a perpetual state of squash, and toads meditate in the shadows. But this garden-house had more in the shadows. But this garden-house had more of the house than the garden in it. The floor and walls were dry; there was a comfortable cushioned lounge near the fire-place, and in the grate a low clear fire was burning; a vase of bot-house flowers stood on a centre-table.

Captain Mowbray was silent for a space, and stood at the window strving moodily at the equalid landscape, and pulsar, his mustache.

"I think," said Lady Di, placidly, as she settled herself on the sofa near the fire, " that there is a storm coming up.

Then she unloosened her hair and shook it down over her shoulders, with the ostensible purpose of drying it.

purpose of drying it.

He made no snawer to her observation, but turned and looked at her long and steadfastly. Silence is sometimes full of a mighty eloquent Passion deepens in its still breath; hate smoo ders and love grows mad in that full of verbal expression.

Presently Thurstan walked up to his compan-ion, and, taking both her hands, looked into her eyes. Lady Di drooped her own unessily. She never could hear to meet an honest gaze; no one since the days of her childhood had ever encountered any but slant glances from those deep gray orbs.

"Di," Thurstan began, and his voice was husky with agitation, "do you see those woods youder?" she nodded acquiescence; "there lives a girl who loves me dearly, and to whom I'm bound by every tie of bonor and affection. She is young" (Lady Di winced) "and beautiful; but—" "But what?"

"But what?"

"But I'm med shout you again, and so mad that I'd give up every thing if I could only think you really loved me! Di, my darling, I have passed the age of visions. I can no longer woo a shadow. Are you still to be a cheat, or a reality, a glorious veritable joy? Do not madden me by these pretty trickenies of yours if they mean nothing. Will you come away with me, Di? Will you come away to the Continent? I can not be away more than a few weeks, though," can not be away more than a few weeks, though," he added, with a sudden relapse into the prosaic,

"unless, indeed, I sell out."

Lady Di meditated an instant—she could not quite decide what to do—a few moments since and she had caught herself feeling weary of her renewed triumph. But still she liked him—she liked his dark, handsome face; she liked it the better for the strong emotion which was now convulsing it—emotion which she had raised, and she only had the power of allaying. She looked at his yearning face, at his pleading hands held out toward her, and she besitated—besitated so long that he turned abruntly away, saving "unless, indeed, I sell out." so long that he turned abruptly away, saying,
"I will go then;" and without looking at her he walked toward the door.
In another instant she stood before him barring his exit, with extended arms half veiled by her soft tresses, her eyes shining like stars dimmed by gray vapors, her whole face radiant with an expression which he had never before seen there. It was the expression of veracity—for a brief moment the true triumphed over the false, and, in its broader light, her besuty seemed trans-cendent. Lady Di had never looked so lovely as now, when, the genuineness of her womanhood asserting itself, she dropped her hands into those of her lover, and whispered, "Do not go, Thur-stan, for I love you."

stan, for I love you."

Then she disengaged herself hurriedly from his grasp, thrust aside his reluctant arms, and resumed her ordinary domesnor, twisting up the while, with expert fingers, the loces treases of her

Her sudden movement was explained by the approach of footsteps. Presently Lord Orme, with face innocent and serene, stood at the docway, placid as a mounteam playing on a confia-

"Will you point me out the way to Auriel?" he asked. "I should like to see how far your father's house has suffered; also, I should like to ascertain if any thing can be done for the poor girl you saved. She must be very desciate

Captain Mowbray flushed a little, and hastily indicated the direction Lord Orme was to take He deliberated for an instant as to whether h would not accompany him.

His good angel, as represented by a medicum of conscience, said "go," and for a moment he half yielded to the mandate. Then his bad angel, sitting on the couch by the fire, looked askance at him from under her deep lids, and said, with write and easture. "stay." with voice and gesture, "stay."
So he staid, and Lord Orme went alone to meet the child who all her life had been orphan-ed, and was now widowed by her husband's faith-

"Poor little dear," Captain Mowbray thought, as he sat at the feet of the lady in the summer-house. "It's lucky she does not know! For myself I am of opinion that ignorance is the basis of nearly all the bliss which we poor mortals enlow." tals enjoy."

2 4 4 5 5 6 5

Meanwhile Lady Di smiled at her lover, and then stifled a yawn.

"To what are you listening?" he asked, anxiously, after one of those paness which were now no longer tragedies but delicious interludes.

"I thought I heard the luncheon bell," she said. "Shall we go in?"

CHAPTER XL.

ARALEA READS SOME OLD LETTERS.

Tun dull, gray day was passing heavily enough with Asales among the grim rains of Aurici. During the early morning hours her heart was blishe with the hope of seeing Thurstan. She hummed little wordless songs as she attended to bithe with the hope of seeing Thurstan. See hummed little wordless songs as she attended to her birds, and made such arrangements in the sitting-room as she thought would tend to Captain Mowbray's comfort; his easy-chair and footstool were placed ready for him. One or two books which he had imported to Aurisi—an army list, the last published volume of the stud book, and the current number of Baily's Magazine—were placed in order on his writing-table.

The true woman is maternal even in her love affairs; she delights in exercising little cares for her lover's benefit. Nothing pleases her better than to spend her time in removing the rose leaves that may ruffic her lord's repose. I do not think that her lord adequately returns her civilities; he would fight for her, no doubt, if it were necessary, but he would scarcely resign his easy-chair to her, or omit to clatter the fire-irons because she had a headache. Azalea, having completed her arrangements, sat and looked drearily out of window, watching the avenue until her eyes grew pained by the intensity of her gaze, and her heart felt cold and sick with disappointment.

"Lac" Miss Acon't take on an "old Sally said.

game, and her heart fest cost and sock with de-appointment.

"Lor', Miss, don't take on so," old Sally said, philosophically. "What does a man matter when you've got a bit of meat for dinner, and a warm fire to sit by? Oh, there's nothing like the pinch of an empty stomach for driving the men folks out of your head."

"But you see I never have here so haven

"But, you see, I never have been so hangry as all that," Asalea objected.

"Then until you have been don't go and fancy you've got all the world's sorrow on your shoulders."

Azalea paid little heed to the old crone, but Azalea paid little heed to the old crone, but sat and watched until she grew very weary of her vigil, weary of those copper-colored leaves that whirled round in the puddles, weary of the wind's ever-recurring sigh, weary of the robin who tried to sing down the noise of falling rain, weariest of all of that long path down which he did not come.

She wendered what had taleach him a line did not come.

She wondered what had delayed him so long; she thought of business, of illness, of every thing

Lady Di would have suspected inconstancy in delay, but distrust is an attribute of age and experience. And we are apt to gange the faults of others by our own. Sally broke in case more

"Here's a box of papers and all sorts of rub-bish I found when cleaning out Master Moore's room; won't you amuse yourself in looking them over, Miss Azales, and in burning what you don't like to keep? Maybe you'll find some little thing that might be of use—to me," the old woman and might be of use—to me," the old woman added, with a longing glance at the corner of a faded shawl which lay at the top of the box.

And Azalea, glad of any occupation which would require no mental exertion, sat down beside the craxy-looking chest, and commenced emptying it of its contents.

She removed the shawl with reverent hands, removed the shawl with reverent hands for to it was attached a scrap of paper, on which was written, "My dear Mary's wedding sheet." There were one or two other articles of woman's dress—a neutral-sinted ribbon which had once been blue, and a pair of mittens. There was a bunch of dead flowers, too, which crumbled into dust when it was moved. "The posy she gave me when we made up our quarrel" was inscribed in the property which crumbles are the property which are the property which are the property the angles staller. me when we made up our quarrel" was inscribed on the paper which enveloped the sapless stalks; then came a tiny shoe, emblem of a bitter pang, the pang which is most grievous of all to endure, the pang which seems to wrench heart from body when the parent sees the fiesh of his flesh, and the blood of his blood, wither and pale in death, and his anguish turns to blasphemy, and he re-bels against the Providence which seems to him to sin against nature.

to sin against nature.

"I won't look at these any more," she said;

"they make me miserable;" but as she prepared

"they make me miserable; but as she prepared to close the lid, her eye fell on a packet which was labeled, "Azalea's mother." Her mother! ther whom she never ren seen, of whom Moore would rarely speak, and who had left no trace behind her which her child who had left no trace beamd her which her child might cherish. Was it possible that, after all these years of estrangement, she had at last found some link which might bring her nearer to that sacred presence? She forgot Moore, Thurstan, every thing in the surprise which made her thrill with strange delight, the awed delight of one who, after long years, meets with a dear face he had deemed to be sleeping in death. She unfolded a small square paper which held a lock of soft, pale hair, and this she kissed gen-tle and not in her become. Of course it was her tly, and put in her bosom. Of course it was her mother's hair; it was very like her own, only that it was dull, and hers had all the sheen of vitality. Then she read the letters; they were few in number, but they were the keys of the past, and they revealed to her secrets which it had been well perhaps that she had never known. In searching for memories of her dead mother she discovered the existence of a living father. These letters had been written by Lord Orme to the love of his youth in years long past, and they not only afforded unmistakable evidence that he was the father of the girl who bore the name of Azalea Moore, but they also seemed to indicate that the young undergraduate had been bound by lawful ties to the yeoman's daughter whom he had loved so hotly in the days when he had neither wealth nor title. As the truth dawned on Azales through the confusion of her surprise her heart grew hot with excitement. She had ber heart grew hot with excitement. She had sought manna, and she had plucked rue; the first blight of age fell on her in this blitter hour of mortification. She had a father, then; not that dear old man who had supplied the place of one, and who lay in the church-yard yonder, but one who living was yet dead to her. It was not death but unkindness which had orphaned her. She had no love, no reverence, to yield to this new-found tie; the parent had ordained that he should be a stranger to his child, and should they meet, it was possible that neither would recognize the other's face.

CHAPTER XLL PATHER AND CHILD.

AZAZMA rose from the perusal of these letters AZAZMA rose from the perusal of these letters—her eyes dark with wrath. She was angered to her soul's depths. She revolted against the father who had done her the injury of renouncing her, and she felt shamed by the humiliation of his long neglect. As her eyes grew darker and her face paler with the pain of her thoughts, old Sally broke in once more on her solitude.

"Hare's a gentleman wants to see you. Not Master Mowbray; an older man."

Lord Orme followed close behind her, and Asales. looking up, saw a man bestrating on Azalea, looking up, saw a man besitating on the threshold. It is possible that even then she might have fallen at his feet and craved his bleasing and his love, but his first words fell like lumps of ice on the sever of her emo-

"I am glad to find you in," he said, snavely.
"I hope I do not disturb you, but I so wished to have a little talk with you about your father. He was a very old friend of mine. May I sit down?"

And Asalea, bowing, pointed to a chair, and said, with composure and dignity equal to his own, that she was happy to see him, and would listen to any thing he had to say. She seated herself opposite to him, and thus father and daughter met, after an absence of five years.

For a moment there was a pause. For a moment human nature held civilization by the throat, and choked down the glib courtesy of Lord Orme's tongue. He could see even in this dim light how fair the girl was—how like ber mother in her beauty, how akin to himself in the refinement of her air and manner. Had he followed the prompting of that brief impulse he would have held out his arms to her, and called her to him. Then he remembered himself in time—remembered that such a revelation was not a part of his scheme, and that he was not prepared to lay bare to the world the scandal of his youth.

"I was so grieved to hear of your father's death," he begwn.

"Thank you!"

Was it his fancy, or did her voice convey an expression of scorn? It was a hard voice, he thought, compared to her mother's; that had were sounded gently in his cars. He felt re-buffed; he scaruely knew why.

"I knew him so well," he continued, apologetically. "You must allow me to feel an interest in you in his behalf. He was one of my worthiest friends."

"He was my only friend," she said, quietly.

Her companion winced,
"You do not forget that I would have been a friend to you had you permitted it. For your mother's—I mean for your father's—sake, I would have undertaken your education." "You proposed that which was a sin against nature, my lord. You proposed to separate fa-ther and child. No advantage can compensate for such a disruption of fisch and blood; no child would willingly consent to such alienation. I had no mother, and so I was less willing to resign the only human love and protection God had youtheafed me."

Was this stern, beautiful woman the child who, when he last saw her, had craved a fare-well kiss, blushing and trembling at her own audacity?

He guessed nothing of the tie which linked her with Thurstan Mowbray, nor of the discovery she had just made with regard to his self. Love had made a woman of the girl, and the sense of injury had infused something of macouline power into the profundity of her indignation.

"A perent is not always able to be all that he would wish to his child," Lord Orme said, with a flash of self-vindication. He added, more gently, "I desired to benefit both yourself and Moore by that suggestion. Had you consented

Moore by that suggestion. Had you consented to it "Had I consented to it," she interrupted, "I should have been a heartless wretch.

should have been a nearness wretch. Surely, Lord Orme, you, who are yourself a father, can not forget all that the name means?"

He looked down uneasily. He feared to meet har eyes, even though their brightness showed dimly through the shadows. Involuntarily he held out his hand toward hers, and as she felt that contact with kindred flesh and blood the intenstion of harshness melted from her voice. and she spoke earnestly :

"To be a father means, does it not, that a man is responsible for the birth of an immortal soul? Something lives and breathes, suffers or rejoices, is damped or is saved, which, but for him, need never have existed. His blood runs in the veins of this something; this duplicate of himself owns his trick of eyes, of voice, of gesture; his heart his trick of eyes, of voice, of gestire; his heart beats in its bosom; his evil passions are echoed in its vices; or, happily, his virtues are psalmed in its well-doing. Can a father plack this thing from his bosom? Can he cast it forth while yet it is helpless and conscienceless? Can he, who should be its prop and its safeguard, leave it, a chance waif, to be blown about by the great breath of the world? As I was watching at the window just now I saw a laboring man going work. He was tired and stiff with the strain of hours of weariness; he could scarce-ly crawl to where food and rest were awaiting him; but when a child, a few years did, who him; but when a child, a few years did, who toddled by his side, cried out that its foot was hort against a stone, and put up its arms to "daddy," daddy shouldered it, with a look which almost seemed to make ill-favored poverty divine, so lovely was the love with which he forgot the sore distress of fatigue when he carried the add-ed burden as though it were a blessing. I think that had I known such love as that, it would have pleased me better than all the advantages of the education your lordship was so good as to offer

He sat muie, overpowered by shame and won-er. Shame at the keen reproach her words implied, and wonder at the fervor and power of her anguage. "It is a pity you were not a man," he mut-tered at last. Perhaps the thought crossed his mind that it would have been well had foolish, hird-witted Courad possessed the powers of mind which were so wasted on a woman "Forgive me if I have expressed myself too strongly," she said, finshing. "I have only had men to teach n e how to think and speak. Is there any thing more you wish to say to me?"

"Can I say any thing which will give you pleasure? He had risen from his chair, but he still held her by the hand.

She bent down her head meckly on his wrist and wetted it with her tears. There was nothing defant or stern in her manner now. She was the woman, and filial in every gesture. "There is one word," she faltered, "which might yet atome for all." Perhaps he did not hear her, for her voice was Perhaps he did not near her, for her voce was very low. She felt sby of asking for what had been withheld from her so long.

"I am intruding on your time," he continued, harriedly. "I will leave you; but if you would allow me, I should be so glad to assist you by any means in my power. For your dead father's sake, will you not let me be your banker?"

She recoiled from him with face ashy pale, sick with the pane of this last incult.

She recoiled from him with face any poor, sick with the pang of this last insult.

"O God, hearken to him!" she murmured.

"I prayed him for bread, and he has given me a stone!" Then, with a desperate effort, she regained sufficient composure to speak calmly.

"My requirements are not many," she said; "My requirements are not many," she said "the poor and the solitary have few expenses. Circumstances have occurred which make me independent of your lordship's bounty. I will now hid you good-by."

He hesitated. How much did she guess or thou? Should be confess all, and case his conscience of its burden? He thought be would, if be could see his way to such a course—but not jet; he would wait a few weeks. Besides, how reald he go back to Holme and announce to his daughters and his friends that the girl who kept the house at Auriel was his eldest and legitimate daughter, and, failing male succession, the heir-ess to his title? His error had never seemed so black to him as now, when he was most tempted to expose it to the world. He shrank from the to expose it to the world. He shrank from the idea of such exposure. He could not face it yet, he thought, but he would do it eventually. When he got back to Brighton she should come and stay with him. Rose and Amelia would become familiarized to her, and better able to bear the shock in store for them; and she, on her side, might learn to love him, and forget in that love the neglect that she had sustained at his hands.

Meanwhile her coldness of manner repressed

Meanwhile her coldness of manner represed any further demonstration of interest. He held out his liand, but she did not seem to perceive it.

"You will hear from me again," he said; but she answered not a word. He was too confused and troubled to pay much attention to her man-ner; but he walked slowly from the house, feeling very much as if he had suffered a severe moral flagellation.

He bowed with mechanical courtesy as he pass ed the window at which she was standing, and then he went out toward the avenue. He passed once, fancying he heard a cry which sounded like "Oh, fasher! father!" but he reasoned himself out of the delusion. It was probably a trick of his imagination, or the wall of a bird. He de-cided that it was a bird, and pursued his way toward the misty gloom of the avenue. He moved vard the gate, and in another moment would have passed it, when she suddenly darted to his side, and clasping his arm with her hands, cried, in an agony of cotreaty:

"Father—if you be my father—own me as or child! You have offered me alms when wanted your love. Can not you give me a little love? Do you not owe it to me as a secred right ?"

He besitated 'Oh, speak !" she urged. "Tell me the truth, Lord Orme; am I an orphan? Will you not own your own fissh and blood? Are you not, in truth, my father?"

CHAPTER XLII.

A PAPER DAGGER.

When the day came for Thurstan Mowbray to rejoin his regiment his faith in Ledy Di was re-established, his admiration of her beauty increased tenfold; and she, while she could not but seem him for his folly, was yet sufficiently enamored of her triumph to wish to retain it a little longer. She left Essex some few days be-fore he did, and, after she and the Orme party had made their adjust as their her triumphing. fore he did, and, after see and the Orme party had made their adioux to their bost, a parting took place in a secluded nook of the back draw-ing-room, of which no one was cognitant cure the two people concerned.

"You will come and see me next week!"

一年一年

"How can you doubt it; but may I not come

"No," Lady Di said, she should not be free to see him alone until then. "Amelia and Rosa Orme are to stay with me;" which was true, Lady Di having inflicted herself with the company of the Misses Orme for policy's sake. She wished to keep them out of their father's way for the present; she wished him to feel as lovely as possible for the first two or three days after parting with he

"I shall write to you," Thurstan said; and then he kissed her, whispering, "The joy of my life has come back to me with you; you are the only woman I ever loved."

She disengaged herself from his embrace and hurried away. Aloud she said to him,

"Good-by, my darling." In her heart she whisper "What fools men are!"

"What fools men are!"
Captain Mowbray wrote his letter, and, as illlinck would have it, he wrote it at Anriel, and then he dropped it, and, having some other letters in his pocket, he went off to the post-office, and never missed the most important epistle of the lot. Truly, as Lady Di said, "Men ore such fools!" As he rode off, old Sally, standing in the doorway, saw the white envelope flutter into a puddle of black mud. She picked it up, and, in her vigorous efforts to cleanse it, she rubbed off nearly all the sodden outside. Having done what mischief she could she placidly placed it on the table in Azalea's little sitting-room, and it on the table in Apalea's little sitting-room, and it on the table in Asalea's little sitting-room, and retired without waiting to see her young mistress and explain how it came in her possession.

Thus it happened that when Azalea came in from a romp with her dogs, blooming and fresh as any rose that gets brighter and more perfect every day in the sunshine, she saw only a smudged-locking paper, on which was a good deal of Thurstan's handwriting.

It was a long letter, full of adoration to his absent love; alightly tinged by depreciation of the poor little girl, "of whom you needn't be jealous, Di, for I swear to you that I never loved any woman as I do you;" it touched on the repentance he felt at having so shackled himself before he knew that he might yet be happy enough to win the one he most loved; it deliberated as to whether it would ever be possible for erated as to whether it would ever be possible for him to get free from this poor child, whom he would endeavor to make happy in some other way—any way, in fact, but that which necessita-ted his being severed "from you, who are all in all to me;" and it ended with saying:

"To-morrow, oh my darling! I shall see you again.

A brutal letter-could be have dreamed of A brutal letter—could be have dreamed of whose eyes would have seen it; but he did not —and, moreover, he probably did not mean half of what he said;—the morbid fascination this woman had for him had warped his better nature, but surely he would never have written thus, could he have seen his young wife's face as she read his words and realized what they

Drifts of purple-gray clouds ficating over the see of a yellow wan say, a blaze of crimson beface of a yellow wan say, a blaze of crimson be-hind the moving shadow of the mill, spectre-like groups of trees, under which were strewn gaunt branches, broken off by the wind's fury; a throng branches, broken on by the wine stury; a survey, of rooks blackening the shadowy summits of the elms, and waving slowly to and fro with the movement of their frail homesteads; all these Azales saw without heeding. Neither mind nor eye seemed to take note of surrounding objects; yet for days after she sickened at the glow of sunset, and was haunted in her dreams by the movement of the wind-mill.

Now as the gray clouds deepened to purple, and the sun passed away forever from this day, Azalea was only conscious that the night was coming, and that the increased gloom accorded with the darkness of her soul.

Rage, the quick flash of passion which fires a us beart when it first leaps with angu at the stroke of unlooked for injury, had died away in her breast, and dull anger smouldered in its place; to pierce its density came such wild of anguis h that she prayed for unconsciousness, for death, that she might lose the knowledge of her pain; she loathed the quiet pictures on the wall, that stared with changeless expression at her hot living agony. She could have besten the air with her hands, to force it away from her mouth; she pressed her face against the window-pane, looking with blank face at the duli sky, and cursed in her thoughts all the past happiness; all the sweet days of her lost youth. She laughed at their remembrance with a bitter scorn; the sunshine, the love, the happiness, all had been one vast cheat; the thought of those old hours might never make her cheek glow, her eyes shine with tenderness again. She had bartered all, all, for them, and credulity.

The touch of the letter in her hand seemed to wither her heart, as a green leaf is shriveled by fire. Hours seemed to have passed since she read those few careless words which had changed so those few carsiess words which had changed so her face. Tired out by excess of mental suffer-ing, she laid her head down on the faded cofa, which stood in the window recess, and fell into a sort of stupor. She remained motionless for some little while, listening to the surging in the air, and looking mechanically at the last wan streak in the watern sky, when a distant accordstreak in the western sky, when a distant sound of clattering hoof-treads and the barking of dogs brought back vivid consciousness of her pain.

"How shall I meet him?" she thought; "how leok at his face, knowing all I know?"

Her soul rebelled against him, as she heard the cheerful whistle, the quick, light step, that heralded his approach through the long corri-

She withdraw further into the shadow of the alcors, and watched the door through which he must enter.

He came in speaking bright and cheerful.
"I thought I never should get back!" he bein; "the mare lost a aboe, and—oh, Azales! gan; oh, Azalea!

where are you, Azalea?"

His voice fell at his disappointment at not finding her there. At any previous time she would have felt her heart bound with pleasure at such a tone, and would have rushed to meet him, with arms clasping round his neck, with lipe pressing soft quick touches on his brow, cheeks, and mouth—now she sat crouched in bere are you, Asales?" cheeks, and mouth—now she sat crouched in that far off shadow, her hands stiff, her eyes fixed and bright; and in her mind nourishing an evil and beignt; and in her mind noursing an evi-thought against the unconscious man who was basking in the kindly light of the fire. Hisherto she had been like one under the spell of a night-mare. In the dark hours of dreams she had often felt her feet and arms paralysed in the face of some awfal peril, from which they would fain fly. She had wept and prayed in vain for power to move her helpless limbs, and had only been to move her helpless limbs, and had only been released from the oppression of her position by waking to the brightness of the morning sun. But this was pain no happy dawn could ever clear away. And when the full consciousness of her position burst on her soul, when the sound of his soft voice broke on the amazed silence of her sorrow, when she knew that for evermore she must loathe that voice once so dear to her, must shrink from that face—for the sight of which she had longed with inexpressible tenderness when absent—had kissed with kisses that took her whole heart with them to his cheek when present; then indeed she felt as if the earth had suddenly turned to hell; that unseen powers were scourging her with pain sharper than she could bear.

"Oh!" she mouned, "let me die, let me

Her hands fell by her side, and the slight rustle of her dress attracted Mowbray's atten-tion. He moved from the hearth-rug still whisa snatch of the air which had han all day; it was a song Lady Diana had taught him, and the thought of how soon he should meet her had involuntarily brought this rem brance of her to his lips.

"Azalea!" once more he called; but Azalea fied by him as he spoke, and although he made a snatch at her dress, he could not succeed in stopping her.

"The listle cat!" he said, half amused, half indignant; "does she think I am going to hunt after her all over the house?" Then, with a smile of satisfaction, he added, "She will soon come back again;" he settled himself comfortable in a small comfortable in a small can be settled himself. ably in an arm-chair, and as he watched the leap-ing flames with tired, sleepy eyes, his thoughts traveled pleasantly away in the direction of Lon-don. In a delicious reverie he fancied himself sitting near Lady Diana's chair, his arm creeping round her waist, his lips hovering near her own; then he would start suddenly, fancying he felt Asales's arms round his neck, and her hand holding his; but it was only the curtain flapping near his head, and when he looked at his hands they were empty. So he dozed again, and at last settled into sleep with the happy conviction that both women were heaping careases on him, and that yet he was sorely puzzled, thinking "What a rage they'll both be in when I wake up!"

HOME AND FOREIGN GOSSIP.

The Mechanics' Institute of Buffalo is making arrangements for holding an International Industrial Exhibition in that city, commencing early in October, and to continue a month. The Skatting Risk, a fre-proof building covering an area of $8,000 equare feet, has been selected as an appropriate place for the exhibition. It is the deelign to inaugurate, by this undertaking, a series of annual exhibitions, in which the mechanical art of the United States and Canada was be shown under directmiances favorable for may be shown under circumstances favorable for studying it, and for subjecting the productions to competent criticism. Articles are to be classified in even departments: fine arts and education; the dwelling; dress and handicraft; chemistry and min-eralogy; engines and mechanics; intercommunica-tion; agriculture and horticulture. By special ar-rangement, railroad, risamboat, and express companies will return free of charge all articles exhibited on which freight shall have been paid to Buffalo, provided they are returned before the middle of Novem ber, and have not meanwhile changed ownership. Such an exhibition must tend to encourage inventive penius, and to arouse an enthusiasm which will lead to many valuable new inventions and improvement

"Avisor" is the name of an air-ship which has lately been subjected to a public trial in San Fran-cisco. The machine is a balloon inflated with hydrocisco gen gas, about 40 feet long and 12 in diameter, with a light frame-work of bamboo and pine, and muslin planes on each side. A ribbed propeller of bamboo and muslin is on each side of the centre, and the power is an alcohol steam-engine, made of brase. The machine has also a rudder. At the second trial The maction has also a redder. At the second trial of the "Avitor" it was propelled at a rapid speed around the large building in which it was exhibited. A larger air-ship is now in process of construction, 126 feet long, and its engineers are confident that it will be a recommend. will be a success.

The Saratoga races have brought together a motley crowd, who do no trouble themselves about the et-quette of a fishion. le watering-place, but gratify their own tastes in emoking, drinking — otherwise than at the springs—gambling, betting, and talking "horse." Undoubtedly the "season" at Saratoga is at its height, for botels are genuinely growded; but people who really care for comfort will choose some other time to patronise the Springs than in mid-An

The financial editor of an exchange reports marriages, dull: engagements, depressed: courtships, good and prime: scandal, overstocked; belles, plenty: beanx, scarce and of poor quality.

"Cancerine" is a new fertilizing compost of dead crabs. The shores of Delaware Ray abound with a species of erastaceans known as the king crab, or the horse-foot crab. The eggs cover the sand so thickly that they are showeled up by the wagon-load, and carried away to feed chickens. The young fish are taken to fatten hogs; the old ones are gathered into pens, where they soon die, and then they are dried, ground down, and packed up in bags to be sold at the rate of about twenty-dre dollars per ten for manure. The fartilizing power of "Cancerine" is reported to be double that of guano.

The invitation cards used on the occasio cent wedding in Atlantic City, Wyoming Twritory, were rather novel, but the best the market afforded. They were a very superior style of playing-cards. On the ace of hearts was written the bour of the ceremony and reception. On the king of hearts was written the name of the bridegroom, and on the queen of hearts the name of the bride. The wedding was the first which has taken place in Atlantic City.

Relic vendors do not bestiate to multiply valuable articles in their line to an indefinite extent, as is well known. It is said that the "original" hammer that drove the last spike of the Pacific Railway is now in seion of assenteen different cities

On many of the city railroad lines clean sad comfortable wooden seats have been introduced into the cars. It is next to impossible—certainly is not gre-erally done—to keep qualioned seats in a public car erally done—to keep cusmined seats in a public car in a cleanly condition. Vermin secrets themselves in the hidden crevices, and the danger of contracting malignant diseases is manifest. The health and com-fort of the public would be increased by banishing all cushioned seats from public vehicles.

Raymond, a town in Minnesota, has been the scene of a terrible tornado, which to one family at least proved most disastrone. About midnight a farmer, in whose house twelve persons were spending the night, awoke and perceived indications of a severe storm. awoke and perceived indications of a severe storm. Almost immediately the tornado burst upon them Almost immediately the formato burst upon them with such fury as to tear in pieces and scatter to the distance of a quarter of a mile the entire bones and its contents. Several persons were killed, and others seriously injured. The night being dark and stormy seriously injuried. I as ingut being mark and stormy added to the horror of the exteriorphs. The house was a block or log house, 16 by $6, one and a half storice high, well dovetailed at the corners and planed with two-inch oak plan.

It has been computed that there are $48803000001189 SCANNOTANDED PROPERTY SERVICES TO SERVICE STATE OF THE PROPERTY OF THE PR ascent, the excess of flee this year is 842 quinquete-cillions, 267 quatrordecillions, 868 triodecillions, 648 duodecillions, 269 undecillions, 864 decillions, 828 noconsecutions, 250 undecilions, 854 decilions, 255 no-nillians, 375 octilions, 455 septimon, 455 sertiflons, 395 quintillians, 186 quadrillians, 184 trillians, 184 bill-ions, 250 millions, 131 thousands, and 250. An ex-change, which must have spent most of the season in 400 millions are septimined. change, which must have spent most of the season in difficult computations, easy that it would require just 60 triodecillions, 423 duodecillions, 572 undecillions, 133 decillions, 707 nonllions, 859 octifitions, 184 quin-tillions, 199 quadrillions, 734 trillions, 807 billions, 809 millions, 451 thousands, and 991 years for one person, working at the rate of ten bours per day, to count these files; and that if they were all gathered together in one mass, would make a pile 41; times as large as the New York Custom-house!

Magara is to experience another sensation. It is said that "Professor" Andrew Jenkins, who is sometimes called the Canadian Blondin, intends to cross the chasm of Niagara Biver, below the Falls, about the 50th of Angust, by means of a velocipede ribden over a tight-rope. The place of crossing will be a short distance below the old Suspension Bridge, where the length of the spanning cable will be about one thousand fact. The vehicle to be used is of peculiar construction. The whoels are grooved, and it is preconstruction. The wheels are grooved, and it is pro-pelled by the hands, a balance-pole being carried on the feet. By this means Professor Jenkius says he the feet. By this means Professor Jenkine says he can surmount a considerable grade. Nothing of the nort has ever been attempted in public, and the novelty and danger of the feet will doubtless attract a great crowd to witness the trial.

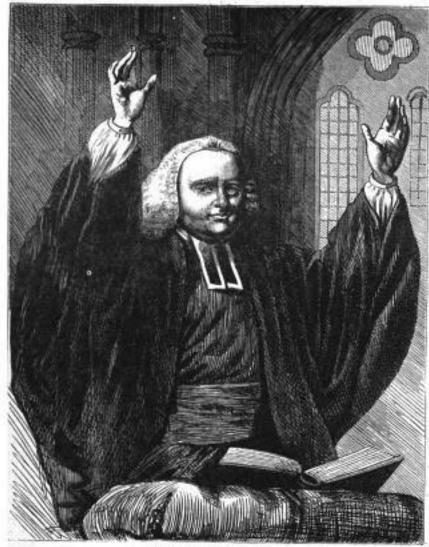

A singular and serious socident befoll a young waman in New Haven the other day. She had placed a bottle of ammonia in warm water for the purpose of loosening the cork. Suddenly the liquid, by the exom the heat, forced the cork and the amneals from the bottle full into her face. The pungent nonia from the source init into her face. The purgent i quid penetrated her eyes, cataling intense pain; and though skillful surgery saved one oye, she has suffered the total loss of the other.

The far-famed Parisian artist of fashion, Mr. Worth, is very summary in his dealings with his customers, even though they be ever so high-born and wealthy. Before he devises a costume for a lady he examines her as he would a horse he was going to purchase. He makes her turn round, stand up, sit down, and trot around until he finally issues his flat. Then the customeround units which the dress at the price he indicates. Before the lady exhibits her new attire to the world, after it is entirely finished, she must appear in it before the great man, and see if it does not require a touch of his magic hand.

Folion Market is not an elegant structure, nor are Folion Market is not an degrat structure, nor are some of its precipcts always spotlessly clean; never-thrices a walk through it of a morning at this season is not unaitractive. The quantity of rich, ripe fruit displayed is marvelous, and the variety charming. Luccious blackberries, huckleberries, malons of various kinds, grapes, plums, pears, apples and, prominent above all, peaches. Hage; volvet-skinned fruit loom up on every a Huge piles of this ranged and carefully sorted, according to size and quality. Peaches promise to be very abundant this year, therefore we may hope that they will be corre-spondingly cheap, though that does not always follow spondingly cheap, though that does not always follow so naturally as one might suppose. The patent re-frigerator cars are of wooderful service in transport-ing periabable fruits from the far West to our markets, and California luxuries have already begun to come hither as freth as if raised in our own State.

In 1860 a sugar-planter at the Hawaiian Islands adopted a singular method of providing water for his plantation. He had a large quantity of arid land, stimte of streams of water. So he planted 50,000 forest trees, which grew rapidly under his care. Boos clouds hung over the new forest, and rain fell abundantly. Claterns were built, the planter insured against droughts, and now he has a very fourishing sugar-plantation. A group of forest trees may thus answer

Obsets can be conquered. The famous "haunted house" in Waterfows, Massachusetts, which has been such a mystery and terror to the credulous far and near, is now reported to have been transformed into a quiet, pleasant home; a guitteman not afraid of spirits having purchased it at a burgain, and improved its surroundings.

REV. GEORGE WHITEFIELD.

REV. GEORGE WHITEFIELD.

WE publish on this page several illustrations lating to the conclusion of the Rev. GRORGE HITERIKED'S career in America. September), 1870, will be the centennial anniversary of e death of this eminent pulpit orator.

The Church of England in the early part of The Church of Engiand in the early part of e eighteenth century had sunk into a state of oral and spiritual lethargy. A converted minior of the Gospel was looked upon as an exptional wonder. The doctrine of the divine that of kings to implicit obedience on the part that subjects the principle of setsuite conth of kings to implicit obedience on the part their subjects; the principle of priestly con-dover the minds of men in all religious mat-es; and cherical influence, sustained by royal thority, thrown upon the side of immorality, d produced their natural results. The expul-m from their pulpits by the "Act of Uniform-"of two thousand of the most able and useful the English clergy had led to great ignorance d neglect of religion; and though men like sourrow and Owen, Fiaves, and Baxten, th Bonyan and a bost of others, had contin-d, in spite of osposing laws, to preach when d, in spite of opposing laws, to preach when by were not shut up in prison, and to write oir immortal practical works, yet these men d been called to their reward, leaving very few like spirit behind them. Thus infidelity, prof-ncy, and formalism almost universally pre-iled. Bishop Buttars, within six months of MUTRERED's ordination, were about 15 to MITEFIELD's ordination, wrote thus: "It is me, I know not how, to be taken for granted many persons that Christianity is not so much a subject of inquiry, but that it is now at ugth discovered to be fictilious. And accord-ply they treat it as if in the present age this are an agreed point among all people of dis-cament, and nothing remained but to set it up a principal subject of mirth and ridicule, as it we by way of recrisal for its hadron so loss is re by way of reprisal for its having so long interrupted the pleasures of the world." Bishop WARRICKTON, who commenced his ministry a few years before WHITEFIELD, says: "I have lived years below were first, says: "I have lived to see that fatal crisis, when religion hath lost its hold on the minds of the people."

GEORGE WELTEFIELD was born December 16, 1714, in Gloucester, England. It was here that ROBERT RAINES, the founder of Sunday-schools, was buried, and here that Bishop Hoopen was burned in Many's reign. The father of White-FIELD died when the son was only two years of age. The latter entered Oxford University in his eighteenth year. Here he became acquaint-ed with a little brotherhood of Methodists, among whom were John and Charles Wesley. He was ordained at the Cathedral in Gloucester, June 20, 1736. Soon we find him preaching in London to vast crowds, and exciting an unusual degree of attention among persons of all ranks. About this time his attention was drawn to the colony of Georgia, in America, whither the WESLEYS had gone. He soon made his first voyage to America. In 1738 he returned to Europe, and instituted open air preaching in England and Wales, where he had remarkable Esgiand and Wales, where he had remarkable success. In 1789 he made a second voyage to America. Warson, in his "Annals of Philadelphia," speaking of White work is that city, tells us that he preached to a crowd of 15,000 persons on Society Hill. In that city his settnons exercised a wonderful influence. "The change to religion here," says a gazette of the day, "is altogether surprising, through the inday, "is altogether surprising, through the influence of WHITEFIELD; no books sell but re-

Historic of Whitheritz (E.); no books sell but religious, and such is the general conversation."

His wife, whom he married in England in 1741, died August 9, 1768. He made, in all, seven voyages to America, and both in New England and in the South his ministerial labors were attended with almost miraculous results. His last visit was made in 1769. His health was failing that he are a for Court of the conference of the con failing; but he came from Georgia to New England, preaching every where by the way. His last ser-mon was delivered in Exeter, New Hampshire, September 29, 1770, He had engaged to preach at Newburyport, Massachusetts, morning of the 30th; but that very morning he died at the house of the Rev. JONATHAN PARSONS,

It was owing to the labors of Mr. WHITHFIELD that the first Presbyterian church in Newburyport was formed, and, whatever may be thought of the peculiar opinions of Mr. WHITEFIELD, certain it is that his eloquence as a preacher was unrivaled, and his seal for the cause he taught of the highest character. The fruits of his ministration here were great and striking; and the establishment of the society under consideration afforded proof of the permanency of its effects. He was baried beneath the pulpit in the church in Federal Street, in which a cenotaph was erected to his memcey, in 1829, by the munificence of WILLIAM BARTLETT, Esq. In this house of worship is also a remarkably fine whispering gallery. We know of none which compares with upon Whitehello's cenotaph;

The following is the inscription upon Whitefield's cenotaph:

"This cenotaph is crected, with affectionate veneration, to the Her. Georges Warrarias, born at Gloroceter, England, December 16, 1714. Educated at Oxford University; cedained 1756. In a ministry of thirty-four years be crossed the Atlantic thirty-four years have considered the second thirty-four years have years have years have years have years of his because where we powerful on the bearts of his heavers. He died of sathems, September 36, 1176, suddenly exchanging his life of imparatished labors for his eternal rest."

The house where WHITEFIELD died, now known as the Whitefield House, is situated on the lower side of School Street, in an ancient portion of Newburyport, The sketches from which our interesting engravings on this page have been made were furnished by Mr. HARRY

In these days of erudite research it would form a very interesting theme for an antiquarian naturalist to trace the pheasant from the period alloded to by the great Spanish epigrammatist—

Argivă primum sum transportata carină; Anto mibi notum nii nisi Phasis erat"...

down to the present time. He could describe how these birds were abducted from the borders of the celebrated Asiatic river to the classic land of Greece, and how they have spread nearly over the whole globe. From Colchis, Mingrelia, and the waste globe. From Colchis, Mingrelia, and other countries bordering on the Caspian, they have proceeded westward through Greece, from the shores of the Balie to the Cape of Good Hope and the island of Madagascar. Eastward, they have extended through Media to the most remote parts of China, Japan, and Tartary. In Africa they are known on the West Cass. In Europea tru, they have calculated State International State Inter Europe, too, they have colonized Spain, Italy, the islands in the Gulf of Naples, Germany, Silesia, Bohemia, France, and England. The ancient writers give us a vivid sketch of how the pheasant formed are of writers give us a vivid sketch of how the pheasant formed one of those gastronomic victims which were sacrificed to the whim of the depraved and gormsodizing Hellogaralties as a boune-bouche for his pet and pampered lions. We may remember the anecdote of the King of Lydia, who, when seated on his throne, adorned with royal magnificence and all the pomp of Eastern splendor, asked Solon if he had ever beheld any thing so fine. The Greek philosopher, unmoved by the objects before him, replied "that, after having seen the beautiful plumage of the pheasant, he could be astonished at no other finery."

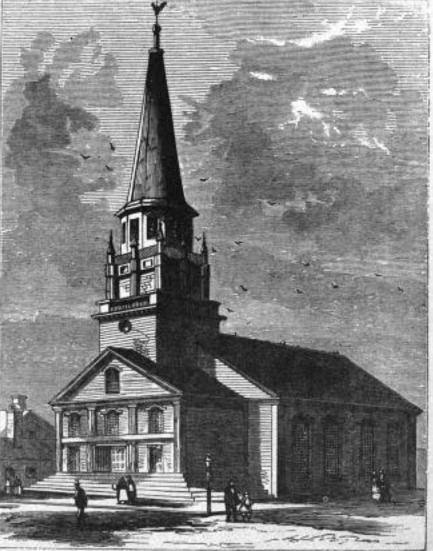

OLD WHITEFIELD HOUSE, NEWBURYPORT, MASS.

The common pheasant is almost as well known as the barn-door fowl; and, without entering into any details respecting this bird, it may not be out of place to know when it was first introduced into Europe. It is said, as we have al-ready remarked, that the pheasant came origin-ally from the banks of the Phasis, in Colchis, a ally from the banks of the Phasis, in Colchis, a country of Asia, extending along the eastern shore of the Euxine Sea. According to fabulous history, the first phensant was brought into Greece by Jason, on his return from the Argonautic expedition. Amsrophanes, who lived 400 years before the Christian era, mentions the hird in his play called "Nubes," where Strepsiades says, "Not if you would present me with the phensants fed by Leogorus"—Leogorus being an Athenian rose and epicure of the first class. Axistoria, Martiat, and Plinx frequently allude to the phensant; and Martiat, who, in one of his epigrams, calls it "Phasiana Colchorum," thus writes: thus writes:

'Si Libyce nobis volucres et Phasides essent, Acciperes: et nunc accipe sortis aves."

The modern Italians call it "Fasiano," the French "Falsan," the Germans "Fasan," in old English "Fesaunt." It seems more than prob-able that the pheasant was first introduced into England by the Norman followers of William THE CONQUEROR, although we can only trace it to the time of EDWARD I. (a.n. 1300). In the days of RICHARD II. this bird was esteemed a princely delicacy; and when Giforgus Neville was created Archbishop of York, in Edward THE FOURTH'S reign, "two hundred pheesants appeared on the table as one item in that good-ly banquet."

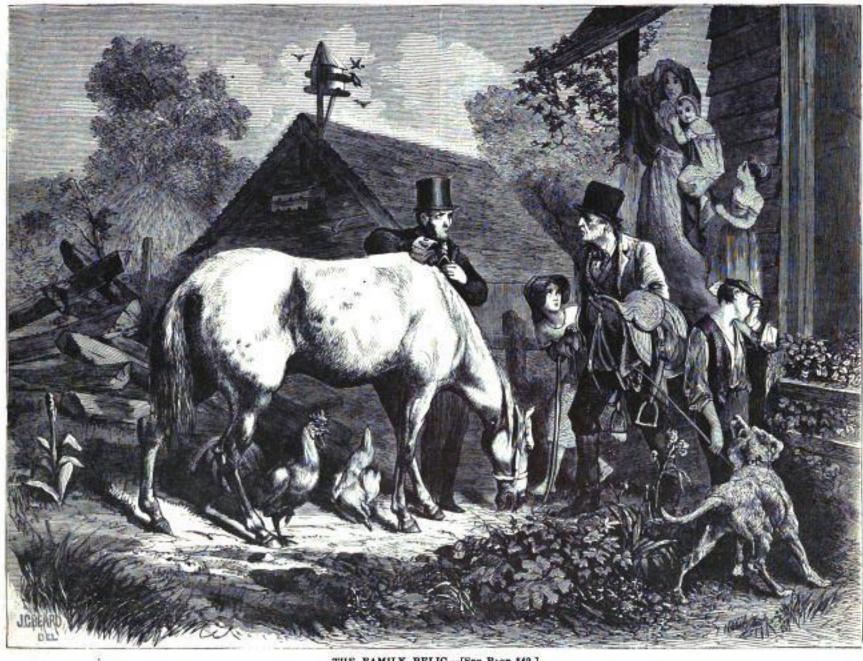

The hen pheasant is smaller, and does not exhibit that brilliancy of plumage which distinguishes the male; the colors, instead of being a glossy purple, green, blue, and reddish chestnut,

OLD SOUTH CHURCH, NEWBURYPORT, MASSACHUSETTS.

WHITEFIELDS MONUMENT

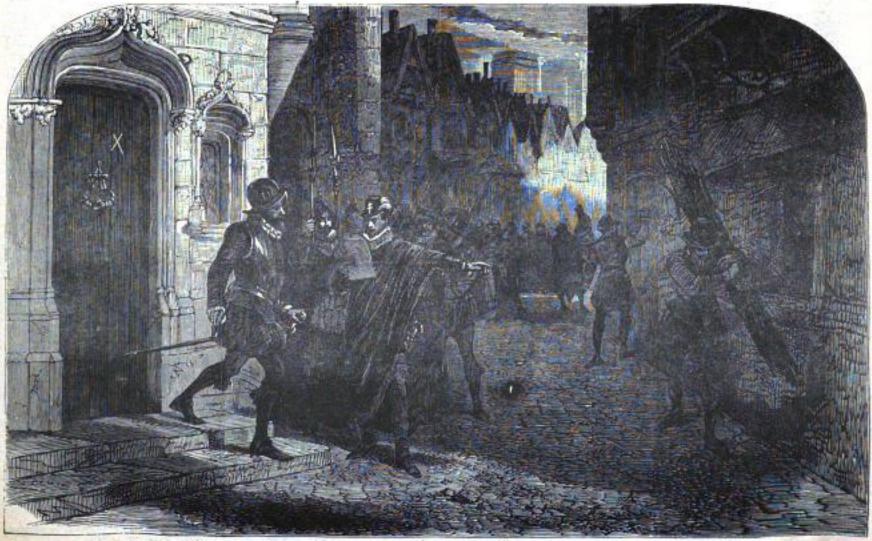

THE FAMILY RELIC.-[SEE PAGE 542.]

variegated with black and white, and mixed with deep orange, are light and dark brown, mixed with black, the breast being finely freekled with small black spots on a light ground, while the space round the eye is covered with feathers, free from that mark, in appearance like scarlet cloth finely spotted with black, which the male bird presences. The ben makes her nest on the ground, like the partridge, and lays from twelve to fifteen olive-colored e.gs, which are smaller than those of the domestic hea. The young follow the mother as soon as they are freed from the shell.

In her natural state the female makes her nest of dry grass and leaves. The young birds are very difficult to rear, and they must be supplied with ants' eggs, which is the food the old one leads them to gather when wild in the woods. In our illustration some of the brood may be seen indulging their appetites in insect luxury, while the mother is evidently listening to the sound of an approaching footstep. Should it be that of a poacher, armed with a net, she will realize that grief Macduff describes: "What, all my pretty chickens and their dam, at one fell swoop?"

"THE NIGHT OF AUGUST 24, 1572," THE EVE OF THE MASSACRE OF ST. BARTHOLOMEW .- [SEE PAGE 542.]

THE FAMILY RELIC.

This scene rendered by Mr. Brand in our illustration on page 541 is full of pathon. The cld farmer is reduced to an extremity, and is compelled to sell the old white horse. The bargain is being concluded, but the family stands around in dismay at its loss. One of the girls urges the father not to let the dear old relic go; some of the children are weeping; and even the baby seems to put in its protest against the sale. The picture is very suggestive and full of feeling.

THE EVE OF ST. BARTHOLOMEW.

The subject of the picture from which our en-graving is taken having over and over again been adopted by artists who sought a scene in which intense human interest might be expressed, great credit is due to any one who may succeed in treating it from an original point of view. In this M. Econom Figure has displayed genuine shility by the adoption of a method of treatment which may be described as realistic and historical. The whole scene—the marking of the doors, the reading of the list of victims, the treacherous conference in the streets so soon to be made hu-man shambles—every thing is depicted with an appreciative power which at once appeals to our sense of truthfulness. As one looks at the picsense of truthrainess. As one tooks as the pre-ture the figures seem to move. We listen for the tolling of the bell of St. Germain L'Auxer-rois, which is to give the signal for the massacre to begin. A page of history is presented to us in a form inexpressibly attractive, and we can not forbear congratulating the pupil of PAUL DELANGERS on the vigor of drawing and ex-cellence of composition which he has so success-fully acquired from his eminent master. SANUEL SMILES in his "Huguenoes" thus describes the events of this memorable night:

"Between two and three o'clock in the more ing of the 24th of August, 1572, as the king sat in his chamber with his mother and the Dunn or Anno, the great bell of the church of St. Auxervois rang to early prayer. It was the ar-ranged signal for the massacre to begin! Al-most immediately after, the first pistoi-shot was most immediately after, the first pistoi-shot was heard. Three hundred of the royal guard, who had been held in readiness during the night, rushed out into the streets, shouting 'For God and the King.' To distinguish themselves in the darkness, they were a white such on their left arm, and a white cross in their hats.

"Before leaving the palace, a party of the geard murdered the retinue of the young King of Navarre, then the guests of Charles IX. in the Louvre. They had come in the train of their chief, to be present at the celebration of his mar-riage with the sister of the King of France. One by one they were called from their rooms, marched down unarmed into the quadrangle, where they were bewed down before the very eyes of their royal kest. A more perfidious butchery is probably not to be found recorded in history.

the same time, mischief was afoot out Paris. La Chargon, provest of the throughout Paris. merchants, and MARGEL, his ancient colleague, merchants, and Markett, his ancient colleague, to had mustered a large number of desperadoes, to whom respective quarters had been previously assigned, and they now hastened to enter upon their frightful morning's work. The Duke or Gussa determined to anticipate all others in the murder of Coutony. Hastening to his hotel, the duke's party burst in the cuter door, and the ad-nited was recently from his advantage by the short miral was roused from his slumber by the shots fired at his followers in the court-yard belo He rose from his couch, and though scarce able to stand, fied to an upper chamber. There he was tracked by his assassins, who stabbed him to death as he stood leaning against the wall. His body was then thrown out of the window into the court-yard. The DUKE OF GUISE, who had the court-yard. The DERK of Griss, who had been waiting impatiently below, hurried up to the corpse, and wiping the blood from the ad-miral's face, said, 'I know him—it is be;' then, sparning the body with his foot, he called out to his followers, 'Courage, comrades, we have be-gun well; now for the rest; the king commands it.' Then they rushed out again into the street.

"Firing was now beard in every quarter throughout Paris. The houses of the Huguenots, which had long been marked, were broken into, and men, women, and children were sabred or shot down. It was of no use trying to fly. The fugitives were slaughtered in the streets. The king himself seized his arquebuse, and securely fired upon his subjects from the windows of the For three days the massacre continued. Corpses blocked the doorways; mutilated bodies lay in every lane and passage; and thousands were cast into the Seine, then swellen by a flood. At length, on the fourth day, when the fury of the assassins had become satisted, and the Huguenots were for the most part slain, a dead si-lence fell upon the streets of Paris.

"These dreadful events at the capital were al-most immediately followed by similar deeds all-over France. From fifteen to eighteen hundred persons were killed at Landsele. persons were killed at Lyons, and the dwellers on the Rhone below that city were horrified by the sight of the dead bodies floating down the river. Six hundred were killed at Ronen, and many more at Dieppe and Havre. The num-bers killed during the massacre throughout France have been variously estimated. SULLY timate the victims at 100,000.

"CATHARINE DE MEDICIS Wrote in triumph to ALVA, to PHILLY II., and to the Pope, of the results of the three days' dreadful work in Paris. When PHILIP heard of the massecre, he is said to have laughed for the first and only time in his infe. Rome was thrown into a delirium of joy at the news. The cannon were fired at St. Angelo; Gamoowy Alli. and his cardinals went in proowy XIII. and his cardinals went in pro-n from sanctuary to sanctuary to give God s for the massacrs. The subject was orthanks for the mass dered to be painted, and a medal was struck, with the Pope's image on one side, and the destroying angel on the other immolating the Huguenota. Cardinal Owsers was dispatched on a special mission to Paris to congratulate the king; and on his passage through Lyons, the assauins of the Huguenots there, the blood on their hands scarce dry, knelt before the holy man in the esthedral and received his blessing. At Paris, the triumphant clergy celebrated the massacre by a mablic procession: they determined to consecrate public procession; they determined to consecrate to it an annual jubilee on the day of St. Barthel-omew; and they too had a medal struck in com-memoration of the event, bearing the legend, 'Piety has awakened justice!'

SINGULARITIES.

That man sprang originally from the dust of the earth, through the creative power of the Al-mighty, is a certain and unquestionable truth. Yet as out of that dust was also produced an endless variety of trees, plants, and flowers, with different forms, colors, and virtues, so, though all human bodies are formed of the same materials, yet some have possessed abnormal and peculiar properties and qualities so removed from the constitution of others that every man may, in fact, be pronounced in a greater or less de gree a moving miracle. Records of these exceptional cases go back to a very early period. Pliny, in his natural history, and also Platarth, mention some families or generations of such marvelous constitution that no venomous serpent would hurt them, but, on the contrary, shun all contact. The spittle of these man, or their sucking the place, was medicinal to all who had been bitten or stung. Of this race were the Psylli and Marsi; also those of the Island of Cyprus, who were called Ophiogenes. A certain Exagon, embassedor from that island, was, by command of a Roman consul, put into a huge barrel or pipe, wherein were many sespents, on purpose to make experiment and trial of the truth of this asserted property. The issue was, the serpents licked his body in all parts gently with their tongues, as if they had been puppy dogs, while he sustained no injury, to the great wooder of all who were looking on. Avicenna writes of another that when he pleased he could put himself into a pelsy, and also provoke venomous creatures to tite him, of which they died, while he remained unhurt. Saint Augustine (De Civitate Dei) says he knew a man who could perspire intensely, of his own accord, as often as he of a Roman consul, put into a huge barrel or spire intensely, of his own accord, as often as he pleased. In Lloyd's "State Worthies" we find it written of Lord Bacon that he had one poonliar temper of body, which was that be always fainted at an eclipse of the moon, though he had no previous knowledge that such an event was about to happen.

Puntanus tells a story of one Colano, of Catania, in Sielly, surnamed the Fish, who was even more than amphibious, and lived longer in the water than on land. He was constrained every day to pass many hours in the sea, and said that if he was much absent thence he could scarcely breathe or live, and that it would be his death to forbear. He was such a prodigious swimmer that he preferred storms and tempests, and could swim twenty or thirty miles on a stretch. At last, in the Straits of Messina, diving for a valuable silver gobiet which the king had caused to be cast in as a prize to him who could fetch it from the bottom, he there perished, for he never rose to the surface again, being either pierced by a huge sword-fish (percia spada), or entangled in the cavities of a rock,

On the 14th of March, 1729, was born Charles, the son of Richard Charlesworth, a carrier at Longnor, in the county of Stafford. At his birth he was under the common size, but he grew so amazingly fast that by the time he was four years old he was near four feet high, and in four years old he was near four feet high, and in strength, agility, and bulk equal to a fine boy of ten. At five he measured four feet seven inches, weighed eighty-seven pounds, could with ease carry a man of fourteen stone weight, had evearly a man or rotarous score weight, had ev-ery sign of puberty, and worked as an adult at his father's business. This was the time of his full vigor, from whence he begin gradually to fall away in strength and bulk, like a men in the fall away in strength and bulk, like a man in the decline of life. At the age of seven his strength was gone, his body totally emaciated, his eyes sunk, and his head pulsiod. He died with all the right of extreme old age, and as if the months he had lived had been years. The above is extracted from an account published by Mr. Smith, a surgeon at Longnor, by whom it was transmitted to the Royal Society. It is also confirmed in the Gentleman's Mayasine for December 1734. ber, 1734.

Dr. George Cheyne, a celebrated physician, who died in 1748 at the age of eighty-two, wrote a celebrated work called "The English Malady: a Treatise on Various Diseases." In it we find a Criedrated work caused "In any analysis a Treatise on Various Diseases." In it we find the following singular recital: "Colonel Townshend, a gentleman of honor and integrity, had for many years been afflicted with a nephritic complaint. His illness increasing and his strength decaying, he came from Bristol to Bath in a lit-ter, in autumn, and lay at the Bell Inn. Dr. Baynard and I" (Dr. Cheyne) "were called in to him, and attended him twice a day, but his vomitings continuing incessant and obstinate against all remedies, we despaired of his recovery. While he was in this condition he sent for us one morn-ing. We waited on him, with Mr. Skrine, his apothecary. We found his senses clear and his mind calm; his nurse and several servants were about him. He said he wanted us to give him some explanation of an odd sensation he had for some time observed and felt, which was that he could die or expire when he pleased, and yet by an effort, or somehow, he could come to life again, which he had several times tried before he asked our opinion. We heard this with sur-prise; but as it was not to be accounted for on ordinary principles, we could hardly believe the fact as he related it, much less give any ac-count of it, unless he should please to make the experiment before us, which we were unwilling he should do, lest in his weak condition he might carry it too far.. He continued to talk very distinctly and sensibly for above a quarter of an hour respecting this surprising sensation, and inhour respecting this surprising sensation, and in-sisted so much on our seeing the trial made that we were at last forced to comply. We all three felt his pulse first; it was distinct, though not strong, and his heart had its usual beating. He composed himself on his back, and lay in a still posture for some time. While I grasped his right hand, Dr. Baynard laid his on his beart, and Mr. Skrine held a clean looking-glass to his mouth. I found his pulse sink gradually, till at last I could not find any by the most exact and nice touch. Dr. Baynard was unable to dis-tinguish the least motion in his heart, or Mr. Skrine the allghtest soil of breath on the bright Skrine the slightest soil of breath on the bright mirror he held to his lipe. Then each of us by turns examined his arm, heart, and breath, but could not by the closest scratiny discover the least symptom of life in him. We reasoned a could not by the closest acreainy discover the least symptom of life in him. We reasoned a long time on this odd appearance as well as we could, and all of us, judging it inexplicable and unaccountable, and finding he still continued in the same condition, we began to conclude that he had indeed carried the experiment too far, and at last were satisfied that he was actually dead and necessarise to here him. This dead, and were preparing to leave him. This continued about half an hour. As we were going away we observed some movement body, and, upon examination, found his pulse and the motion of his heart gradually returning; he began to breathe gently and speak softly. We were all astonished to the last degree at this unexpected change; and, after some further conversation with him and among ourseives, went away fully satisfied as to the par-ticulars of this fact, but confounded and puzzled, and not able to form any rational scheme that might account for it."—Cardan believed, or pretended to believe, that he possessed this same faculty; and Celsus, in the reign of Tiberius, names a priest of Apollo who, he says, was similarly endowed.

ANIMAL MECHANISM.

STUDENTS of natural history have a perpetual feast in the contemplation of the economy they discover in the structure and lodgment of the various organs which give perfection to the body. The packing of the liver, to have it occupy the least room, but, above all, the manner of stowing the brain so as to have it exactly fill the skull, excites the highest admiration of those most familiar with this system of economizing room in Nature's handiwork. The human brain, for example, is supposed to be made up of dis-tinct cords, lying side by side, too numerous and too delicately small to ever be clearly displayed, but rolled up in balls, under the name of gangia, lobes, and hemispheres, occupying the least possible space consistent with their appropriate functions. If each cord were carried out in a straight line they might be from fifty to a hun-dred feet in length! There is one important characteristic gland in a man which is scarcely larger than a nutmeg, wholly made up of parallel tubes exceeding thirty feet in length. In the pasal cavities of carnivorous animals which hunt their prey by the sense of smell, the olfactory nerves, occupying apartments hardly the size of the little finger, if they could be unrolled and unfolded would present a broad sheet of nerv-ous surface several feet square. These are but a few examples of the curious arrangements dis-coverable in animal organization, where important and complicated machinery is put into the smallest imaginable space, so as to insure com-pactness, security, and symmetry by economy in packing. Birds present very marked examples of this kind of animal perfection, but especially in an additional contrivance by which the weight of their bodies when at roost acts upon a pound lever, the arrangement of their legs being such that their toes cling to a limb while they are unconscious or asleep.

THE SHOCK-PEDDLER.

My favorite patterer is a man with a face of sickly sallow brown, an immense comforter round his neck, and a long-tailed—I may say many-tailed—coat, for it is regged. He is attended always by a fat, baggy woman in a cloak. The man's voice is solemn and down the woman's is solumn and deep, the wor man's voice is solemn and deep, the weman's harsh and creaking, especially when she means it to be most persuasive to the public. They go about with a traveling galvanic battery, and ad-minister artificial "pius and needles" to the street public. The man mouths the long words with infinite relish as he describes, in a kind of dence, the benefits he offers for a penny.

"This powerful little machine," says he, "en-"This powerful little machine," says he, "entirely free from shock, is a sure cure for toothache, shortness of breath, gout, ague, rheumatism, nervous ability" (sic), "and diseases of the digestive organs." Then, much quicker:
"Relieve the ed, clear the eyes, cause the blood
t' circ'late in prop' manner. Is there any other party would like to try the slow, mild, and pleas-ng sensation at won penny?"

When a patient is on the rack he dilates on his sufferings and enlarges on his agonies, by way of encouragement to the rest of the public. It is also to be noticed that if the patient is a boy of ten years old he describes him to the public as it the average man, but if a how of fourteen he

ten years old he describes him to the public as
"the young man;" but if a boy of fourteen he refers to him as "the gentleman."

"The gentleman will take notice" (or "the young man," as it may be) "that the signal for stopping the power of this beautiful little machine is given by the word "Woe!" The gentleman will remember that at the word 'Woel' the wole will be immediately stopped." (Aside to boy): "Now, you young stoopid, don't you go a letting go the handles when you've had enough of it, but just say 'Woe!" Do you understand? Very well, then; lay hold." (Aloud to the public): "The slow, mild, and pleasing sensation is now passing through the gentleman's system at a pressure of ten degrees, giving the greatest of satisfaction" (turns the button). "The gentle-man is now enjoying the electric fluid at a power of twenty degrees—now of THERT" (the gentle-man is holding his breath with the "cnjoyment," his toeth clenched, and his eyes staring wildly)— "now of FORTY" (the gentleman's hands clutch "now of FURLY" (the gentlemen's hands cluten the handles very tight, and tremble up and down with the slow, mild, and pleasing sensation, while his feet dance under him). "The gentlemen is now going to enjoy the full power of this invigorative little machine. —Remember the word "Woe!" Sir." But with wee unuterable depicted on his face-with "Woe!" screeched from a ad on his face—with "Woe!" screeched from a mouth formerly paralyzed by pain, and now suddenly opened in panic, the boy drops the handles, and the "wole" of it is immediately stopped.

Very often two "gentlemen" or "young men" partake together of the "slow, mild, and pleusing sensation," under agreement that the one who first cries "Woe!" is to pay for the woes of both.

The last time I saw the traveling shock-merchant he was assuring a poor, drabbled woman, in answer to her inquiry, that his machine was invaluable as a curative for headaches "when people had been out on the loose." So she fetched her husband and treated him to a pennyworth. He here it meekly, with a resigned and somewhat acclude arrest. When it was over he said what sodden aspect. When it was over he said he thought it had done him good; and he went and had twopenny-worth of gin.

Tax American Agriculturist for July contained an acticle classing the well-known firm of Huwans & Co., of Hinsdale, N. H., with swindlers, and charging them with dealing in counterfeit money. This is the charge for which Huwans & Co. have brought a said for libel against the shove-maned journal, laying damages at $40,000. It seems evident that combody is reletaken. Huwans & Co. have been known for many years as extensive booksellors and publishers, and can bring plentiful testimony that they are reliable and homeship have certainly much better grounds for damages than is the case in most nerwepaper libel suits. — Spring-feld Republican, July 31, 1869.

Drayers: A Tablers cure Indigestion, Heartburn, and Sour Stomach. Fifty Cents per Peu. Malled for 60c. Sold by druggists. R. G. Watlawe, 671 Broadway.

Access Wanted,—Hinkley Knitting Machine. Knits overything. Send to office, 126 Broadway, for Circulars.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

WEDLOCK;

Os. The Right Relations or the Serie, is a new and popular Sammer Book, giving practical—admentio—instruction as to who should and who should not marry. Bookselbers howe it; $1.69, or in exits gill, $3. Sent, first powl, by S. H. WELLS, 289 Broadway, N. Y.

GET IT PURE.

A pint of Pain Paint for $5, a quart for $8, or a gal-ion for $90, double strength, with full directions, will be sent to any person, free of Express charges, on re-ceipt of the money at Dr. R. L. Wolcoor's Office, Et-Chatham Square, New York; or 6 pint bottles of An-nibilitor, for Catarrh and Colds is the bead, on re-ceipt of $6. Small bottles sold at all Druggists.

PIANOS and ORGANS.

Priors pressly reduced for Cash. Now Seven-Octave Planes, of first-class makers, for $600 and opward. New Cabinet Organs for $60 and opward. Second-hand Planes, Melodeous, and Organs from $40 to $100, at $61 Broadway, N. Y. HORACE WATERS.

CHARLES READE'S

FOUL PLAY,

WHITE LIES. AND THE

SEVEN CURSES OF LONDON

By JAMES GREENWOOD, the "Amateur Casual."

HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK, Hose Just Beary:

FOUL PLAY. A Novel. By CHARLES READS and Dios Boumcaulr. Svo, Paper, 30 cents.

TL. WHITE LIES. A Novel. By Charles Reads.

Sto, Paper, 25 cents. Uniform with Harper's Popular Editions of "Hard Cash," "Griffith Garnt,"
"Never Too Late to Mend," "Foul Play," "Love Me Little, Love Me Long," &c.

ш THE SEVEN CURREN OF LONDON. By James GERENWOOD, the "Ameteur Carnal," Author of "The True History of a Little Regammin," "Reuben Davidger," "Wild Sports of the World," &c.

EF HARRE & BROTHERS will send of the river books by mail, postage proposit, to any part of the United States, on receipt of the price.

8vo, Paper, 25 cents.

FOR BOSTON

BRISTOL and PROVIDENCE, Com'r BRATTON, Com'r SIMMONS, Will Leave (Alternate Bays) Bally,
FROM PIRE 30 NORTH HIVER, (Post of Chambers Street),
—AT 5 P.M.

DODWORTH'S CRLEBRATED ORCHESTRA Grand Promenade Concert

EVERY EVENING.
THE ONLY LINE RUNNING SUNDAY NIGHT.
FROVIDENCE Passengers by the above steamers will leave Fall River at 5:00 AM.
ARRIVING at 6:00 AM.
HETURNING will leave Providence at 5 P.M., making direct connection with the boat; and allowing a good night's rest on board each way.
To better accommodate the public,
THE SPLENDID STEAMERS
WIPHIODE

NEWPORT and OLD COLONY, COMMANDER LEWIS, COMMANDER MILLER, WILL LEAVE (Alternate Days) DAILY,

(Rundays excepted) FROM PIER-28-NORTH RIVER, (Foot of Murray Street), —AT 6:39 P.M.,

BOSTON via NEWPORT.
FREIGHT received at Pier 30 up to 5 P.M., at at Pier 33 up to 625 P.M., each evening. JAMES FISK, Jr., President, M. R. SIMONS, Managing Director, CHAS. H. VAILE, General Passenger Agent, H. H. MANGAM, Preight Agent, NARBAGANSBYT STRANSGIP COMPANY.

H. A. HALL'S Patent Improved India-Rubber Ankle Guard.

Lined with French Patent-Leather, to prevent removing halt.

For Interfering or Close-Travel-ing Horses and Colta.

The best article ever intro-duced, for by their me the horse will immediately widen his guit. They can be cismed in an in-stant, and will last forever. Seat to any part of the world, by express, on receipt of $1 30. Also, every description of Kes-zer Boove, Kens and Aura-a Granza, and all kinds of Rub-ber Goods adapted to horses and carriages, with every useful arti-cle ever manufactured of Rub-vices, at

H. A. HALL'S Rubber Warehouse, 35 Milk Street, Boston.

CYPRESS HILLS CEMETERY. OFFICE, No. 124 BOWERY, N. Y., (Corner of Grand Street).

(Corner of Grand Street).

OFFICERS:
EDMUND DRIGGS, President.
WM. J. PEASE, Vice-President.
WILLIAM MILES, Tressure.
WILLIAM MILES, Tressure.
WILLIAM EDWARDS, Secretary.
A. S. JARVIS, HERVET G. LAW, JOHN I.
VAN ALST, ALFRED M., WOOD, Trusces. N. G. PALMER, Sup'l and Surveyor.

Agents Wanted.

THE PICTORIAL FIELD - BOOK OF THE WAR OF 1812; or, Illustrations, by Pen and Pencil, of the History, Biography, Scenery, Relies, and Traditions of the Last War for American Independence. By Banson J. Lossano, Author of "The Pictorial Field-Book of the Revolution." With 182 Ularation of Wood by Lawrence. Half Calf or Half Morocco extra, $10 00.

The author has traveled more than ten thousand miles in this country and the Canadaa, with note-book and penell in hand, visiting piaces of historic interest connected with the War of 1813, from the Great Lakes to the Gulf of Mexico, gathering up, recording, and defineating every thing of special value not found in books, and making himself familiar with the battle-fields of making himself familiar with the battle-fields of that war. Access to the archives of government, state and national, and to private collections, was freely given him; and from the lips of actors in the events of that struggle he received the most interesting information concerning it, which might have periabed with them.

The results of the author's researches and labors are given in one imperial octave volume of over a thousand pages, containing eight kundred and eighty-two engavings in the sigic of the Frant-Book or ran Ravo-Lavost, to which this magnificent work is an indispensable companion. It takes up the negrative elaistock events where the former work leaves it, and in a careful manner gives a lively account of the perials of the country humselfabely encountered in the Revo-principles of the period of the strings of the new nation with the allied powers of the British and Indians in the Northwest; the origin and growth of political period in the United States, and their relations to the War of 1819; the influence of the French Revolution and of French politics in giving completed to parties in the country, the first war of the Barbary powers; the effects of the wars of Napoleon on the public policy of the United States; the Embargo and kindred Acts, and the kindling of the war are given in greater detail than in any work ever published on the subject, and the narrative brings to view schoes in the scenes whose deeds have not been hitherto recorded. On this account it is specially interesting to many of the older families of the country.

The illustrations of this superb work are similar in character to those of the Franciscos or run Ravouvrios. The construction of the narrative differs from that only is having between twent arranged in chronological order. It forms a continuation of the history of our country from the close of the Revolution, in 1988, to the end of the second war with Great Britan, in 1818. Nothing has been speed by the author and publishers in their endeavors to make it the neet perfect, attractive, and useful volume on the subject wars offered to the public.

HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHER

PRANCISC SQUARS, NEW YORK,

Removed to 335 Broadway. THE COLLINS $20. $15.

THE COMPANY

WATCH FACTORY.

The Collins Metal and Jewelry Factory has re-soved from 87 Nassau Street to their splendid

No. 335 BROADWAY. These superior Watches have now been in use over three years, and give universal satisfaction; and although sold at so moderate a price, are not ourpassed in appearance and for time by gold ones costing $150 and $200. They have been greatly improved, but the price remains the same, $10. Those of extra fine finish, $50. Gents' and Ladies' sizes. Jewelry of the richest styles, in every respect equal to the finest gold, at one-tenth the price. We have but

ONE OFFICE, NO AGENTS, and are not responsible for the bogus and worth-less goods sold at cheap levelry establishments. Our Pactory is the ONLY PLACE where the Gen-nine Collins Metal Watches and Jewelry can be had,

C. E. COLLINS & CO., No. 335 Broadway, cor. Worth Street,

GRAND EXCURSION TO

DO YOUR OWN PRINTING.

The Novelty is the best Freas ever invented with which to do your own printing, and is second to none for the use of General Job Frinters. Price of Presses, $15, $30, $32, $50.

Send to BENJ. O. WOODS,
Proprietor, 181 Federal St.,
Education, Mass., for descriptive circular containing testimonials from all parts of the country, with specimens of work done on the press, and specimes sheets of Types, Cuts, Borders, &c.

SWEET
QUININE.

SWARY QUENTED is uservanted equal—dose for dose—to the sulphate (bitter) Quinine, with the important advantage of being awast instead of bitter.

SVAPNIA.

SVAPNIA.

Sold by druggists, prescribed by best physicians.

STEARNS, FARR, & CO., Chemists, New York.

$100 PER DAY DISCONTINUED.

Having obtained an extensive and wide-spread cale or our "CENTURY" brand of Pine-Out Cheering for our "CENTURY" brand of Piese-Cut Chausing Toborco, we desire to announce that we shall not pack daily $100 in the small tin-foll papers after this date. July 1st, 1800, its merits being so favorably recognized that this indocement is no longer necessary. To avoid misapprehension, however, we would add that we shall continue to pack orders for elegant Mershauer Pipes in our "YACHIT CLUB" and "EURERKA" brands of Sweding Tebasos.

The "YACRIT CLUB" is devoid of Nicotine, and can not injure the health, and is especially recommended to people of sedentary occupations or nervous constitutions.

The trade are invited to send for circulars P. LORILLARD, New York.

IMPROVED ALUMINIUM BRONZE HUNTING-CASED WATCHES.

The Improved Aluminium Bronze is a metal differing enticely from any ever offered to the public. He qualities and resemblance to Gold are such that even indges have been deceived. It has seriously occupied the attention of scientific men, and has not only called forth the enlogiums of the press in consequence of its peculiar properties, but has also obtained a Gold Medal at the Paris Exposition.

The movements are well finished, perfectly regulated, and as all these goods are manufactured in my own factory, I am enabled to warrant them as excellent time-keepers.

Page years 315 to 382.

Further details will be found in my pamphlet, which will be sent, postpoid, on demand.

Goods sent by Express, C. O. D., with charges.

Address JULES B. HUGUENIN VUILLEMIN, No. 44 Nassen Street, New York.

"As natural as Thackeray, and more real than Dickons,"

HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK, have just published;

My Daughter Elinor.

A NOVEL

8vo, Paper, $1 25.

In some respects it will be justly regarded as the the aspects, traits, and tendencies—in a word, the normal characteristics of our manners and social characters.—Bostos Transcript.

Sent by wall, postage proposil, to any part of the United States, on receipt of $1 25.

210 PER DAY GUARANTEED

Agents to sell the Hous Surveys Bewiss Maconsu. It makes the Locg serrors, aluxs on sorn array, has the under-leed, and is equal in every respect in any Swing Machine ever invented. Price $25. Warraned for 5 years. Send for drouler. Address Jourson, Claux, & Co., Boston, Mass., Fittsburgh, Pa., or St. Louis, Mo.

PARLOR STRAM ENGINE: made entire-L by of Metal: Boller and Furnace complete: will work for hours if supplied with water, dr., froe from danger; a child can work it. Sent free, with instruc-tions, for §1 60: three for §2 50. Address WALTER HOLT, No. 100 Massan Street, New York.

Agents! Read This!

WE WILL PAY AGENTS A SALARY
of $30 per week and expenses, or allow a large commission, to sell our new and symplectic liverstons. Address M. WAGNER & CO., Marshall, Mich.

EMPLOYMENT shat pass. For particulars, address S. M. SPENCER & CO., Bratileboco, VL.

LAKE SUPERIOR. The splendid steamer METEOR leaves Cleveland, Ohio, on Friday, July 16th and 30th, August 18th and 97th, at 8 o'clock, P.M., and Detroit, Mich., the fol-lowing evenings at 10 o'clock, for Superior City, Du-lath, and all points of interest on Lake Superior. Rooms secured and other information obtained by Rooms sectived and other information obtained application to HANNA & CO., Ag'ta, Cleveland, O.; BUCKLEY & CO., Ag'ta, Detroit, Mich.; or J. T. WHIYING, Manager, Detroit, Mich.

ONLY ONE DOLLAR

FOR ZION'S HERALD to Jan. let, 1870. A first-class Illustrated Religious Journal of 16 pages. 200 Contributors; 5 Editors. The cheapest paper in the land. $2.50 a year, in advance. Specimen copies free.

E. D. WINSLOW, Publisher, 11 Combill, Boston.

Good Boys like Excellence better than Sham, Inquire concerning RIVERVIEW MILITARY ACADEMY,

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. X.

A wide-awake, thorough going School for Boys shing to be trained for Business, for College, or r West Print or the Naval Academy.

OTIS BISBEE, A.M., Frincipal and Proprietor.

GENTS WANTED 575 to $300 per tooth sure, and no risk. We want to engage a good agent in every county in the U. 8, and Canadas to sell our Revisating Patent White Wire Clother Lines. Warranted to last a lifetime and never rust. For full particulars to Agents, address the Assertion Firs Ca., 15 William Bt., New York, or 16 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

Do IT NOW.—Don't delay, but send 25 cents at once and receive MAPLE LEAVES for twelve months. It is the cheapest, the best, and the most popular Monthly published. Specimen copies sent on receipt of a stamp. Address
O. A. HOORBACH, No. 102 Nassan St., N. Y.

THE ESTRY COTTAGE ORGAN is the best and chespest. Contains the latest improvements—For Huesons and For Jubilants.

J. ESTRY & Co., Sole Massives, Brattlebore, Vt.

AT DR. HERO'S SCHOOL for YOUNG A LADIES are adventages to be figured in no other echool in the world. EMILY A. RIUE, Prin-cipal. Send for circular to Da. J. HERO, Westboro, Mass.

$9 A DAY POR ALL. Address N. Y.

HARPER'S PERIODICALS.

TERMS FOR 1869.

two for $7.00.

An Betra Copy of either the Manazire, Werrit, or Anna will be supplied grattle for every Club of Five Suscensions at $4.00 cash, in one resultance; or, circ Copies for $20.00, without enter copy.

The Postage within the United States is for the Manazire St cents a year, for the Werrit of Banan 50 cents a year, payable yearly, semi-perity, or quarterly, at the office where received. Subscriptions from the Dominion of Canada must be accompanied with 54 cents additional for the Manazire, or 10 cents for the Werrit or Banan, to prepay the United States postage.

postage.
The Volumes of the Managers commence with the Numbers for June and December of each year. Subscriptions may commence with any Number. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to begin with the first Number of the carrent Volume, and back Numbers will be sent the correct Volume, and back Numbers will be sent accordingly.

The Volumes of the Wazzar, commence with the year. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to commence with the Number next after the receipt of his order.

Subscribers to the Macanam, Wazzar, or Bazza will find on each wrapper the Number with which hele subscription express. Each periodical is stopped when the term of subscription closes. It is not necessary to give notice of discontinuance.

In resultding by mell, a Fost-Office Order or Draft parable to the order of Hazzar & Hoovaras is preferable to Bazz Notes, since, should the Order or Braft be lost or spolen, it can be reserved without less to the sender.

the sender. In ordering the Managura, the Werkey, or the Baza, the name and address should be clearly written. When the direction is to be changed, both the old and the new one must be given.

THEMS FOR ADVERTISING IN HARPER'S PERIODICIALS. Harper's Mesuries.—Whole Page, $550: Half Page, $151; Quarter Page, $50-sech insertion; or, for a less space, $1 50 per Line, each insertion.

Harper's Hobby.—Inside Pages, $1 50 per Line;
Cutside Page, $5 00 per Line—each insertion.

Harper's Hotel, $1 00 per Line; Cate and Display, $1 50 per Line; each insertion.

Address HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

HARPER & BROTHERS,

FRANKLIN SQUARE, NEW YORK,

Have sust Published:

PICTORIAL FIELD-BOOK OF THE WAR OF 1819, or, illustrations, by Pen and Pencil, of the History, Biography, Somery, Relice, and Traditions of the Last War for American Independence. By Bassow J. Lossawa, Anthor of "The Pictorial Field-Book of the Borechtion." With 869 Illustrations, engineed on Wood by Lossing and Barrist, chiefy from Original Sketches by the Anthor. Complete in One Volume, 1998 pages, large Svo. Price, in Class, 87 00; Sheep, 85 50; Full Rosen, 89 00; Half Calf or Half-Morocco extra, 810 00.

THE SEVEN CURSES OF LONDON. By James Genes ween, the "Ameteur Cassal," Author of "The True History of a fillde Ragmingen," "Heuben Dev-idger," "Wild Sports or the World," &c. 8 re, Pa-

PAMOUS LONDON MERCHANTS. A Book for Boys. By H. E. Fox Bornesa. With Poetralt of George Pesbody and 24 Illustrations. 18mo, Cloth, $1.00.

SIGHTS AND SENSATIONS IN FRANCE, GER-MANY, AND SWITZERLAND; or, Experiences of an American Journalist in Europe. By Enward Gould Herfull. 1880s, Cloth, $1.66.

SANDS'S PHILOSOPHY OF TEACHING. The Teacher, the Pupo, the School. By Nathaniel Sansa. Sro, Cloth, $100.

FIVE ACRES TOO MUCH. A Truthful Elucida-tion of the Attractions of the Country, and a Care-ful Consideration of the Question of Front and Loss as involved in Amateur Farming, with much Val-able Advice and Justruction to those about Purchas-ing Large or Small Places in the Bural Districts, By Hossiaw B. Roceswarz. With Characteristic El-lustrations. 15mo, Cioth, $1.56.

THREE SEASONS IN EUROPEAN VINEYARDS.
Treating of Vine-Culture: Vine Disease and its Cure; Wine-Making as and Wines, Red and White:
Wine-Drinking as affecting Health and Morals, By Winelaw J. Flacos, 18mo, Cloth, $156.

RHETORIC: a Text-Book, designed for Use in Schools and Colleges, and for Private Study. By Rev. E. O. Haves, D.D., LL.D., President of the Northwestern University. Temo, Cloth, $3 58.

A PARSER AND ANALYZER FOR BEGINNERS, with Diagrams and Suggestive Fictures. By Fran-cus A. Marcu, Professor of the English Language and Comparative Philology in Language and Author of "Method of Philological Study of the En-glish Language," "Comparative Grammar of the Anglo-Baxon Language," &c. 1800, Cloth, 48 cents.

THE MALAY ARCHIPELAGO: The Land of the Orang-Utan and the Bird of Paradise. A Narrative of Travel, with Smaller of Man and Nature. By Allians Russin. Mallice, Anthor of "Travels on the Amazon and Bio Negro," "Pain Trees of the Amazon," de. With Ten Mape and Pily-time elegant Illustrations. Crown 6vo, Cloth, $3 50.

FISHING IN AMERICAN WATERS. By GERIO C. Scorw. With 170 Huntrations. Crown Svo, Cloth, $5 80.

HARPER'S HAND - BOOK FOR TRAVELLERS IN BUROPE AND THE EAST. Being a Guide through France, Beiginm, Holland, Germany, Aze-tria, Italy, Egypt, Syrla, Turkey, Greece, Switzer-land, Tyrol, Russis, Demark, Sweden, Spain, and Grest British and Ireland. With a Railread May corrected up to 1869. By W. Passacoke Farezoue, Revised Rillion: Sighth Year. Large 19810, Lesth-er, Pocket-Book Form, $7.80.

HARPER'S PHRASE-BOOK; or, Hand-Book of Travel Talk for Travellors and Schools. Being a Guide to Conversations in Regileb, French, German, and Ralian, on a New and Improved Method. In-tended to accompany "Harper's Hand-Book for Travellors." By W. Pannaoux Fernanon. Assisted by Professors of Hallelberg University. With con-cise and explicit Rules for the Promunisation of the different Languages. Square 16mo, Flexible Cloth, $1.50.

The New Novels

POBLISHED BY

HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

HETTY. By Haway Kinosony, Author of "Stret-ton," &c. Svo, Paper, 25 cents.

MY DAUGHTER ELINOR. A Novel of American. Society. 8vo, Paper, $1 25.

CORD AND CREESE. By the Author of "The Dodge Club." Blustrated. Syo, Paper, 75 cents.

STRETTON. A Novel. By Hener Kissesler, Asthor of "Hetty," "Geoffrey Hamiys," "Eavenaboe," &c. 870, Paper, 40 cents.

THE DODGE CLUB; or, Italy in 1889. By Jacob Du Mulle, Author of "Cord and Creece," &c. With One Hundred Illustrations. Svo, Paper, IS cents; Cloth, $1.25.

THACKERAY'S NOVELS:

New Edition, beautifully printed, with the Author's own Illustrations.

VANITY FAIR, 22 Illustrations, 8vo, Paper, 50 cts. THE VIRGINIANS. 150 Illustrations. Svo, Pa-THE NEWCOMES. 102 Illustrations. 8vo, Paper,

THE ADVENTURES OF PHILIP. Portrait of Anthor and 64 linestrations. Swo, Paper, 50 cents.

EF Habren & Buoranna will tome termol/civily we Editions of Thurberay's other Novels, Hillstrated the Author, at correspondingly ins prices.

CHARLES READE'S NOVELS:

HARD CASH. Illustrated. Svo, Paper, 25 cents. GRIPPITH GAUNT; or, Jealousy. Illustrated.

IT IS NEVER TOO LATE TO MEND. Sto. Pa LOVE ME LITTLE, LOVE ME LONG. 800, Pa-

POUL PLAY, Svo, Paper, 55 cents. WHITE LIES. 8vo, Paper, 35 cents.

EW To be followed by Charles Reade's other Nevels. ANTHONY TROLLOPE'S LAST NOVELS:

PHINEAS PINN, the Irish Member. Illustrated by Millule. Sen, Paper, $1 55; Cloth, $1 75. HE KNEW HE WAS RIGHT. Complete. With 4s Illustrations by Marcus Stone. Swo. Paper, 51 60; Cloth, $1 50. Part II., separately, Paper, 50 cents.

EF HARPER & Burriers will send any of the above cole by real, postage free, to any part of the United lates, on receipt of the price.

NON-RESISTANCE.

Big Rap Baotiers. "Owgh! owgh! owgh! Scalpee-owgh!" FRIEND ORED. "Take all thee finds, friend - thee's quite welcome."

The Reason why Every One should buy a Haines Piano:

The reputation of these Planos is fully estabrished as being unsurpassed by any for a rich, full tone, clasticity of touch, long standing in tune, and elegance of style and finish.

Every article used in the construction of the Haines Piano is of the best quality and of thoroughly seasoned materials.

The prices being reasonable, they can not fail to sult any who may desire to purchase.

Circulars and information sent on application to

HAINES BROTHERS.

46 East 14th Street, New York,

Or to Shive & Rixon, Chicago, Ilia: H. N. Heme-syram, Milwankee, Wis.: Lovis Thire, Louisville, Ky.: J. A. McCauss, Nashville, Tenn.: Kuncura Bros., St. Lovis, Mo.: J. R. Jackson, Sandinsky, Ohlo: J. E. Gorde, Philadelphia, Ph.: Mrs. C. Berner, Philadelphia, Ph.: Brainard & Sons, Cleveland, Ohlo: Causey & Sons, Albeny and Troy, N. Y.: J. T. Harmick, Rhine-beck, N. Y.: J. H. Himpersonethe, Rhats, N. Y.: White, Shire, & Pressy, Boston, Mass.: Martinas Grav, San Francisco, Cal.: C. M. Muncu, Cincinnati, Ohlo: C. M. Leomis, New Haven, Conn.

A Seven per Cent. GOLD LOAN.

$6,500,000.

The Kansas Pacific Railway, now in successful op-eration from Kansas City to Sheridan, proposes to build an extension to Denver, Colorado. The Govern-ment has granted Three Millions of Acres of the finest lands in Kanses and Colorado, which are mortgaged for the security of a loan of $6,500,000.

This loan is secured in the most effectual manner. It represents a road in profitable operation, and will open the trade of the Rocky Mountain Country, and connect it with the great markets of the East. It is considered to be one of the best loans in the market, EVEN BETTER IN SOME RESPECTS THAN GOVERNMENT SECURITIES. The loan has thirty years to run, principal and in-terest payable in gold, semi-annually, seven per cent. The coupons will be payable semi-annually in either Frankfort, London, or New York, and will be free from Government taxation. The bonds for the present are sold in currency at 96, with accrued interest.

DABNEY, MORGAN, & CO., 53 Exchange Place, N. Y. M. K. JESUP & CO., 12 Pine Street, N. Y.

WE PUT GENUINE WALTHAM Watches into the hands of purchasers in any state, territory, town, village, or frontier settlement, at the lowest New York wholesale prices. The Exress Companies take them from us and deliver them mers in any part of the Union, however The package can be opened, and the watch examined, and not till then is the purchaser required to pay for it; and if on examination it is not satisfic-tory; there is no obligation to receive it. Our descriptive and illustrated Price-List gives full information in regard to the watches, and our plan of sending them by express. Every one should have a copy. We send it postpaid on application; no return stamps re-quired. When you write, please state that you saw this in Harper's Weekly.

HOWARD & CO., Jewelers and Silversmiths, No. 619 Broadway, New York.

PATENT OFFICES Of T. H. ALEXANDER, No. 456 Seventh St., Washington City, D.C. Please send for Circular on Patent Laws, &c.

NOW THEN!—"Here is an article in which we have the rulling convincer."

Henry's Issuer Powers

Is warmany to destroy Rosens and Bugs of all kinds. Sold by all Druggists. Price only 15 cts. per bottle. Ask for HENRY'S, manufactured by Jours F. Havay, at his great United States Medicine Warehouse, No. 5 College Piace, New York.

ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS.

Step by step this commodity has attained its unprecedented fame. They are universally approved. They support, strengthen, and ald the growth of mus-cles. They appear to have a peculiar effect upon the nerves, allaying irritability, while supplying warmth. They seem to accumulate electricity, and aid the cir-culation of the blood through the part where applied, by which healthy actions are induced.

Even in paralysis, where articulation was suspended, the use of the Porous Plasters to the spine restored the articulation, and materially reduced the paralysis. In fact, the patient could help herself, while before the Porous Plaster was applied she was as helplers as a baby. We refer to Mrs. Sally Elliot, Springfield, Mass. Sold by Druggists.

Agency, Brandreth House, New York

TO SPORTSMEN!!

FISHERMEN! TWINES and NETTING,

MERWIN & HULBERT, Circulars supplied.) 285 Broadway, N.Y.

MANUFACTURED BY WM. E. HOOPER & SONS, EF Send for Price-List.] Baltimore, Md.

Follas: & Sow, Manuf're of Genn-ine Mosrechaum goods. Stores: 519 Broadway, under St. Nicholas Hetel, & 21 John St., middle of block. Send for new wholesale or retail dreniar to Letter-Box 5848. Repairing and Bolling also done.

PRETTY WOMEN.-A comparatively few ladies monopolize the beauty as well as the attention of society. This ought not to be so, but it is; and will be while men are foolish, and single out pretty faces for companions.

This can all be changed by using HAGAN'S MAGNOLIA BALM, which gives the bloom of youth and a refined, sparkling beauty to the complexion, pleasing, powerful, and natural.

No lady need complain of a red, tanned, freekled, or rustic complexion who will invest 75 cents in HAGAN'S MAGNOLIA BALM. Its effects are truly wonderful.

To preserve and dress the Hair use Lyon's

GROCERS, DRUGGISTS, HARDWARE and FURNISHING STORES sell

ENOCH MORGAN'S SONS. FOR CLEANING AND POLISHING

TIN, BRASS, IRON, WINDOW GLASS, MARBLE, KNIVES, PORKS, MACHINERY, and general METALLIC WARE.

Removes all Rust or Stains. Gives a Brilliant Polish Better, cheaper, quicker than any other substance. Contains no poisonous or injurious ingredient. Is elegantly wrapped. It is to the interest of Storekeepers to sell it.

Depot, 211 Washington St., New York SOAPS OF ALL KINDS FOR PARILY USE. Established 1809.

CATALOGUES SENT FREE. THEMATICAL INSTRUMENTS, 111 pages.
TICAL INSTRUMENTS, 12 pages.
AGIC LANTERNS and STREEDITICAES, 100 pp.
IILOSOPHICAL INSTRUMENTS, 84 pages.

Musical Boxes

The largest and oldest depot in America. Fresh Novelties by nearly every Steamer. Fine Supply of Fancy Goods, Swiss Carred Goods, Fine Gold and Silver Watches. Fig. J. PALLLARD & CO., 689 BROADWAY, N.Y.

$2000 A YEAR AND EXPENSES to Agents, to introduce the Wilson Sewing Machine. Stitch alike on both sides. Samples on two weeks' trial. Extra inducements to experienced agents. For further particular, address the WILSON SEWING MACHINE CO., Cleveland, Ohlo; Boston, Mass.; or St. Louis, Mo.

$20 A DAY MADE.—Agents wanted to sell the State-Poscil Sharp-ener and Pen-Holder combined, and the Yosemite Pens. Samples sent of all, including a box of pens, for 50 cts. postage paid. Address MORSE ERASER CO., 404 Library St., Philadelphia.

GOING UP TOWN!

On the 18th of August we shall remove to 747 BROADWAY, near 8th St., and now offer our present stock of

CHINA, GLASS, AND FANCY GOODS at very low prices.

Davis Collamore & Co., 479 Broadway, near Brooms St.

IVORIDE

KNIFE-HANDLES.

EQUAL IN

BEAUTY and DURABILITY

TO THE GENUINE

IVORY,

AND AT

HALF THE PRICE.

This material is guaranteed to resist the action of heat and cold, whether of water or of the atmosphere.

FOR SALE BY ALL DEALERS.

J. Russell & Co.,

Green River Cutlery Works,

83 BREEMAN STREET, New York City.

NATURE'S GREAT RESTORER.

GREEN MOUNTAIN MINERAL SPRING WA-

This celebrated water cures Dyspesis, Rheuma-ism, Piles, Scrofnia, Urinary Discases, and Female Watknesses. "It is a toole and general builder-up-of the system." Send for Descriptive Circular. Sold by Drugyals.

McRESSON & ROBBINS, No. 91 Fulton St., N.Y., GEO. C. GOODWIN & CO., Boston, Mass., Agents. F. FENN & CO., Proprietors, Butland, Vt.

Of the Multitudes whose Avocations restrict them to a sitting posture, more than two-thirds suffer from Constitution. To they not know that an occasional resort to Targary's Buryers Appendic woold prevent all their misery? His regulating properties are ungaralicled.

FOR SALE BY ALL DEALERS IN MEDICINES.

STEVENS POCKET RIFLE.

With Detachable Shoulder-Rest. Most popular arm made for Sporting and Target-Shooting. Source & Wasson's Reveauxes, in any quantity, for cash, at hundred price. Williamson's Desarrances, and other Pistole.

J. W. STORES & CO., MTr's Agenta, 223 Broadway, New York.

BUT if you want to make money, self our New Pat-ent Fountain Pens—sample box, 12 pens, 25 cts.; Patent Penkatide and Pencil combined, 10 cts.; Patent Eraser and Pen-Holder combined, 15 cts. All postpald, Self at sight. $10 a day. 500 per cent, profit. Address Sell at sight. $10 a day. 500 per cent, profit. Address Covy Novacys Co., 404 Library St., Philadelphia, Pa

HARPER'S HAND-BOOK OF FOREIGN TRAVEL.

HARPER'S HAND-BOOK FOR TRAVELLERS IN through Prance, Belgium, Holland, Germany, Austria, Italy, Egypt, Syria, Turkey, Greece, Switzerland, Tyrol, Russis, Denmark, Sweden, Spain, and Great Britain and Ireland. With a Railroad Map corrected up to 1909. By W. PEREBOUR PRINCIPAL Revised Edition: Eighth Year, Large 12mo, Leather, Pocket-Book Form, 87 50.

HARPER'S PHRASE-BOOK.

HARPER'S PHRASE-BOOK; or, Hand-Book of Travel Talk for Travellers and Schools. Being a Guide to Conversations in English, Prench, German, and Italian, on a new and Improved Method. Intended to accompany "Harper's Hand-Book for Travellers." By W. PEREROUS PRINCIPLE. Assisted by Professors of Heidelberg University. With concise and explicit Rules for the Pronunciation of the different Languages. Square 4to, Flexible Cloth, PEULISIED DE HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK.

HARPER & BROTHERS will send the above works by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of the price.

THE REISSUE OF

Vol. XIII.—No. 661.]

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, AUGUST 28, 1869.

SINGLE COPIES, TEN CENTS. $4.00 PER TEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1869, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the United States, for the Southern District of New York.

SOLAR ECLIPSE, 1869.

TOTAL eclipses of the sun are very rare. Hat-LKY computed in 1715 that up to that date not one had occurred in London for a period of 575 years. And since that date London has not been favored with this singular phenomenon. In this country since 1834 no total eclipse of the sun, until the recent one, has occurred, and there will not be another during this century.

The total eclipse of this year was visible along a track about 140 miles wide, and more than 6600 miles long. When this track is laid down on a map, throughout its whole extent, it looks like a narrow ribbon, stretching across North America and a portion of Asia. It be-gins in Siberia, where it takes a northeasterly course, till it crosses a little south of Bering Straits, after which it turns its course southcasterly, traversing portions of the Territory of Alaska, thence into British America, and through Montana, Dakota, Nebraska, Iowa,
Missouri, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Tennessee, and North Carolina.
It ends in the Atlantic Ocean, off the coast of the last mentioned State. On the central line of this track the total obscuration of the sun lasted for a period of from two and one-half to nearly four minutes.

round of from two and one-nail to hearly four minutes.

To various points along the line of total eclipse scientific parties went to make observations—some sent by the Government, and some by private enterprises. But the principal point to which the attention of these parties was directed was the corona, observed in previous Contract --THE SOLAR ECLIPSE, AUGUST 7, 1909-HARVARD ASTRONOMICAL EXPEDITION MAKING OBSERVATIONS AT SHELBYVILLE, KENTUCKY.

[PHOTOGRAPHED BY J. A. WEIFFLE.]

eclipses, and about which there is much curi-osity among astronomers. We now know that the sun is surrounded by an atmosphere of flaming gas, which is the principal source of the light he sends us. This incandescent atmos-phere is called by astronomers the sun's photo-sphere. During a total eclipse of the sun, his whole sphere, including the photosphere, is cov-ered and hid from view by the interposed body of the moon. Nevertheless, at the very crisis of of the moon. Nevertheless, at the very crisis of the central eclipse, there is seen a brilliant white corona or halo around the moon's dark body, like that which painters place around the heads of saints. In this corona, moreover, are frequently seen red or rose-colored projections, of irregular form and position, around the disk. The explanation usually given of the white corona is, that it betokens a transparent, non-luminous atmosphere, extending beyond the photosphere or luminous atmosphere, analogous to our own atmosphere. The white light of the corona is accounted for by the reflection of that of the photosphere, very much as our own even-ing and morning twilight is produced by the re-flection of the solar rays in our atmosphere. The irregular red masses seen projected into the white corona may prove to be immense volumes of thin clondy smoke, or sol-id vaporous particles precipitated from the hot gaseous atmosphere which forms the corona.

Another question to be settled, if possible, was whether there is a planet between Mercury and the sun, as La Ven-nun supposed there was, on account of extraor-dinary perturbations of Mercury not otherwise explained.

The corona, or luminous ring around the moon in a total celipse, was observed at Montpellier, in France, 1706, and at London, by HALLEY, in 1715. In the latter case the red protuberances were also observed. In 1724, MARALDI ob-served, for the first time, that the luminous corona was not concentric with the moon. At the beginning of the eclipse it appeared larger on the eastern than on the western side ; at the end, on the contrary, it was lar-ger on the west than on the east. The northern border was also somewhat larger than the opposite. The importance of these observations was that they proved the corona to be concentric with the sun instead of with the moon; that it is a phenominstead of with the moon; that it is a paenom-enon closely connected with the sun's physical constitution. Important additions were made to these observations during the total eclipses of 1778, 1806, and particularly in 1842. On the 8th of July in the latter year, Anago and other astronomers observed the luminous corona in all its splendor. The distinguished French astrono-

Fracus 4.

SOLAR ECLIPSE, AUGUST 7, 1869-PHASES OF THE ECLIPSE, AS SEEN AT SHELBYVILLE, KENTUCKY, FROM THE BEGINNING TO THE POINT OF TOTALITY. [PROTOGRAPHED BY J. A. WHIPPLE.] Digitized by Goo mer describes it as composed first of a circular zone contiguous to the dark border of the moon, and of a second fainter zone contiguous to the first. The light of the second zone continually diminished from its interior to its exterior limit. That of the first was nearly uniform throughout. In the direction of the line which joined the points of the solar disk where the eclipse would begin and end, there were two large wings, which might be considered as expansions of the second luminous corons. The sides of these wings were terminated by curves that were concare outward, and which seemed to be parabolas, whose vertices would be tangent to the moon's disk. Anago saw this correst had been seen as disk. Anago saw this corons both with his telescope and with his naked eye.

Next to the corons, the phenomena demanding particular attention are the prominences, protuberances, flames, or red projections, which are usually seen in the lower portion of the white ring, near the edge of the moon. These curious appearances were particularly studied by the Engish and other astronomers who went to the coasts of Sweden and Norway to observe them in 1851. Mr. Atter, the Astronomer Royal of England, observed the protuberances on the western side of the sun to increase, while those on the eastern side diminished in extent and disappeared before the end of the total phase. Just before the western limb of the sun reappeared he saw a long series of small protuberances of a very red color, touching the edge of the moon, and embracing an arc of its circumference thirty degrees in extent. They are generally of a red or rose tint, and are sometimes large enough to be e by the naked eye.

The eminent English astronomers who so carefully observed in Sweden the great eclipse of July 28, 1851, and Professor BOND, of Harvard Uni-28, 1851, and Protessor Bosh, of Harris Chi-versity, saw the wonderful corons, and also the red prominences or flames upon different points of the moon's disk. During the memorable eclipse in India last August, which was total for nearly seven minutes, the numerous French, German, and English astronomical observers attracted thither observed these promineness with great care, by the aid of the spectroscope, and came the conclusion that these phenomena were due to the presence of an incandescent or highly heat-ed hydrogen gas surrounding the sun's disk, and extending outs and apparently a distance of 50,000 or 60,000 miles.

An article in the Angust Number of Macmil-lan's Magazine, written by J. Norman Lookynn, F.R.S., contains some important results hither-to reached as regards the physical constitution of the sun. The spectroscope has thrown light upon the spects of the sun. This is an instrument whose special function it is to deal with radiation and absorption. It tells us that the light radiated from different hodies gives us spectra of different kinds, according to the nature of the radiation. ating body—continuous spectra, such as we see in a rainbow, without bright lines, in the case of solids and liquids; and bright lines with or without continuous spectra in the case of gases and suppore. It tells us also that absorption dims the spectrum throughout its length when the absorption is general, and dims it here and there only when the absorption is selective. The Fraunhofer lines in the sun's spectrum furnish an instance of the latter kind. So that we have general and selective radiation, and general and selective absorption.

The observations made in 1866 showed that there was abundant evidence of absorption in the sun's spots, and no indication of gaseous radiation. The light which came from the spots was like all the rest, but it was dimmed, as the sun's light is dimmed in a fog. This seems to prove that the solar spots are dark because the solar light is absorbed—stopped—by a cool, non-luminous, absorbing atmosphere pouring down on the sun's photosphere.

The spectroscope has also in some measure determined the nature of the rose-colored protherances. These are not observed every day by means of the telescope, because they are put out by the tremendous brightness of our atmos-phere near the sun. There is, as it were, a bat-tle between the light proceeding from the prominences and the light reflected by this atmosphere, and, except in orlipses, the victory always remains with the atmosuhere.

The lines as seen in the spectroscope vary in height but never disappear, showing that for some 5000 miles in height all round the sun there is an envelope of which the prominences are but the waves. This envelope Mr. LOCKYER calls osphere, which all the variously-rolored effects are seen in total eclipses. The decision from the spectro-scope in regard to the proteberances seems to be that they are due to hydrogen.

It is hoped, and not without reason, that the observations made by our most prominent scien-tific men during the late eclipse will prove of great value in perfecting the knowledge already gained concerning the physical constitution of

Our illustrations are from observations made at Shelbyville, Kentucky. The photographs were taken by J. A. Whipplu, of Hoston.

The Courier Journal of Louisville contains the following account of the observations at Shelby-

The observations here to day were very satisfactory, and as many respects gratifying. The following persons comprised the Joint Board of Observation for Shelbyville: Professor Joann Wintons, of Harvard Calverdity, in charge of observations of phenomena, assisted by Anvar G. Calax, Professor of Cambridge; Assisted Gross W. Drax, of the Coast Survey, in charge of observations of precision, assisted by T. Balax, Jun., of the Coast Survey, in Charge of observations of precision, assisted by T. Balax, Jun., of the Coast Survey; J. A. Wurrun, of Section, assisted by George Clark and J. Preparament, had charge of the photographs: Professor G. M. Stanz, of New York, devoted himself to observations of general phenomena, and during the total phase was to search for inter-mercural phases. Sub-Assistant T. H. Assaw also devoted himself to observations of general phenomena, and had charge of the Observatory arrangements, being assisted by R. E. Saaranon, of Louisville. The meteorological observations were made by Professor Burnova, of Louisville, and Romart Lawa, of Sheibyville. Among the amateurs present was Mr. Bowneren, of Boston, son of the celebrated astronomer.

One of the most important discoveries made by Professor Wintows, at the spectroscope, was eleven bright lines in the spectrum of the peculierance of the sun, only five having heretofore been determined. The Professor also observed a shower of meteors between the earth and moon. The party are jubiliant over the success. Photographs of the sun were taken at different times during the partial obscuration. The beautiful red finnes, or solar protuberances, were visible to the naked eye. "Bally's Beads," as well as the dark and dismai shadows of the moon, salling away through the alt, were noted by a party of amateurs stationed on the top of Shelby College. The sky was perfectly clear, and every thing seemed to propiliate the success of the observations. There were ten or twelve mounted instruments in use on the occasion, the principal one of which was the Shelbyville College telescope, which was handled by Professor Wintows, sastiated by Axwa G. Chang, of Cembridge, Massachusetts. This is a fine instrument, costing $4000. It once ranked taked in the United States. Arcturus, Vega, Yeuns, and Mercury were visible to the naked eye during the total phase. Mr. Nanza, whose duty it was to search for inter-mercarial planets, did not succeed its floding any, reporting nothing failater than Hegulian near the sun. When the smilight commenced to become dim a large number of citizens readed to the College grounds, the head-quarters of the observers. Some minutes before the total phase the own phase near the sun. When the smilight appeared again a shoot of emitation went up from the great crowd in the College grounds, and when the smilight appeared again a shoot of emitation went up from the great crowd in the College grounds.

The telescope used for photographing was one from Cambridge. The glass was 6 inches diameter with 7½ feet focal length. It was ar-ranged for photography, giving an image of the sun about three-quarters of an inch in diameter. The exposure during totality was for 40 seconds. Professor Wixlock devised a plan by which the same motion that exposed the plate to the sun's rays made an electrical connection with a chronograph; and thus the exact instant was recorded.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 28, 1869.

THE SOUTHERN POLITICAL SITUATION.

T is very important to estimate correctly the political condition of the Southern States and the late elections in Virginia and Tennes see show at least one fact upon which all will agree. It is that those who are not Republicans control the balance of power. Upon all other points there is no agreement of opinion whatever. The New York Tribuse says that the lesson in Tennessee is that universal amnesty must be conceded. But it does not deny that the election was carried in that State by those who have been always hostile to the Republican party, and who are not friendly to the Administration. An election which apparently returns ANDREW JOHNSON to the Senate, whether it secure amnesty or not, is as decisive a defeat of Republicanism as the election of Mr. PACKER would be in Pennsylvania. The talk about "old Whige" is meaningless. hopeless "hunkers" are old Whigs. Meanwhile the World says that, although WALKER and SENTER were elected as "Conservative Republicans," yet that "Democrats supported, elected, and will advise them;" and, in fact, the World halls the result as an old-fashioned Democratic victory, such as the election of VALLAN-DIGHAM AS Governor of Ohio would be, or of WADE HAMPTON OF JAMES M. MASON OF JEFpurson Davis as United States Senators.

But the Richmond Whip retorts that "it is nonsense to suppose that the election in Tennessee was a Democratic victory. The ticket was not Democratic, and the policy which it repre-sented was liberal Republicanism." This as-This assection is certainly favored by the address of Mr. SENTER, issued just before the election, in which he said that he wished to see the political equality and rights of the colored population as American citizens recognized by the organic law of the land, and that he stood "fully and frankly" upon the Chicago Republican platform of May, 1868. But that his election can not be regarded as an adoption and approval of these opinions is evident from the fact that he was warmly supported by Ax-DERW JOHNSON, and by every enemy of the Fifteenth Amendment and of the Republican platform. As in Virginia, where those who despise and hate the negro voted for Mr. WALKER, who favors their political equality, so in Tennessee they voted for Mr. SENTER, who declares himself their friend. In the general uncertainty the Savannah Republican advises the Southern States to avoid the Bourbon stupidity of the Northern Democrats, while a Virginia Repub-lican writes to the Tribune that the result of the election foreshows the extinction of Republicanism in that State.

It is plain, therefore, that the situation is emplicated. Republican Governors have been elected, and Republican principles have been apparently sustained by the bitter opponents of the Republican party, allied with some un-doubted Republicans. The explanation offered doubted Republicans. by the New York Times is, that the majority of the Democratic voters in the Southern States have renounced the old Democratic party without entering the Republican lines, and are seeking "new non-partisan" alliances in the hope of forming a new political organization. It is a combination, the Times thinks, which "stands squarely upon a Republican foundation," and which should be kindly regarded by Northern Republicans. But however desirable and promising such a situation might be, the Times fails to produce the least proof of its existence. Democrats did undoubtedly vote for Mr. WALK-ER and Mr. SERTER; but in so doing they voted for their own enfranchisement, with a tolerable certainty of obtaining at the same time the political control of their States. Such a vote was merely the blustest horn of the dilemma. A majority of such Democrats, neither in Virginia nor in Tennessee, advocated the Republican doctrines of the candidates for whom they voted. They merely denounced tyranny and domanded enfranchisement. As one of them wrote to the World, they were compelled "to swallow the black dose of negro suffrage" as the condition of obtaining their own. When the Times asserts that "in respect of principle this new born alliance is identical with the out and out Republican party," it is certainly looking at events through its rosy hopes. If what it says be true, the new Virginia and Tennessee Legislatures will send out and out Republican Sens. tors to Congress.

The more probable explanation of the Southern elections is, that the late rebels and Democrats, persuaded that they could do nothing whatever until they were restored to political rights, decided to accept the situation so far as to do what was necessary to obtain that resto-ration. But that the majority of them, or any very large number, have relinquished their old convictions and animosities, or would refuse to combine again with their old allies in the Northern States, upon a fair prospect of success, we do not believe. As we remarked two or three weeks since, the great Democratic dogma of a white man's government can in-deed no longer be maintained; for the condition of the vote of the restored States is a renunciation of that folly. In this respect the Democratic party has been necessarily demoralized by the success of reconstruction. But that the equal rights of the citizens of Virginia or of Tennessee will be practically respected, or the administration cordially sustained, by such an alliance as that which has succeeded in the Southern States, is painfully problematical. We should be very sorry if all the friends of Republican principles and of General GRANT's administration were of the same kind.

We have no wish, however, to repel truly friendly advances; and we are very far from undervaluing what has been gained. The suffrage is legally equalized; colored citizens are declared eligible to office; and colored children are entitled to education. These concessions are great; but they have been wrung from those chiefly who are sollenly opposed to them. This could not be truly said if the new alliance were so wholly Republican as the Times believes If its assumption were correct, this equality would be as sure in Tennessee as it is in Massachusetts. But political and humane regeneration is not so rapid. The gains are indeed nominally great, but their reality depends upon a change in sentiment which must be very slow. If the alliance be really as the Times supposes, "on a Republican platform," we shall rejoice. But this is altogether too much to assume, and can be proved only by developments which it is certainly the duty of Republicans to await in no hostile, if also in no sanguine, spirit.

THE ADMINISTRATION.

Is the most forcible objection that could be made to the administration of Governor Horr-MAN were, that he goes to Saratoga and dances quadrilles, and if this appalling fact were reeated day after day in every form, is would be tolerably clear that nothing serious could be urged against his conduct of affairs. The incessant twaddle in the Democratic journals about the President's summer excursions shows in the same way the absence of any serious complaint. If one such significant and fatal act could be truly alleged of the President as the signing of the Erie bill by Governor Horr-MAN, he would be allowed, as the Governor is, to dance, if he were so inclined, in peace. By the veto power, says Mr. C. F. Adams, Jun., in the last North American Resiew, Governor Horr-MAN won and lost his reputation. It is well said, and the fact will not be forgotten. He used it to stop a drop, and he refused to use it against a torrent. But of the administration of General GRANT no grave accusation has yet been made by the Opposition. The key-hole gossip of the papers that record the hour when the President rises and the number of cigars he smokes, is the characteristic effort of Jankins in polities. He should confine himself to describing Miss A's ribbons and Mrs. B's slip-

Mr. WENDELL PRILLIPS, indeed, holds the President responsible for the result of the Southern elections, and for the injustice which is still shown to the colored population; and Mr. PHILLIPS so early and so clearly foresaw the dereliction of ANDREW JOHNSON that be has carned a peculiar right of speaking upon the subject. The men whose example he quotes would unquestionably have carried the elections; but they would have carried them by the sword—and GRANT is a constitutional President. If he had given every office in those States, as Mr. PHILLIPS had advised, if he had written the strongest letters, could he have cajoled the votes of those who hate the negro? Could he give or withhold the suffrage? If Mr. BOUTWELL had been President does Mr. PHILLIPS think that Mr. STOKES would have been elected in Tennessee? system of government upon which Mr. PHIL-LIVE latterly insists is the absencest Casarism. He is impatient of the necessary frictions and delays of a free, popular government. He names RICHELIEU, BONAPARTE, WALPOLS. He might as wisely name GHENGIS KHAN and TIMOUR THE TARTAR. If, as Mr. PHILLIPS says, Northern property is nowhere safe at the South, if Texas reeks with outrages, if Southern loyalis's declare that there must be a change at Washington or they must fly, is it his duty to tell us what RICHELLER would have done or what President GRANT can do? Mr. PHILLIPS seems to us to overestimate the Executive power in this country, and to underestimate the element of time in producing changes of public opinion.

Those who supposed, as certainly Mr. PHIL-LIPS took care to tell us in advance that he did not suppose, that fraternity and good-will were instantly to prevail in the South, the public debt to be paid, the West Indies to be annexed, and taxation to be abolished by General GRANT'S election, have been naturally disappointed. He became President when there was a deplorable social condition in the Southern States, a heavy debt and taxasion, and perplexing foreign ques-tions. Toward the end of the first half year of his administration the debt is materially reduced, and the national credit improved; the principles of radical Republican Reconstruction and the Fifteenth Amendment have been formally, if not from conviction, approved in the Southern States that have voted; the English question, if not settled, is not embittered; the neutrality laws of the United States have been most firmly and successfully enforced; and the efficiency and honesty of the public service have been promoted. On the other hand, there are some mistakes to record. General SICKLES should not have been appointed Minister to Spain, and a proclamation reminding the country of its neutrality in the Cuben revolution should have been issued. As we write, nothing is certainly known of any negotiation with Spain in regard to Cuba. If the Administration made an offer with a menace, it has done what the character of the President and of the Sec-retary of State forbid us to believe to be pos-

The American people see in the conduct of the Administration thus far a steady regard to honesty and economy, a firm maintenance of the honor and best traditions of the country in its foreign relations, and strict fidelity to the principles which elected the President, Comtrasted with all the later Democratic administrations, it is free both from crime and from "Buncombe;" while in what condition at home and abroad the country would now have been if Honatio SEYMOUR and FRANCIS P. BLAIR had been elected, with WADE HAMPTON and his allies controlling affairs in the Southern States, is plain enough to every thinking man. The foolish abuse of the President by those who could not find words contemptuous enough for him when he was a candidate, is appropriately expressed by the pen of JENEINS and the tongue of Mr. A. OAKET HALL. But when Mr. PHIL-LIPS accuses the Administration of "disloyal spathy or honest incapacity" he ought certainly to give some proof of his charges.

EUROPE IN AMERICA.

THE Spanish Cortes will reassemble in October and elect a king. Meanwhile the Carlist demonstrations continue, and the Government has summoned the priests to explain their connection with the disorders. The situ the country naturally excites great attention in Europe, and it is undoubtedly felt that the Spanish hold upon her American colonies must soon be relaxed. Indeed, after a contest like that in Cuba, the most sagacious Spaniards most anticipate no other result. If Great Britain had repressed the revolution in this country in 1776 the independence of the colonies would have been only delayed; and if Spain should resume an apparent ascendency in Cuba it could only be for a brief time, and the next movement upon the island would angrily shake off her hand. England is evidently learning the lesson which the wiscet of Englishmen have been long urging. In his introductory lecture upon History at Oxford a dozen years ago, Professor GOLDWIN SEITH most truly said that nothing could ever atone to England for having lost the opportunity of parting friends with her American colonies. The late speech of Sir Joun Young in Canada shows that the mother country does not intend to alienate another colony by struggling to retain it against its will,

It is harder for Spain to learn the lesson; harder both because of her political backwardness and because of the greater profit of her colonies. Indeed, it seems almost hopeless to expect in the policy of the most advanced nations the simple good sense that marks private affairs; and, since it is hardly to be expected that England and the United States will treat the Alobama question as such a difference would be treated by two honorable men, it is useless to wish that Spain might have submitted the question of separation to the Cubans when the revolution began. If it be impossible for a European state to hold its American possessions forever, it might certainly provide for the parting without such anarchy as now prevails in Cuba. Points of pride and supposed honor are always in the way. Louis Naroleon, for instance, finds an insurrection in the streets. He declares that he will not treat with insurgents in arms. The reply is right if they demand in-justice, but foolish if their claims are fair. He suppresses the insurrection, restores what be calls his authority, and then yields what was demanded. Does he suppose that it has not been gained by the baffled insurrection, and that every insurgent does not know it? Spain is traditionally haughty, and will of course not treat with rebels. But is there no Spanish statesman shrewd enough to see that Spain must soon yield what her rebels demand?

Undoubtedly some kind of proposition has been made to the Spanish Government by the United States, and made unsuccessfully. That it was a wholly honorable proposition there can be no doubt. If, as is reported, the proposition has failed, the United States reserve every right, and it will be for them to decide when circumstances and the general welfare require positive action. Spain will not doubt, as she certainly has had no reason to question, that whatever may be done will be done in no spirit of hostility to a country which is bravely attempting to pass peacefully from the most degraded monarchical system to the most enlightened and liberal popular government.

THE PRESIDENT AND MISSISSIPPL

Tun President has declared himself very emhatically in favor of the Republican party in Mississippi. This, we hope, will satisfy those who have imagined that he was neutral, or who suppose that in a system like ours the President will cease to sympathize with his party until, like Trues and Jourson, he has decided to was the Opposition. But as we have never suspected any such intention upon the part of General GRANT, we did not expect nor desire that he should expressly declare himself. Will our friends insist, also, that it is necessary for him to proclaim his sentiments in regard to the election of Mr. PACKER in Pennsylvania, and of Mr. PENDLETON in Ohio? May it not be presumed that he sympathizes with the principles that brought him into his present position? But there is no more doubt who represents those principles in Mississippi than there is in Ohio. The term "Conservative Republican" is merely a new Southern phrase for Democrat, as we have elsewhere suggested. If there is a new party proposed, what are its principles?

In his interview with Mr. TARRELL, the Republican representative from Mississippi, the President very properly said that he preferred his administration should speak by acts rather than by words. But it was perhaps natural that, under all the circumstances, he should be willing, in this instance, to state verbally what no Mississippi Republican ought ever to have doubted. General GRANT, indeed, has not been the kind of partisan that General Jackson was, who would certainly never have been asked to declare in what direction his sympathies in any election lay. But he has never swerved from his fidelity to the principles and policy of the party that gladly and proudly elected him, and the immensurable abuse of the Opposition should alone be sufficient to show how faithful to those principles he appears. If his political focs had suspected him of party infidelity their tone would have modulated as it has with ANDREW JOHNSON. Five years ago that gentleman was, in the opinion of the World, for instance, more bestial than the Roman Consul's horse. He was then a Republican by profession. From that time, in the degree that his real political sympathics reappeared, the tone of that discriminating and independent journal softened, until, having betrayed the party that elected him and justly become upon the whole the least respectable of American politicians, the same anthority declares him to be "a true man."

Our friends in the Southern States ought to see that if there is any doubt whatever of the President's position and sympathics there is If it is really necessary that he should state his preference for the success of his friends, the statement would be suspicious, But no man believes now, more than a year ago, that General GRANT could possibly imitate Ax-DRIW JOHNSON. He is necessarily more a Republican to-day than ever; and it is as superfluous to ask him to say so as to ask Mr. Courax to say it. With all other Republicans in the country he understands that the "Con-servative" party in the South is the party which hopes to hear that Mr. PENDLETON and Mr. PACKER are elected, and whose success at home will be heartily hailed by Mr. VALLAN-DIGHAM and by Tammany Hall. To satisfy overanxious friends the President has consented to speak. But we protest against an importunity which necessarily throws a doubt upon his position.

REMEDIES FOR DISABLED HONOR.

A raw weeks ago in Paris a gentlemen, conceiving himself insulted by another, challenged him to a duel, and one of them was wounded, but will recover. At about the same time, in Boston, a gentleman under a similar impression seized the nose of another and "turned it moderately and quietly," for which he was sentenced to two months in the common jail, but has appealed. Now if there were really an offense of honor in both cases the remedy was obviously unfair, and therefore dishonorable. It is very true that there is a class of serious offenses-those that are described as mortal insults-for which the law furnishes no redress. When Dr. JOHNSON told the Billingsgate dame that she was an interjection and a vulgar fraction, her sense of outrage might have been a thousandfold more intolerable than if he had stolen a sole from before her, but no action for libel or slander was possible. She had but two practicable remedies: one was to strike him; the other to "sarce" back; unless indeed she were of the true Christian temper, and could offer the other check.

It is for the satisfaction of these suits which no court will entertain that the duello has been maintained. But its extreme absurdity is gradually abolishing it. In really civilized places like Boston it is already ridiculous, and it will be so in Paris as the French city advances in civilization. Yet where the formal duello has disappeared a substitute is still retained in the system of corporal correction upon the supposed offender, of which the moderate and quiet turning of the culprit's nose is the latest and certainly the most pleasing illustration, as conveying the impression of a higher civilization than is afforded by the hot and furious wrenching of that feature. But the duello in every form, even in this, is essentially unfair, as we have remarked, and therefore dishonorable,

The combatants in Paris were Guerave FLOWRENS and PAUL CASSAGNAC. Let us suppose that M. FLOWKERS is an accomplished swordsman or shot, and that he knows M. Cassagnac to be neither. Thereupon, in the most public place, in the opera, in the bois, M. Prownens turns the nose of M. Cassagnac in the most immederate and boisterous manner. In the civilization of Paris the duello, under such circumstances, is imperative. The challenged must choose swords or pistols. But obviously he has no remedy for an insult. He has only the choice of methods for his own murder. The consequence of such a system is, that every body's honor or life is at the mercy of a bully. Nor is it essentially different in the other case, except that hot blood may be an excuse; although whether hot blood can excuse a moderate and quiet turning of the nose is questionable. But here again a stalwart fellow, in the cars or elsewhere, may put as many imaginary chips upon his shoulder as he pleases, and when he fancies any of them gone, may quietly turn his small neighbor's nose ad libitum. What is a small neighbor to do? If he tries the counterturn he is soundly thrushed. Clearly he, also, has no remedy, and is equally at a bully's mercy. So that really if there are no better remedies for insulted honor than small swords and moderate and other turnings of the nose, isn't it perhaps better not to suffer your

A PUBLIC DISGRACE AND DANGER.

Is the late proceedings at Albany and along the line of the Susquehanna Railroad the people of this State and of the country have he ortunity of seeing the conseque growing power of enormous corporations. The courts of law, which are theoretically the last and passionless resort, and whose rigid impartiality is the sole hope of peaceful solutions of ng questions, are already subordinated to these bodies. They retain judges, and the gravest functions of law are as much merchandise as fruit in the market. There are judges in this State in whose probity there is no more confidence than in that of Reddy the Blacksmith; who belong to certain corporations and interests as the rolling stock of a railroad belongs to the Company. Of course, under such circumstances, private rights and public convenience are totally disregarded. And now it is not enough that there should be the most shameless prostitution of the forms of law, but the corporations proceed to open war upon the soil of the State, and the Governor issues a proclamation threatening to call out the entire military force at his disposal to restore order.

It is not the least suggestive fact that one of the belligerents in these hostilities represents the enormous power to whose dictation the same Governor yielded under the universal suspicion in the public mind that the political Ring with which he is connected needed money that the corporation could furnish. In the present case, however, of the most flagrant and inexcusable breach of the peace, it was impossible that the Governor should so far outrage public sentiment as not to assume the attitude of a rigorous enforcer of the law. He has done what he ought to have done; but the of-ficial action of Governor HOFFMAN since his proclamation as Mayor, virtually favoring fraud at the polls, and his signing the Erie bill, inspires no confidence either in his principle or

The State of New York will soon fall, if it has not already fallen, under the absolute control of these great moneyed powers. One rail-road has for years paralyzed New Jersey, and there are at least two vast and unscrupulous corporations in New York. Whether they fight or whether they combine, the people suffer. Their purposes are their own aggrandizement and advantage. They rule by an iron will, and they are masters who can inspire fear only. The noblest incentive of action which a despot can offer, personal faith and loyalty, are un-known to them. Their sway is a gross, sordid, material influence. But, however this may be, every reflecting man sees the signs of the swift advance to political supremacy of great corporations in this country. They threaten Con-gress; they would bribe the press. How many hundreds of thousands of dollars has the Pacific Railroad spent for advertising? and how much does the country really know of the inner history of the Pacific Railroad? A newspaper naturally no more wishes to alienate immense and liberal advertisers than a clergyman wisher to send a wealthy parishioner out of church.

Mr. Panton informs us that corruption in Congress is an illusion. We hope it is so. May we believe the same of the New York Legislature and of New York Judges? And yet the same system that elects the indges elects the representatives to Albany and Washington. Is there no Indian Ring? and is every member of Congress selected for his power of resisting "infinence?" The member is virtually elected by the cancus. Does corruption never attend primary meetings? What explanation can possibly be made of a letter like that of Mr. ASHLEY to Mr. CASE? Mr. ASHLEY'S letter to the Times certainly did not account for it satisfactorily; and are we to suppose that Mr. Assess was the only member who sophisticated himself?

The power of these vast moneyed organizations can not be overestimated, nor can that of the evil of that power. Their conduct is the business of every citizen, and he has by no means done his part when be has read with incredulity and wonder the reports in the papers of their pocketing judges and marshaling their retainers for battle. It is not an amusing spectacle; it is a menacing demonstration. It should warn us to do what we can to correct public opinion, and to promote honesty in legislation by selecting honorable men for legislators. For many a year we shall pay the penalty of having so long forgotten that our government begins in the primary meeting, and that the condition of its purity and permanence is care and conscience upon the part of every citizen.

NOTES.

Ir was to be expected that the eclipse would produce fine writing, but we hardly expected any thing so good as that of a correspondent from a certain Western city. "The city re-joiced," says this admirable chronicier, "for al-most every man, woman, and child was provided during the day with smoked and colored glass-". But it was not the outward ever only that But it was not the outward eye only that was to be gratified.

"Business was deferred for this day, and every uind's eye became entirely fixed on the anticipated wonderful celestial phenomenon. If all along the cen-tral line of totality were pitts fortunate with as in parity of atmosphere, science will to-day have made much advancement in shiftly to convey to the human mind a more satisfactory idea of the physical consti-tution of the orb of day.

The course of events is faithfully followed in the description until

"At 8.16 o'glock there came a sudden flash, as from a star, far more brighter than one of the first magnitude, and vastly more instrum, and the luminary disappeared. At the same instant there spraing into vision the corona, encircling the opaque moon, and Venus and Mercury came sweetly into view, when an erclamation of joyfu admiration benst involuntarily from the lips of a group of by standers—ladice, gentlemen, and children.

"At eighteen minutes and sixteen seconds past five o'clock, with the same splendid star-like flash that it had shown at the commencement, the totality dissp-

The climax of this glowing author is incom-

"Cows continued to grave in the fields, and horses tood unmoved during the eclipse; but chickens crow-d, fluttered, and went to roost. Mrs. Loress Dav, & Philadelphia, on a visit to her son Gasess Dav, log, has winessed three total eclipses, and thinks his the finest of them all."

THE new Republican City Committee, of which we spoke last week, opens its campaign by a most vigorous exposure of what must be called the rescality of other similar organizations in the city. It will undoubtedly claim recognition at the State Convention; and whether successful or not, it should be regarded as a protest too powerful to be disregarded, against the present bodies that assume to represent the party in this city, and to dictate to the responsible officers of the United States Government whom they shall select as assistants. Every such officer, under our present system, will naturally listen with respect to the respectful suggestions of his party associates, as he will instantly repel any as-sumption of such dictation as was attempted with Marshal Barnow. The Republican ma-jority out of the city is tired of the endless city rangles which are transferred to every State Convention, and will now undoubtedly insist the wishes of all honorable and candid members of the party in this neighborhood shall be sustained and a new organization effected. If the formation of the new Committee does not attain that result, we trust that others and still others will be formed until the present organiza-tion is wholly destroyed. The Tribuse suggests that the Committee appointed by the last State Convention to arrange the troubles in the city should arrange them. It is a very good sugges-tion; and we beg to add to it that the root of the difficulty is, that the city Committees have become mere office brokerages, and the business of a Republican Committee is not to procure offices for its members.

"Tun Seven Curses of London," lished by HARPER & BROTHERS, is by JAMES GREENWOOD, so well known as the "amateur castal." It is a thorough exposure, by a master hand, of the evils of great cities like London and New York. It treats of neglected children, professional thieves, professional beggars, fallen wo-men, drunkenness, gambling, and indiscriminate alms-giving. While it investigates these evils, it also suggests methods of reform. The Messrs. Harren have issued this book at the low price of twenty-five cents.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

Tux Ohlo Democratic State Convention, on August 11, nominated the Blon. George H. Pendleton for Gov-ernor of that State, General Rosecrats having declined the nomination. Pendleton has accepted. Governor Senter's majority in Tennessee was over

Governor Senter's anajority in Tennessee was over 60,000.

On his return to San Francisco-from Alaska Ex-Secretary Seward is to be presented with a case valued at $1000 by the Society of California Pionees. The head of the case is composed of forty-are triangular pieces of gold-bearing quarts from the leading mines of California, set in gold.

There is no end of railway accidents. On the Pennsylvania Northern Central Road a passenger train was threat the miles west of Harrishung, and the engineer killed and several presengers wounded. On the Milwarker and St. Paul Bailroad wounded. On the Milwarker and St. Paul Bailroad a train ran off the track on the evening of the lith, near St. Paul; the from a was killed, and the engineer and baggage-master were injured.

killed, and the engineer and baggage-master were injured.

The famous Artesian well at the St. Louis Insane Asylem has at length been abundaned as a failure. It has reached a dopth of St45 fact, and was costing the city $18 30 per day, with a progress of only four and a half inches daily. The water found is bitter and brackish, though cold and sparkling, and rises to within 120 feet of the mouth of the well. At the depth of 1200 feet of the mouth of the well. At the depth of 1200 feet pere wence water was found, and measures will be taken to "ping off" the well at that point, by which means the brackish water will be excluded and the fresh water secared for the use of the asylum. The work has been in progress for a number of years, and has cost the city heavily.

The boilers of the packet Camberland, for Evanstille to Cairo, exploided near a piace called Shawnestown, in Illinois, on August 14, and eighteen or twenty lives were lost.

FOREIGN NEWS.

FOREIGN NEWS,

The British Parliament was prorogued August 11. The Queen, in her closing message, announced that she continued to receive from foreign Powers the strungest assurances of their friendly disposition. In regard to the suspension of the seguintions with this country on the Aisberss claims, she said she hoped this delay would tend to maintain relations between the two countries on a durable basis of friendship. She noticed the several important acts of the session; trasted the disestablishment of the Irish Church would promote the work of peace in Irish of the greaton; trasted the disestablishment of the Irish Church would promote the work of peace in Irish of the removal of the duty on corn as a step in the right direction; and beport the measure for the purchase and management of the telegraph by the government night facilitate the great commercial and social object of rapid, easy, and certain communication, and prove no unworthy sequel to the excellent system of cheap postage.

We have a report from Spain that a reinforcement of 20,000 men is to be sent to Cuba in September. The Spanish Cortes will assemble in October.

The international boat-race between the Orderd and Harrard crows has been fixed for August 27.

The international boat-race between the Orderd and Harrard crows has been fixed for August 28.

Manhal Nell, of France, died on the 14th of August. The one-hundredth smulversary of the birth of Napoleon I. was celebrated in France August 15; and coulse day a general anneaty was graved to press and political offenders, and to army and navy deserters.

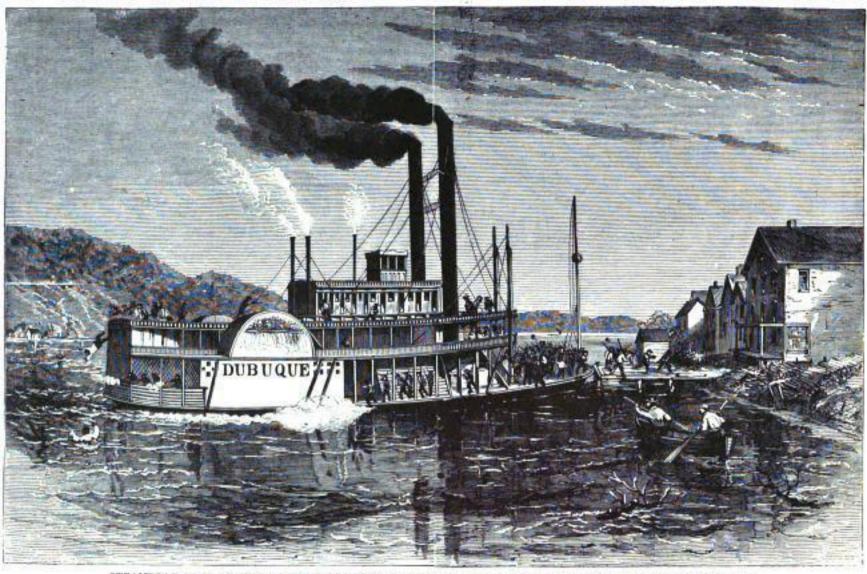

The news from Cuba is conflicting. Spanish reports indicate that General Jordan has been driven to the monntains, while the Cuban advices are to the effect that that General has given the Spanishra a severe transbing.

The hordible cruelies practiced upon the unfertures Carrestinanum at Crascow, with the stear of which ports indicate that General Jordan has been driven to the mountains, while the Cohan advices are to the effect that that General has given the Spaniards a severe threshing.

The horrible cruckies practiced upon the unfortunate Carnellies and at Cracow, with the story of which Europe has been singing ever store their disclosure, have specifily produced their natural result. A Commission has already been appointed by the Austrian Government to prepare a bill for placing monastic institutions, like all other coporate associations, under strict Government supervision and control.

M. Ferdinand de Lesseps, after having connected two seas, is now proposing to create a new one. It appears that some enterprising explorers of Cautral Africa have put forward the opinion that the Schara is the bed of an old sea displaced by a convalion of nature. On the faith of that assertion M. de Lesseps allitte time ago sent some engineers to examine the configuration of the soit, and from the result of their above has become convinced that the desert in question was at its nearest limit eighty-right feet below the level of the Ried Bea, and that the despression went on increasing toward the interior. He is, therefore, of opinion that a canal seventy-dive miles the night would enfine to put the Ried Bea and the Schara is communication, seager to the latter its original destination and create an every method of intercourse with Cautral America by means of these artificial oceans. Should such an operation be scriously taken in band it is to be beped that due notice will be given to all points from which the various crawmas taxt, or the consequences to the traveling public in Africa might prove highly disastrons.

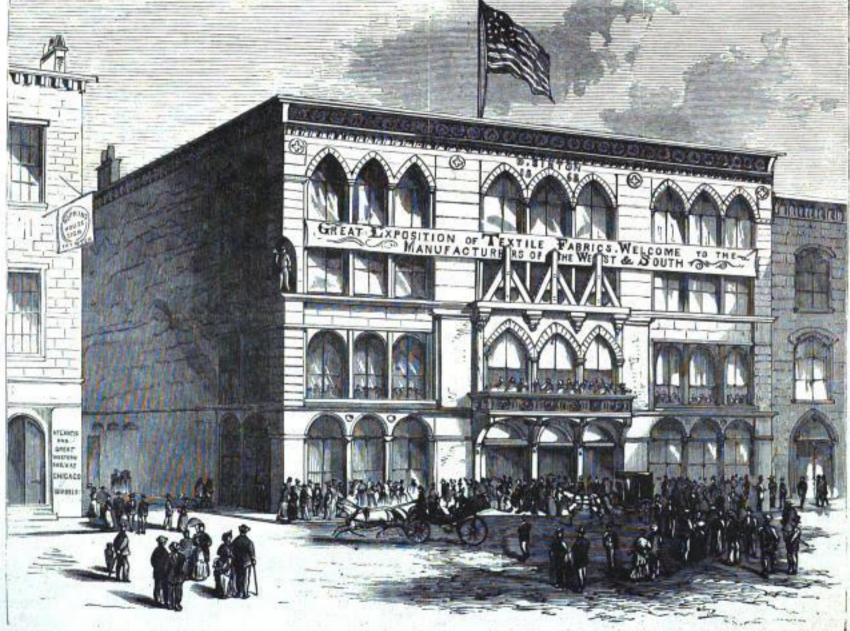

STEAMBOAT RIOT ON THE "DUBUQUE," ABOVE DAVENPORT, IOWA, JULY 29, 1869.—[Seetched by H. H. Henderson.]

STEAMBOAT RIOT ON THE MISSISSIPPL

STEAMBOAT RIOT ON THE MISSISSIPPI.

Our illustration on this page represents a scene of inhuman butchery scarcely ever par-to restrain their movements. The crew consisted of about thirty negroes, and, as it devolved upon them to repress the tumult, they became the victims of the rioters. Six of them were killed, and on their attempt to escape on their arrival

EXPOSITION OF TEXTILE FABRICS AT CINCINNATI, OHIO, AUGUST 3-7, 1869.—SKETCHED ST J. AMBELM.—[SEE PAGE 550.]

PRABODY STATUE, LONDON.

THE ceremony of pub-licly unveiling the bronze statue of Mr. GEORGE PRABODY, the American benefactor of the London poor, was per-formed by the Parson or Walks on July 23; and the Lord Mayor and other civic dignitaries, with the new American Minister and many of the leading citizens, took part in the proceedings.

The Parson WALES, before unveiling the statue, honored the Lord Mayor and the Lady Mayoress with his company at lunchwith much splendor in the great saloon of the Mansion House. A se-lect company had been invited to meet the Parson, among whom were Mr. MOTLEY, Miss BURDETT COUTTS, and Mr. W. W. Stony, the American sculptor.

The ceremony of unveiling the statue took place at the Royal Exchange, the PRINCE OF WALES officiating. Sir BENJAMIN PHILLIPS, as chairman of the Peabody Memorial Com-mittee, addressed the PRINCE, stating that it was designed by this statue to commemorate an act almost without parallel in English history, and to express the gratitude of the English peo-ple for Mr. Prancor's gifts to the poor of Lon-don. "It will tell," said he, "to future genera-tions, and, for all time, to our children and our children's children, how a plain and earnest man, born in another country, settled among us, and by a long, prosperous, and honorable career, became one of our merchant princes, and, having realized a kingly fortune, conceived the desire of distributing it in his life, not with the object of self-aggrandizement, but for the Godlike purpose of ameliorating the miseries, assuaging the woes, and elevating the social and moral condition of his fellow-creatures." He further stated that the committee had chosen Mr. Sroay for the sculptor of this statue, as a distinguished countryman of Mr. Prancov, in order to show their regard for the United States of America. They hoped it would be symbolical of the peace and friend-ship that should always exist between the two countries, inhabited by people of the same race, speaking the same language, and inspired with the same love of freedom.

WHICH OF THE THREE?-(SEE POEM, PAGE 180.)

In reply to this address the Princip of Walks aid: "Among the many duties which I have the privilege of performing none could have given me greater pleasure than to assist and take part in the unveiling of this statue on this occasion. The name of George Pranon't is so well known to all of you that really I feel some difficulty in saying any thing new of that remarkable man; but, at the same time, it affords me the deepest gratification to join in paying a mark of tribute and respect to the name of that great American citizen and philanthropist-I may say that citizen of the world. England can never adequately pay the debt of gratitude which she owes to him, London especially, where his wonderful charity has been so liberally distributed. For a man not born in this country to give a sum, I believe, of more than a quarter of a million of pounds sterling for purposes of benevolence is a fact unexampled. His name will go down to posterity as one who, as Sir Benjamin Phillips so justly remarked, has tried to ameliorate the position of his poorer fellow-citizens, and especially to benefit their moral and social character. I have not yet had the opportunity of seeing the statue which is about to be un-veiled; but, having had the privilege of knowing the sculptor, Mr. Stoux, for a space of now about ten years, I feel sure it will be one worthy of his reputation, and worthy also of the man to whom it is dedicated. Before concluding the few imperfect remarks which I have ventured to address to you, let me thank Mr. Mottay, the American Minister, for his presence on this occasion, and assure him what pleasure it gives me to take part in this great, and, I might almost say, national ceremonial of paying a tribute to the name of his great and distinguished country-Be assured that the feelings which I per sonally entertain toward America are the same as ever they were. I can never forget the recep-tion which I had there nine years ago, and my earnest wish and hope is that England and Americs may go hand in hand in peace and prosper-

Mr. Morrary afterward spoke, and in the course of his remarks said that the name of Mr. Pra-nonr needed no enlogy. "Most fortunate as well as most generous of men, he has discovered a secret for which misers might sigh in vain-the art of he great fortune for hims through all time. I I have often thought this connection of a fa-mous epitaph, familiar, no doubt, to many who now hear me: 'What I spent I had; what I gave I have; what I kept I lost.' And what a mag-nificent treasure, accord-ing to these noble and touching words, has our friend and the poor man's friend preserved for him-self till time shall be no

"And tongues to be his bounty shall rehearse When all the breathers of this world are dead?"

Of all men in the world he least needs a monu-ment." Mr. MOTLEY ment." Mr. Morear went on to speak of the statue, which he had seen in Mr. Srory's studio at Rome, and which he praised as a faithful likeness, having once seen Mr. Peanony and his statue sented side by side.

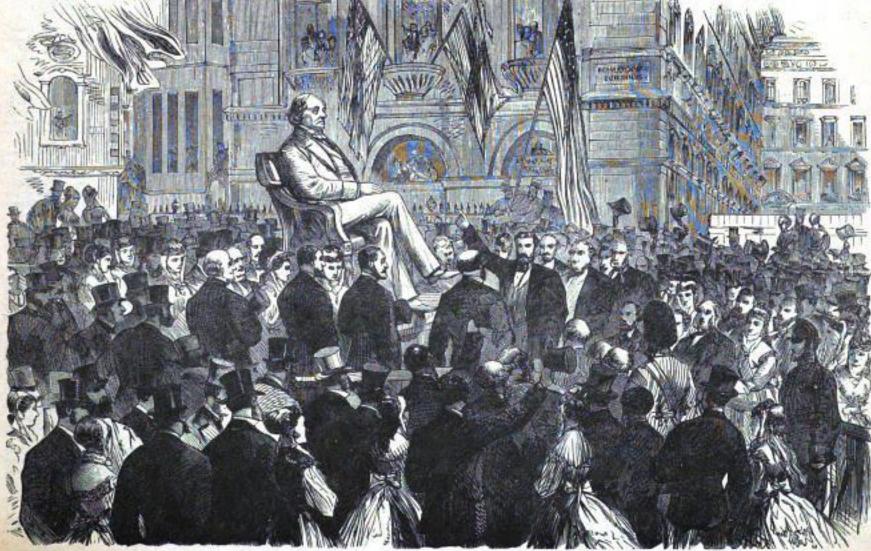

Mr. Storr, the sculp-tor, having been called on, said, jocosely, he had no speech to make. He added, significantly, pointing to the statue, "That is my speech," a remark which occasioned much merriment.

The ceremony was then brought to a close, and the Princer took his leave. His Royal Highness, as he did so, was repeatedly cheered.

A letter which QUEEN VICTORIA wrote to Mr. A letter which Quark Victoria wrote to Mr. Pranody on his leaving England is published by the Boston Post. Her Majesty wrote: "The Quarks is very sorry that Mr. Pranody's sudden departure has made it impossible for her to see him before he left England, and she is concerned to hear that he is gone in bad bealth. She now writes him a line to express her hope that he may return to this country quite recovered, and that she may then have the opportunity, of which she has now been deprived, of seeing him and offering him her personal thanks for all of which she has now been deprived, of seeing him and offering him her personal thanks for all he has done for the people." The note was transmitted by Mr. ARTRUR HELTR, the Clerk of the Privy Council, who adds that the Queen also commanded him "to be sure and charge Mr. PEARODT to report himself on his return to England." The design, inaugurated by Mr. PEARODT and Mr. A. T. STEWART, to become during their lives the executors of their own estates for rabilizathronic surmoses will we have be incifor philanthropic purposes, will, we hope, be imi-tated by others who, like them, have been so fornate as to accumulate vast wealth.

THE PRINCE OF WALES UNVEILING THE STATUE OF MR. GEORGE PEABODY AT THE BOYAL EXCHANGE, LONDON.

WHICH OF THE THREE! Res Illustration on Page 549.

WHICH of the three so sweet, I wonder, Which of the three so sweet, I wonder,
Do sensible bachelors long to woo,
By wavelets' wash and ripple, and under
The haze of a sky which is blue—so blue!
A magnet thrill at the heart should beckon
The passionate boys to the rocks to see
Such deep-sea treasures, and pause to reckon,
Their chance and choice of the maidens three.

Which of the three? 'tis weary choosing, A tale which l'aris of old begins, two must bitterly hate for losing, And only one can adore who wins. A golden apple, the swain on Ida Bestowed on the fairest maid, but he Would please how few did he dare decide a Reward for the best of my maidens three.

Which of the three? their faces surely Are best of books for a man to read; When Millicent's eyes look down demurely, My hutterfly gentlemen, pray take heed! For eyes of blue, though the dark lash hide them, Deceive like songs which a siren sings; But blue or black let us sit beside them, And, like the butterflies, burn our wings.

Which of the three? the long wave bushes Its voice in pleasure about their feet;
The sea-guil stoops, and his white wing brushes
Their golden hair; on the rocks, their seat,
The sea anemones bloom; their dresses The impudent breezes love to toss In sweet disorder, and toy with tresses Which tell too truly a ribbon's loss.

Which of the three? the query's idle, Twixt dark and fair, or short and tall, Would any one choose if he dured to sidle, And sit a monarch amidst them all? A Mormonite tone the ozone instilleth To those who are happily surnamed " young;" For there on the sand, to the man who willeth, Is a throne three beautiful maids among.

Which of the three? if I needs must choose one. To rank all maids in the world above, I'd take, nor care if the world above one, That maid whose attitude whiteers love And then, when summer returned, I'd wander No more alone by the dear old sen; But all that was best in the world I'd squander On her-the best of the maidens three.

EXPOSITION OF TEXTILE FAB-RICS, CINCINNATI.

Ar this time, when ocean caldes and internaficeal canals and interoceanic rallways occupy so large a share of the public attention, there is great danger lest in our absorption by these more general aspects of commerce we should forget those interests by which the great sections of our common country are bound together. The recent exposition of textile fabrics at Cincinnati, Ohio, was a brilliant conception. It was an in-vitation of the South to unite with the West in the opening of a new era, which promises un-paralleled prosperity to both those sections.

This exposition revealed the weakness of Southern and Western manufactories as to the extent of their operations; but it also clearly proved that in the quality of the articles pro-duced they need not shrink from a comparison with their Eastern rivals.

It seems stronge that in a city like Cincinnati, numbering 200,000 souls, there should be but a single weekening. But such is the fact.

The rooms in which the expession was held were specious, extending back from Vine Street. 150 feet; and with their great width, high reilings, and good light, they famished ample for littles for the display of goods. In the rear of the first room, confrosting the visitors as they arrived, were the words, "Welcome to the Massufacturers of the West and South."

Looms of the best kind were on exhibition.

There were jeans that would compare with any manufactured in the world; ensimores superior to much that is manufactured in New England; and long shawls from the prairies of the West and Northwest that were equal to any produced on this continent.

This is the second exposition of textile fabrics in the Northwest. The peculiar characteristic of this second convention is the invitation to cooperation accorded to the South. In this mat-ter of manufactures the West and the South are natural allies. And why should they not excel in manufactures? The just history of both these sections answers the question. The West must, from the necessities of the case, be, in the first instance, occupied in interests purely agricul-tural; and as for the South, so long as slavery existed only agricultural pursuits were possible. But why should the past be repeated in the fu-ture? Governor HAYES, of Ohio, put this affair in the right light when he said, at the opening of this exposition :

of this exposition:

"Where fact, and food, and land, and building materials, and minerals are abundant and cherp; where the climate is healthful and friendly to labor; where the firm to be produced without limit; where the consumption of the manufactured article is large; where the best facilities are afferded for transporting both new material and the fabric, by lead and by water, to and from the great markets of the world—it would seem that the only remaining elements essential to the accessful establishment of any desired manufacture are capital and labor; and that, with the conditions here supposed, both capital and labor are bound to appear at the command of intelligence, enterprise, and with. Now I seed not pame to marshal facts and figures to prove that in the Busine represented by the gentlemen whom we are glad to welcome to day are land, and fiel, and food, and materials for building, and minoral westat; a climate healthful, and in which it is good for man to work; roads, canale, rivers, lakes, railways, for easy and rapid transportation to and from all the earth. All of these things, if we would see them, we have but to open our eyes

State Thomas and a private of the and look around us. The wise farmer, traveling intrough a new country looking for good land, knows when he has reached it by the forest which covers it. The soil is known by its trees. Judge this favored region, which we still call the Northwest, by the farmer's rule. Behold what has grown up on this land during the few years since duffused men ferst began to possess it! Louisville, Memphia, St. Louis, Chicago, Milwankee, Detroit, Pittaburg, Cheveland, Chicago, Milwankee, Detroit, Pittaburg, Cheveland, Chicago, Milwankee, Detroit, Pittaburg, Chevaland, Chicago, Milwankee, Detroit, Pittaburg, St. Louis, Chicago, Milwankee, Detroit, Pittaburg, Chicago, Milwankee, Detroit, Pittaburg, St. Louis, Chicago, Milwankee, Detroit, Pittaburg, Chicago, Pittaburg, Chi

This exposition is a more important affair than at first it would seem. It suggests the con-first of the future. The great questions which are to agitate the nation will relate to finance and commerce. And upon these questions the West and South are to be for the most part

Twenty thousand persons visited the exposition on the second day. One characteristic event of that day was the arrival of an invoice of goods from the mills of Bescham Youwe, Salt Lake City, Utah. These were principally cassimeres. On the evening of August 5 there was a sumptions banquet at the Burnet House. A trade-sale was inaugurated on the 6th, at which the goods on exhibition were disposed of.

THE BAR OF GOLD. By ANNIE TROMAS.

GERALD ADAIR had lived a very useless, careless, selfish life for many years; but until after he had met with Violet Leigh he had never com-mitted any thing that could be stigmatized as a crime, either by the best or the most censorious of men. After that meeting it would have been hard for the most lenient or the most lax to pronounce him inoffensive any more.

The meeting took place in this wise: Down in the luxuriant, ferny depths of South Devon a richly wooded and watered gorge, between two boldly rising lines of hills, had been made the scene of a picnic that had been organized on a colossal scale by a couple of the best known and best liked people in the neighborhood. when Mr. and Mrs. Arbuthnot filled their house with worn-out fashionable people at the end of the London season, it (the place) naturally occurred to them as one that might be set as the stars for the enactment of one of these stage for the enactment of one of those diversions which were absolutely necessary for the diverting of the already sated pleasure-seckers.

"We must have a picnic at Ivy Bridge among other things," Mrs. Arbuthnot had said while stretching out a programme that was ordained to be "clastic" from the first. She made this suggestion in the presence of Mr. Adair the morning after that gentleman's arrival at Glade, and some-how or other he made his silent disapprobation manifest to her.

"Why don't you cordially indorse instead of mutely scorning my plan, wretched man?" the young hostess asked, laughingly. "Briefly, because I abhor picnics," he an-

"The girls pursue their flirtations too remorea-lessly at them; the food suffers from the transit and gets fetid; the wine is hot; the attitude in which these unpromising things are consumed is Those are all silly, groundless complaints that have been leveled against the time-honored institution a thousand times, and refuted. I ex-pected something more original from you," Mrs. Arbuthnot said.

Arbuthnot said.

"Refute them now. I will be easily convinced since you wish it."

"Well," she said, laughing, "the majority of the girls who will be at our picnic are too pretty and to pursue firstation. Your wine shall to need to pursue firitation. Your wine shall be as well iced as if you were dining at home; and the hampers shall not disgrace Gunter or Fortnum and Mason. Don't be absurd—go and enjoy it, and confess to me afterward that Violet Leigh would have made all the evils even you sketched out neceptable."
"Who is Violet Leigh?" he asked.

"She is the most perfectly lovely girl it has ever been my lot to meet," Mrs. Arbuthnot— who was by way of being a beauty herself—said, warmly.

"Ah!" he said, with his most insufferable air, "I don't like your country beaut

Mrs. Arbuthnot suppressed her impatience. "I will tell you who she is," she said. shall then say what you imagine her to be. She is the only daughter of the late Sir Aymott Leigh -a careless, improvident man, as you know; for even you may own to having heard of Sir Aymott without loss of caste. He left Violet penniless, but she has been adopted by the Vincents, old friends of her father's; and rumor says at the richest beiress in the county. You needn't turn up your nose at her; she is the belle of every place at which she appears; she caused a sensation in Paris last year.

"So she tells you, I suppose," he said, laughing.

"So she doesn't tell me, scoffer, but so I happen to know. Now picture her."

"Thanks; but the remuneration of being right would be too slight a one," he said, care lessly. "However, I will go to your picnic, not to be charmed with Miss Violet Leigh, but because you desire me to do so."

Kate Arbuthnot laughed. It was a well-un-derstood thing among them all that Mr. Adair's speaken fighteries and open adoration of her meant nothing. Her husband liked the man. "Not that I knew any good of him," Mr. Arbuthnet would say; "but, on the other hand, I don't know any harm of him, you see; and he likes Kate, and Kate can keep any fellow from liking her too much." This being the state of the case, Mr. Adair was willing enough to bury himself in the solitudes of Glade much more frequently than in any other of his numerous country haunts. He was even willing to go the length of attending that which most London men who have passed their "saled days" would most sedulously eachew— namely, a country pienic—for the sake of pleas-ing his fair pleasant hostess. The lady smiled a smile of gratified acquiescence now. "After all, why should you feign to be above most things, and weary of the rest?" she said. "I don't believe you to be either, remember; but the great majority accept your own estimate of yourself, and think that you are sated with pleasure and saddened with thought."

"Decidedly I am not sated with pleasure," be said.

"Are you saddened with thought? No, I

"I do think sometimes, though you think me incapable of the effort, I know

"But you're on the top of the tide; you're well off, and you will be better off when your uncle dies. You're young and good looking (you know the latter fact so well that I needn't scruple to mention it to you). You're tolerably clever, and you have no wife to worry you."

"Yot a wife is the very thing you are always advising me to take. What other motive, for instance, have you in putting Miss Leigh in my

"Yes, I should like you to take her," Mrs.
Arbuthnot said. "A wife like Violet, but not any wife."
"What day do you say your picnic is to be?"

he said, sudde said, suddenly. "Next Wednesday."

"Next Wednesday."

"Ah! a thousand pities that business should call me away on Toesday," he said.

"Now, Mr. Adair, you are trying to trifle with me; and I won't have it. Ivy Bridge is a charming place. If you don't like the actors, you will approve of the stage and the scenery. I won't say another word about Violet Leigh to you. I won't even introduce her to you. You shall be free as air to neafect my hearity hat shall be free as air to neglect my beauty; but you shall go to my picnic."

So it came to be an understood thing (during the interval that clapsed between this conversation and the picnic) among all Mrs. Arbuthnot's intimates that Mr. Adair was staying for the picnic as a favor, and that the favor was a very great one. Violet Leigh heard of it from a mutual friend of hers and Mrs. Arbuthnot's, and Vi-olet Leigh derided the idea.

A favor; why should it be a favor? What is there in the man that Kate makes herself absurd about him?

"Katé, and her husband too, think him brilliant and clever, and an acquisition to any set, iant and cieves, and the friend replied.

"Do they? I never do like the Admirable Crichtons that are discovered by my friends; I hope Kate won't expect me to go into similar ecetasies over him, and to regard his dancing with me as a great favor."

Thus it appeared almost as if the two whom Mrs. Arbuthnot had designed the picnic for, in the hope that each would be as much struck with the other as she was with them both respectively, were prejudiced against each other from the werr first.

Wednesday, the day of the picnic, dawned brolling, bright, and beautiful as it is possible for a July day in South Devon to be. The trysting-place was a well-known inn in the heart of the country town, just opposite to the ivy-cov-ered bridge which gives its name to the place. Here the guests who had been assembled by Mrs. Arbuthnot met, and held a consultation as to where they should wander and when they should dies. When this last important matter was definitely fixed upon, that ardent search after the picturesque which characterizes most picnics commenced—a search which apparently can only be properly conducted in pairs.

The picturesque does not render the search after itself difficult in the region round about Ivy Bridge. In the first place there is the river Erme, which comes rolling down from Dartmoor, over boulders that are like polished marble when looked at through the crystal water-rolling down over boulders and between high banks, fringed with trees and shrubs and ferns in match-less profusion and endless variety. No sweeter place for a stroll than the banks of this shaded stream can be found in the whole of this nature-favored district. And if the quiet, secluded beauty palls upon one, a short, tough ascent brings one to the broad, hold, breezy border of Dartmoor, which civilization has left untouched and untainted as yet.

One of the last to arrive was Violet Leigh. Che or the next to serve of handsome small chestnut cobs, driving fast and cleverly, for she was to be chaperoned by her hostess, and she feared being lane. Mr. Adair was standing by feared being lane. Mr. Adair was standing by Mrs. Arbuthnot's side as the young lady checked her cobs, and leaned forward to excuse herself for the delay she fancied she had coused. "I was afraid you would have started for the woods, she said, "and that I should have enacted the part of unprotected young lady all day."

Why were you not more punctual?" asked Mrs. Arbuthnot

"You know I am not mistress of my own time, nor yet of my own actions," the girl an-swored, hastily, and Gerald Adair looked at her with interest for the first time.

She was worth looking at. longed to openly confess that she was—utterly different to his precenceived notions of the country beauty and heiress. A graceful, elegant, thorough-bred looking girl, with a world of quiet, courtly self-possession in her air. Slender in figure, exquisitely dressed, pale and fair complexioned, with soft masses of wavy brown hair dressed far forward, nearly on to her wide brow in front of her chignon. A delicate, slightly aquiline-featured face, with dark violet eyes fringed with silky, curly black lashes. A very lovely young lady, "but something better than lovely, too," he told himself. "She might be a lovely, too," he told himself. "She might be a peeress in her own right, indeed, to judge by her looks."

True to her promise, Mrs. Arbuthnot made no attempt to her promise, are. Aroutanot made no attempt to introduce Mr. Adair to Miss Leigh; and he felt half annoyed with his favorite friend on account of that strict observance of her word on which she was secretly priding herself. "They are the two best adapted to each other in all the party," she thought; "and it serves them both right that I treat them according to the letter of their recones." This was the thought that flashed their request." This was the thought that flashed through her mind before they started for the ante-dinner stroll. By the time the post-dinner was imminent Mr. Adair lowered his flag.

"I wish you would make me known to Miss Leigh," he said, quietly.
"You're not asking this to please me?" the

"You're not asking this to please me?" the gratified listle matron asked.

"No, indeed; entirely to please myself," he answered. "She shines like a star amidst all these people you have collected. What wonder that I desire to have her shine upon me alone?"

"I wish I had the strength of mind to punish such selfish conosit by refusing your request; as I haven't—Violet, allow me to introduce our friend, Mr. Adair, to you; I want you to make him comprehend this truth—that my picnic was worth waiting for."

Miss Leigh smiled rather languidly; rather too languidly, Mr. Adair thought, as their hostess moved away.

moved away.
"A man convinced against his will, etc.," she A man convinced against his will, etc., "and quoted presently. "Why should I attempt, moreover, to upset what is perhaps a pet theory of yours? You like to imagine yourself superior to this sort of thing; why should I try to prove to you that you are not? You have proved it to me already," he said, adroitly guiding her into a path that none of the others had taken. And Mrs. Arbuthnot, keenly glancing after them, felt happy when she saw them disappear round a corner together, alone.

them disappear round a corner together, alone.

A formight after this they were alone with each other once more. By this time, though, being wish each other had become the one thing in the whole world to them. During this formight Mr. Adair had pursued Violet incessantly, "madly" even, Mrs. Arbothnot called it in joke—"madly," the man felt it to be in reality. He was born to attract women. His normal insoucience and frequent carnestness won upon, flattered, bothered, and beguiled them. He was handsome, accomplished, well-bred. The graceful beauty, the Queen of Calm, as she had been called, surrendered to him after a brief struggle. She could dered to him after a brief struggle. She could not suppress the slight flush which would rise to her cheeks, and the slight throbbing which would affect her heart, when he approached her. And, as for him, there seemed to be nothing of exag-geration in the impassioned words which he was addressing to her now as she sat embowered in flowers in a deep bay-window in Mrs. Arbuthnot's drawing-room:

""Thou wast that all to me, love,
For which my soul did pine—
A green lale in the sea, love,
A focutain and a shrine,
All wreathed about with fowers,
And all the flowers were mine.

"Are all the flowers mine?" he continued, passionately. "Tell me! No other man has forced such roses as these into bloom?" and he lightly touched her cheek with a sprig of myrtle as he spoke.

"No other man has ever said such words to me. I should never have listened to them, she said, softly. He was going to leave Glade on the morning of the next day, and Violet was feeling so sure in her love and happiness; so sure that he would not go without asking her to be Suddenly, to her surprise, he half knelt at her side. Suddenly, to her horror, he breathed an anotherna against that fatal picnic party.

"What is it, Gerald?" she said, in a whisper. It was the first time she had ever called him by his Christian name. At the same time she put her hand down and touched his hand.

"Violes," he said, grasping hers fiercely and firmly; "how will your dear eyes look at me after this day? How will your dear voice ever name me?"
"Always kindly," she said, trembling a listle.

"No, no; you will despise and disown me, as I deserve. I know what you, what any woman must expect-would be wrong and manly not to expect, in fact. I ought to ask you to be my wife to-day. I would give my life to be able to do it, and I dare not!"

Oh, Gerald! why?' All her pride and stately sweet grace were as she rang out the pitsous entreaty. She felt so sure of his love. There must be some hideous mistake in all this!

"There is a bar between us, darling," he said, looking up, miserably.
"A bar! What bar? No bar strong enough to keep us asunder," she said, impetuously.

"A little har of gold—a wedding-ring. I have a wife already!"

"For all that my eyes will never look, or my voice never name you loss kindly than they have already done," she said, recovering her sweet, outward calm, but feeling her heart to be wounded, broken, bloeding.

"You do not reproach me, Miss Leigh," he eid, rising to his feet.

We must not represch each

We hefore

other, say rather. Tell me of your wife before I go; and I go, must go soon."

Then he told her how he had been inveigled into marrying a woman older than himself while with the best of the control of the

he was still a mere boy. "She was beautiful then," he said; "but she was not a woman I may dare to talk to you shout. I never respected her. I never loved her after the first few days of mad passion were over. I have disliked her for years; but I never so loathed her as I do now that she stands between me and you, the brightest vision of my life.

brightest vision of my lite.

"Why do you not live with her?" Violet asked, with more of sternness than he had ever heard in her tones before. "Why do you neglect her, and go about under false colors, feigning to be a free man, when you are..."

free man, when you are—"
"A very bond slave," he interrupted. "Why do I do it? This is why; I have it in me (so you have told me more than once) to be a good and great and useful man. She does not know and great and useful man. She does not know my heart—she does not care for it."

"Have you any children?" Violet said, shortly.

"One child only, thank Heaven."

"What is it—boy or girl?"

"A girl; she's about ten years old, by-the-way."

"You have a daughter, and you can treat her mother as you do; I told you just now that I forgave you freely all I had to forgive you," she said, blushing. "I can not now, while I think you have no beart for your daughter. What is her name, and where is she?"

"Her name is Beatrix; she is at school at St.
Leonard's. Don't look harshly at me, Violet;

Leonard's. Don't look harshly at me, Violet; if it ever comes out that I have a wife—such a wife as I have, and a child—I shall cease to be my uncle's heir."

"And that is your whole fear," she said. "I can't bear to think it. Do you not dread that work child may grow an expless of you, that she can't bear to think it. Do you not dread that your child may grow up careless of you; that she may turn out badly from sheer parental neglect? You eaght to be her guide, her friend, her protector. Think of it; she is your own fiesh and blood, Gerald." And as she pleaded for his child Violet Leigh burst into tears.

An hour after, when Mrs. Arbuthnot came home from her drive to dress for dinner, she found a note from Violet Leigh, instead of seeing the hap py face of the girl whose love-dream had seemed be so near realization.

"Duar Karr"—Violet wrote—"I have gone home instead of staying to dise, as I rashly promised you I would do; don't ask any questions of Mr. Adah, or make any jokes about me: we have had an explana-tion, and it has ended in our saying good-by, and wish-ing each God-speed. Your affectionals

"My affectionate Violet might have been a "My affectionate Violet might have been a little more explicit with me, I think," Mrs. Ar-buthnot said, musingly. "I should like to ask him what it all means; but she asks me not to do so." Still, though her loyalty to ber friend forbade her saking any questions that that friend had forbidden, her curiosity was sorely taxed. Nor was it set at rest by Gerald Adair's telling her that evening that his farewell on the morro would be a long one. "I am going abroad,"

 For how long?"

"For an indefinite period: before I go I ask this one favor of you. Here is the address of my agent in town: he will always know where or about I am. If Miss Leigh marries, write through him and tell me. Will you?" to me through him and tell me. tling with her curiosity, Mrs. Arbuthnot promised.

"Afid give this note to Miss Leigh when I am gone," he said; "it contains an address she wants. I shall say good-by to you to-night," he added, holding out his hand.

"Me significant fitted to you hoth," she white.

"My picnic was fatal to you both," she whis-pered; and he bowed his head and went out of

For the next eight years Violet Leigh alternately possiled and annoyed all her best friends by refusing to marry. She had many brilliant offers -a woman is only at her best until eight or nine and twenty, and her beauty was unimpaired. Her and twenty, and fer beauty was unimpaired. Her self-elected guardian grew morose and gloomy with her. "Dou't call me his heiress," she would say sometimes to Mrs. Arbethnot; "if I were only sure of being that I should act very differently. I would fulfill the object of my life then—now I can not do it."

At last, when Violet was a splendid woman of thirty, she married. The man she married was a rich, honorable gentleman of ancient family, a a rich, honorable gentleman of ancient family, a man many years older than herself. Mrs. Ar-leuthnot, true to her promise, wrote to Gerald Adair, who was away on his travels again, al-though he had been in England many times since he had asked her to do it. Soon afterward Violet, now Mrs. Fanshawe, came back to her own home with her own he band, accompanied by s young lady whom she introduced to the neigh-borhood as the daughter of her old friend Mr.

Gradually the whole story coxed out. Mrs. Adair was dead long ago, and for years Violet Leigh had played the part of mother and guardian to the child of her old love. She had always refused to marry, because objections had always been raised on the part of her guardian and her lovers to any permanent settlement being made on the daughter of her heart. At last, in wrath, her gnardian vowed that, unless she gave up this "mad fancy," as he called it, he would leave the money he had intended for her to some one else. She could not give up that which she had won hardly from Gerald Adair—the right to protect and watch over his child. Even while she was debating what it was best to do Mr. Fanshawe proposed to her, and she told him her trouble.

proposed to her, and she too man nor secure.

"Marry me, and she shall be in all respects gater of our own," he said; and his ac-of Violet's "mad fancy" made her guardian look more leniently upon it. So the end of it was that Beatrix Adair was well-dowered and well-received when, some ten yours after that fatal picnic, her father came once again to

He louged to see her—not to see his child, but to see the woman who was to her as a mother.

forgotten her graceful beauty. But she struck | him afresh with a strong sense of her superiority when he did see her after these long years. She was a splendid woman, and his eyes flashed and his heart beat at the sight of beauty as warmly now as in his younger days. Her husband was old; she could not love him, Gerald Adair felt sure. He saw her ence, twice thrice approachold; she coust not love nim, terraid Adair sensure. He saw her conce, twice, thrice, approaching her, as it were, more nearly each time. He could not understand why, having loved him once so well, she had made no sign when his wife died. A few words would have brought him to her side then, though in his careless way he had not deemed it worth his while to com without them. Above all, why had she married an old man like Fanshawe? He determined to ask her these questions as soon as possible.

One morning he rode over to the Fanshawes, and found the beautiful châtelaine alone in her morning-room. She was looking more splendid than ever, he thought—the sort of woman who would never grow old and wearisome. For a time she talked to him of Beatrix; but the subject of Beatrix did not interest him now-he wanted to speak of Violet and himself.

"Did you know that I was in England when Beatrix's mother died?" he asked.

"Yes; I heard of you from Mrs. Arbuthnot when your wife died."

"Yet you never wrote to me," he said, re-proachfully. "It would have been a mockery for me to write condolences," she said.

"I did not mean condolences," he said, impatiently; "there were other words that you might have written then-words of hope and

For his daughter's sake she-the married wowas patient with him, though her pride and her anger were rising,

"Those words could not have gone from me to you," she said, calmly.

"Mrs. Fanshawe—Violet, tell me why you kept true to me so long only to marry at last," he said, passionately.

e up and gravely faced him. "I was true to my self-imposed charge, your child," she said, earnestly. "I would not marry till I could make her independent of the neglect and scorn and contumely to which her father's neglect subjected her. 'This' (holding up her wedding-ring) "was put upon my hand by the same one that dowered your daughter; it tells me that all intercourse must cease between us, if I am to go on trying to teach Beatrix to love and respec on trying to teach Beatrix to love and respect her father; it is a her of gold between me and such questioning as you have forced upon me. You shall not come to my husband's house now that you have disregarded my husband's claims."

"You are harsher to me than when I nearly broke your heart," he muttered.

"And I promised never to look less kindly or speak less kindly to you than I did then," she said.

"You have forced me to break that promise; but this bar of gold will prevent your promise; but this bar of gold will prevent your ever doing it again." Then she said good-by to him, and went away feeling that he had been a hero to her once, and that this was a hard truth which had come home to her—namely, that each time be had wrung her heart and hurt her, it had been through idleness and selfishness.

REVELATIONS OF A CONVENT.

THE Press of Vienna publishes the following profibe details of the incarceration of a nun:

"On Tuesday, the 20th instant, an anonymous notice reached the Criminal Court at Cracow to the effect that in the Convent of the Carmelite barefooted name one of the order, named Bar-bara Ubryk, had been forcibly kept in close con-finement in a dark cell for a long number of years. The Vice-President of the Criminal years. The Vice-Fresident of the Criminal Court, Bitter von Antohiewicz, immediately laid his information before a judge of inquiry, who, in company with the public prosecutor, repaired to the Bishop, Von Gelecki, with the request to permit them to entare the convent. Herr von Gelecki suggested to the judge that the notice might have arisen out of a false report; but when the officer of justice urged him to give him an ecclesiastical assistant, he declared that he would creat the request in his capacity as Panal delegrant the request in his capacity as Papal dele-gate, and subdelegated the Papal Prelate Spital, a very intelligent and worthy priest. In his com-pany and that of his actuary, Kwialkowski, the judicial witnesses, Stanislans Gralewski and Theophil Parvi, the judge drove to the convent. The latter, which is one of the strictest fer orders, is situated in one of the most beautiful suburbs of Crucow. Thousands of people passed sombre cloister walls without even suspecting the fearful tragedy that was being enacted within for twenty-one years. The convent was first entered by Father Spital, and the commis-sion went to the upper corridor, followed by the nuns, one of whom showed the judge she cell of Sister Barbara. This cell, between the pantries, close to the dung-hole, had a walled-up window and a double wooden door, in which there was a movable grating, through which, very proba-bly, food was handed in. The cell, seven paces bly, food was handed in. The cell, seven paces long by six paces wide, was opened, but it is al-most impossible to describe the view this piece most impossible to describe the view this piece of inquisition of the nineteenth century present-ed. In a dark, infected hole adjoining the sewer sat, or rather cowered, on a heap of straw, an entirely naked, totally neglected, half insene woman, who, at the unaccustomed view of light, the outer world, and human beings, folded her hands and pitfully implored: 'I am hungry: have pity on me; give me meat, and I shall be obedient......' This hole for it could be potatoes, was deficient of the slightest decent accommodation. There was nothing—no stove, no bed, no table, no chair—it was neither warmed the inhuman Sisters, who call themselves women, spiritual wives, the brides of heaven, had select-ed as a habitation for one of their own sex, and kept her therein in close confinement for twentykept her therein in close confinement for twentyone years—since 1848. For twenty-one years the Gray Sisters daily passed this cell, and not one of them ever thought of taking compassion on this poor outcast prisoner. Half human being, half animal, with a filthy body, with thin knock-knoed legs, hollow cheeks, closely shorn dirty head, unwashed for years, came a borriblelooking being forward, such as Dante in his wildest imagination was unable to picture. With her decely sunk eyes marine on one snot knell her deeply sunk eyes staring on one spot knelt this wretched virtim in her cell in the Convent of the Carmelites. The judge instantly ordered the nun to be clothed, and went himself for Bishop Galecki. The Bishop was deeply moved, Sistop Galecki. The Bishop was deeply moved, and, turning to the assembled nons, he vehemently reproached them for their inhumanity.

'Is this,' he said, 'what you call love of your neighbor? Furies, not women, that you are, is it thus that you purpose to enter the kingdom of heaven?' The nons ventured to excuse their or newen? The nuns ventured to excuse their conduct, but the Bishop would not hear them.
'Silence, you wretches!' he exclaimed; 'away, out of my sight, you who disgrace religion!' The Bishop and Prelate at once suspended the Father Confessor, and also the Superioress, who is descended from an old honorable Polish noble family. The Bishop ordered Nun Barbara Ubryk ily. The Bishop ordered Nun Barbara Ubryk to be brought into a clean cell, and there to be dressed and nursed. When the unhappy nun was led away, she asked anxiously whether she was led away, she asked anxiously whether she would be brought back to her grave; and when asked why she had been imprisoned, she an-swered: 'I have broken the vow of chastity, but,' pointing with a fearfully wild gesture and in great excitement to the Sisters, 'they are not angels.' The investigation has commenced. The Lady Superior declared that Barbara Ubryk was here in class seedimentary size. 14th he was kept in close confinement since 1848 by order of the physician, because of her unsound mind. But this physician died in 1848, and the present physician, Dr. Babraynski, who has been pracphysician, 197, Baneryman, who has been practicing in the convent for the last seven years, has never seen Barbara Ubryk. Such treatment, in the opinion of the doctors, is sufficient to drive a person mad. On account of the importance of the case, the Attorney-General has taken the matter in hand. The exasperation of the people knows no bounds. It is stated that the Bishop intends to dissolve the convent."

IMPORTANCE OF HYGIENE.

A LITTLE brochers, entitled "Hygiene in its relations to Therapeusis," by Alfred L. Car-roll, M.D. (published by Tunner & Michael, New York), will certainly command the atten-tion of thoughtful readers. This paper was read before the New York Medical Association, June The author shows that the best physicians of ancient and modern times have relied more upon hygienic measures than on the administration of drugs. "Many maladies," he says, "formerly supposed to demand the most en-ergetic interference of medical art, are now known to be self-limiting, with a natural tendency to termination in health, and not capable of being shortened or materially modified by the admin-istration of Grags; and it seems probable that all so-called acute diseases may be classed in this category."

this entegory."

Dr. Carroll goes on to classify morbid conditions under three beads, and to specify the hy-gienic agents adapted to the treatment of disease. The following is his classification of diseases:

The following is his classification of diseases:

1st.—Those (very few in number) which may be treated exclusively by drugs having a specific (toxit, physicogical, or chemical) action, independently of hygienic induceses. To these belong certain local diseases: cases of poteoning, whether animal, regetable, or mineral: of mechanical obstruction; etc.

3d.—Those (a large majority, perhaps, in the present state of our knowledge) which must be treated with drugs and hygienic agents combined, either of which would be insufficient without the other. Among them will be found many chronic organic diseases, especially those of the dignetive and circulatory systems; some of the neuroses; etc.

3d.—A class (much larger than is commonly supposed), including not only the self-limiting diseases, but nearly all functional difficulties not dependent on lesions of structure; the various deviations from the moral appropriately treated by hygienic means alone, to the exclusion of medicaments.

The hygienic agents which may be adapted to

The hygienic agents which may be adapted to be treatment of disease are, chiefly:

1st.—Alimentation; including food, drink, so-called accessory food, and the employment of those minaccessory food, and the employment of those mineral waters, or other substances, which supply elements deficient in the organism.

2d.—Air; including ventilation, hygrometric condition, density or rarefaction, artificial increase of the percentage of oxyges, etc.

2d.—Temperature; including climate, clothing, heating of rooms, etc.

2d.—Exercise; including its antithesis, rest; passtre exercise; friction; etc.

2d.—Ehalling, general or local.

2d.—Electrical influences.

7th.—Healight.

2d.—Agenta, not included under any of the above heads, which affect one or more of the secretions or exercisos.

or excretions.

Other influence of decidedly remedial nature exist in sleep, relaxation, mental and moral conditions; but these are less within our control, and although we may frequently recognize, and urge upon the patient their importance, neither we nor our clients can commonly enforce their operation.

In the demonstration which follows, showing the importance of these hygienic agents as con pared with drugs, Dr. Carroll is very clear, and his arguments are conclusive. Indeed, we are convinced by a perusal of this paper that every man has within his reach the best remedy for most human ailments, and that his ignorance as to their application is all that compels him to resort to the doctor and to the doctor The best physicians of the day are those who use the fewest drugs. Our readers will hear more from Dr. Carroll in the columns of this journal, through communications from his own

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

As enterpeling aspirant for the bonors of "mine host," located in one of the new but thriving railroad towns of lows, issues a business-card, by means of which be discourses to would be patrons thusly: "Clean Beds, Square Masis, no Brown Sugar, and Good Sample Room. No Live or Dead Seate wanted. Barber Shop connected with this Hones." On being asked what was meant by "square meals" the good man replied: "Dried apples for breakfast, milk for dinner, and let 'sm seelf for supper."

A PURE HOME FOR MICE. Nibble-o's.

Good Place for a Numeray-The Rocky Mountains.

WOMAN'S PRIVILEGES. Three things to women hind belong.
This universe of ours all over;
and from their use, or right or wrong,
Not all the universe may more her.
The first to bease her faithful lover;
The sacond to cogue; the third—
And that which off nest we discover—
To argue points the most abound,
And, right or wrong, to have the latest w

"What makes you so girm, Tom?" "Ob, I have had to endure a ead trial to my feelings." "What on earth was it?" "Why, I had to tie on a pretty girl's bonnet while her ma was looking on."

What goes most against a farmer's grain !-- His reap-

Some of the deacons "down East" seem to have a bad practice of anoring loadly while askep in charch, which appears to disturb some folks there, as a Maire paper recently had the following polite notice for one of them:

"Deacon —— is requested not to commence snoring

"Descen — is requested not to commence snoring tomorrow until the sermon has begun, as some per-sons in the neighborhood of his pew would like to bear the text."

A couple of follows who were pretty thoroughly soaked with bad whisky got into the guizer. After floundering about for a few minutes, one of them said; "Jim, let's go to another house—this hotel leaks."

Two physicians at the bedside of a patient disputed as to the nature of the disease. At last one of them ended the disease by saying: "Very week, have it your own way now, but the post-meries will show that I am right." The patient was not much encouraged.

A physician stopped at the shop of a country spoth-ecary and asked for a pharmacopota. "Sir," said the apothecary, "I know of no such farmer living about these parts."

Jenkins lost his almanae yesterday, and did not know whether to wear an over-coat or a lines duster. His wife told him it was summer, so he started out with the duster, but soon came back, saying: "I don't care a continental what time of year it is, I want my winter clothes." He was sensible.

A volume of water can not be called dry reading.

On the occasion of an eclipse, a colored individual in Norfolk, Virginia, became greatly clated. "Bress de Leed," said be, "niggers' time hab come at last, and now we gwine to hab a black sun."

ware use use israelites do after they crossed the Red Sea F asked a superintendent of a Sunday-er book "They dried themselves F said a shrill-voiced little girl. "What did the Israelites do after they cross

Two Yankees strolling in the woods, without any arms in their possession, observed a bear climbing a tree, with its pawe clasped around the trunk. One of them can forward and caught the bear's paws, one in each band. He then called out to his comrade, "Jonathan, run home and bring me something in kill this varmint; and mind you don't star, for I'm in a fix."

Jonathan ran off, but staid a long time. During the interval the bear made several desperate altempts be bits the hand of him who held R. At length Jonathan came back.

"Hallo! what kept you so long!"

"Well, I'll tell you. When I got home breakfast was ready, an I staid to est it.

"Well which his comrade, "come now, and hold the criter till I kill it."

Jonathan selsed the bear's paws, and held the animal.

"Well, have you hold of him?"
"I guess I have." "I guess I have."
"Very well, then. Hold fast, for I'm off for dis-

The pastor of a popular church at a Sunday-school concert said: "Hoys, when I heard your beautiful songs to-sight I had to work hard to keep my feet still; what do you suppose is the trouble with them?" "Chilbiaina, Sir!" shouted a little six-year-old.

How perfectly satisfactory was the conduct of that bears old Parlian who rode up to the door of the house of the girl of his choice, and having desired her as be called out to him, said, without determinoustion, "Rachel, the Lord hith sent me to marry thee!" when the girl answered, with equal promptisess and devoutness, "The Lord's will be done?"

Torsu Lapt, "Oh! I am so glad you like birds; which kind do you admire most?" Our Squan, "Well, I think the goose, with plenty of stuffing, is about as good as any."

A Pribuse correspondent dired at a bonse in California, when the hosiose expressed a desire to see a greenback specimen. He produced a crampled twenty-five cent postal currency. She turned it over and over with keen curiosity. "It seems very strange to me that this should be money," she said. "It don't look like money." "What does it look like it " "Well" (hestiatingly, and with the utmest sincerity), "it—looks—like—a label for an opster can."

A New Hampshire editor, who has been keeping a record of big bests, announces at last that "the best that heat the best that beat the other best is now beaten by a best that beats all the bests, whether the original best, the best that best the best, or the best that best the best that beat the other best."

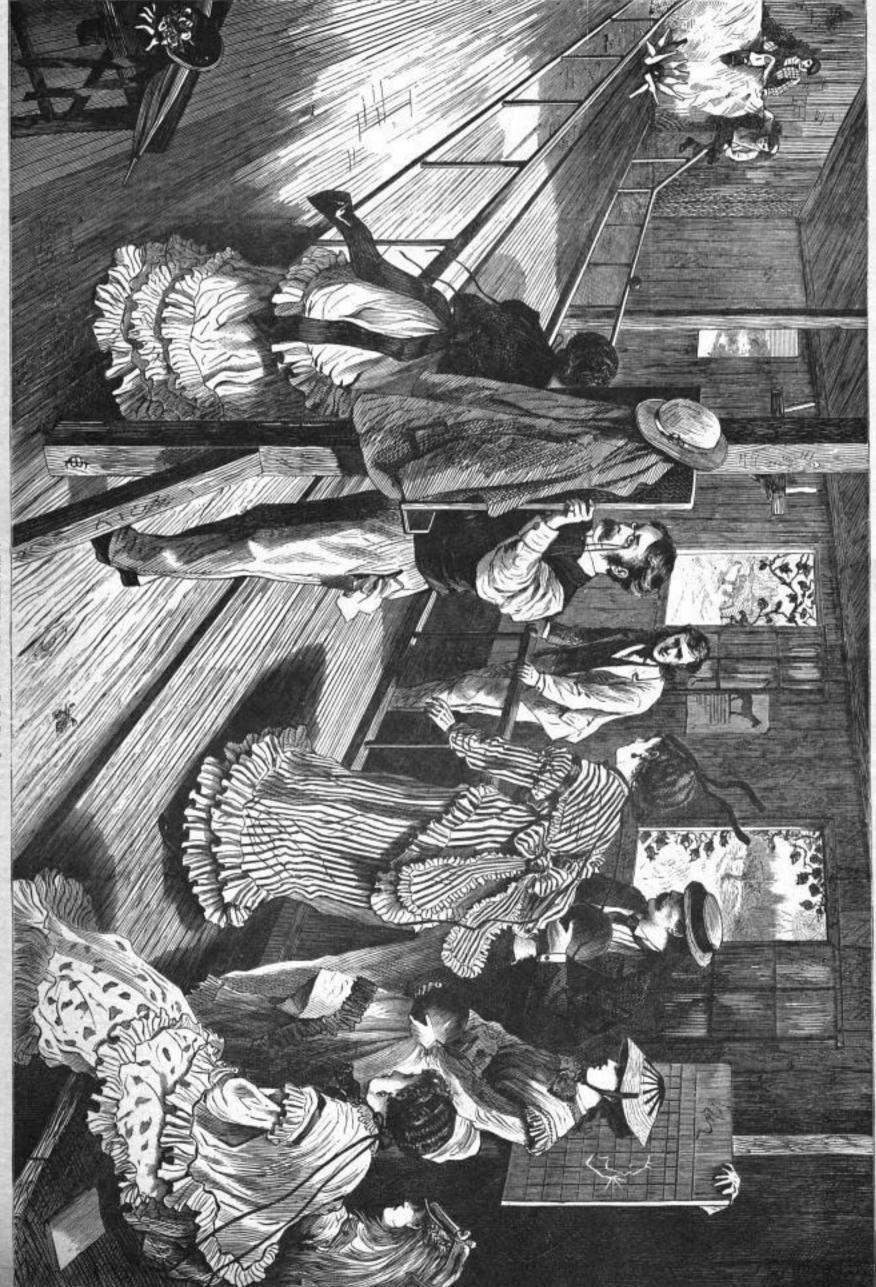

A young lady having asked a gentleman the size of his neck, he sent the following:

or me next, he sent the solutions:
"The class of my neck! That's remarkably strange,
And admits of a very eignificant range;
A neck-tie, a collar, nore threat, a halter,
And others, enough to make a man faller;
Let this tender reply anxiety check,
The length of your arm will just go round my

"My son," said an anxious father, "why do you use that nexty tobacco?" The boy, decilning to con-sider the question in the spirit in which it was asked, replied: "To got the juice."

A musician, whose nose had become distinctly colored with the red wine he was wont to imbibe, said one day to his little son at the table; " You must eat hread, boy; bread makes your cheeks red." The little boy replied, " Father, what lots of bread you must have snuded up?"

A TEN-STRIKE,-[Duaws at C. G. Boss.]

General

SO RUNS THE WORLD AWAY.

CHAPTER XLIII.

LOVE TERMED TO TRARS AND TRARS TO FIRE.

Azarra passed, with stumbling feet and bent head, through the dark passages that led from the room where Mowbray basked by the fire, to the back-door of the house; habit, that trick of castom which asserts its supremacy even during those periods when human souls are sustaining the keenest agony they are capable of expe-riencing—habit made her put out her hands be-fore her to guard her head from concussion with any unseen object.

She reached the back-door at last, and pulling back the heavy bolts, passed on the threshold, awed for an instant by the calm beauty of the scene before her. The moonlight was shining scene before her. The mooningst was annually brightly down the court-yard; the deer's head, the antiers of which stood in shadowy abruptness over the old-fushioned clock, was steeped in the cold brightness; the sombrous groups of trees that rose up behind the old-fushioned gables; the distant has of a sheep distarbed in the fold—all spoke of secretary peace.

distant has of a sheep disturbed in the fold—all spoke of serenest peace.

A heart less bitter would have been calmed by the solemn leveliness of the scene. But Analea was suffering an agony keener than death. It may be cruelly hard for one who yearns to live to yield up the last breath that divides the living day and awesome darkness of the night which "knows no morning." But when death is in your heart; when the last throb of faith is sobbed out, and the warmth of a great love turns to ashes; when passion, trencherous and subtle, still linguist to sting the old wound into agony, is not lingers to sting the old wound into agony, is not that harder to endure than a mere sighing out that harder to endure than a mere sighing out of failing breath, a simple surrender of all physical sensation? Anales walked quickly through the court-yard. She dreaded observation or comment on her movements. She need not have feared either, aller lover was still doaing by the fire. Old Sally was peering over her needlework in the kitchen chimney corner. The watchdog borked as she passed. The cold worm on the path writhed under her hasty feet—but these wars the cells king things affected by her more. were the only living things affected by her move-ments. She walked quickly through the dewwet glooms of the avenue, and only paused when she came to a shadow more dense, a spot more secluded than any which she had yet penetrated, and there she flung herself down on the grass, she clerebed her hot hands in the cool herbage, and turned the agony of her eyes toward the stars; their serene indifference exasperated her. She asked herself, fiercely, why all should be so calm when her heart was in torment. She moaned aloud in her pain, and then she cast her face to the earth and cried, "Oh, my love, my

The adjuration was addressed to a memory rather than a reality. The words had no sooner past her lips than she knew them to be a lie. She had no love now. All was frustration and barrenness.

"Oh," she said, "is there no end to this?
Can not I die and cease to feel?"

Can not I die and cease to feet?"

Looking up she eaught sight of the light that glimmored in the library window; her eyes softened for an instant as she involuntarily pictured to herself the graceful head of her lover, thrown back on the cushioned chair, the eres closed in sleep, the full lips half opened under the shad-ow of the drooping mustache. She was seized with an irresistible longing to go and look in at the window. Her love was outraged, her heart bruised, but she was a woman, and she could not keep away from the hand that had dealt her mortal agony.

Thurstan was still sleeping when Azalea reached the house. She leaned back in the framework of magnelia leaves which fringed the casement, and looked at him long and steadfastly. Presently he stirred and called her name.

"Are you not coming?" she heard him say.

A strange smile played round her pallid lips as she passed round the house and re-entered the portal.
"Yes, I am coming," she said, softly, to her-

Thurstan was in high spirits to-night. He hummed snatches of song as he loiled on the old damask sofs, his arm folded round Azalea's waist, his head pillowed on her breast.

The fire blazed cheerily on the hearth. The revolving shadow of the mill, the darkening through its cloudy gloom, were shut out by the ruddy sheen of high crimson satin curtains.

A faint smell of dead flowers came from a vase that stood on a small table near Axeles.
"You have not put fresh ones in to-night,"
Thurston said, referring to the shriveled leaves

Thurstan said, reterring to the man and hand, be was crumbling in his disengaged hand.

"You" the answered, quietly. "I did not "No," she answered, quietly, pick any flowers to-night."

What have you been doing, sweet?" he what have you been doing, sweet? he asked, yawning slightly. He was so good-tem-pered, he could afford to feign an interest he did not feel in her proceedings; but he might have spared himself this little effort of polite-ness, for Axalea did not hear, or, if she heard, did not heed his question.

Could any lorn wayfarer have peeped in at the easement his heart would have throbbed with envy at the apparent luxuriousness of the scene within.

Dusky grapes were piled up in an old china dish near Thurstan's hand; in the exuberance of his content he dangled the misty berries before Azalea's face, rubbing off the bloom against the red lips which refused to open and receive them and then confined them himself has them, and then swallowing them himself, be-tween the passes of his song.

The room seemed o'erbrimming with comfort.

Even Thurstan was dimly affected by the sensu-ous repose of the hour.

"I almost wish that I were not going to-morrow," he sighed.

"Stay, then," Analea said. They were the first words she had spoken this evening, but Thursten had been too preoccupied to observe her silence.

"Do you wish me to stay?" He looked into her face with a sudden access of passion thrill-ing his heart and brightening his eyes. He would have drawn her toward him, but she averted her head, and quietly disengaged his arms from her waist.

"I do not know," she said; and this time he was struck by the faintness of her tones.

was struck by the faintness of her tones.

"You are tired," he said, kindly. "It is bedtime. Shall I carry you up stairs?"

She shook her head; so he passed before her and bounded lightly up the dark oak steps, singing and smiling as he went.

His heart was holding festival that night, while hers was black with storm.

CHAPTER XLIV.

HOW THEY PARTED.

Tun night was far advanced, and Thurstan slept soundly, happily unconscious of all the tragedy in the wakeful face bent over his. She had watched him thus for some hours; he had drawn her head to his shoulder and hade her lie there, and she obeyed at first, but as soon as he slept she sat up again, feeling as if she were suffocated by his touch. The blank dullwere sufficiented by his touch. The blank dullness of her pain was passing away. She no longer stared at his face without meaning. She no longer asked herself "Is it so?" In those dark hours the doubt had strengthened into terrible distinctness. She looked at his hand still warm with the clasp of her own, at his lips which had lately sought hers with a sleepy good-night kias; in her heart she repelled the treathery of his caresses, and loathed the cheat he put on her.

"You are false—false—false," she said.
"Your face is hateful to me."

He turned his head into the line of a moon-

He turned his head into the line of a moon-beam, that streamed across his pillow, and a wild thought came into ber mind.

wild thought came into ber mind.

"Supposing that moonbeam could kill you. Supposing that you were to die to-night, that you could not move again. Suppose, Thurstan, that I were to make you so that she could never hear your footstep, or blush at your voice, or roturn your kisses excepting in memory. I should grudge her the memory, though, and should have to kill her so that she might not think of you." think of you."

How handsome he looked as he slumbered thus—the moonlight shining on his close curled head, round throat, and noble outline of chest, the somewhat stern character of his beauty soft-ened by the pathetic helplessness of sleep !

"He was not meant to die yet," she mused, as she leaned her chin on her hand and watched him with white face and burning eyes. He was not meant to die yet, she thought, not until he had worn out all that strength, until his full voice was cracked and thin, his bright eyes dull, and his firm steps feeble; but if he died now he would tell no more lies, would die in the bloom of manhood, in her arms, hers would be the last kiss he felt—he should never rise from that bed to meet another woman's welcome!

The dark thought was standing out clear in her mind now; that which her heart foreboded when she heard his careless laugh by the fire-place down stairs, was now fashioned into a determination.

"He must die, he must die!" she repeated to herself, and the clock that chimed on the stairs, and the branch that beat against the window and the branch that beat against the wholey-pane, seemed to echo her words. She started when she heard a faint chirrup and stir in the elm-tree outside. "It will soon be morning," she thought. She unclasped his hand gently from her arm, and laid it by his side; then she slid away from the bed, and felt her way to the

and away from the bed, and felt her way to the pistol-case that stood on the drawers near Mowbray's head,

"I always said it was dangerous, keeping loaded pistols in the room; but Thurstan liked to have some protection in this lonely old house—he did not think who would use them against him—but then he should not have murdered me first."

She stole back noiselessly, her delicate little hand overborne by the weight of the deadly in-strument is carried, and then she crept into bed looked again at the sleep Why should he not die?

This man had been the only human thing she had ever cherished. No mother's hand had ever blessed her head; no sister had laughed and wept by her side during youth's April season of blithe joy and impulsive sorrow. But she did not feel that she had missed any thing from her life after that she had missed any thing from her life after she knew Thursten Mowbray. She reverenced his slightest word; her vivid sympathies had made his wishes her own. She lowered her fine intellect by striving to bring it to the level of his narrow capabilities. She cared not for heights he could not ascend. She took no pleasure in perceiving a poetical when he could only see the practical aspects.

So far from feeling discomfort at being misunderstood, it was the constant endeavor of her heart to restrain the soarings of a mind that was apt to range above the scope of her lover's men tal vision.

Some women had loved Thurstan Mowbray for the benefits they had reaped from his hands; others had fed his vanity with ephemeral devo-tion, born of lust and idleness; many had given him love-tokens worth gold and silver; but this feet. woman had trampled down her mind at his feet, and every faculty of her being rejoiced in the sacrifice—if sacrifice it could be called; for her whole heart gloried in its consummation. He only because it pleased him; she exulted in life only when the day was brightened by his pres-ence. She would not have cared if all the hours of his absence had been struck out of her total of existence; without him, her heart ached with beaviness; with him, she was as a bird mad with joy because spring has come.

All the divine fervor with which a southern worshiper lays her best and purest thoughts at the feet of some imaged deity; all the intense half-savage tenderness with which a wild animal cherishes its young, this desolate woman had lavished on him who was the one life of her life, lavished on him who was the one life of her life, the alpha and omega of her existence. And now she was watching him there, while the dark hours slipped into gray, and asking her heart why her hand should not murder all the heantiful part of her life, since it had turned into treachery, foulness, and falsehood. Why should those dark eyes open again to look a lie into her own? Why should he ever know light or speech again, since he had made light loathsome, and sound intolerable to her?

Between his face and here kent rising the elit-

Between his face and hers kept rising the glit-ter of two sentences. She could even see the shape of the letters, and recognize his handwriting; but they quivered perpetually, so that they made her eyes ache. So she hid her face in her hands, and when she next looked up they were gone; but she heard them singing in her ears, "I never loved any but you:" "so-morrow I shell king you are?"

shall kiss you again,"
"To-morrow I shall kiss you again," Azales repeated, vaguely; then she touched his lips with a sort of tender pity. "No, they will never kiss living thing again; they will be too cold and stiff; but I shall kiss them, for then they will not be able to stab me with lies, to dishonor me by inconstancy."

The clock struck four. She looked hurriedly

"Supposing he were to wake," she thought;

"he would not let me do it."

She put her hand on the trigger of the pistol, and lifted it to a level with his breast. She leaned over him, so that her hair fell in shadowy profusion over the pistol, and over the warm beav-ng bosom it almost touched.

He had deceived and injured her; but her large heart would have pardoned him that wrong. He might have withered her body with physical torture, and she would have kissed him, smiling the while; he had cramped her mind, and she had hugged the mental fetters, judging them to be sweeter than crowns of honor; but against this injury the whole of her passionate nature this injury are whose of her passionate nature rebelled; in proportion to the greatness of her love was the mightiness of its wreck.

When her thoughts first collected themselves from the miserable chaos of confusion and de-spair in which the discovery of his falsehood had plunged them, she had prayed, "Let me die."

But afterward, when she again felt the magic of his touch, the caress of his lips, a fierce thrill of jealousy kindled her dull anguish into fury.

"Rather than have you touch her, rather than be left here alone to broad over her love passages with my other self, I would pass eternity in torment.

She never moved her eyes from his face when she put her hand down on that cold little toy of iron, which was to turn sleep into death.

Her pale lips never quivered; the madness of much thought, the rack of intolerable suffering, had blighted all softer signs of emotion from her face. The tenseness of her agony found expression but in one idea:

" He shall die!" "He shall die!"

He lay there a model of manly strength and human beauty, helpless in his unconsciousness as a feeble infant. She steadied her hold on the pistol, and put the other arm about his neck. She thought she would kiss him and pull the trigger at the same moment. She would have the last embrace of his living lips.

She slid her fingers round his threat, and (Thurstan Mowhers never knew how near he

She slid her fingers round his throat, and (Thurstan Mowbray never knew how near he was to solving the great peut-être in the gray dawn of this autumn morning) disturbed by the movement, or stirred by some vagrant dream, he turned toward her with a smile, and putting out his arm, drew her hand and the deadly instrument it held, over his boson; then drooping his head on her breast, he relapsed again deep slumber. She stared deep slumber.

She stared at him with wild eyes while he gathered her in his arms. She felt the hand and that which it held sliding over the beating pulses of his heart. She raised herself and looked first at it, and then with a deep-drawn breath she bowed her face on his hands, and covered she bowed her face on his hands, and covered them with kisses, and her slender form was shaken by husky passionate sobs and tears. The unnatural strain had given way; the flerce jeal-onsy, the murderous resolve, all melted into a murmurous sound of careesing words, a rush of bitter tears. "Oh, my love, my love; how can I help lov-ing you? Can I tear my heart from my body? Can I blot out all the days and hours when I lived, and when you were my life; for it is I that am dead. I am dead, Thurstan, and you have killed me."

She removed the pistol gently from its proximity, so perilous to the sleeper, and replaced it in the case. Then she knelt down and tried to pray; to give thanks to Heaven for having preserved her from the commission of a great sin, with its inheritance of bitter remorse; but in her heart she knew that it was not an inspiration of repentance, but her lover's unwitting carees that had held her hand from his descruction, and she had held her hand from his descriction, and she did not dare to lift up her face to God; but after mususuring a mechanical formula of prayer, she rose and once more bent over her lover's head.

"I will never see you wake, not that I would hurt you," she added, with a shudder, at the memory."

an hour since; "but because I could not bear to hear your voice or to meet your eyes—the old frenzy might come back, and then you would old frensy might come back, and then you would not be safe from me."

Then her paic face, passion-warped and stained with toars, hovered an instant above the sleeping man, and her lips closed on his in the last kiss she was ever to give human creature.

How much of despair, how little of sweetness lived in that caress, those who have known the sore trouble of a broken heart can best tell.

Later in the morning, when Thurstan awoke and found there was no Asalea to attend him at his morning meal, he was naturally disturbed and irritated. He supposed that she had gone out for one of those early walks she was so fond of; he thought it very unkind and inconsistent of her. She might have remembered that he was obliged to leave by an early train. He grumbled and frested all breakfast-time; he even went to the window once or twice, to see if she were coming, and then he swore, drank down his coffee, which was smoked (this adding to his fielding of injury), and taking out his watch, cal-culated how long he could afford to linger ere it would be necessary for him to set out for the sta-tion. He waited until the last moment, and then started off; he would much like to have kissed her ere he went. He would have liked by his caresess to atone in some measure for the injury of which he believed she was unconscious; but he had appointed with Lady Di to meet her in town at a certain hour, and if he missed this train he would be too late. So he scrawled the following note to Azalen:

"Decreat little woman. Why are you not here to bid me good-by? I miss you dreadfully. If you want to write to me, address to the Club. I would not leave by this train, but I have an important business engagement in London" (how mean a detected lie makes a man seem!) "which have a life and expect to be able." I can not postpone. I do not expect to be able to get away again for some time, as I've had all my long leave out; but be sure I shall came back to you as soon as I can.—Your ever loving, T. M."

CHAPTER XLV.

THE END OF ALL THINGS.

THAT night Douglas received a scrap of paper on which was written the word "Come."

The only words he attered when he read this were, "So soon!" and then he heate to Auriel.

"Miss Azalea seems very ill," old Sally said, meeting him with a face more wearied than alarmed. Sally's life had been such a long con-tinued weariness that she was deadened to any keen phase of feeling. With her, and such as she, the lightning flash of emotion is rarely felt: the cloud only decrease.

she, the lightning flash of emotion is rarely feit:
the cloud only deepens.

The painful excitement of the last twenty-four hours had been firtal to a naturally delicate and highly sensitive organization, and Douglas found.
Azalea prostrated by the first symptoms of the fever called inflammatory.

"My head aches so, Robert," she mouned, as he stood beside her, "and I feel, oh, se

He offered to send for Mowhray, but she showed such distress at the idea that he did not again repeat the suggestion. It was not until she had been ill for several days—it was not un-til the doctor looked grave, and his own heart stood still with fear—that he thought it his duty stock still with fear—that he thought it is only to acquaint Mowbray of her danger. He wrote to the latter's address in London, but gained no answer, the truth being that Captain Mowbray had, by a great exertion of influence, induced the authorities to grant him a week's more leave, which week he was spending pleasantly at Paris, whither Lady Di Merton was also gene.

which week he was spending pleasantly at Paris, whither Lady Di Merton was also gone.

As Azalea's fever increased and delirium discredered her mind, Douglas could not but rejoice in Mowbray's absence. To grant her a moment's pleasure be would have sacrificed his strongest wishes; but he could not conceal from himself what little comfect remained to him in this hour. when the comfort remained to him in this hour of her danger consisted in the fact of his being her sole friend. In health and happiness she was Mowbray's. Now, in the depths of her physical and mental distress, he could claim her his.

"This fever is technically called Synochres," the doctor said, between his pinches of snuff. "If she has any other friends, I would advise you to send for them."
"Robert!"

"My darling!"

"Send those people away." "There is no one here, darling. No one but Robert, who loves you."

"Take care of me, Robert." "I will; I do. You know I do. Look at me, zalea. See, I have got your hand." His harsh voice melted into a murmur of in-effable tenderness as he knelt down and clasped in his hand the girl's slender fingers.

She withdrew them slowly; her thoughts seemed variable and insequent as the autumn leaves that whirled past the window. For a while she looked down thoughtfully on some flowers Douglas had placed near her pillow; she drew them toward her, and looked at them with curious intentness, then she commenced hastily plucking them to pieces. "These are the people who have been unkind to me," she said, hurriedly. "Let us destroy them and fling them away. Not fling them away," she added, suddenly, in a tone of gentle courtesy. "You see, Robert, the scent is oppressive, and it would be better to put them out of the room because I am fill, you know."

of the room because I am ill, you know."

These sudden recalls of reason, the s of her mind to reassert its power, and the of Douglas than her wildest hallucinations. His heart felt to be breaking. Flinging himself on his knees, he looked up with all his soul's agony his knees, he looked up with all his soul's agony concentrated in his eyes. "O Father!" he cried, "resteen her mind. Give back the one godlike attribute of our nature. How can I comfort her when her thoughts have wandered beyond the pals of human reason? How can I tell her of Thee, when she is as heedless of my meaning as the vilest brute creature of Thy earth?"

"Are you looking at the sunset?" Asales said, softly. "I think there will be rain to-morrow; the sun is setting behind a bank of clouds. It is very late. I shall go to sleep." She turned on her side, and Douglas lifted away, reverentially, the long trails of loose fair hair that fell over her face with the movement. har that but over her face with the movement. Her beautiful tresses had the dull blight of illness on them; but to Douglas they were lovelier now than in the old days, when they glistened like spun gold in the sunshine, and danced in every sigh of the wind.

She slumbered for a while a short uneasy sleep; and Douglas ast watching her, his face calm, but dark with restrained pain. He dared not re-lieve the savage agony of his grief by allowing his breast to shake with one sob, or his eyes to be dimmed for an instant, lest she should wonder at and ask the cause of his trouble. could only sit there, assuming a look of content whenever she turned her face toward him, and meeting the wistful doubt in her eyes with a reassuring smile. Such smiles they were!—they seared his face with deeper wrinkles, and mocked him in the opposite mirror with their ghastly reflections of assumed mirth. Such smiles as a mother gives to the terrified glances of her babe when it sobs out its innocent life in the agony of a fell disease:

—such as those with which the Israelitish General may have greeted the welcoming eyes of his doomed daughter. Such smiles as are fraught doomed daughter. Such similes as are trangent with sharper pain than our hottest team—were these which this man gave as a tribute to the last and greatest love of his life.

For she had slept many minutes Azalea awoke, passing, her eyes dilated and anxious.

"Oh!" she cried, "Topax is running away with the wind over the hills, and I can't catch him, he goes so fast; he will run into the clouds, nim, he goes so last; he wall run into the clouds, and then he will never come back." I will stop him," Douglas said, soothingly; "I will go after him at once. But ch, Azalea!" he added, with a breaking voice, "why do you look at me so—don't you know me?"

She curred the strangely lustrous eyes on him, and, staring at him fixedly, said:

"Not in the least; but I am happy to make your acquaintance. I suppose they have sent you to take me away? It is too soon; I will

"(th! not yet—not yet; God forbid that it should be yet!" Dougha said, bowing his face on her hands, and kissing them with despairing

A sky smile irradiated her wan face.

"You must be Thurstan," she whispered.
"No one but Thurstan loved me like that; he was my husband, you know."

"It is—it is time for you to sleep," Donglas stammered, as he gently let her hands free. "It is bedtime; try and sleep now."

"I always seem to be going to bed," she mut-tered, impatiently. "Why do I never get up in the moreing? I shall get up to-morrow and feed the higher more!" the birds myself.

Presently she flung her arms up in a paroxysm I can not see!" she cried; "take me to the light.

The room was ablaze with candle-light; and Douglas became nearly frantic at the sight of her vehement agitation, and the inefficacy of his efforts to prove to her that she was not in

"Oh, it is all dark—so dark," she mouned; "and I shall be lost. He will never find me any more. Nhe strock her arms out wildly, crying that "It was coming after her again." Then she clong convulsively to Donglas, entreating him to save her—not to let it take her away down the dark road between the clouds.

"Azalea, my child, it is nothing," arged Dong-las, in the extremity of his distress. "Nothing shall touch you; nothing shall harm you."

But his heart stood still when he remembered how near the silent enemy was to the shrinking form in his arms-an enemy no prayers could appeare, no terror move; an enemy from which not all the dumb anguish of his imploring eyes nor the passionate throbbings of his aching heart, could shield her.

She sank down, at last, shuddering violently; still clutching his hands and entreating to be taken to the daylight. Douglas looked at the dark shadows of the deepening night, and prayed that she might sleep away the long, dreary hours that must elapse before the first gray tint of dawn crept up behind the black fir grove. She was quiet at length from sheer exhaust-

She was quies as sength from sneer exhansi-ion, but her eyes were still alert and anxioms; and the drawn, pale face quivered painfully as her gaze followed every waver of the flickering candle-flame. The miserable, heart-weary watch-er poured out a few drops of seclarive, and held it to her lips. The kindly draught tured the troued spirit to rest, and in a few minutes Douglas had the negative satisfaction of seeing the drawn face relax, and the distended eyes soften in the

During the lagging hours that followed, Douglas sat motionless, his haggard face turned to-ward the window. He dared not look long at the wreck of the creature he so loved, lest his composure should give way, and she be startled from simpler by his passion of ismentation. He cursed the hours that were slipping away so fast, bearing with them the last minutes of were the contraction of the contraction between an angle of the contraction of the contra her numbered hours; he cursed the darkness that crawled so heavily over tree and meadow, sky and water; and yet more he loathed the thought of the dawn, which might rise for him

She was dying—his darling "was dying—dy-ing—dying," he repeated the word to himself in a monotonous whisper; and as he whispered it, he locked his hands one in the other until the indentation of his finger-nails drew blood. had seen death before; he had seen it come by strange chances to men when they had been full of mirth and proud in strength; he had seen it waste their noble thews and sinews into the weakness of a child's limbs. He had seen it met with resignation and with blasphemy—with mad terror and with peaceful joy. He knew its every aspect, and he had learned only too well to recognize its infallible signs.

He would have given all his worldly wealth to any man who had said to him to-night, "Yet hope;" but in his heart be knew that the look had come to Azalea's face which comes but once in life, and that when life is ebbing into death —a look weird-like, but not unlovely—full of strange pathos, as if the perishing flesh rebelled against its approaching dissolution, yet with the foretaste of immortal peace on the screne brow

For some hours she slept quietly, undisturbed by the beating of the ash boughs against the window, or by the lond surging of the rising wind. A storm was thickening the cloudy, dens ness, and without all was turmoil and confusion. Sudden bursts of rain and hail dashed violently against the window-panes; streams whirled down the water-pipes, wearying Douglas's ears by their monotonous splash. With that curious cognizance of detail which a mind tense with supreme suffering sometimes exhibits, he thought how perturbed must be all the thousand tiny inhabitants of the pipe's hollow, which, having nestled there for warmth and shelter, were now dislodged by this unexpected deluge. How fast the flat wood-louse was running over the leaden ridges—how rapidly the spider was swinging up his flight from that dreadful chasm, leaving his half-dissected fly to be swept away by the tor-

Then his thought wandered away to far-off cenes. He imaged to himself how loudly the sea must now be roaring over sands and rocks. He pictured wild flights of sea-gulls whirling He pictured wild flights of sea-gulis wharing amidst the foam, portents of storm and disaster. He remembered one dark night of storm years and years ago, when he had seen strong men sucked down like wafts of sea-weed under the great waters. He thought what they must be now, his whilom friends and companions, and shuddered at the thought. At least his darling would rest at peace in an earthly bed; he would know where to seek her; her sleep should be guarded by gay flowers and sculptured effigy. Better so than to be tossed in annihilation by the eternal recurrence of mosning waves.

He was aroused from his vague meditations by the sound of a low, mirthless laugh. His beart seemed to grow auditable. beart seemed to grow suddenly numb, and then to bound into a thousand mad pulsations. Azales was awake, and was pointing with her finger toward a distant corner of the room.

"Isn't it funny?" she whispered; "he dances there every night with the princess. He says he does it on purpose to amuse me, but it does not amuse me; it hurts me dreadfully." These last words escaped her lips with a sharp cry of

"Oh!" she moaned, "it hurts me so much, much!" She put her hand to her side, and so much!" She put her hand to see such, and panted with agony.

Donglas brought a flannel steeped in embro-cation, and placed it gently over her chest.

"That is better," she sighed. Then she turned herself on her side, and faced the win-

"Open the shutters, Robert," she said, pres-rly; "the light is coming. I hear the birds ently;

It was a dreary scene the opened window revealed to them.

The wind was still storming through the wet beaves, and the rain had settled into a sullen mist, which hung thickly over the upland. The golden-brown and dappie-skinned cattle moved, dull, hucless shadows, through the white denseness of the meadow; on the lake the flat leaves of the water-lilies were ruffled and torn from their stems by the rush of the swollen stream. The moving sound of waters and the faint chirp of a bird were all that broke the stillness of the colorless dawn.

"Will he come, do you think?" Azalea said, in the hollow voice that had become habitual to her. "Do you see him coming?"

Then observing Douglas hesitate and look perplexed, she added, with asperity,

"Take me to the window, and let me look for myself." He pushed her bed in the direction she indicated, and she tried to raise herself up, but fell back, weeping with weakness and vexation. "Lift me up," she wailed. "I can not move by myself." He propped her up on her pillows, and she in-clined her head toward the casement, and rested clined her near some.

ber cheek on the pene.

"I can't see him," she said, after she had looked some time with eager, wistful eyes in looked some time with eager, wistful eyes in the avenue. "But perhaps it the direction of the avenue.
is because there is no sun."

She drooped down again among the cushions, and cried a little to herself. Douglas bent down and cried a little to nersels. Douglas bent down to hear what it was she was murmuring. The word was choked by quick breaths and sights heavy with tears, but it counded like "Thurs-tan," and Douglas drew back, stung by inteler-able pain.

"Is it always to be so?" he shought, bisterly.
"Is love and faith which endure to the end to be nothing compared with the passion which glorified an hour, but has left the whole of her life desolate? Will she never repay me for all, by giving me at least one of her dying thoughts?" He felt stiffed and weary beyond the power of endorance. He rang the bell and summoned of engarance. He rang the ben and summoned old Sally to come and take his place for a few seconds by the sick-bed. Bidding her becken to him immediately, should any change occur in the patient, he ran down stairs, and went into the patient, he ran down stars, and went into the wet meadows, keeping, as he had promised, within sight of Azalea's window. The sullen coolness of the dim morning assorted better with his feelings than the gayety of sunshine could have done. He stooped down among the reeds, and dipped his head into the gray waters. Then he went into the old dilapidated conservatory, and felt about the tangles of the vine until he had detected some grayer rights than the others. had detected some grapes riper than the others. She could not swallow them now, but they might serve to refresh her dry lips. He did not dare pluck her any of the roses that drooped heavy with rain-drops over the conservatory door. To her distempered imagination, the beautiful playthings of her youth appeared something a cing and fearful.

"Who could ever have thought that Azalea would be afraid of flowers?" Douglas reflected, sadly.

"Sir, she is asking for you," a feeble veice called from above; and in another second he called from above; and her door. He was fain to pause when there. Something like dread held back his footsteps, and accelerated the hurried beatings of his heart.

When he entered he met Azalea's eyes, and understood from their expression that she was conscious.

"I am better," she said, smiling sweetly as she spoke.

The old woman hurried from the room, weeping.

"Oh dear, dear!" she sobbed. "To see that poor child smile with a face like that quite breaks my heart."

"Will you please give me a looking-glass?"

"Will you please give me a looking-glass?"

Azales continued, speaking the more deliberate-ly from the difficulty she had in articulating.

He brought her a hand-mirror, and, taking it between her wax-like fingers, she looked at herself intently.

It was with a kind of wonder mixed with pa-It was with a kind of wonder mixed with pa-thetic self-pity that she surveyed the reflection of her altered features. What she beheld were their pinched nostrils; drawn, coloriess cheeks; eyes gleaming with unnatural fire from their pur-ple shadows; floats of pale, dull hair drooping forlornly over her shoulders.

"It don't look like me," she gasped. "Take it away." Douglas removed the mirror, and she fell back on her pillow, and remained motionless for some time. Presently, after marmaring some inartic-ulate sounds, and with a great effort, she uttered one word distinctly. It was—

At the same moment she endeavored to clasp her hands together, and Douglas understood th at last the truth was clear to her, and that she

He helped her to twine the poor wax-like fingers together, and then he knelt down by her side. He judged that a familiar, well-loved for-mula would be sweeter to her ears than any other form of worship; and he said the Lord's Prayer very slowly, for she was following the words with her lips, although they made no sound.

Her eyes half closed, and such a change came over her face that he leaned over her, crying-

"Azalea! oh, my darling-my darling!"
She looked up at him with a gleam of recognition in her eyes, and, putting out her hand, patted his bowed head kindly, "Dear—old—Robert," she said, slowly;

"God-bless-She broke off with a low sigh; but in these few words lay the recompense of all the years of suffering Robert Douglas had endured. The dreamless sleep was creeping on her very fast now. She did not speak again until the warm splen-dor of the sun streamed into the room and over

Then she mised herself a little, and looked

"Then she raised herself a little, and located out at the broadening day.

"The storm is over," she said; "and even this—oh, Robert—this is death!"

As she spoke her brow contracted and earth's last pang seized her.

HOME AND FOREIGN GOSSIP.

THE peach crop this year promises to be immense t is said that Delaware alone will yield over two million backets. Any one passing through the streets or our city will readily believe, from the abundance of fruit displayed, that the reports from the peach districts may be correct; namely, that the are weighed down with ripening fruit. Now is trees are weighed down with ripening fruit. Now as the time for provident housewives to can the luctions, velvet-coated bean "as. It will cost but little to lay in a good supply; and when carefully canned, they pre-serve their freshness perfectly.

A minister who has been recruiting among the springs of Saratogs writes that the belle of the sea-on wears a dress valued at the amount of his salary for two years, and a set of diamonds equal in value to room attached, gas-fixtures and cabinot-organ in-cluded! the cost of a comfortable mission church, with infant

The Alum Springs, located in Rockbridge County, Virginia, are becoming quite fashionable. In con-pection with the principal hotel there are eighteen one-story brick cottages, each thirty-two feet square and also several other two-story cottages—all pleas-ant and airy, and furnished with poeticoes. Rockbridge Alum Springe are about eight miles from Goshen, on the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad. There are five springs within a space of twenty-five feet, but only four are used, one having lost lis effi-cleary a few years ago. Alum gives the predominant taste to the waters, although free sulphuric acid, lime, magnesia, protoxide of iron, and other medicinal agents are present. The water is not distasteful, and is drank freely by visitors.

THE REPORT OF THE PARTY OF THE PARTY.

agents are present. The water is not distasteful, and is drank freely by visitors.

In the way of personals it may be mentioned that Bayard Taylor has been elected non-resident Professor of German literature in Cornell University, a post for which he is well fatted.—Mrs. Stowe's "Obtowe" has reached a sale of twenty-five thomand copies,—Ida Lewis is overwhelmed with visitors.—By-the-way, they have an "Ida Lewis" in Ohio. A gentleman and his wife, in going to the ferry near Bellevas, Ohio, get into water fitness feet deep. Miss Lenora Smith, hearing their cries of distress, hastened to their assistance, and is an old skiff, half full of water, propelled with a stick, succeeded in saving the man, and with his help record the woman, two horses, and wagon.—Louisa Muhlbach has recently received a splendid tenservice from some of her American admirers.—At the bail given to the President at the Stetson House, Long-Branch, Mrs. Grant's dress was reported by an observer to have been in "marked contrast to hundreds who promenaded about her with dresses can in such fashion that even the most blast eye could not fall to note their shameless immodesty."—Tennyson is said to be engaged on another poem. Subject, the ancient legend of the Quest of the Holy Grail—a cap said to have been made of a single enserald, out of which the Saviour drank at the Last Supper, and which was stiled with His blood at His crucificion.

The great Colorado Caton, into whose mysterious filled with His blood at His crucifizion.

The great Coloredo Caton, into whose mysterions depths the Powell Expedition have ventured, is, by report, about five hundred miles long—a subterra-nean river, with rapids and cascades, flowing be-tween walls of rock from two to three thousand feet

The expansion for the Hoosac Tunnel is going forward rapidly. During the mouth of Jane they drove the heading in 180 feet at the east end, and equal progress was made in July. The new contractors are having drills made to operate on the roof, which are having drills made to operate on the roof, which will be ready in September, and by which they expect to increase their progress very materially. They are also erecting buildings near the month of the innuel for four additional compressors. They will be run by steam. They have now 200 men at work at the east end, divided in three gangs, which work night and day continuously, resting only from midnight Saturday to midnight Sunday. The central shaft is down about 700 feet, and is such at the rate of more than a foot a day. At the west end they have just got fairly at work, and they expect to make over 100 feet a month.

A ragged little damsel who viewed the awe-inspir-ing eclipse from the steps of the City Hall, seems to have been deeply impressed by the nuwavering decis-ion with which the moon asserted her feminine rights. "My!" she exclaimed, as the dark intruder pursued her undeviating way, "han't she gouged him awful!"

It is announced that, in consequence of the eportons issues of $10 greenback notes, Secretary Boutwell has concluded to have a new issue of all denominations of greenbacks, from $1 to the $1000 notes. The designs are entirely new, and no likeness of any living man will be placed on any note.

The CornAdi Magazine contains a long and enter-taining article entitled "Priends in High Latindoe," which gives a very good idea of life in Greenland. Their language is curious; it appears to be composed of immensely long words. What would a hardware merchant think if an "intelligent foreigner," clad in fur, five feet four in height, and with very long black half hanging over very fix and very dirty cheeks, were to come into his shop, and in a voice loud enough to be beard at the North Pole short, as he threw siz-pence on the counter, "Sarehmanreaferswormfare-wareoutetak?" Yet this is done every day in 70° north latitude, and all this tremendone collection of north latitude, and all this tremendone collection of letters strung together means only, "You must try and get me a good knife!" This is really several words; but it is in value that you ask any notive to separate them. White shirting is known to the Greenlander as extensiologicals, while callot takes the ferring form of disposes parasiseistitit; a pocket-knife is known as envirological parasiseistit; and a large rkin is called uncoringuous contrologicals.

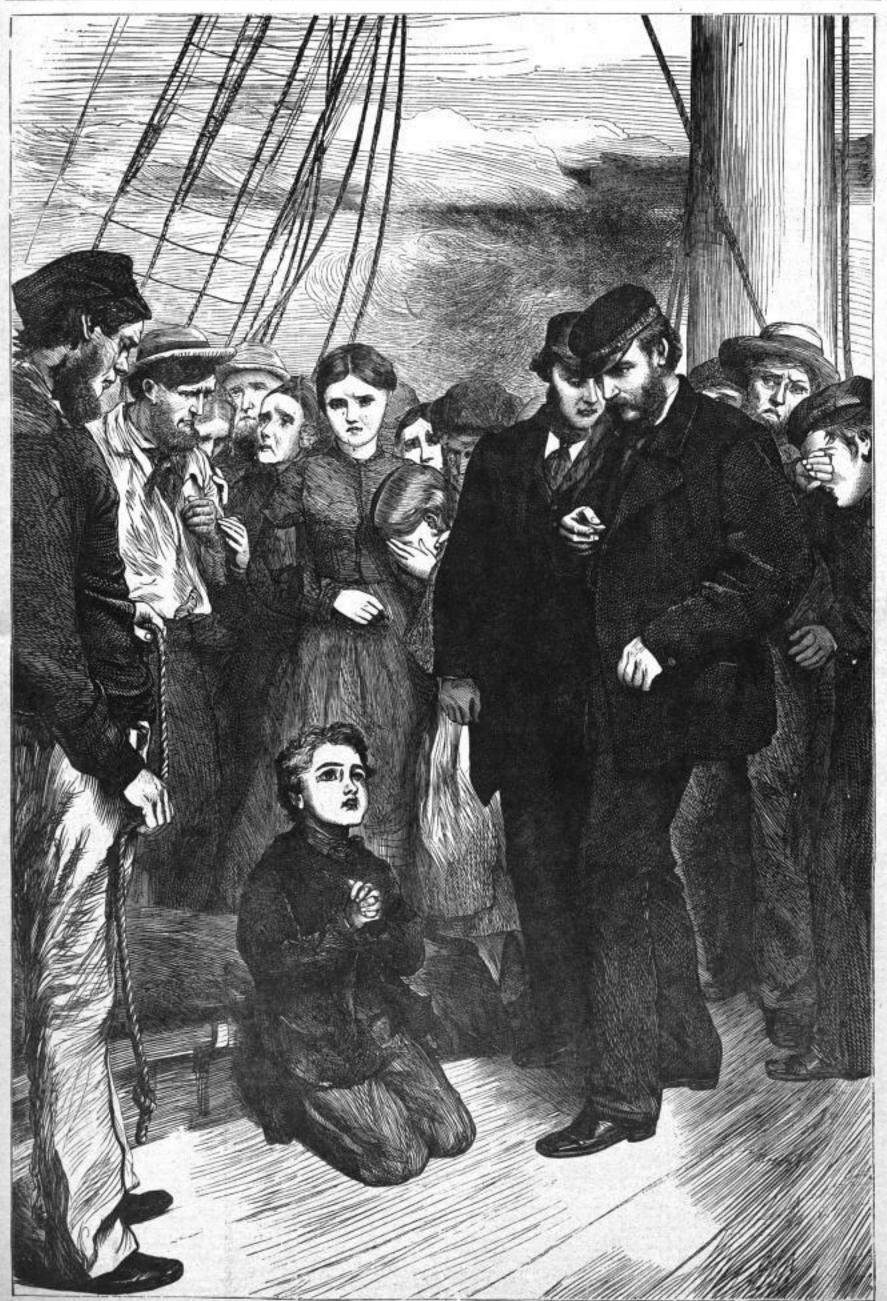

A new phase of medical practice has been developed A new phase of medical practice as deed developed at Jefferson, Wisconsin. A German physician, think-ing an infant could not live, consulted the parents, and all agreeing that the suferings of the child should be ended, he administered potson, which killed it.

The most remarkable - happy family* halls from Chicago, and consists of one wife, two husbands, and four children, all living quietly and contentedly in one small cottage! The woman has been married in legal form to both men; but it was only after the first husband was reported killed in battle that she married the second. The first bushand returned aftmarried the second. The first bushend returned after a long absence, but, unlike Enoch Arden, he falled to die of a broken heart when he found his wife the spouse of another. A council of war was held and it was mutually agreed that they would all dwell to-gether, both husbands continuing to be the "Rege lords" of the woman on equal terms.

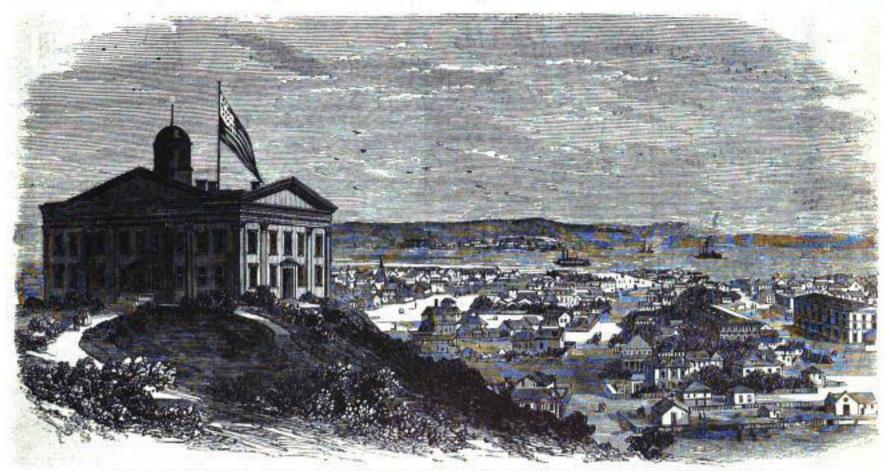

A lion, belonging to a menagerie in Madras, thrust its tall one day into the window of a tiger's ca the introding member was severely injured. The ilon became sick, and his keepers judged that his tail must be amputated to save his life. The operation was performed not many weeks ago, after his ma-jesty had inhaled five ounces of chloroform. The penty ment measured his cage after he had fallen into a deep sleep and took off the diseased appendage. But so deep was the lethargy that his longs had to be pumped into action by mortal aid before he could be

It has been computed that in the United States no less than seven pounds of coffee are annually con-sumed for each person; while in England the areasumed for each person; while in England the area-age for each person is one pound and enc-eighth. In England tea is largely used as a breakfast beverage; and, moreover, adulteration is even more extensively practiced than in this country, although it is distress-ingly common among us. In the "eld country" barley, beans, and peas, and empty other counterfeits, are sold as coffee; and it is said that more than half of what is retailed as ground coffee never grew on a Statistics show that the proportion of deaths among the infant population, as compared with the total num-ber of deaths, is greater in New York then in any city in Great Britain, if it does not surpass that of any city n Christendom. Bad sir, damp apartments, im diet, and overcrowding, are the chief causes of this excessive mortality.

AN HEROIC BOY .- [SEE PAGE 557.]

THE UNION PACIFIC RAILBOAD-OMAHA, NEBRASKA, THE EASTERN TERMINUS, AS SEEN FROM THE OLD CAPITOL.

AN HEROIC BOY.

A raw weeks ago, on board an English steam-er, a little ragged boy, aged nine years, was dis-covered on the fourth day of the voyage out from Liverpool to New York, and carried before the first mate, whose duty it was to deal with when questioned as to his object in being stowed away, and who brought him on board, the boy, who had a beautiful sunny face, and eyes that looked like the very mirrors of truth, replied that his step-father did it, because he could not afford to keep him, nor to pay his pas-sage out to Halifax, where he had an aunt who was well off, and to whose house he was going. The mate did not believe the story, in spite of the winning face and truthful accents of the box.

the winning face and truthful accents of the boy. He had seen too much of stowaways to be easily deceived by them, he said; and it was his firm conviction that the boy had been brought on board and provided with food by the sailors.

The little fellow was very roughly handled in |

Day by day he was questioned, and re-questioned, but always with the same result. He did not know a saller on board, and his father alone had secreted him and given him the food alone had secreted him and given him the food which he are.

At lest the mate, wearied by the boy's persistence in the same story, and perhaps a little anxious to inculpate the sailors, seized him one day by the collar, and dragging him to the fore, told him that unless he told the truth in ten minutes from that time, he would hang him from the yard-arm. He then made him sit down under it on the deck. All around him were the passengers and sailors of the midway watch, and in front of him stood the inexorable mate, with his chronometer in his hand, and the other officers of the ship by his side.

It was the finest eight, said our informant, that I ever beheld—to see the pale, proud, sorrowful face of that noble boy, his head erect, his beautiful eyes bright through the tears that suffused them. When eight minutes had fled, the mate told him he had but two minutes to live, and advised him to speak the truth and save his life; but he replied, with the utmost simplicity and sincerity, by asking the mate if he might pray, The mate said nothing, but nodded his head The mate said nothing, but nodded his head and turned as pale as a ghost, and shook with trembling like a reed with the wind. And there, all eyes turned on him, the brave and noble little fellow—this poor boy whom society owned not, and whose own step-father could not care for him—there he knelt with clasped hands and eyes upturned to Heaven, while he repeated audibly the Lord's prayer, and prayed the dear Lord Jesus to take him to heaven.

One informant adds that there then occurred

Our informant adds that there then occurred a scene as of Pentecost. Sobe broke from strong, hard hearts, as the mate sprang forward to the boy and clasped him to his bosom, and kissed him and blessed him, and told him how sincerely he now believed his story, and how glad he was that he had been brave enough to face death, and be willing to sacrifice his life for the truth of his word.

THE UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD.

WE give in this Number two illustrations of WE give in this Number two illustrations of the Union Pacific Railroad. One of these is a view of Omaha, in Nebraska, the eastern terminus of the railway, situated on the Missouri River. The laying of the track was commenced from this place in 1865, and the first section, 100 miles in length, was finished within a twelvemonth. A great railway bridge across the Missouri at Omaha is now in process of construction, which will connect together the Chicago and Northwestern and the Union Pacific railroads. This bridge is to have twelve piers—eleven of them being iron of tubular construction, and the twelfth being of stone. The river at this point runs between the two rival towns of Council Bluffs and Omaha: it is a moddy, shallow, and shifting stream. At present the traveler is conveyed by omnibus and steamboat between the two towns; and the steamboat carries the omnibus, or sometimes as many as a dozen wagons and omnibuses, horses and all, bodily across the stream. The city of Omaha has a population of 16,000 people-one-fourth of the entire population of Nebraska, of which it is the principal town. It was formerly the capital, but has been superseded by Lincoln. Omaha has twelve churches, at one of which—the Roman Catholic churches, at one of which—the forman Cathone—the pews were lately sold by auction for $200 each; there are good schools, also a theatre and newspapers. The Union Pacific Railroad has here large machine-shops and carriage factorics.

THE UNION PACIFIC RAILBOAD-A PRAIRIE ON FIRE IN NEBRASKA.

The Union Pacific line, traversing the vast prairies of the Far West, rises quite impercep-tibly to a high level. The gradients not being more, on the average, than 30 feet in a mile, and nowhere steeper than 96 feet to the mile, through-out a length of 600 miles. It seems like a bound-less plain; at first of grass, then of alkaline sand. Few buffaloes are now to be seen; but a herd of antelopes now and then, and plenty of the little amimals called prairie-dogs.

Our other illustration shows a prairie on fire, as seen at night from the Union Pacific Railroad.

The grass is almost annually burned off in some sections of the country. The lurid flames, the everhanging smoke, an occasional tree or settler's homestead standing up blackly against the night, the stars looking down calmly over all, make a scene not easily forgotten. A curious fact has been observed in connection with these prairie fires. In spots where the progress of settlement has prevented such conflagrations as the one above-mentioned, trees of many varieties spring up spentaneously, in what was before considered a treeless district. It appears that there were living roots of trees in the ground before; and, though burned off when shooting, the vitality of the roots has remained intact.

WHO KILLED COCK ROBIN?

A CLAIM is made by one of the daily papers that some ten years ago British birds were first imported into this country for public purposes; and, furthermore, that to the Commissioners of the Central Park belongs the credit of their first importation,

Without at all desiring to withhold any merit which of right pertains to the aforesaid gentlemen, truth requires us to state that as early as 1846 Mr. Thomas Woodcock, President of the Natural History Society of Brooklyn, at his own expense, brought over in the spring of that year not only many English singing birds, which were freed on their arrival, but also some lumineds of eggs, which boys were hired to deposit in the nests of our own birds in Greenwood and around Brooklyn. It may also be stated that from this importation a colony of English Sky-larks was Without at all desiring to withhold any merit importation a colony of English Sky-larks was established at the Wallahout, the merry occu-pants of which survived two of our winters, as some of the inhabitants of that vicinity can now

The Brooklyn Advertiser, a paper then edited by Mr. Lee, contained an allusion to the circumstance last related in the following poem, which was published in its columns in 1847. It is headed:

The Humble Appeal of a Colony of Bretien Sev-lares to the Sporthers of New York and Broge-lty. Sons at the Walladoff on the First of May, Ten Minutes before Streine.

Awake! Tis morning prime!

High on a broken cloud,
Frem an air-built erag his crimson flag
Our menarch's waving pecod!

Then list to the cheering call,
Ascend the akien and ring;
His heralds we—with minatrel glee—
To usher in our King.

Chorus Mount, mount the saure beights, Our carol is begun; Hall to the dawn of rosy morn! Hall to the Rising Sun!

Far from our notive land, O'er storney occan's rose,
We've brought no trump, but a pesceful pipe,
Which sounds no note of war.
Then list our carol biline,
Kor seek to do us wrong;
In as you see—so enemy,
The Pioneers of Song.

If, in its infant state, Our Colony you shield, We'll peal our thanks in after-years From many a fertile field. Manhattan's maids shall hear Our wildly-warbled strain, Our tales of love, by dell and grove, , Shall cheer the Western swain.

Now, at his Eastern Gate Now, at his Eastern care
Our monarch's coursers prance,
We know his burnished charlot wheels,
We know his golden glance.
No dagging wings are ours,
Our voices clear and sweet;
And, seering high from earth to sky,
The thus our King we greet!

Cho Mount, mount the auure heights, Our carol is begun; Hall to the dawn of rosy morn! Hall to the Kising Sun!

LOVE-LETTERS.

A collection of the more remarkable pre cedents of love-letters, well chosen, would be both useful and interesting; and it would be not importinent to examine how far the modern cilities of intercommunication may not have induced some deterioration in the style of amo-rous composition. Southey, apropos of the loves of Leonard Bacon and his cousin Margaret, ob-serves that theirs were not times in which a aigh could be wafted across the country by mail-coach at the rate of eight miles an hour. What would be have said of these days, in which, for] three cents, half an ounce of assurances of unalterable affection may be transmitted from New York to Boston in a few hours, or, indeed, the sigh (if under twenty words) may be wasted in-stantaneously by electric telegraph? Here we may observe that, in actions for breach of prom-ise of marriage, written evidence of the promise, though its absence may weaken the plaintiff's case, is far from being a sine que non. For example, in a case tried some years ago, in which a marine-store dealer was the defendant, and a damsel of Portsmooth the plaintiff, defendant's counsel insisting very strongly that not a single scmp of love-letter was produced on the other side, the learned judge warned the jury against attaching much significance to that deficiency, observing very pertinently that it was absurd to expect that the man would occupy himself with writing love-letters to the young woman, when all he had to do was to go round into the next street and out his own record her waist. We street and put his arm round her waist. We must not forget to commemorate the ingenuity must not forget to commemorate the ingentury of a pair of poor lovers who managed to correspond gratis by a regular system of unpaid letters. The intelligence was conveyed on the outside of the letter by an ingenious righer of ink-blots and variations in the address. After an attentive persual of the cover the letter was invariably handed back to the postman, with a gentle murmur at the poverty which forbade the damsel to claim the right of opening it by paying the postage. ing the postage.

PAT'S INTRODUCTION TO KI-HI; WID SAYRIOUS REFLICTIONS ON THAT SAME, BY THE MULLICAN OF BALL'S MULLICAN, JUN.

See Hustration on Page 560, SHURE, Sam, is this the naygur They're biathering all about, That's come from San Francisco By the Pacific route? Is this the ugly spalpeen, Wid th' umberella hat, That lives on spiders, dogs, and mice, And ates his ould tom-cat?

Oh, wurrah! B5ildy, darlint,
"Twill be all day wid you;
He'll swaps the carpits, 'tind the beds,
And are cockroaches too. He cares for nothing but his tail, Which he hangs on to stout; The baste, he miver goes to Mass, And needs no Sundays out.

And, Mick, ye roystering emadhawn, Ye'd best throw by the pick; D'ye twig this mollaneolly thap?— He'll make ye cut your stick. And Dick the tailor, too, might well Be stared to see the knave; He'll cut poor Jim the cobbler's corns, And thin the barber shave.

Thin, whin he looks upon the land, Twould make a gardoer cry
To see the praties, at his call,
Rise in their majesty.
He bates Sam Slick the clock-maker, And staps the miner's breath; He's nate on ould tin pots and pans, And on tobacky-death.

Oh, wurrah! for my father's son! That e'er I've come to strife The divit in his pipe.

And, wurrah! for me childer dear,
And for my darlin' wife;
Wid naygurs black, and naygurs brown, I'm harried out of life,

A HERETIC'S GRAVE IN SPAIN.

THE Revolution is not a year old, yet it be-gins already to bear fruit in Spain. The devo-toes of monarchy cursed it for a barren tree, and priestly politicians foretold the speedy stretching of its withered boughs over a field of blood. But the prognostics of neither sycophants nor bigots have thus far come to pass. Without a Bourbon throne, the Spaniards retain their preference for a strong government in the hands of a single megistrate; and without palace miracles, the refusal of the rights of burial to Protestants, or the payment of the Papal Nuncio out of the Civil List, the nation still cherishes the traditions of its ancient faith. The mass of the community have not discarded feelings of reverence; they have only cast off the theory and the discipline of intolerance. In every cathedral the imposing ritual is still performed; and at eventide, from every church tower, is heard the vesper bell. Some of the hoarded treasures of the sacristy been sold that the price may be given to the poor, or that the state may pay its pressing debts; but there has been no hunting down of priests, no description of shrings. Bishops and canons have been returned by popular election to the Constituent Cortes, and there patiently beard in advocacy of their special theories of government and law; but the humble heretic is no longer denied a Christian grave, and the mourning relatives, instead of by night stealing away the body, bear it undisturbed to the public cemetery without disguise or fear. It is but yes-terday that the influence of the English Minister at Madrid was invoked to obtain the concession at Madrid was invoked to obtain the concession of a burial-place for certain Protestants long domiciled in Spain, and against whom there was no other imputation than their contraband creed. Now all is changed; creeds are no longer contraband. There still are bigots every where who would, if they could, put out the true light of the world, and offer men instead their horn-lanten-of orthodoxy. Father Boland had to pay recently £200 damages in an action brought at the Wicklow Assizes by a national schoolmaster whom he had cursed from the altar for contumacy, and announced as certain to come to grief macy, and amounced as certain to come to grief in this world and in the world to come. We can not wonder that the Archbishop of Toledo should have entered his protest against the pub-lic interment, at Madrid recently, of a young lady of Protestant family and faith. M. Rivero, the new Minister of the Interior, acknowledged the unchristian communication with polite form-ality, and gave orders to the police to guard against any attempt at molestation of the mourn-ers assembled round the Heretic Grave. Freedom from interruption in the performance of this most sacred rite by members of a religious mi-nority was a fact of social, moral, and political importance, which the new government could not, and would not, suffer to be overshadowed by any doubt. It was the visible and tangible sym-bol of one of the great principles of the Revolution that had overthrown absolutism in Church and State; and, had it been necessary, the new government was prepared at any hazard to vindicate it. Their precautions were superfluous, for no attempt was made. The populace of Madrid are no longer what they were. Railroads, telegraphs, and a cheap press have Europeanized them. They may not have outgrown all prejudices and passions; where are the mobs that have? But in Spain the odious and debasters conventions are consecuted with the control of the c ing animosities on account of religion, of which their fathers were the dupes and tools, no longer exercise dominion over them. The dust from the human cinder heap of the Quemadaro still daily seems to them to rise to heaven, making the most ignorant and frivolous loiterer in the Puerto del Sol ashamed of the recollections of national bigotry in times gone by.

ARTIFICIAL LIMB MANUFACTUR-ING COMPANY.

A scarme of one-legged veterans, remants of the late war, have procured a charier under the above title, and are located at 500 Penn St., Pittsburgh, Pa. They make the "Anvorsants Laters Socker" List (patented), which is an ingenious contrivance of a number of piles or layers of leather, so trimped over a Piaster-of-Paris cast of the stump that it is adjusted by a lacer, and always conforms exactly to the shape of the injured member. These logs are very highly praised by all who have worn them, for their great comfort and durability. As each shareholder weare the leg, they are certainly most competent to produce what is required; and we would advise any one needing the article to write to this company for a circular,

FACTS FOR THE LADIES.

I HAVE had my WHEELER & WILSON MAchine almost eight years, and have never coased blessing the locky chance that brought it to me. Not one cent has it cost for repairs, and I have broken but one needle in five and a half years. The same needle has gone through "thick and thin;" for since I learned that it would maker to use fine thread or silk for every thing, I never change my needle, but use the same one to saw thick cloth of many folds that I use for hemoring pocket-handkerchiefs. Mas. R. S. Baows. New Haven, Conn.

Dversona Tanasvacure Indigestion, Hearthurn, and Sour Stomach. Fifty Cents per Rox. Mailed for 60c. Sold by druggists. B. G. WELLING, 571 Broadway.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

M ESSES, GREELEY, of the Tribuse, BETANT, of the Post, BENNETT, of the Boraid, BEDOES, of the Express, MARBLE, of the World, RAYMOND, of the Tesses, and DANA, of the Ses—their Portrains, Bographies, and Characters given in the New Annual of PHRENOLOGY and PHYSIOGNOMY for 1870. Also, Landsect, Lorenzo Dow, and Peggy his wife; Bow to choose a Helpment. All for 35 cents. New-men have it. Address S. R. WELLS, 309 E'dway, N. Y.

GET IT PURE.

A pint of Pain Paint for $5, a quart for $8, or a gallon for $20, double strength, with full directions, will be sent to any person, free of Express charges, on receipt of the money at Dr. R. I. Woscorr's Office, ISI Chatham Square, New York; or 6 pint bettles of Annibilator, for Catarrh and Colds in the head, on receipt of $6. Small bottles sold at all Druggists.

Bloomington Nursery. 500 Acres. 18th Year. 10 Green-Houses.

Fruit, Ornamental and Nursery Stock, immense and diable assortment, very low for cash.

Apples—including most magnificent stock of year-lings; also hardy Northern sorts, such as Duchess, Oldenburg, Hislop, Transcendent, and other Grab Ap-ples—1, 2, and 3 year.

Franches, Fuers, Chervies, Phress, Quinces, Grepes, Frent and Rivergreen Trees, Nursery Stocks, Osage Or-cenye Hedge Flands, Rases, own roots; Thilips, Hyaceista, Nurciscus, Iris, Spellis, Lilies, Speciasus, Auruntum, &c. Also superior colored plates of Fruits and Flowers. Bend 10 conts for Catalogues.

F. K. PHOENIX, Bloomington, McLean Co., Ill.

CYPRESS HILLS CEMETERY. OFFICE, No. 124 BOWERY, N. Y., (Corner of Grand Street). COPPLEARS: EDMUND DRIGGS, President. WM. J. PEASE, Vice-President. WILLIAM MILES, Treasures. WILLIAM EDWARDS, Secretary. A. S. JARVIS, HERVEY G. LAW, JOHN L. VAN ALST, ALFRED M. WOOD, Trustees.

N. G. PALMER, Sup't and Surveyor.

THE ESTRY COTTAGE ORGAN is the A best and cheapest. Contains the latest improve sents—For Humana and For Jubilants. J. ESTRY & CO., Sole Manuf're, Bratileboro, Vt.

EMPLOYMENT (Act pape. For particulars, address S. M. SPENCER & CO., Bratileboro, Vt.

FOR BOSTON

BRISTOL and PROVIDENCE, Com't BRAYTON, Com't SHMMONS.

WIII Leave (Alternate Days) Daily,
FROM PIER. 30.—NORTH HIVER,
(Post of Chambers Street),
—AT 5 P.M.—

DODWORTH'S CHLEBRATED ORCHESTRA

Grand Promenade Concert

THE ONLY LINE RUNNING SUNDAY NIGHT.

THE ONLY LINE RUNNING SUNDAY NIGHT.

PROVIDENCE Passengers by the above steamers will leave Pall River at 5:50 A.M.

ARRIVING at 6:20 A.M.

RETURNING will leave Providence at 5 P.M., making direct connection with the boat, and allowing a good night's rest on board each way.

To better accommodate the public,

THE SPLENDID STRAMERS

NEWPORT and OLD COLONY COMMANDER LEWIS, COMMANDER MILLER, WILL LEAVE (Alternate Days) DAILY,

(Sundays excepted),
FROM PIEM—28—NORTH RIVER,
(Foot of Murray Street),
— AT 6:30 P.M.,

BOSTON via NEWPORT.
FREIGHT received at Pier 30 up to 5 P and at Pier 30 up to 630 P.M., each evening. JAMES FISE, Jr., President, M. R. SIMONS, Managing Director, CHAS, H. VAILE, General Passenger Agent, H. H. MANGAM, Preight Agent, NARRAGANERT STRAMMER COMPANY,

For a Million American Homes.

THE COMPLETE ART OF

DRESS-MAKING

For Ten Cents!

Public attention is called to the great practical value of the forthcoming number of

Harper's Bazar,

Dated September 4, 1809, which will contain a Feel Compension or the Asy or Dame-Makino, consisting of 51 Diagrams and En-gravings, accompanied with clear and simple instruc-tions whereby every lady can become her own dressmaker, and cut, iff, and make her cotice wardrobs. Directions are also given for fitting patterns to every figure: for sewing various seams, making trimmings, etc., etc.; and, in a word, for all the details that per-tain to the making of wearing-apparel.

This number of Harren's Banas to also coriched with various other attractive features, especially

A DOUBLE-PAGE CARTOON,

"HUSBAND HUNTING,"

TEOMAS NAST.

Harper's Bazar,

An Illustrated Weekly Journal of Fashion, Pleasure, and Instruction.

10 cents a Number; $4 00 a Year. A Supplement containing numerous full-eized Pat-terns of useful articles accompanies the paper avery fortnight, and occasionally an elogant Colored Fashion Plate.

From The Nation, July 22d, 1869.

From The Nation, July 2nd, 1869.

Hauren's Baran, far from being the trivial paper that one might hastily suppose, is an excellent one. Like all the periodicals which the Haurens publish, it is almost ideally well edited, and the class of reoders for whom it is intended—the mothers and daughters in average families—can not but profit by its good cases and good taste, which, we have no doubt, are to-day making very many homes happier than they may have been before the women began taking lessons in personal and household and social management from this good-natured mentor. Then, apart from the claims to familine respect and liking, the more important part of humanity and creation may properly be much obliged to it for its services to the great cause of dressing well, and particularly for helping on the cause of dressing well at not too great an expense. No doubt, a certain appearable percentage of the beauty which to-day makes American women the envy of the foreign femiline world, and a chief glory of our native land, is due to little blast that they get from the Baras. Of the Wazary and the Mosvunty there is nothing that our readers need to be told.

TERMS FOR HARPER'S PERIODICALS:

HARPER'S MAGAZINE, One Year $4 0 HARPEN'S WREELY, One Year..... 4 00 HARPEN'S BARAN, One Year..... 4 00

Harren's Magazine, Harren's Weezen, and Harren's Basan, to one address, for one year, $10.00; or any two for $7.00.

two for $7 00.

An Entra Copy of either the Magazine, Weerin, or Baran will be supplied grattle for every Chile of Five Beascounces at $4 00 each, in our remillance; or, Sile Copies for $20 00, without extra copy.

The Poetage within the United States is for the Magazine is cents a year, for the Weering or Baran 20 cents a year, payable yearly, semi-pently, or quarteely, at the office where received. Subscriptions from the Dominston of Canada must be accompanied with 24 cents additional for the Magazine, or 20 cents for the Weering or Baran, to propay the United States poetage.

postage.

In remitting by mail, a Post-Office Order or Draft payable to the order of Hanran & Bacruran is preferable to Bank Notes, since, should the Order or Draft be lost or stolen, it can be renewed without less to the sender.

THEMS FOR ADVERTISING IN HARPER'S PERIODOGALS. Harper's Hanarine.—Whole Page, $250; Half Page, $125; Quarter Page, $10—such insertion; or, for a less space, $1 50 per Line, each insertion.

Harper's Washly.—Inside Pages, $1 60 per Line; Outside Page, $2 00 per Line.—each insertion.

Harper's Ranar.—$1 00 per Line; Cuts and Display, $1 25 per Line—each insertion.

Address HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK.

DO YOUR OWN PRINTING.

The Novelty is the best Press ever invented with which to do your own printing, and is second to note for the use of Gen-eral Job Printers. Price of Presses, $15, $90, $22, $20.

Set, 550.

Send to BENJ. O. WOODS,
Proprietor, 351 Federal St.,
Rection, Mass., for descriptive circular containing testimonials from all parts of the country, with specimens of work done on the press, and specimen sheets of Types, Cuts, Borders, &c.

VICK'S Illustrated Catalogue

HYACINTHS, TULIPS, LILIES,

Hardy Bulbs for Fall Planting, IS NOW PUBLISHED,

And will be sent rams to all who apply. JAMES VICK, Rochester, New York.

GRAND EXCURSION TO

LAKE SUPERIOR.

The splendid steamer METEOR leaves Cleveland, Ohio, on Friday, July 16th and 30th, August 18th and 18th, at 8 o'clock, F.M., and Detreit, Mich., the following evenings at 10 o'clock, for Superior City, Dulnih, and all points of interest on Lake Superior.

Recome secured and other information obtained by application to

HANNA & CO., Ag'ts, Cleveland, O.;

BUCKLEY & CO., Ag'ts, Detroit, Mich.;

or J. T. WHITING, Manager, Detroit, Mich.

DO YOUR OWN PRINTING.

Cheapest and Best Portable Presses. MEN AND BOYS MAKING MONEY. Price of Presses, $8, $12, $16. Offices, $15, $20, $30. Send for a circular to LOWE PRESS CO., 15 Spring Lane, Boston, Mass.

DSYCHOMANCY, Fascination; or, Science of the Soul, as applied to the purposes of life. 400 pages, Cloth. By Henner Hammon, B.A. A curious book for inquisitive people. It contains complete instructions to acquire this wonderful power over men or animals. Can be obtained by sending postage stamp and address to T.W. EVANS & CO., 41 South 8th Street, Philadolphia.

HARPER'S

NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE

FOR SEPTEMBER, 1869.

PHOTOGRAPHS FROM THE HIGH ROCKIES. PHOTOGRAPHS FROM THE HIGH ROCKIES.

Linestrations. Traveling above the SnowLine.—The Photographer's Outfit.—Gold Hill and Sliver City.—The Nettle.—Pyramid Lake.—
Strange Tufs.—The Careou Sink.—High Water.—
The Ruby Hange.—Caton in the Ruby Range.—
Shifting Sand Mounds.—Above the Shoshone Falls.—Natural Bridge.
THE RYE AND THE CAMERA.

LLUSTATIONS.—The Photographic Camera.—
Photographic Operating Room.—The Inverted Image.—The Ryeball.—The Dark Chamber.—Section of the Rye.—Reversed Image in the Dark Chamber.—The Three Aspects of the Hand.—Taking Stereoscopic Picture of Near Objects.—Stereoscopic Camera.—Stiding Stereoscope.

OUT IN THE STREETS. BORDER REMINISCENCES.

ILLEWIATIONS. Dismounted Cavalry.—A Do-moralized Negro.—"Look-a-yere, Mister I"—A Scene in Court. A SUMMER FRIEND.

A HEALTH TRIP TO BRAZIL

BALTH TRIP TO BRAZIL.

Lalesvaariosa.—Street Scene, Pernambuco.—
Charlotte Amaile, St. Thomas.—Hauling in a Dolphin.—Para, from the River.—The Environs of Para.—Saake Merchant.—Monkeys for Sale.—
Pernambuco.—Street in Pernambuco.—Ox-Cart.
—Pack Horses.—Fleet of Jagandas.—Schurbe of Parnambuco.—Bahia, from the Bay.—Avenue of Palina.—Market Scene, Bahia.

BOB WHITE. ILLUSTRAYDONS. — Hunting Bob White. — The True Quali, — Head of Bob White, Life Sire. — Covey Alarmed. — Head of California Valley Quali, Life Size. — Head of California Mountain Quali, Life Size.

IN QUIET DAYS. A BRAVE LADY. By the Author of "Jour Hall-

ILLUSTRATIONS. — "Mamma, you bring Good News."—"Marriage is a Great Mystery." CHEANCE.

AN AUTHOR'S MEMORIES OF AUTHORS. ILLUSTRATIONS.-S. C. Hall,-Mrs. S. C. Hall. THE FOSTER-BROTHERS.

TOO CLEVER BY HALF. THE PROGRESS OF ELECTRICITY. LEANDER DOOLITTLE.

MY ENEMY'S DAUGHTER. By JOSTES M'CASTET. CHAPTER XXVI. Lills gone.
CHAPTER XXVII. The Conspirator.
CHAPTER XXVIII. "Ah, bear in Mind that Garden was Enchanted."
Inaugracysos.—Salaris and I.

GOING OVER TO THE ENEMY. THE PURITAN CAPTAIN. THE NEW TIMOTHY. PART X. EDITOR'S BASY CHAIR. EDITOR'S BOOK TABLE. MONTHLY RECORD OF CURRENT EVENTS. EDITOR'S DRAWER.

TERMS for HARPER'S MAGAZINE, WEEKLY, and BAZAR.

HARRIN'S MAGASINE, HARRIN'S WESSLY, and HARRIN'S BARAN, for one year, $10 00; or any two for $7 00. HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK.

Removed to 335 Broadway. THE COLLINS $20. $15.

WATCH FACTORY.

The Collins Metal and Jewelry Factory has re-moved from 57 Nassau Street to their splendid New Offices,

No. 335 BROADWAY. No. 335 BROADWAY.

These superior Watches have now been in use over three years, and give universal satisfaction; and although soid at so moderate a price, are not surpassed in appearance and for time by gold ones costing $350 and $200. They have been greatly improved, but the price remains the same, $15. Those of extra fine dutes, $25. Gents' and Lodles' stora. Jewerry of the richest styles, in every respect equal to the finest gold, at one-tenth the price. We have but

ONE OFFICE, NO AGENTS, and are not responsible for the bogus and worth-less goods sold at cheep jewelry establishments. Our Pactory is the ONLY PLACE where the Gen-nice Collins Metal Watches and Jewelry can be

C. E. COLLINS & CO.,

No. 335 Broadway, cor. Worth Street,

This is acknowledged to be the best saw and in more general use than any other in the United States. For Sale by all first-class Hardware Dealers. Made by the LIVINGSTON MANUFACTURING CO., 50 BEEKMAN ST., N. Y.

SWEET
QUININE.

QUININE.

SVAPNIA.

SVAPNIA.

SVAPNIA.

SVAPNIA.

SUAPNIA.

IMPROVED ALUMINIUM BRONZE HUNTING-CASED WATCHES.

The Improved Aluminium Bronze is a metal differing en-tirely from any ever offered to the public. He qualities and resemblance to Gold are such that even judges have been declared. It has activate to the public. Its qualities and resemblance to Gold are such that even judges have been deceived. It has seriously occupied the attention of scientific men, and has not only tailed forth the estogatums of scientific men, and has not only tailed forth the estogatums of the press in consequence of its peculiar peoperties, but has size obtained a Gold Medal at the Paris Exposition.

The movements are well finished, perfectly regniated, and as all those goods are manufactured in my own factory, I am enabled to warrant them as excellent time-keepers.

Further details will be found in my pamphlet, which will be sent, postpaid, on demand.

Goods sent by Krycess, C. O. D., with charges.

Address JULES D. HUGUENIN VUILLEMIN, No. 44 Nassan Street, New York.

PIANOS and ORGANS.

Prices greatly reduced for Cash. New Seven-Octave Plance, of first-class makers, for $515 and upward. New Cabinet Organs for $55 and upward. Second-hand Plance, Melodeone, and Organs from $46 to $125.

LOSSING'S WAR OF 1812,

PICTORIAL FIELD-BOOK OF THE WAR OF ISIS; or, Illustrations, by Fen and Fencil, of the History, Biography, Secnery, Relics, and Traditions of the Last War for American Independence By Bassos J. Lessure, Author of "The Pictorial Field-Book of the Revolution." With 881 libustrations, engraved on Wood by Lessing & Barritt, chiefly from Original Sketches by the Author, Complete in One Volume, 1984 pages, large 800, Price, in Cloth, $7.00: Sheep, $8.50; Full Boom, $9.00: Half Calf or Half Morocco extra, $10.00.

Price, in Cloth, $7 00: Sheep, $6 50: Full Boom, $9 00: Half Calf or Half Morocco extra, $10 00.

Mr. Lossing not only writes excellent history, but he collects the materials from which that history is made: and we are reminded of Herodotin, who traveled into many lands to obtain the materials from which his immortal work was composed, and whose skillfulness in acquiring knowledge, and sagacity and truthfulness in meigh his acquisitions, modern research and criticism are putting beyond all question, thus refuting that ignorance which would have it that the Pather of History was the Father of Lies. Mr. Lossing's industry is equaled only by his conscientionsness, which leads him to treat all parties to the War of 1812 with the atmost impartiality, and to give all the facts that throw light upon the contest, which is a novelty in writing about it, for never was the history of an important war told in a more partisan manner than that of our second condict with England.

* * * The time has come when it is possible to write of it with candor as well as with spirit, as Mr. Lossing writes its history; and the time has come, loo, when we are beginning to understand its real effect on the country, and when it is possible to discuss its character and its consequences in a philosophical manner, as Mr. Lossing discusses them. * * It is proper that the history of such a countrymen, after immense discussion in make it worthy of their apprehation. That they will well appreciate what he has done so thoroughly is a thing of course. For young persons who would have correct views of their country's history, no better book can be named. Its minuteness, its liveliness, its accuracy, its high tone, and its exhaustive character, render it a fine opening work for youthful readers, whose minds are always injured by the perusal of superficial histories. * * The volume is perfectly printed, no European or American book ever having come from the press in a more elegant state. The peper and the binding are faultiess. In fact, the book pleas

EF Harris & Beothers will send the above roord by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of the price.

PARLOR STEAM ENGINE: made entirely of Metal; Boiler and Farnace complete; will work for hours if supplied with water, &c.: free from danger; a child can work it. Sens free, with instructions, for $1.00; three for $2.50. Address WALTER HOLT, No. 100 Nassan Street, New York.

$9 A DAY FOR ALL. Address A. J. FULLAM, 650 Broadway, N. Y.

HARPER & BROTHERS'

SPECIAL TRADE SALE, 1869.

From August 16 to Sept. 25.

Franklin Square, New York, August, 1869.

We invite the attention of Booksellers to our Special List of Books, which we will sell on the following Terms, for Cash, from the 16th of August to the 25th of September, after which

On Orders of $ 100 at one time, 25 per cent. Discount, and Five per cent. for Cash.

our Terms will positively be as heretofore.

		Care and	and . 3 h.	er warner	No or or other old	*	Sear marres	and district
44	$ 500	"	30	"	"			44
*	$1000	"	331		- 44			4
66	$2000		35	44	a	64	м	44

We shall not sell at any of the Trade Sales this Fall. The SPECIAL LIST will be furnished to Booksellers on application to the Publishers.

HARPER & BROTHERS.

HARPER & BROTHERS.

FRANKLIN SQUARE, NEW YORK,

Have just Published:

PICTORIAL FIRLD-BOOK OF THE WAR OF 1812; or, Illustrations, by Fen and Pencil, of the Bistery, Biography, Scenery, Relies, and Traditions of the Last War for American Independence. By Banarot J. Losswa, Anthor of "The Pictorial Field-Book of the Beroketion." With 882 Blustrations, engraved on Wood by Lossing and Barritt, chiedy from Original Sketches by the Author. Complete in One Volume, 1938 pages, burys 840. Price, in Cloth, $7.90: Sheep, $5.50; Full Roan, $9.00; Haif Calf or Haif Morocco extra, $10.00.

THE SEVEN CURSES OF LONDON. By JAMES GREENWOON, the "Amsteur Caesal," Author of "The True History of a Little Ragamentin," "Headen Dav-idger," "Wild Sports of the World," &c. Svo, Pa-

PAMOUS LONDON MERCHANTS. A Book for Boys. By H. E. Fox Bornse. With Portrait of George Peabody and 24 Illustrations. 16mo, Cloth, $1.00.

SIGHTS AND SENSATIONS IN FRANCE, GER-MANY, AND SWITZERLAND; or, Experiences of an American Journalist in Europe. By Edward Goold Buryen. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

SANDS'S PHILOSOPHY OF TEACHING. The Teacher, the Pupil, the School. By Nathanizh Sands. Sto., Cloth, $1.00.

FIVE ACRES TOO MUCH. A Truthful Elucida-tion of the Attractions of the Country, and a Care-ful Consideration of the Question of Frost and Loss as involved in Amaieur Farming, with much Valu-able Advice and Instruction to those about Furchas-ing Large or Small Places in the Rural Districts. By Houser B. Reconvert. With Characteristic H-lustrations. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

THREE SEASONS IN EUROPEAN VINEYARDS.
Treating of Vine-Culture; Vine Disease and its Care: Wine-Making and Wines, Red and Walfe; Wine-Drinking as affecting Bealth and Morals, By Willean J. Plano. 18the, Cloth, $1.50.

RHETORIC: a Text-Book, designed for Use in Schools and Colleges, and for Provide Study. By Rev. E. O. Haves, D.D., LL.D., President of the Northwesters University, True, Cloth, §1 50.

A PARSER AND ANALYZER FOR BEGINNERS, PARSER AND ANALYZER FOR BRUINNERS, with Diagrams and Suggestive Pictures. By Fran-cis A. Manos, Professor of the English Language and Comparative Philology in Lafsystet College, Author of "Method of Philological Study of the En-glish Language," "Comparative Geommar of the Anglo-Saron Language," &c. 16mo, Cloth, 40 cents.

THE MALAY ARCHIPELAGO: The Land of the Orang-Usan and the Bird of Paradise. A Narrative of Travel, with Studies of Man and Nature. By Alarkan Russes. Walakes, Anthor of "Travels of the Amazon and Rio Negro," "Fairs Trees of the Amazon," &c. With Ten Maps and Fifty-one elegant Illustrations. Crown Svo, Cloth, $3 59.

PIBBING IN AMERICAN WATERS. By Gesto C. Scott. With 170 Hinstrations, Crown Svo, Cloth,

HARPER'S HAND-BOOK FOR TRAVELLERS IN EUROPE AND THE EAST. Being a Guide through France, Belgium, Bolland, Germony, Aus-tria, Inaly, Egypt, Syria, Turkey, Greece, Switzer-land, Tyrol, Ensels, Denmark, Sweden, Spain, and Great Britain and Ireland. With a Railroad Map corrected up to 1969. By W. Pausenez Fernings, Revised Edition: Eighth Year. Large 12mo, Leath-er, Pocket-Book Form, $7.50.

HARPER'S PHEASE-BOOK; or, Hand-Book of Travel Talk for Travellers and Schools. Being a Gaide to Conversations in English, French, German, and Italian, on a New and Improved Method. In-tended to accompany "Harper's Hand-Book for Travellers." By W. Frussour Extrance. Assisted by Professors of Heidelberg University. With con-cise and explicit Rules for the Presunciation of the different Languages. Square 16mo, Flexible Cloth, $1.56.

The New Novels

PUBLISHED BY

HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

HETTY. By Heway Krassian, Author of "Stret-ton," &c. 8vo, Paper, 25 cents. MY DAUGHTER ELINOR. A Novel of American Society. Svo, Paper, $1 35.

CORD AND CREESE. By the Author of "The Dodge Clah," Illustrated. Swo, Paper, 15 cents.

STRETTON. A Novel. By Harry Krouslay, Author of "Hetty," "Gooffrey Hamlyn," "Ravenshoe," &c. 8vo, Paper, 48 cents.

THE DODGE CLUB; or, Italy in 1859. By Jawes De Muas, Author of "Cord and Creese," &c. With One Hundred Illustrations. Svo, Paper, 75 cents; Cloth, $1 15.

THACKERAT'S NOVELS:

New Edition, beautifully printed, with the Author's own Illustrations. VANITY PAIR. 12 Illustrations, 8vo. Paper, 50 cts.

THE VIRGINIANS. 150 Illustrations. 8vo, Pa-THE NEWCOMES. 168 Blustrations. Svo, Paper,

THE ADVENTURES OF PHILIP. Portrait of Author and 64 lilustrations. Swo, Paper, 50 cents.

EF HARRER & BRITTIERS will issue introduction.

See Etitlous of Thackeray's other Nosels, Historical by the Author, at correspondingly low prices.

CHARLES READE'S NOVISA:

HARD CASH. Illustrated. Svo, Paper, 25 cents. GRIFFITH GAUNT: or, Jealousy. Illustrated, 5vo, Paper, 35 cents.

IT IS NEVER TOO LATE TO MEND. Svo, Po-LOVE ME LITTLE, LOVE ME LONG. 8vo, Pa-

POUL PLAY. Svo, Paper, 35 cents. WHITE LIES. Svo, Paper, 35 cents.

23" To be followed by Charles Reads's other Novels. ANTHONY TROLLOPE'S LAST NOVELS:

PHINEAS PINN, the Irish Member. Hastrated by Millair. Svo, Paper, $1 25; Cloth, $1 15. HE KNEW HE WAS RIGHT, Complete. With 64 Histrations by Marcus Stone. Svo, Paper, $1 00; Cloth, $1 50. Part II., separately, Paper, 55 cents.

FF Harre & Beoreeus will seed any of the above ooks by mail, postase free, to any part of the United lates, on receipt of the price.

Digitized by Google

THE COMING MAN-JOHN CHINAMAN.

Uncle Sam introduces Eastern Barbarism to Western Civilization.

The Reason why Every One should buy a Haines Piano:

The reputation of these Plance is fully established as being meurpassed by any for a rich, full tone, elasticity of touch, long standing in tune, and elegance of style and finish.

Every article used in the construction of the Haines Piano is of the best quality and of thoroughly seasoned materials. The prices being reasonable, they can not fall to enit any who may desire to purchase, Circulare and information sent on application

HAINES BROTHERS,

46 East 14th Street, New York,

Or to Sarrii & Niron, Chicago, Illa.; H. N. Henrstran, Milwankee, Wis.; Louis Thirr, Louisville, Ky.; J. A. McClurk, Nashville, Tenn.; Kuncke Bace.
St. Leuis, Mo.; J. R. Jackson, Sandnsky, Ohlo; J. E. Gorin, Philadelphia, Pa.; Mrs. C. Birke, Pittsburg, Pa.; Baarsand & Sons, Cleveland, Chio; Clurke & Sons, Albany and Troy, N. Y.; J. T. Hammer, Rhinobeck, N. Y.; J. H. Hisyrekovers, Libras, N. Y.; Werrs, Sarra, & Perry, Boston, Masa; Matterias Grav, San Francisco, Cal.; C. M. Morsos, Cincinnati, Ohlo; C. M. Lookis, New Haves, Conn.

A Seven per Cent. GOLD LOAN.

$6,500,000.

The Kaness Pacific Railway, now is successful op-eration from Kaness City to Sheridan, proposes to build an extension to Denver, Colorado. The Govern-ment has granted Three Millions of Acres of the finest lands in Kaness and Colorado, which are mortgaged for the security of a loan of $6,500,000.

This loan is secured in the most effectual manner. It represents a road in profitable operation, and will open the trade of the Rocky Mountain Country, and connect it with the great markets of the East. It is considered to be one of the best loans in the market, EVEN BETTER IN SOME RESPECTS THAN GOVERNMENT SECURITIES.

The loan has thirty years to run, principal and in-terest payable in gold, semi-annually, seven per cent. The coupons will be payable eemi-annually in either Frankfort, London, or New York, and will be free from Government taxation. The bonds for the present are sold in currency at 96, with accreed interest. Circulars, maps, and pamphlets sent on application.

DABNEY, MORGAN, & CO., 53 Exchange Place, N. Y.

M. K. JESUP & CO., 12 Pine Street,

STEVENS POCKET RIPLE.

With Detachable Shoulder-Rest. Most popular arm made for Sporting and Target-Shooting. Sarre & Wesson's Ravanaras, in any quantity, for cash, at hundred price. Asson's Dennieums, and other Pietols.

J. W. STORRS & Co., M'r's Agents, 502 Broadway, New York.

CATALOGUES SENT FREE. MATHEMATICAL INSTRUMENTS, 112 pages.

OPTICAL INSTRUMENTS, 12 pages.

HAGIC LANTERNS and STRIKOPTICANS, 200 pp.
PHILOSOPHICAL INSTRUMENTS, 54 pages.

JAMES W. QUEEN & CO.,

934 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

A, 1. - TRUTH WILL PREVAIL.

Barry's Tricopherous removes scarf and dandruff, and renders the Hair soft and bellitant. I believe it to be the best preparation for the Hair now offered to the public.

A. G. HUELL,

29 Nassan St., N. Y.

$2000 A YEAR AND EXPENSES fewing Machine. Sitch alike on both sides. Samples on two weeks' trial. Extra indexensents to experienced agents. For further particulars, address the WILSON HEWING MACHINE CO., Cieveland, Chio, Boston, Mass.; or St. Louis, Mo.

Kriloco's Work Tra.—This standard old Remedy for Worms is the sarrar and more ever known. It is russiv vicerasis, will positively reservor worse, and some so express to the rathers. Sold energy where. Price 25 cents. Sold at the Great United States Medicine Ware-house and Mineral Water Depot of Jone F. Hensy, No. 8 College Place, New York.

Porestall Billious Attacks by regulating the stomach, liver, and excretive organs with Tan-naw's Evysavascaws Saurana Aranasus. Persons of a "billious habit," by acting upon this bins, may save themselves many pangs, mental and bodily. SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

FISHERMEN! TWINES and NETTING, Ber 2000. OIL HOUSE OF CHAS. PRATT, 108 Philos St., N. Y. MANUFACTURED BY WM. E. HOOPER & SONS, to Bend for Price-List.) Baltimore, Md.

PRETTY WOMEN.-A comparatively few ladies monopolize the beauty as well as the attention of society. This ought not to be so, but it is; and will be while men are foolish, and single out pretty faces for companions.

This can all be changed by using HAGAN'S MAGNOLIA BALM, which gives the bloom of youth and a refined, sparkling beauty to the complexion, pleasing, powerful, and natural.

No lady need complain of a red, tanned, freckled, or rustic complexion who will invest 75 cents in Hagan's Magnotta Balm. Its offects are truly wonderful.

To preserve and dress the Hair use Lyon's

GROCERS, DRUGGISTS, HARDWARE and FURNISHING STORES sell

TIN, BRASS, IRON, WINDOW GLASS, MARBLE, KNIVES, FORKS, MACHINERY, and general METALLIC WARE.

Removes all Rust or Stains. Gives a Brilliant Polish. Better, cheaper, quicker than any other substance. Contains no poisonous or injurious ingredient. Is elegantly wrapped. It is to the interest of Depot, 211 Washington St., New York. Soars or all KINDS FOR PANILY USE. Established 1809.

PRATT'S ASTRAL OIL Perfectly Safe.

HINKLEY KNITTING MACHINE. Agents wanted. Knits every thing. Send to of-nos, 176 Broadway, for Circulars.

ADDRESS TO SMOKERS.

In reply to the many inquiries made daily in regard to Meerschaum Pipes, we wish to state that we recommend, especially for home and offices Stems. They hold the most tobacce, and are the most durable and practical ones, being the easiest to clean. Or the Hamburg Bowls, having the largest surface to show color. For travelling and street smoking, we recommend the London Straight and London Bend.

Being represented extensively throughout the country by our goods, we are desirous to have our Pipes—which are considered equaled by none—still more extensively used by those who relish a good smeke, and dud Cigars too expensive. Therefore we have reduced our prices to the following:

We will sell a No. 3 Fipe for $5, and charge $1 additional for every number higher; therefore No. 4 costs $5; No. 13, $13, $0. Fipes from No. 4 to No. 3 are considered fair-sized ones; from No. 2 upward, large ones. In the price is included a Case and Stem.

Nice Amber Mosthipieces for Weichsel Stems we are selling from $1 to $2 a piece.

We send by Express to collect on delivery, amount and charges; but suggest that the amount be sent in Registered Letter or Prot-Office Mooney Order in advance, to save consignes the express-return charges. In conclusion, we wish to state that we warrant all our goods (which we stamp with our name) to be real Amber, geneliae Moorachaum, and to color, and will readily give every information in regard to it, based on thirty geneliae Moorachaum, and to color, and will readily give every information in regard to it, based on thirty geneliae Moorachaum, and to color, and will readily give every information in regard to it, based on thirty geneliae Moorachaum, and to color, and will readily give every information in regard to it, based on thirty geneliae Moorachaum, Goods into this country.

We cut Pipes and Cigar-Holders of any shape or design, mount them, do repairing, boiling, and polishing. Also, Amber Work done. And, main of all, do not charge exemitation for the Manuffacture, we are in postession of commen

POLLAK & SON, Manufacturers of Genuine Meerschaum Goods. STORES: 519 Broadway, St. Nicholas Hotel, and 27 John St., 27 John. SEND FOR DIAGRAMS, CIRCULAR, AND PRICE-LIST TO LETTER BOX 5846.

IVORIDE

KNIFE-HANDLES.

BOUAL IN

BEAUTY and DURABILITY

TO THE GENUINE

IVORY.

AND AT

HALF THE PRICE.

This material is guaranteed to-resist the action of heat and cold, whether of water or of the atmosphere.

FOR SALE BY ALL DEALERS.

J. Russell & Co.,

Green River Cutlery Works,

83 BERRMAN STREET, New York City.

NATURE'S GREAT RESTORER.

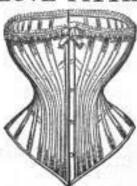

GREEN MOUNTAIN MINERAL SPRING WA-TER, Mount Holly, Vt.

This celebrated water cures Dyspepsis, Rheuma-tism, Piles, Scrobia, Urinary Discuses, and Female Weaknesses. "It is a totale and general builder-up of the system." Send for Descriptive Circular. Sold by Druggists.

McKESSON & ROBBINS, No. 91 Falton St., N.Y., GEO. C. GGODWIN & CO., Boston, Mass., Agenta. F. FENN & CO., Proprietors, Ratland, Vt.

THOMSON'S

"GLOVE-FITTING"

The Most Popular Corset over introduced into the American Market.

The strongest proof of the excellence and popularity of this Cornet is found in the numerous attempts to paim off worthless imitations as the present reported "Gloss-Pitting." We therefore call special attention to our stamp, which is always to be found on the genuine goods, and of N.B.—All infring-ers of Patent or of our Copyright in Name, "Giove-Fit-ting," will be pros-eculed.

THOMSON, LANGDON, & CO., 391 Broadway, N.Y.,

Sole Importers and Patentoes for the United States.

BRANDRETH'S PILLS.

Their great value consists in this: They may be used so long as any disease affects any of the organs of the body; and by thus persevering in their use the disease will be cured, and the body restored to health, free from every taint and impurity. Their reputation proves their merit.

Thomas Smith, Coroner and Justice of the Peace, Hastings-on-the-Hudson, says Brandreth's Pills cured him of Dyspepsia and Heartburn when every other medicine had failed to relieve him. Certificate dated April 2, 1868.

Dr. Turner, of Savannah, Ga., says he has, for nearrs, recommended Brandreth's Pills as a specific in Yellow Fever; that he never knew a patient to die who took them for this malady, being otherwise sound. Their prompt use takes out of the body those matters which feed the fatality of the discase. As a general family medicine he considers them far in advance of all others, and here he speaks from personal experience of their qualities.

TO SPORTSMEN!!

A very superior selection of fine Breech-Loading SHOT-GUNS, RIPLES, and PISTOLS, of our own Manufacture and Importation. FISHIN TACKLE, POCKET CUTLERY, and Sportsmen Articles. Sole Agents for W. R. PAPE'S Celebrate Mussle and Breech Loaders. PISHING

MERWIN & HULBERT, supplied.) 285 Broadway, N.Y.

SILK DRESSES, WATCHES, and SEWING MA-CHINES, FREE OF COST, to any person get-ting up a small Club to Associate Fakers Masaires. Only 50 cests. Sample Copies sent free. H. S. ARNOLD & CO., Rivereds, N. J. Dy GOOGIO

Vol. XIII.—No. 662.]

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 4, 1869.

SINGLE COPIES, TEN CENTS. 54.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Tear 1900, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the United States, for the Southern District of New York.

GOVERNOR SENTER, OF TENNESSEE.

WE publish on this page a portrait of Governor SENTER, of Tennessee. The election took place on the 6th of Angust, and it turned mainly on the question of the disfranchisement of white citizens. If this point had been yielded by the Radical Republicans, the State might have been carried the other way. As it was, SENTER had a majority of nearly 60,000. If it should happen that, as a consequence of this election, ex-President ANDERS JONESON should be elected to the United States Senate, then we must indeed feel that the wrong party has triumphed in Tennessee.

THE TROT AT BUFFALO.

The recent trot at Buffalo, August 12, deserves to be commemorated. It took place at the Driving Park, where three years ago Dexter made the unprecedented time of 2.18 under the saddle. There, two years ago, Dexter made the best time ever recorded, in harness—2.17‡. Last year, on this course, a mile was paced in 2.14 by Billy Boyce.

There were 25,000 people present at the Park

Billy Boyce.

There were 25,000 people present at the Park to witness the races on the 12th. Goldsmith Maid won the $10,000 purse in three straight heats, the time being 2.192, 2.192, 2.192. This gives the Maid a place by the aids of Dexter. The latter was bought by Boxnun, who ought now to buy the Maid also. American Girl has trotted a single heat faster than the Maid, it is true, but for a sustained effort the performance of the latter exceeds any thing yet done upon the turf.

THE INTERNATIONAL BOAT-RACE.

THE INTERNATIONAL BOAT-RACE.

The great event of Angust, in England, is the International Boat-race between the Harvard and Oxford crews. By the time that this number of our paper shall have reached its readers that mee will probably have been decided. But we write, of course, in ignorance as to the result. On the 6th of April, 1869, WILLIAM H. SINMONS, then Captain of the Harvard University Boat-Club, sent to the President of the Oxford University Boat-Club a challenge to row a race in out-rigger boats from Putney to Mortlake,

GOVERNOR SENTER, OF TENNESSEE.-(PROT. BY C. C. GUERS, NASHYHAE, TENNESSEE.)

some time between the middle of August and the first of September, 1869, each boat to carry four rowers and a coxsumin. A similar challenge was at the same time sent to Cambridge. Ox-ford accepted—and so did Cambridge, but con-ditionally.

Mr. Loring, after some delay, consented to participate in the race on the side of Harvard. He has had the most brilliant record that has He has had the most brilliant record that has fallen to the lot of any American gentleman to display. To him Mr. Sussnovs magnanimously offered, not only the captainty of the Harvard crew, but the stroke-ship also. But Mr. Loaned decided after all that the boat would go best with Mr. Sussnovs as stroke, and himself at the bow, thus keeping the two less experienced, though by no means inexperienced, waist men thoroughly in hand.

The course chosen is the best known race-thoroughly in hand.

The course chosen is the best known racecourse in the rowing world—the time-honored track on which Cambridge had beaten Oxford so repeatedly that it seemed hopeless and foolish to try again, and on which suddenly Oxford beat Cambridge, and for the last nine years has, without one interruption, continued to win, so that the latter is annually in doubt whether to attempt it any more or not. It is known as the Metropolitan, or, more properly, as the Putney to Mortlake course, and nominally extends from Putney Bridge across the Thames, about four miles west of London, to the ship at Mortlake, four miles and one-third up stream. These figures and four miles three furlongs, also four miles and a quarter, have each been frequently given and a quarter, have each been frequently given as its length, but the English papers have often stated that the distance is not accurately known.

THE OXFORD CREW.

The four men of the Oxford crew, all Eton-The four men of the Oxford crew, all Kion-ians, and all, when taking the usual initiatory training at the great college which flourishes un-der the shades of Windsor, took their places in the Eton eight—all except Mr. Dansishnas, who takes rank as having rowed twice against Cambridge. All have rowed in their college matches at Oxford; all have rowed in the win-ning host at the areat emetary recently for explining boat at the great amateur regatts for gentle-men and scholars at Henley; all have been in the winning boat against Cambridge in the great race on the Thames.

Chief among them in rowing, nome, fame, and rank, though not is nominal position in the boat, stands F. Willaw, of Exeter College. He has rowed four times in the winning boat at the great race, and has contributed in no small degree to its success. Mr. William is a sturdy and wellknit man of not more than middle beight, about twenty-five years of age. A southern complex-ion and well rounded face are set off and deep-ened by black hair kept short and nest, and small ened by black hair kept short and neat, and small mustache; deep-set eyes and heetling eyebows give to Mr. William an aspect of houtest which is not in keeping with his genial nature, for he is a frank, hearty, and manly English gentleman. With great breadth of chest, sound lungs, and splendid physique, he combines massive shoulders and powerful arms. He has somewhat of the style of a man who has served at sen, and shows a degree of courses, hower determination. shows a degree of courage, power, determination, and endurance not often found in one man. He weighs eleven stone nine pounds.

GREAT TROT AT THE BUFFALO DRIVING PARK, AUGUST 12, 1869 .- [SKETCHED BY J. P. HOFFMAN.]

Mr. J. C. Tisser, of University College, the President of Oxford University Bost-Clis, is a younger and beavier man. He weighs thirteen stone seven pounds. Mr. Tisse is tall, youthful-looking, and shy. His power is lazent rather than apparent; but with that robust and as yet not fully developed form, it is not difficult to associate long reach, flexible motion, and wast strength. Mr. Traws is of light complexion, has not yet cultivated a beard nor taken occasion to he particular as to what turn his mustache may be required to take, but he has a pleasant look and an Oxford manner. Mr. Tissus has rowed three times in the winning boat.

Mr. A. C. YARBOROUGH, of Lincoln College, has rowed twice in the same hoat. He seems to be about twenty years of age, and weighs over eleven stone seven pounds, being six pounds lighter than when he rowed in the great race in lighter than when he rowed in the great race in the spring. Promptitude, activity, and determ-ination are suggested by his sharp forc, quick eye, and firm build. Less strong apparently than either we have just described, Mr. Yanson-ough is probably not less effective as a rowing man, and would certainly seem to have more staying power than either, because he is more compactly formed, and is likely, on that account, to do his work with less wear and tear of mate-rial than either of them. As a scaller, he carrial than either of them. As a sculler, he car-ried off the Oxford sculls, over one mile and a quarter, on the University course.

Mr. A. Danassens, of Baliol, eleren stone three, has rowed for two years against Cambridge. He was stroke on the race this spring at eleven stone eight. Mr. Daussenersk may be twenty-two years of age, but, being smooth faced or clean shaven, he may be more than that. In stature he is less than either of those already mentioned, and in figure smaller, but more firmly built than any. Once in his day Mr. Danni-asires must have been a good coxewain. Now be is a smart, sharp, and vigorous stroke, a man who will keep a pretty sharp eye on a boat creep-ing up, and who will not spare himself or his men when there is need for an extra call upon their powers. Judgment of pace and time, and estimate of skill and endurance, are qualities that abundantly fit this gentleman for his position.

Mr. J. II. Hatt., the coxamin, at seven stone three pounds, is a Corpus man, who has not yet steered the boat in the annual contest, and has thus a grand opportunity of winning golden spurs and becoming "Hall marked."

THE RARVARD CREW.

Comparisons, however edious in a general way, can not in particular instances be avoided. may be as well to say at once that, if all the Har-vard crew are equal to Mr. William II. Sim-mons, of Concord, Massachusetts, and if his skill be at all equal to his power and physique, a more dangerous four-our never appeared on Thomes water. There is not a man in the Oxford boot who, as a specimen of manhood, can compare with Mr. Simmons. His bust, head, limbs, contour require a sculptor to do them justice, and should the crew win, a good statue of Mr. Sta-mosa, either in classical or modern similitude, would do credit to any sculpture-gallery of Eu-rope or America. We refrain in an honorable contest of this kind from hinting at an interna-tional meeting of another and baser sort which roused English feeling a few years ago, except just to say that there, too, was a splendid man who wanted nothing but absolute fair play to enable him to hold his own in his own line against any man in the world. It has long been a slur upon the Thames that, in these great matches, should the Londoner, whoerer he may be, be in danger of defeat, the steamers and the small boats do their worst to discomfit his antagonist. Hence it was that when HARILL, of Pittsburg, rowed KELLEY, the best English cursman of his day, the Tyne was chosen as the scene of contest, because there, among the sturdy Northmen, a clear course was sure to be maintained. In that men, terester as borns training, skill, and experience of KELLEY completely vanquished the comparatively untutored strength of his rival. In this the same conditions will, no doubt, to some extent apply. On one side there is prestige, training, style, and ex-perience. On the other durability, strength, and freshness. The Hervard men have had their races, but these have not been traditional. Their manner of rowing is different from that of their rivals. They have not been accustomed to a coxswain. They row in a strange land, on a strange river, among strangers, who, whatever their sympathies may be, can not but wish for the success of the English boat. Oxford is noted for a long and powerful swing, and for great strength, good style, and stamina or staying power. Of the Harvard we have, at the time of writing, heard so little that we can at present only sum them up thus:

ALDEN PORTER LORING, captain and bow our, aged twenty-three, of Boston, ten stone thirteen

WILLIAM H. SIMMONS, twenty, Concord, thir-teen stone; a very powerful car.

SYLVESTER WARREN RICE, twenty-six, Roseburg. Oregon, eleven stone six pounds; great length of reach and power of endurance. Guonus Bass, Chicago, twenty-four, stroke;

ARTHUR BURNHAM, Chicago, coxswain, eight stone four pounds. Our last advices are that Rick and Bass are to be displaced by Fay and Lyman, on the ground that with them better time could be

The Harvard crew took with them to England

a boat built by ELLIOTT, of Greenpoint. But upon trial this boat was found inadequate, and a w boat was ordered from the NALTERS of Ox-rd. Thus both the boats will be of English manufacture, and the international rivalry of the race will be confined to the styles and sinews of

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 4, 1869.

GENERAL CANBY'S DUTY.

N dealing with so new and difficult a subject as reconstruction, and in the midst of a constant conflict with the Executive, it is not surprising that Congress did not provide for every emergency. The consequences, however, are none the less to be regretted, and should be treated reasonably, and not with mere party purposes in view; and if a solution at once conciliatory and just can be found, it should gladly be adopted. A difficulty has arisen on the interpretation of the act approved April 10, 1869, under which the late election was held in Virginia. The original reconstruction acts make certain persons ineligible to election as members of the Legislature. The act of April 10, however, submitted to the registered voters the question whether disfranchisement should be continued under the new Constitution. It also empowered those voters to elect members of Congress and of the State Legislature at the time of voting upon the Constitution. The election was held, the disfranchising clause of the new Constitution was rejected, and Members of Congress and of Assembly chosen. It now appears that many of the members of Assembly so elected are incapacitated by the original reconstruction acts; and it is claimed on their behalf that the act of April 10 repeals the disfranchising clauses of the original acts, and that therefore the members may take their But General CARRY, commanding in the State, is of a different opinion, and it is understood that be intends to require the test This is a difficulty which would have been avoided if the later act had expressly declared the repeal of any part of the earlier. But in so vital a matter as reconstruction no repeal of any restriction ought to be assumed; and to make that assumption still less proper in the present ease, the necessary operation of the new Constitution, if approved by Congress, will hereafter, but not for the purposes of this election, supersede the old provisions. The act of April 10 authorizes an election for Members of Assembly simultaneously with the vote upon the disfranchising clause. But that act necessarily contemplates the election of members qualified under existing laws, not of those to be qualified under a Constitution which may or may not be approved. The existing laws were known, and they designated who might vote and who might be voted for. If they were disregarded, it was not from ignorance. It was no more compe-tent for unqualified voters to vote for the Constitution because it would qualify them than for qualified voters to vote for ineligible candidates because the Constitution would make them eligible. If the Constitution were adopted without the disfranchising clause, and if the Constitution, with the Legislature of qualified members, were accepted by Congress, then, of course, they become the fundamental law and the legal Assembly of the State; and at subsequent elections the voters now unqualified might vote, and the candidates now ineligible be voted General CANBY's duty is plain. He must obey existing laws, not propositions of law not yet approved. If a Legislature assembles he must take care that it be qualified according to

But if he does this it is unquestionable that the will of the qualified voters will be defeated. It may be said, indeed, and undoubtedly with a great deal of truth, that incligible candidates were intentionally and defiantly selected. But, on the other hand, the omission of the act to provide distinctly for the emergency must be conceded. It is an unfortunate dilemma, and it is one which should have been foreseen by Congress; but it is by no means a case for denunriation or fury. Those who voted at the late election were qualified. They therefore represent the State of Virginia which Congress has declared itself, in determining the qualification, willing to recognize. It can not desire that their wishes should be defeated. Yet if the Legislature meets before the assembling of Congress, General CANDY must, in obedience to law, unseat so many members as to give the power to the minority. They would probably elect two United States Senators in sympathy with the minority. But what would be the result? Those Senators could take their seats only when Congress had approved the new Constitution of the State. But that Constitution abolishes disfranchisement; and if party advantage be considered, the election of minority Senators would justly be regarded with a bitterness which would hurt the cause of the minority infinitely more than the Senators could

The honorable and proper solution of the difficulty is evident. The act of April 10 provides that the Legislature shall not assemble until four weeks after the General commanding in the State proclaims that the Constitution has been ratified by the legal votors. Let General Canny delay his proclamation until the meeting of Congress. Then let Congress, upon his certificate of the facts, order new elections in the place of the ineligible members. There will be ample time for each elections, for the meeting of the Legislature, and the choice of Senators, before the session of Cougress is far advanced; and there could be no just complaint upon any side, for all laws will then have been satisfied, and the will of the majority of the voters will have been respected.

THE LOCOMOTIVE AND THE COO.

Among the minor blessings which the country owes to the Democratic party is Judge M'Cunn, of New York. His lofty character, his profound legal learning, the universal re-spect and confidence which he commands, are all shining proofs of the superior claims of that party to the control of the country. Indeed, the character of a party which receives its policy from a Sweeney, which calls a M'Cunn to the beach, and elects on A. OAKET HALL for Mayor, is sufficiently perceived from those facts. Ex pede Herculem; given M'Cunn, you may construct the Democratic party. This party cherishes a peculiar jealousy of the national government, and asserts very stoutly what it is pleased to call State sovereignty. And it was only natural that Judge M'Cuns should attempt to illustrate the party tendency upon this subject by his proceedings in the late case of the Texan PRATE. The matter was promptly settled, but it should be remembered.

PRATT was arrested upon a charge of abetting an atrocious murder in Texas last October. and was held for examination by the United States Commissioner. A writ of habens corpus was issued by Judge M'Curz, addressed to the jailer, who returned answer that PRATT was held by the United States. The Judge then required the personal appearance of PRATT be-fore him. The United States officers, not recognizing any authority upon the part of M*Cuxx, but anxious to avoid even the appearance of offense, and with the understanding that PRATT would be immediately remanded to them, carried him before Judge M'Cuxx, who, instead of instantly resigning all claim to jurisdiction, which it was his lawful duty to do, heard an argument upon the merits of the case, and at the end "remanded the prisoner to the Mar-shal"—as if the Marshal had been one of his officers. The Marshal, as the understanding had not been observed, to prevent any further actual interference by M'CUNN, placed PRATE

The Judge then ordered him to release the prisoner under the writ of habeas corpus, which had been addressed to the jailer. The Marshal declined to take notice of the order, both because he was no party to the writ, and because Judge M'Cunn had no jurisdiction in the case. Thereupon the Judge ordered his arrest for contempt, and the President of the United States ordered the Marshal not to allow the execution of the laws to be defeated by his arrest. The Marshal then summ med the military protection of the United States. and at the time specified by the Commissioner the prisoner was brought before him for examination, and was released by him upon the ground that there was not sufficient legal evidence to hold him, the order of release being accompanied by the decided declaration of the Commissioner, that his decision had been delayed by the interference of the State Court.

Judge M'Cuss has as much right to order e release of PRATT and the arrest of shal as any old apple-woman, and no more. The point has been long settled, both by the Supreme Court of the United States and by the State statutes, that when return is made to a writ of habour corpus, issued by a State Judge, that the prisoner is held by the United States authorities, the State Judge is to remand him to their custody. The mistake of the authorities in this case was in consenting to appear before Judge M'Curr at all. It was indeed done with the best intention, with the intention of avoiding the very objection of discourtesy that was sure to be raised, and was mised; but the difficulty was, that when the United States officers appeared before M'Cunn they gave color to his claim of jurisdiction, and to suppose that that excellent Judge would not improve the advantage thus given him was to be at least unwary. As he had no authority what-ever, the return to his writ should have been made, and no form of recognizing any further claim tolerated. After Judge M'CUNN knew the facts, the attempt by his writ to arrest the Marshal was nothing else than lawless violence to prevent the execution of the laws of the

The San, in its bitter hostility to Marshal Barlow, whose vigilant and successful en-forcement of the Neutrality laws it can not forgive, declared that if Mr. SEWARD had been Governor of the State he would have called out the whole military force to sustain a writ which Judge M'Cuxx had no more authority to issue than the reporter of the Sas. Mr. Szwano is too good a citizen and too sound a lawyer to attempt any such unpardonable crime. New Jersey or California Judge had issued his writ for the Marshal's arrest in New York, would Mr. SEWARD, as Governor, have called out all the militia to enforce the writ if the Marshal refused to acknowledge it? But their writ would be just as lawful under the circumstances as Judge M'Cuns's. The Supreme Court of the United States has decided that no judicial process can have authority beyond its jurisdiction. The whole affair is another illustration of the eagerness to bring the national and State authority into collision, which is constantly displayed by the advocates of State "sovereignty." The attitude of the United States officers was respectful and conciliatory until the audacious attempt of a Judge to impede the execution of the law. Then their conduct was firm and prompt in asserting the just authority of the United States.

THE MASSACHUSETTS PROHIBI-TIONISTS.

THOSE who anticipated a rupture in the Republican party of Massachusetts by the action of the Prohibitory Convention are disappointed. The President, upon taking the chair, remarked that the purpose of the Convention was not a multiplication of candidates; and with a hearty greeting to all delegates who might be Democrats, but assuming that the great majority were Republicans, he announced his intention to dis-charge his duty " within the limits of the Republican party."

The address of the Convention asserts that the people of Massachusetts have for thirty years approved prohibition upon the ground that whatever is clearly injurious to the State may be forbidden by the State. Experience, it says, teaches that the drunkard-maker is a criminal; so the sale of liquor as a beverage was prohibited. This law, according to the address, was most successful. But the pressure of opposition repealed it. "A great and trusted leader"-for thus it speaks of Jons A. An-DREW-"foremost in the work of a kindred and not inferior reform, who had given the State a triumphant record and himself an immortal name in the national conflict, cast his great powers and greater name in the scale of ruin." License replaced prohibition; but the pauperism of the State increased within the succeeding year nearly fourfold, and the jails were so crowded that the Governor declared their enlargement would be necessary if the license law were maintained. The result was a res-toration of prohibition by the last Legislature; and the address concludes by stating that the party which pronounces for prohibition will receive such support as it never knew.

The address was followed by a series of resolutions. In reply to the argument that such a law is an invasion of personal liberty the resolutions affirm that it is no more so than the suppression of gambling, lotteries, and dueling; that it is no infringement of personal lib-erty to forbid the sale of what is the cause of general suffering and crime; that it is incontestible that one-half of the pauperism and crime in the country is caused by the open sale of liquor as a beverage, and the State which supports poupers and criminals has a right to forbid the sale of that which makes them sowhich is proved by the fact that those who deny the right to prohibit do for the very same pur pose restrict and limit.

The resolutions are much too diffuse. The strength of the position of the temperance men lies in the universally conceded and exercised right of restriction by license. The extension of the limitation becomes then a question of ency; and if it can be esta an extension even to prohibition really keeps the peace better and lowers the taxes, they will have gained an immense advantage. Rev. Dr. MINER, who replied to Governor ANDREW before the Committee of the Legislature, in a speech to the Convention, said that the new prohibitory law, during the forty-eight days in which it had been enforced, had done more for temperance and morality than all the license laws had ever done. The good Doctor's assertion certainly proves the ardor of his faith, if it is less serviceable to his cause than a few figures would be; and when he declared that there was joy in hell over every issue of certain newspapers which do not agree with him, he did not certainly commend his cause to hearers at this distance.

The Massnehusetts prohibitionists will act within the Republican party, and, of course, will endeavor to secure the proper plank in the platform at the September convention. We doubt if they will succeed. They are a powerful and persistent, but it is not probable that they are yet the controlling, el ment of the Some of the most influential and able Republicans are as resolutely hostile to prohibition as a party tenet as Governor ANDREW was ; so that if the probibitionists can carry the Convention they can by no means command the whole Republican vote of the State. If they are a clear majority of the Convention they will undoubtedly insist upon a distinct prohibitory declaration. If they are not, they will be obliged to accept a compromise.

THE COAL QUESTION.

Ir the Pennsylvania authorities are unable to maintain public order in the mining districts !t is their duty to demand assistance of the United States. It is useless to say that the President ought to interfere, for the President can do nothing except upon a constitutional request from the Governor or the Legislature. If the miners have a real grievance, mobs and riots are not the proper remedy, and should no longer be tolorated.

The people of Pennsylvania have an unques-tioned interest in collecting from the Northern and Eastern States as large returns for anthracite coal as possible, in order that they may be distributed over the State, and this interest will have great effect in determining its policy. The amount exacted from local consumers of coal in Pennsylvania by reason of strikes bears but a small proportion to the excess over usual profits which a successful strike produces for such distribution. Many Pennsylvanians, therefore, if they weep at all over these alarming disturbances, weep with only one eye, as they view in the opposite scale the pecuniary advantage. The miners are a powerful body in a political sense, and would wield their united strength against the Governor who should be the means of calling out the forces of the Union to keep them in order, Pennsylvania will probably hesitate before taking this decisive but necessary step.

The demand on the part of the miners, which they prosecute with force, is, to be admitted to participation in the profits of the mines as they think advantageous; and as much of this property is owned by persons and Companies located out of the State, the motive appears not to be as powerful for restraining the violent assertion of this demand as if the mines were owned exclusively in Pennsylvania. It is not improbable, also, that the policy which advances the price of coal to unreasonable limits has some support from the Companies which share in the advantage, or we should hear of demands openly and publicly made on Governor GRARY, if the State were unequal to the task of preserving order, to require the General Government to carry out its guarantee of protection against domestic violence. In the absence of such demands, whether explicable by selfish considerations or not, it is for the Governor to consider whether the lawless condition of the coal districts can be safely endured,

It will be found that the object of this strike has no strong sympathies outside of the limits of Pennsylvania, and, on the contrary, that there are powerful interests which would combine to support the Government of the United States if it should be required to intervene. Coal is of such general use and necessity that the interest is extensive and powerful which calls for putting down the armed combination which keeps it at a high price to the damage of all the various industries of the country. It is of the highest importance that fuel for domestic and manufacturing purposes should be furnished at a cheap rate. It constitutes one of the elements for successful competition with foreign industries; and as the mines are owned in great part outside of Pennsylvania, and as roads have been chartered to run their cars from the mines across State lines, there is nothing in the way of the general enjoyment of these deposits of coal except the disturbances at the mines; and the rioters should be unmistakably taught that they must seek redress, like other citizens, of the laws and not of brute force.

Notwithstanding these troubles in the anthracite districts it is pleasant to know that the Cumberland mines in Maryland are worked with regularity, and that the Baltimore and Ohio road, which carries coal at the lowest rate per ton, has refused at this juncture, though strongly urged, to increase the hardly remunerating freight which is charged. The policy is the reverse of that of some roads running out of New York, for it looks to permanent results and to substantial interests.

The question what Congress can do for relief will engage attention. The duty on bitu-minous coal-28 bushels to the ton and 80 pounds per bushel—is $1 25 per ton, and upon all other coal it is 40 cents per ton. Although it is higher on bituminous than upon other coal the bituminous is really the competing coal with the anthracite, for it may be used for manufacturing purposes, and for consumption in open grates and Franklin stoves. The description of coal at 40 cents per ton is very little imported, although it would appear to be the competing article with anthracite. Except for a incessant difficulties in Pennsylvania the manufacturing States which have no coal beds might refuse to touch this duty; but it would be manifestly wrong to continue it under the circumstances. If the duty were removed an immense amount, suitable for engines, would be received from Nova Scotia,

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

The fear expressed in some quarters that the owners of Pennsylvania mines may purchase those of Nova Scotia to secure themselves in a monopoly need not be entertained. The Cumberland and Picton fields in Nova Scotia are estimated at a hundred square miles, the seams having a thickness in the whole of fifty feet, while the available seams in Cape Breton are estimated at a hundred and twenty square miles of a thickness of from one to twelve feet. As the coal-heds are convenient to numerous sea-ports it will be impossible for monopoly to command districts so extensive and value If the duty on coal should be taken off, which is the evident policy, our manufacturing industry would have one of the obstacles removed which prevents competition with others; and as Nova Scotia does not extend further north than parts of Maine and convenient to our coast, it is easy to foresee the relations between us which large supplies of coal would produce; and it would appear to be patting aside one of the great favors of Providence to maintain a of duty which practically denies us the benefits of this fortunate provision.

THE DUTY OF THE REPUBLICAN PARTY.

GOVERNOR PALMER, of Illinois, has recently made a speech in which he very well defines a party as an agency for the public good, and re-marks that no party will be sustained on account of its past services. He then proceeds to speak of the questions of the time upon which parties must express themselves; of the enormous corruption in politics, and of the necessity of restoring the proper relations between the National and State governments, which the war and the policy which it necessi-tated have naturally disturbed. This is the point upon which he chiefly insists, evidently with the feeling that there is a tendency toward forgetfulness of the just rights of the States. Senator Mosros, of Indiana, has also made a speech in which he reviews with pride and pleasure the career of the Republican party, and declares that, great as its work has been, it is not yet ended. It has done one thing at a time, and done it well; and it will continue in the glorious path of progress. Senator Monthe two parties, and that the Democratic party has nothing to offer but negations and dissatis factions.

Senator Sherman, of Ohio, also has given his view of the political situation. He claims that the Administration is reducing the public expenditures within the appropriations, and that a firm policy will without difficulty pay the debt within twenty years. The condition of the currency, in Mr. Sherman's judgment, is due to the timidity of public opinion which opposes its reduction; and he holds that the responsibility can not be charged upon any party. He thinks the discussion of a tariff uscless, because at present there is an undoubted preference of an indirect to a direct tax. present tariff is designed to raise about $150,000,000 upon importations; and its prosection is purely incidental, and not so great as to prevent a healthy competition between foreign and domestic manufacturers. Mr. Shan-MAN sums up his views upon this point in these words: "The question of protection is purely incidental; and until our debt is so reduced that we may largely reduce our taxes, it is idle to discuss the mere policy of protection as a measure of national economy. It is enough that we must now levy the duties to raise rev-enue; and before this necessity ceases the manufactories of this country will be on so stable a footing as to defy the competition of the world." This is, however, rather a cheerful and dextrous avoidance of the exact question, which is the true method of levying duties?

The speeches of all these gentlemen show a perception of the fact that the party in which they are all conspicuous must address itself with such vigor and intelligence to the actual issues as to continue to inspire the confidence which it now enjoys. For eight years it has had a positive, progressive, and therefore a triumphant policy. It has not counseled with its doubts and fears, but with its faith and hope. For however courteous, however conciliatory, the tone of party discussion may be, a party policy must be clear, intelligible, and heroic. Whether the object be, with WALFOLE, internal peace, or, with CHATHAM, foreign victory, the policy must be bold and the tendency undoubt-It is not necessary that the Republican party now unroll a dazzling programme of annexation and foreign hectoring to propitiate the worst part of the population; but it is necessary that it grapple at once with evident and increasing evils. Corruption is one of them. Let the party pronounce upon it by a vigorous support of a reform in the civil service. The complexity of the tariff and of the system of internal taxation also demand reform. Mr. SHERMAN says that he hopes soon to see all internal taxes repealed except those on whisky, tobacco, and incomes. Let the party demand a simple and efficient system. As for the currency, its regulation, under existing circumstances, is so entirely a matter of experiment that it would be useless to proclaim the details of any method. While the country sees a steady reduction of the debt, and an increasing economy of administration, it will not insist ecific theories.

The Republican party is master of the situa-tion, and it can easily retain control of the country if it remembers its own history. Principle, intelligence, boldmass—these have been its conquering signs, and with these it will continne to conquer. The Democratic party is strong only by the faults of the Republican. In all the Democratic platforms that have been put forth for the autumn elections there is no system of principles except such as are no less odious to honest and intelligent men than they were when first announced. The only positive proposition that appears in those platforms is some kind of repudiation, a revelation of the tendency and sympathy of the party. Upon the question of equal rights, which the Repub-lican party is happily and justly settling, these platforms are contradictory. For unconditional free-trade they do not distinctly declare, because Pennsylvania holds an election. They speer and denounce and declaim, but the only reason that any voter should prefer a Democratic to a Republican ticket in any of the States in which an election is pending is, that he thinks the Republicans need the spur of defeat, not that he believes that greater honesty, economy, or constitutionality of administration would be secured by the ascendency of the party from whose supremney sprang the corrupt system which now threatens, and the treason which lately assailed the Government. It is for the Republican party to show that it does not need such a spur by the character of the principles it proclaims upon living issues, and of the candidates whom it nominates to office.

EMIGRATION TO LOUISIANA.

Tun State of Louisiana devotes great and intelligent attention to the subject of immigration, and its Commissioners for that purpose, of whom Dr. Janus O. Norus is President, take care to furnish the most ample and various information for all who are looking for a new home. Thus it appears that Louislana, contrary to the gen-eral impression, is shown by the statistics to be one of the most healthy States in the Union. Louisiana is as healthy as Massachusetts, and the climate is delightful, the mercury seldom rising above 90° in summer or falling below 30° in winter, and the mean temperature being about 70°. The rate of annual mortality, also, even in New Orleans, which has had a bad reputation upon that score, is much less than that of cities which are considered to be much healthier. In Boston the ratio is 1 to 41,26; in New York, 1 to 27.84; in London, 1 to 40; in Puris, 1 to 32; in Havana, 1 to 33; and in New Orleans the mean of three years unaffected by yellow-forer is 1 to 47.48. The Commissioners pass rather lightly over the yellow-fever, speaking of "oc-casional epidemics which are confined to the towns and cities, and which scourge we shall in time learn to obviate altogether." has, however, been but one season of yellow-fever in New Orleans since 1858.

Louisiana has a remarkable system of natural means of transportation in twenty thousand miles of river, lake, and bayon navigation. To supply the transports the whole northern part of the State produces cotton; the rice lands of Louisiana are incomparably the best in the Union; and nine-tenths of the cane sugar produced in the United States come from the delta of the Mississippi. The orange groves are most valuable. The orange crop on six acres containing 600 trees, and belonging to a poor man, was sold last year for $7000. Many sugar planters realized last year a profit of more than $150 per acre; many, also, eleared a net profit of $1000 or $1500 per hand. Indeed, the Commissioners set forth several appetizing facts of this kind; and then add, as if to make temptation irresistible, that sugar plantations cleared, ditched, and fenced, with comfortable "if not splendid" dwellings, can be bought at less than half the cost of the improvements. Sugar lands are to be bought at $5 to $75 per acre; cotton lands from $3 to $30. Rice lands are equally low. The United States hold 3,000,000 acres in Louisiana at $1 25 per acre; and there is about the same quantity of State land at 25 cents per acre. If the immigrant is too poor to buy, there is the Homestead law to befriend him. In no other State, says the befriend him. Board, will a dollar buy so much; in no other can a man five so easily.

Such is the mildness of the climate that there are about 250 fair working days on the farm in Lonisiana against less than 150 in New York or Wisconsin: and the Commissioners could immediately find places on plantations for 10,000 able-bodied men at $20 per month, with house rent and the principal articles of food included. Indeed the natural resources of the State are remarkable, and with intelligent labor and enterprise, and political tranquillity, Louisiana would be among the most prosperous of States.

NOTES.

Louis Naroleon is a sagacious man, and in his case the only question is whether he is sa-gacious enough to keep his word. He has es-tablished many of the fundamental forms of a tablished many of the fundamental forms of a constitutional and responsible government in France; and upon the hundredth attaiversary of the birthday of his uncle he granted a complete amousty to press and political offenders, and to sundry other classes of delinquenta. But M. Trurkes, now an old man, who has seen many changes in France, and who is a Frenchman of Frenchmen, shakes his head and says that the republic is coming in France, but coming in blood and ravage. M. Trurkes, however, is a disappointed Orleanist, and was always a man of little faith.

The discovery of the shocking abuse of a nun in the convent at Cracow has so stirred the Aus-trian people and Government that the Minister of Public Worship has informed the Governor of the Province that the Government believes inself bound to stop the payment of the annual subsidy to the convent, and also to propose an inquiry whether the convent should not be sup-pressed. The feeling with which an event like that of the Cracow convent is received shows how profound is the popular doubt and jealousy of the ecclesisatical régime.

Iv is quite time that Congress relieved from It is quite time that Congress relieved from legal pursuit the military officers of the United States who, during the rebellion and the suspension of the writ of Asbeus corpus, summarily arrested and imprisoned suspected persons. Journ Mircust., whom to name is to describe, has beought an action against General Dax for illegal imprisonment, and the General was arrested under a M'Cunn writ and held to hail in twenty thousand deliars. It was easy for General Dax thousand dollars. It was easy for General Dix to procure the ball, but an ingenious system of such actions might cause the most serious annoyance to these who are less fortunately situated than General Dix, and who are as guiltless as SENATOR BROWNLOW has written a curious letter in regard to the Tennessee election. It is curious from the moderation of its tone, and from its admissions. Mr. Baowslow says that a majority of the Republicans of Tennessee are SENTER men, and that SENTER is a sound Republican, but he is very careful not to claim the result of the election as a Republican vic-tory. Indeed, he admits that the Legislature is not Republican. Mr. Buowstow does not explain why a majority of the Tennessee Re-publicans preferred to take a bourse which gave the State to the Democrata. If the reason was the Republicans preferred Democratic ascendency rather than continued disfranchise-ment, it was, if a mistaken, certainly not a discreditable opinion, and he ought not to have omitted to state it. Is Mr. BROWNLOW silent because that was not the renson, which is to be sought in personal jealousies? He would do his sought in personal jenuseurs. The would not be party friends elsewhere a great service if he would elearly and briefly explain the reason why he wished "a sound and reliable Republican" to be elected Governor by those who will not elect such a Republican Senator.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

Iw July 222,277 citizens of Boston—noen, worsen, and children—availed themselves of the privileges and selvantages affected by the various public bathing-houses in that city.

The Labor Courres, recently assembled at Philadelphis, strenously opposed the project for the introduction of coolie labor into this country. It also took the cite of the Pennsylvania coal-anters as against their employers. It was proposed to organize a political parity to be compased of laboring-new.

Mr. Peabody has dended $60,000 to Washington College, Virginia. General Robert E. Lee is President of that institution. This gift is alluded to in warm terms of granitude by the Virginia papers. It is the feeling shown rather than the money given that is reported that several mills in Rhode Island that manufacture print cloths will suspend operations netil the new crop of cotion comes into market. At Fall River, Massachneous, the mills producing this cloth will seen run on "short time."

FOREIGN NEWS.

FOREIGN NEWS.

The Senators Consultum, recently presented to the French Senate, gives to the Legislature the initiative of proposing laws. It makes the Ministers dependent on the Emperor alone; but it gives to the Legislature of the Ministers dependent on the Emperor alone; but it gives to the Legislature body a meth larger share in the governments than it has hereafore enjoyed. The discussion of the Senatos Consultum commones Acques 38.

The recent advices from Cuba indicate more cheering prospects for the patriots. A strong Speaksh force had been defeated between Remedius and Naevitas by General Quesails. One hundred and eighty-two pelaceners were taken. In another engagement, near Triuldad, General Jordan defeated the Spaniants, exposuring fifty-six prisoners. One hundred and fifty Spanlards descried and joined the Cubans. It is reported that the Spanish roluminers are treating Captain-General De Redas as they formerly treated Dulce, and it is supposed that De Rodas will resign.

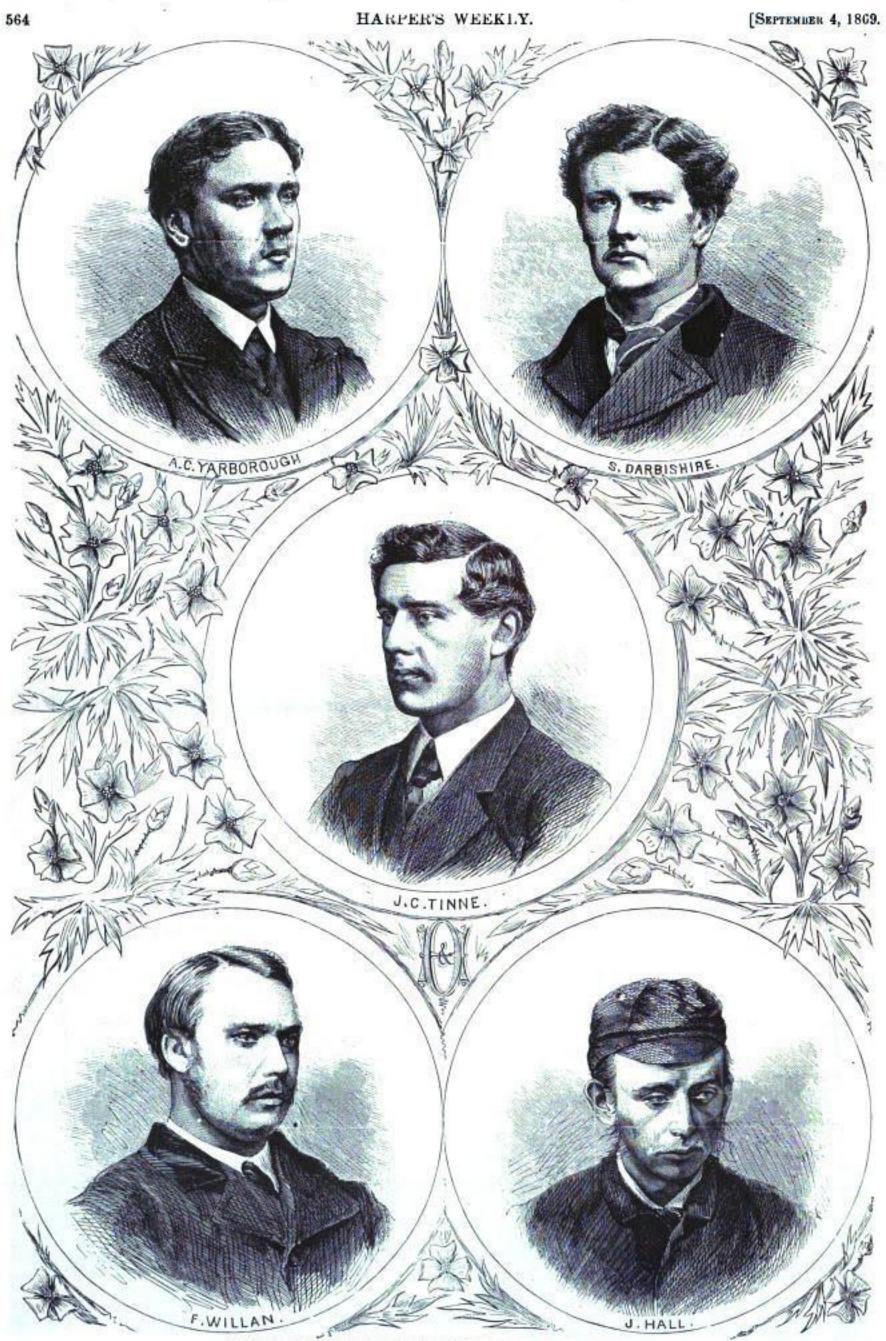

A complete reconciliation has been effected between the Saltan and the Viceroy of Egypt. The English and Prench Consults at Alexandria have comprainhed the Viceroy on the termination of his difficulties with the Porte.

The Hone correspondent of the Prossian Cross Grante asserts that the late Syllahus of the Pope will form the chief solicet of the deliberations of the General assumption of the Vicero that State will be modified, and probably intensified. The dogmas of the Infallities of the Pope and the spiritual and corporal assumption of the Virgin will be promitigated. The Holy Father has expressed his regret that no Schlematic or Protestant bishop has offered to take part in the Council.

This translanded stores and three hundred dwelling-houses have been destroyed by fire in the town of Janias. Turkey.

Thomas lingbes—the well-known "Tom Brown"—of Engley, has been chosen referred in the international heat-race between the Outer and Harrard crows.

General Lebenf has been appointed kinister of War to succeed Marshal Ried decased

THE INTERNATIONAL BOAT-RACE-THE OXFORD CREW.-[See First Page.]

OUR NEW CURRICULUM. AS TOM BEES IT.

A riu for your Latin, and less for your Greek, No honger with Euclid we'll tustle: The pets of the "Varidies" now, for a week, Are the boys who exhibit the muscle.

Of all the formations, since Chaos was drowned, As marked by geologists grave, The very best strainm that ever was found Is the new one of wherry on wave.

The student of nature may dive after fish,
If he likes, in the depths of the sea;
But the chap who just covers his binds with a swish,
Why, he is the juker for me.

The chemist who catches a crab in his boat, And throws a precipitate there: By "pons asinceus" he never can float, Nor pass the professional chair.

The sage engineer, with his sector and square, May study his bes' to begin it, But be can't find a power with his to compare, Who can go forty-eight to the minute.

Hurrah for the steersman that pulls with a will, Hurrah for the rest of the crew! And good-by to Leomis, and Authon, and Mill, 664 codgers, it's all up with you.

A fig for your Latin, and less for your Grook, No longer with Earlid we'll tussle; The pets of the "Varsities" now, for a week, Are the boys who exhibit the muscle!

VERONICA.

By the Author of "Aunt Margaret's Trouble."

In Olbe Books,-Book E.

CHAPTER I.

A NEW YICAR FOR SHIPLEY.

THE Church Intelligence announced one day, much to the fluttering of the village of Ship-ley, and also to the fluttering of some disappoint-of hearts in cierical breasts, that the Reverend Charles Levincourt was presented to the vacant living of Shipley-in-the-Wold.

The Reverest Charles Levincourt was pre-sented to the living of Shipley-in-the-Wold by Sir William Delancy, to whose only son he had been tutor. Sir William had always expressed his sense of obligation to Mr. Leviscourt for the unremitting and judicious care he had bestowed on his son James's education. 'The young man was sickly in body and inset in mind; nevertheless be had passed through his university career in a fairly creditable manner. This was mainly owing, as every one admitted, to his tutor's talents and seal. Therefore when the not very lucrative liv-ing of Shipley fell vacant, it was the most natural thing in the world that Sir William should bestow it on a gentleman for whose services he professed himself sincerely grateful. But neither Shipley-in-the-Wold nor the world out of the Wold by any means understood the mainspring of this sincere gratitude.

James was the beronet's only son, but Sir William was also the father of two daughters. While the elder of these young ladies—Hilda was going through the gayeties of a London season (at the end of which she became Lady Tallis), Clara-a girl of seventeen-was quietly failing in love with her brother's tutor in the

The Delancys were Irish people. They lived The Delaneys were Irish people. They fixed chiefly at the place which bore their family name—an estate called Delaney Park in the bouth of Ireland. James passed the long vacuation at home, and Mr. Levincourt came with him. Clara was a delicate, shy, sweet-natured creature; motherless, and more insocent of worldliness in her cighteenth year, then more worldliness in her eighteenth year than many a proceeding inmate of a Belgmvian nursery.

Charles Levincourt loved her better than he was destined ever to love another human being. But he "behaved admirably," Sir William al-

How a ways declared.

How? Well, in a word, he went abroad with a rich minor to whose guardines Sir William Delaney warmly recommended his son's inter.

Before two years were over the family at De-lancy Park learned that Mr. Levincourt was murried in Italy, to a foreign lady of great beauty, but no fortune. Soon afterward Clara yielded to her father's reficitations, and accepted the hand of Sidney Fower Desmond, Esquire, of Desmond Court, County Cork: a gentleman of good family, whose estate adjoined her father's. On his seccrole to Charles Levince next presentation, then likely to fall in very shortly, to the English living of Shipley-in-the-No one save her father knew that it was Clara who had asked and obtained this boon. But she had said to Sir William in her quiet sweet voice, "Papa, James had a letter the other day from Mr. Levinessurt. He has not suc-reeded in gesting appointed to the foreign chap-Lainey he was trying for. His wife has just had a little girl. I am afraid they are very poor. I wish you would promise him the next presentation to Shipley. You could not do better. He is so clever and so learned, and—and he was very good to James, pape denr."

In this way the Reverend Charles Levincourt became vicar of Shipley-in-the-Wold.

CHAPTER II.

SHIPLEY VICARAGE.

THE small and obscure village of Shipley-inthe-Wold stands in one of the westernancet of the midland counties.

Its name was given in days before the whole of that part of England had been marked by the plow and spode, like a page by the tracings of a pen. Generation after generation has left its sign-manual on the face of the land: each writing the record of its labors in straight furrows on many a fertile field: furrows effaced and changed and renewed, from season to season, and from age to age, as are the waving ripples on a sea-side sand washed by the eternal tides. washed by the eternal tides.

A stretch of furae-grown common is, perhaps, the only remnant of that characteristic aspect of the country which gave Shipley its distinctive ap-peliation.

There are wide, flat meadows all round about it, where herds of cattle graze on the dew-fed grass. The principal farms in the immediate neighborhood of Shipley-in-the-Wold are graz-ing farms. All the land is flat and monotonous as far as the eye can see: save to the westward, where the horizon line is broken by a range of low turf-covered hills, called by the inhabitants of those parts emphatically "the Hills." Behind "the Hills" has another Shipley; Shipley Mag-in, a tiny market-town.

If it could be reached by a direct line cut through one swelling green mound, Shipley Magna would not be more than two or three miles distant from Shipley-in-the-Wold, But the road winds about and over the hills; and it is six miles from the village to the town. Southward the landscape grows prettier and more smiling. There are trees, and there arable land where, in summer, wide fields There are trees, and there is sun-burnt grain wave, and rock, and change col-or in the breeze, as a face pales or flushes at a sudden whisper.

But Shipley-in-the-Wold only beholds these things from afar. The stretch of furze grown common already mentioned, and beyond that a considerable extent of our marshland separate it from the smiling southern country.

In the winter season bleak winds sweep scythewinged over Shipley; the snow lies deep about it; and often a single track of boofs, and wheels, and feet may be traced in long black lines and uncouth dots, for miles across the otherwise un-broken whiteness of the level.

The village straggles over a considerable extent of ground, but its bosses are few and its popula-tion is scanty. There is nothing which can be called a main street belonging to it.

The dwellings etand scattered irregularly; here a cottage, and there a cottage, and each one is set within its own little patch of kitchen-garden.

The place is remote from any great centre of commerce and activity. No railway passes near Twenty miles to the southward, among the trees and the corn-fields, lies the cathedral city of Danecester; with its hishop, and its dean, and its minster, and many other civilizing and excellent institutions. But Danecester is, after all, but a silent, sleepy, old-fashioned city; and it wots little, and cares less, about your little Shipley out on the bleak, wind-swept flats.

There is a very ancient church in Shipley: a low-roofed, stone church with round arches, pillars of disproportionate thickness, and a square, squat tower. It has a deep porch, to enter which you descend two steps from the grave-yard.
The laboring centuries have piled their dust ligh around the massive masonry of St. Gildas's church, and the level of the outside earth is considerably above the within the little temple. above that of the stone pavement

The grave-yard is inclosed by a low wall, and its gateway is a relic of antiquity coeval with the church itself. The said gateway is of hewn stone, with a projecting pent-house roof, and beneath it on one side is a large stone slab, cracked, weather-stained, and half sunk into the earth. Here, in the old time, the coffin-bearers were went to set down their burden, and a prelimin-ary prayer for the dead was said before entering

There is no beauty in St. Gildas's grave-yard. It lies defenseless and exposed to every wild northeasterly gale that sweeps over the flats. Its clustered mounds are turf-grown. Sheep graze there sometimes in summer. The few grave-stones, as yet undefaced by time and weather, bear bumble names of yeomen and peasants, born, living, and dying at Shipley, generation after generation.

There are some runk flaunting marigolds growing beside the porch, and a sickly-hued chrysanthemain raises its head to peer over the low rough wall of the grave-yard. Other growth, save net-tles, dock leaves, and dank, shadow-loving, nameless words, there is none.

Hard by the church stands the vicarage house. It is a lonely dwelling. There is no habitation of any kind within a mile of it; none above the rank of a peasant's cottage within two miles. Shipley vicarage is either not old enough or too old to be picturesque. It was built in the middle of what may be termed, emphatically, the ugly age; the period, namely, during which the four Georges successively occupied the throne of these realiss. It is a nearly square house of vellowish-brown brick. Its rooms are oblong and rectangular, its windows mean, its staircases HATTHW. There is no break or relief in the flat surfaces, nor in the blank desert of the whitewashed ceilings.

Behind the house extends a large garden, the high wall of which skirts a by-lane branching from the main high-road to Shipley Magna. In front is a lawn, cut in two by a long, straight gravel path that leads from an iron wicket in the dge up to the hall-door. This lawn is only divided by a paddock from St. Gildas's church-yard.

Two quivering poplars whisper to each other, and nod mysteriously from either side of the iron gate: and the windows of the lower rooms in the front of the house are darkened by clumps of evergreens, among which an old yew-tree rises gloomily conspicuous.

The vicarage faces due south, and looks across the common and the marsh to where tufty wood-lands break the level and hide the distant spires Danecester.

The Reverend Charles Levincourt, vicar of St. The Reverend Charles Levincourt, year or or.
Gildas, arrived to take possession of his new home on a dreary day in the latter autumn, when the min dripped sadly from the sombre evergreens, and low, lead-colored clouds were melting into slant showers over the common.

"It is not a hopeful scene," said he, as he looked about him and shipered.

looked about him and shivered.

He afterward saw the scene under a countless variety of aspects; but that first dispiriting impression of Shipley struck the key-note of the place, and became an abiding under-tone, sounding through all subsequent changes.

CHAPTER III.

A WARD.

Ms. Laviscount had been established some years at Shipley, when one day he received a let-ter from the junior partner in a London firm of solicitors, Frost and Lovegrove, informing him that he (the Reverend Charles Levincourt, vicar of Shipley-in-the-Wold) had been appointed coexecutor with the writer (Augustus Lovegrove) of the will of the late Mrs. Desmond, relict of Sidney Power Desmond, Esquire, formerly of Desmond Court, county Cork; and further re-questing the vicar's presence in town as soon as Communication between the country clergyman and the family of his old pepil had long since wern away and died out. The old pupil himself had died, at five-and-twenty; his sorrow-ing father had not long survived him; and this was the first intimation Charles Levincourt reerived of the widowhood and death of his old

He journeyed without delay to London, saw Mr. Lovegrove. The latter informed that their joint responsibility, as regarded the administration of Mrs. Desmond's will, would not be an onerous one: the property she had had to leave being very small.

"But," added the solicitor, "your share of the business will be more troublesome. Here is a letter which I solemnly promised our poor friend to deliver into your own hand. She in-formed me of its main object. It is to request you to undertake the guardianship of her daugh-

" Her daughter?" "Her daughter?"

"Yes; a nice little girl about nine years old.
The only surviving child of a large family. But I thought you knew all the circumstances. You were one of Mrs. Desmond's oldest friends, were you not?"

"1—I—yes; I was a friend of Mrs. Desmond's family many years ago. But Time flies away very fast, and many things fly with him.
Was not Mr. Desmond wealthy? I had always

"My dear Sir, Sidney Power Desmond ran "My dear Sir, Sidney Power Desmond ran through a fine fortune, and sent his paternal acres to the hammer. I saw a good deal of him, and of her too, at one time, when I was professionally engaged in 'winding up his affairs,' as he would persist in calling it. A tangled skein that refused to be wound, I can tell you. Mrs. Desmond was a sweet woman. She had a bad life of it, I'm afraid. Not that he treated her ill. He was foud of her, in his way. But he shook her children's inheritance away out of the dice-box, and then he died, several years later than he ought to have done for the welfare of his vicar declined Mr. Lovegrove's proffered hospitality, and went back to his dingy hotel chamber to read Clara's letter in solitude.

The letter was short and simple. It appealed to him, on the ground of old friendship, not to to mm, on the ground of our friendship, not to decline the trust imposed on him.

"My husband's relatives," thus it ran, "have long been estranged from us. Papa and poor James are dead, and distant cousins who know little and care less about me or mine, possess my old home. My sister, Lady Tallis, is child-less, and she would relative adout me high conless, and she would gladly adopt my little one, and would, I well know, be tender and kind to the orphan. But her unhappy domestic circum-stances render this impossible. Neither, to say truth, is Hilda's husband a man beneath whose roun, is fitted a huseand a man beneath whose roof I should like my daughter to be brought up, even were he willing to permit it. Hilds has her own troubles. I mention these things, not in any spirit of bitterness, but simply that you may understand how utterly friendless my Maud will be when I am gone; for I know her help-lessness will appeal strongly to your kind heart."

The letter was commonplace and prossic enough in form and expression; but to Charles Levincourt, sitting there with the sheet of folded paper in his hand, and thinking of the dead wo-man he once loved so well, there was both pathos and eloquence in the sharply written characters. He mused long and sadly on the events of the past years that had so strangely resulted in giving Clara's only surviving child to his care. But whatsoever reflections or regrets these mus-ings awakened in his mind be imparted to no

The next day the vicar returned to Shipley, bringing with him a new inmate to the vicarage The little orphan was kindly received by the mistress of her new home. Mrs. Levin-court was an Italian by birth. Her mother had been an Englishwoman, her father a Neapolitan. She had lived abroad all her life until her marriage; was very uneducated, very frivolous, and very beautiful. She had perhaps as small a share of imagination as ever fell to the lot of a human being. The self-confidence arising from this to-tal inability to conceive another person's point of view, to dangine, in short, how others might feel or think, was a power which carried her triumphantly over many difficulties. She would reply to an argument or a remonstrance by some irrelevant platitude which made her husband tingle with shame, but which, to her apprehension, was entirely convincing. On the whole, however, she did her duty well (as far as she understood it) by the little stray lamb brought into her fold. Gentle it was not in Stella Levincourt's nature to be, but she was kind and attent-ive to the child's bedily requirements. Mrs. Lev-incourt's first impression of the little girl she con-fided to her husband on the night of his return from London.

"I have put her to bed in a crib in Verceica's room, Charles. She is a quiet, docile child enough: But oh, caro mio, what a stolid little thing! Just lost her mother, and as cool and as calm as possible!"

The vicar remembered the child's quivering lip, pale cheek, and anxious, yearning look into the strange faces that had surrounded her; and the strange faces that had surrounded her; and he made answer, "Mand is quiet, but I think not stolid, my dear."

"She is English, English, English te the bone!" retorted Mrs. Levincourt, shrugging her graceful shoulders. "Only figure to yourself if I were to die, Veronien—but then our darling is so sensitive!"

In Charles ("Mande of the strange of

In Charles Levincourt's mind there are vision of a sweet, pale, girlish face, which he had last seen gazing after the coach that carried him away from Delaney Park forever. And the vision, from some unexplained cause, stung him into the utterance of a sarcastic speech. He had long ago ceased to use sarcasm or irony habitually in talking with his wife.

"I have no doubt, my dear," said he, "that if Veronica were suffering in mind or body she would take care that every one around her should

" That she would, poverina!" exclaimed Steila, energetically.

When little Mand Desmond came to live at when the stand Desmond came to live at the vicarage she was nine years old, and Ve-ronica, the vicar's only child, was eleven. After a short time the two little girls were sent to school at Danecester. Veronica had hitherto refused to go from home, and her refusal had sufficed to prevent her going. Her mother indulged her and worshiped her with a blind devotion, which was repaid (as such devotion often is) by a mingling of foudness, disdain, and tyranny.

But now that Mand was to go to school Veronica declared that she would accompany her; and she did so. And between their home and and and do so. And between their nome and the quiet Danerester school the two girls passed several years of their lives.

During the long Midsummer holidays they rembled over the common at Shipley-in-the-Wold, or rode about the country lanes on a Wedd, or rote about the country lanes on a rough pony provided for their joint use. In the winter time they would steal into the kitchen of an evening, and coax old Joanna the cook to tell them some of her quaint country legends, or stories of ghoets and runway marriages, and mysterious warnings, which were supposed to be the exclusive (and one would think unenviable) privileges of sundry ancient county families in whose service Joanna had lived.

Or else they would sit in the gloaming at Mrs. Levincourt's knee and listen to her tales of the hrilliant life she had led in Florence, the gayety, the brightness, the company! The balls at the Pitti and at the noble mansions of the Princi-pessa della Scatola da Salsa and the dowager Countess Civetta, and the Russian lady, whose exact rank was not known, but who was sup-posed to be the wife of a hospodar. Only she and the hospodar did not agree, and so they lived spart; and they met once a year in Paria, and were admirably polite to each other; and the hospodaress allowed the hospodar several millhospodaress allowed the nosponar source ions of rables per annum to stay away from her; and she had a necklace of emeralds as big, very nearly, as pigeons' eggs; and she smoked the very finest tobacco extant, and she was altogether a most charming person.

gether a most charming person.

These narratives, and many more, did Mand and Vercaica greedily devour. Mand believed them with the same sort of good faith with which she threw berself into Aladdin, or the exquisite fancies of Undine. She was willing to accept the Russian lady, pigeous'-egg emeralds and all. Such people might exist—did, no doubt, but in a far-off way, altogether out of her sphere. She no more expected to meet such an individual.

She no more expected to meet such an individual hung with chains of barbaric splendor, and puffing forth clouds of incense from an amber pipe, than she anticipated the appearance of a geni twenty feet high, when she rubbed her little turquoise ring to keep it bright. Varonica, however, being two years older, and owning a different turn of mind, looked at matters in a much more practical light.

"And did you go to balls nearly every night, mamma? And did you wear white dresses with short sleeves, and have flowers in your hair? Oh, how beautiful you must have looked!"

"I was never half so handsome as thou, tesoro mio," the fund mother would reply.

"When I am grown up I won't stay at Ship-

That was the burden of the song, the moral of the story, the issue of it all, for Veronica.

On the whole the family at the vicarage led on isolated life, and the tone of thought and feeling that pervaded their bome was very singularly at odds with the general notion of their neighbors as to what was becoming in the household of a clergyman.

In the first place, Mr. Levincourt was entirely devoid of the least tincture of what may, without offense, be called professional parsonism. It is by no means asserted that he was altogether the better for having no such tincture. Men are naturally and legitimately influenced in their outward bearing by the nature of their calling in life. The work which a man does heartily, earnestly, and constantly, will most assuredly communicate a certain bent to his mind, and even a certain aspect to his body. But the work which a man does grudgingly, without thoroughness and faith, will be to him as irksome as an illfitting garment, and will, like such a garment, be laid aside and put out of sight altogether, whensoever its wearer can get rid of it.

People did not get intimate at the vicarage. The neighborhood was but sparsely peopled with families of the rank of gentlefolks. Without the families of the rank of gentlefolks. Without the command of some vehicle, visiting was out of a question.

At first Mrs. Levincourt had gone out rather At first Mrs. Levincourt had gone out rather frequently to formal dinner-parties at great dull country houses, and also to some country houses that were not dull. The hosts sont their carriages for the vicar and his wife, if they lived at a great distance from Shipley. Or a lumbering old chaise was hired from the Crown at Shipley Magna,

But gradually such intercourse dropped. Mrs. Levincourt was not strong. Mrs. Levincourt did not care for disner-parties. Mrs. Levincourt had her little girl to attend to. The fact was, that Stella liked society, and she was by no means conscious of the surprise which her sayings and doings were apt to excite among the Daneshire magnates. But her husband was very thoroughly conscious of it. And, as the only thoroughly conscious of it. And, as the only kind of visiting they could have afforded his no amusement, their life became more and more se-

When the two girls were aged respectively seventeen and fifteen Mrs. Lavincourt died, and then Veronica returned home to "take charge," as they said, of her father's bouse.

Maud also came back to Shipley vicarage, having "completed her education;" in other words, having learned all that they could teach her at the Danecester school.

per at the Danecester school.

For two years Veronics reigned mistress of her father's bousehold. Perhaps the burden of the song, Veronica being nineteen, had only so far changed as to run thus: "Now that I am grown up, I won't stay at Shipley."
We shall see.

CHAPTER IV.

AN ACCIDENT.

Some subtle influence—a sight, or sound, or smell—touched the long-drawn links of associa-tion in the vicar's mind as he stood at his own door one February afternoon, and made him re-member that dreary autumn day on which he had first seen Shipley.

His thought flashed back along the past years, as the electric spark thrills through a long chain of clasping hands.

"Poor Stella!" he said, half aloud.

Mr. Levincourt was apt to spend a good deal of his available store of compassion on himself. But there is no more effectual check to the in-dulgence of our own failings and weaknesses than the exaggreated manifestation of the same defect in another. That which in us is only a reasonable and well-grounded diseatisfaction, be-comes mere selfish unjustifiable repaining in our neighbors.

So long as his wife lived, therefore, Mr. Levin-So long as his wife lived, therefore, Mr. Levin-court was shamed by her loud and frivolous com-plainings from expensing one-half the distaste he really felt for his life at Shipley-in-the-Wold, although he had secretly deemed his wife far less entitled to pity than he was, whose qualities of mird and refinement of education enabled him to understand much better what he had lost in being thus buried alive at Shipley.

But Stella Levincourt, born Barletti, slept in St. Gildas's grave-yard, and a white tablet glimmering out of the gloomiest corner in the dark little church bore an inscription to her memory.

And since her death he had occasionally felt such retrospective sympathy with his wife.

"Poor Stella!" he said again; and, shutting the door behind him, he walked down the gravel

the door behind him, he walked down the gravel pathway, passed through the iron wicket, crossed the paidock, and proceeded thus through St. Gildas's church-yard toward the village.

It was not a day to loiter in. It had snowed a good deal the previous night, but since ten o'clock that morning a steady thaw had set in. The roads were deep in mud, whose chill penetrated the stootest shoe-leather. An ice-cold day was a steady that the cold day was a steady the stead of the cold day was a steady the stead of the cold day was a steady the stead of the cold day was a steady the cold day. ties seemed to exude from every thing one touched, and the sky spread a lead-colored cano-ly from horizon to zenith.

Mr. Levincourt made for the school-house This was a bare lath-and-plaster building, erectd at the cost of the late vicar to serve as a S day-school. The present incumbent, while ad-hering to its founder's first intention, had found an additional use for the whitewashed schoolroom. It served, namely, as a place for the choir of St. Gildes to practice in.

Before Mr. Levincourt's day the music at divine service in St. Gildas consisted solely of portions of Tate and Brady, bawled or snuffled out in mone tonous dissonance. Mr. Levincourt's refined and critical ear suffered many a shock from his congregation's strenuously uplifted voices. He resolved to amend the singing, and flattered He resolved to amend the support and encour-himself that he would find support and encour-in this undertaking. But folks were as agement in this undertaking. But folks were as loth to be amended in Shipley as in most other places; and Mr. Levincourt's first attempts to teach them harmony resulted in discord dire.

By degrees he lowered his pretensions. He had begun with high-flown ideas of foreign masshad begun with night-nown stees of foreign mass-mesic adapted to English words. Then, some of the simpler compositions of our English cathe-dral writers were attempted. At length he re-solved to be satisfied with Martin Luther's Hymn, and Adeste Fideles, sung in parts. Things begun to go better. The younger generation, trained to some knowledge of music, became capable of succeeding in such modest attempts as these. Nor was it, indeed, from the younger generation that the great difficulties had arisen.

Farmer Meggitt, and Farmer Sack, and other middle-aged farmers and graziers, could not be got to understand that it behooved them to be passive listeners to the music during service.

"What do ye mean then, by 'Let us sing to the praise—?" Let us, "Farmer Meggitt said sos, "sing! Not 'iet the little lads and wenches in the organ-loft, sing to the praise! Parson Levincourt's on a wrong tack altogether. And as to his new-fangled tunes—why they're Popish; that's what they are; and I don't care who hears me say so!"

The implied slight to Farmer Meggitt's vocal abilities made him very Protestant indeed. And the charge of Popery against Mr. Levincourt was supposed to be a very cultrable and serious one, seeing that he had a foreign wife.

However, Time went on in his task of turning "new-fangled" things into old-fangled. And the congregation of St. Gildas had long grown very proud of their singing. Miss Deemond had a class of village children to whom she taught some of the mysteries contained in the queer black-headed hieroglyphics on the musical staff; and the choir met to practice every Saturday aft eracon. And on this one special Saturday after-noon in February, Mr. Leviscourt having floun-dered through the thick mud of the lane, arrived at the school-house door, turned the handle, and walked in, when the practicing was just over.

The children were making ready to troop out. Some of the little boys, measy under the stern glance of Mr. Mugworthy, the parish clerk, still sat on the wooden benches, from which their cordurey-clad legs dangled and swung, as unrestingly as the pendulum of the big white-faced clock that ticked away the hours above the door.

At a little deal-cased harmonium ast Herbert

At a little deal-cased harmonium sat Herbert Snowe, the son of a rich Danecester bunker. This young gentleman had been educated in Germany, where he had caught a taste for mu-sic. His dilettanteism was strong enough to induce him to make the journey from Danecester nearly every week, in order to supply, at the Saturday rehearsals, the place of the professional organist, who was only engaged to come to Ship-ley for the Sunday services.

Not far from him stood Mr. Plew, the village doctor, talking to the vicar's daughter. Mr. Plew had the meckest and weakest of high tenor voices, and gave the choir the benefit of his assistance whenever his professional avocations would per-mit him to do so.

Then there were Kitty and Cissy Meggitt, with their governess, Miss Turtle. Mrs. Meggitt was of an aspiring nature, and had prevailed on her husband to engage a "real lady" to teach her girls manners. Farmer Meggitt paid the "real lady" five-and-twenty pounds per annum, and he thought in his heart that it was an exorbitantly gh price for the article. Then there were Captain and Mrs. Sheardown, of Lowster House. They did not sing; but they had come to fetch their son, Master Bobby Shear-down, who sat on a high school-bench among the trebles.

Lastly, there was Mand Desmond.
"Good-evening," said the vicar, walking into

Immediately there was a shuffling and scraping of feet. Every boy slid down from his bench, and drew each one a hob-nailed boot noisily over the bare floor in homage, raising at the same time a bunch of sun-burnt knuckles to his forehead. The little girls docked down convulsively, the smaller ones assisting themselves to rise again with an odd struggling movement of the

This was the ceremony of salutation to a superior among the rustle youth of Shipley.

"How have you been getting on, Herbert?" said Mr. Levincourt. "How do you do, Mrs. Sheardown? Captain, when I saw that the West Deneshire were to meet at Hammick, I scarcely expected to have the pleasure of seeing you this

"No; I didn't hunt to-day," answered the captain. Captain Sheardown was a broad-shouldered Captain Sheardown was a broad-shouldered man of some five-and-fifty years of age. His bluff face was fringed with white whiskers. His eyes were surrounded by a net-work of fine lines that looked as though they had been graven on the firm skin by an etching-needle, and he generally stood with his legs somewhat wide apart, as one who is balancing himself on an unsteady sur-face.

The gentlemen gathered together into a knot by themselves while they waited for the ladies to put on their warm shawls and clocks. put on their warm shaw

I wonder what sort of a run they had with the West Daneshire?" said Herbert Snowe.

"I heard, Sir, as there were a accident on the said Mr. Mugworthy, who had on self near to the group of gentlemen.
"An accident!" repeated the vicar. "What was it? Nothing serious, I trust?"

"No, Sir; from what I can reap out of the rumor of the boy, Sack, it warn't a very serious accident. Jemmy Sack, he seen it, Sir. It hap-pened close up by his father's farm."

"Sack's farm, ch?" said Captain Sheardown,
"Why that's at Haymoor!"
"Well, Sir, it is," rejoined Mr. Mugworthy, after a moment's pause, as though he had been casting about in his mind for some reasonable means of controllection the statement, but findmeans of contradicting the statement, but find-ing none, was resolved to be candid, and make a clean breast of it. "It is, Sir, at Haymoor, is Sack's farm. I can't say no otherways."

"Whew!" whistled the captain. "Who'd have thought of a fox out of the Hammick cover making for Haymoor! With the wind as it is, too-and as it has been all day.

"Why shouldn't he?" asked Herbert Snown whose foreign education had left him lamentably ignorant on certain matters of which Captain Sheardown conceived that an English gentleman eaght to know a good deal.

15 (00/253)

Branseller

"Why shouldn't be?" echoed the captain, screwing up his eyes and mouth into an ex-pression of comical vexation, and thereby deepsaing the finely graven lines before mentioned.
"Why shouldn't he? Bless my soul, Herbert! Because a fox going from Hammick to Haymoor to-day must have run straight up wind the whole time! That's why. Why shouldn't he? Tshah!" "A dog-fox, Sir," put in Mugworthy, solemnly, "will sometimes run up wind at this time of the year when he's agoing home, Sir."

"Well, well," said the vicar, with the slight-est possible air of contempt for the whole subject: "we will suppose that this was a Haymoor fox, who had been visiting his relations at Ham-mick. But about the accident, Mugworthy?" "Jemmy Sack, he seen it, Sir. Come up here, Jemmy, and tell his reverence about the gentleman as was precipitated off of his horse alongside of the five-acre field."

mmy Sack, a lank lad of thirteen, came and stood before the vicar, and with many writhings, and in agencies of bashfulness, delivered himself of his story.

The story simply amounted to his having seen a gentleman flung from his horse with a good deal of violence. The others had ridden on, either not seeing or not heeding. After a while the gentleman's servant had galloped up to his ance. The gentleman had risen and mounted again ; but not the same horse. He took the beast that his servant had been riding, and sent the groom away with the animal that had thrown The gentlemen had then ridden after the rest of the hunt toward Upper Haymoor.

Ah! Well, there was not much harm done, I'm happy to find. If the gentleman went on following the bounds he could not have been much hurt," said the viear. "You didn't know the gentleman by sight, Jemmy, did you?" Jemmy did not know the gentleman's no but he knowed that he was a staying at the Crown Inn, Shipley Magna, and that he had four horses in the stables there, and that the people said as he was a friend of Lord George Segrave's, him as had taken Hammick Lodge for the hunting season. And Jemmy, becoming accustomed to the sound of his own voice addressing gentlefolks, and finding himself listened to, began to grow loquacious and to volunteer his opinion that the gentleman had a-got a cogly spill, for he turned welly green and seemed all queer in his head like. But he was a good plucked 'un, for he would go on a-horseback again, and he (Jemmy) had run nigh enough to hear him a-cussin and a-swearin at the groom like foon.

In fact so loquecious and graphic in his nar-rative did Jemmy become that Mugworthy per-emptorily ordered him to hold his tongue and be-gone with the other lads.

The boys shuffled out, glad to be released, and were presently beard whooping down the lane after the manner of their kind.

HOME AND FOREIGN GOSSIP.

Wans the visitor at Saratoga begins to weary of the sec routine of drinking Congress water in the morning, and driving over to the Lake in the after-noon, he may break the monotony by a Sittle excu-sion to Lake George. We say little—for although weeks might be spent enjoyably in the vicility of that lovely Lake, a resid but pleasant trip may be that lovely Lake, a rapid but pleasant trip may be made in twenty-load, a regin out pleasant terp may be made in twenty-load boars, with the loss of but one morning's draught and "constitutional," and the gain of a charming sail upon the "silvery waters." Dine comfortably at your hotel; and about three o'chock go to the Rensselser and Saratoga Railway Dopit. Do not get impatient if, after having been harried off by the hotel cortex, was well half an hour Dopot. Do not get impatient if, after having been hurried off by the hotel porter, you wait half an hour for the care. Probably you will de so. Such, at least, was our recent experience. A ride of a little more than an hour brought us to Gien's Falls, nise miles from Caldwell. Three coaches were awaiting the arrival of the train, and gave promise of ample accommodations. Alse for our expectations! All the passengers bound to Lake George were packed into and upon a single coach, until there was not an inch of room to many and trunks more trains were fastened. room to spare, and trunks upon trunks were fastened behind. The drive to Cal'twell is said to be charmlag—in scenery—and so it is; but if tourists are lia-ble to be packed like sardines in a box, we recom-mend—until the railroad is extended—purchasing tickets to Glen's Falls only, and taking a private car riage thence to the Lake.

Fort William Henry Hotel, the largest at Caldwell, Fort William Henry Hotel, the largest at Caldwell, fronts on Lake George. It contains about four hundred rooms, and the interior arrangements are fresh and elegant. The Lake House also gives pleasant accommodations at a cheap rate. A walk about the grounds, a good supper, a chatty promenade on the long planns of the Fort William Henry, a refreshing sleep, a nice breakfast; then at eight in the morning, the pretry Mindshaha started on her trip down the lake. But the contract it show more than one day to learn. By-the-way, it takes more than one day to learn to a North without besitation. about 36 miles long, from 2 to 3 miles wide, and is in some places 400 feet deep. It flows north into Lake Champlain. Caldwell is at the southern cod. The waters of the Lake are most marvelously clear; no wonder that troot, salmon, and other funy tribes love to linger here; and Troot Pavillon, Sheldon's Point, Bolton, etc., are favorite resorts for those who delight in Sching. The "363 islands" rice up fresh, green, and, as it were, clean-out from out of the transparent depths; some quite large, others mere dots, but every one beautiful. The towering peaks of the Black Mountains encircle the Lake, their wild heights rendering the landscape most picturesque. Indeed, Lake George is a perfect gem—no flaw mare the en-tire completeness of its romantic and lovely beauty. A brief description can give no idea of it—it must be

At the fact of the Lake we took stares, roomy and comfortable, and fine scenery and historical reminis-cences made the four miles' drive to Ticonderogn short. It appears to be a part of the regular pro-gramme, when to eight of "Old Fort Tt," for the agent of the route, mounted on the wheel of one coach, to deliver a pithy little address, which canece great merriment, while the passengers gase at the

We chanced to take passage on the Adirondsek, a new and elegant steamer on Lake Champlain. Sadding from Thomderoga up to Whitehall is a curious contrast to the trip on Lake George. The scenery is fine—the Green Mountains appear in the distance on contrast to the 17p on Lake George. The scenery is fine—the Green Mountains appear in the distance on the left, the Black range on the right; ragged cliffs scensilines loom up on either side, and then low, tr-regular border-lines appear; but the water has none of that peculiar clearaces which marks the other lake. Fiags, rushes, trees, and bashes grow up lawlessly in the very midst of it—all the more noticeable after one has just viewed the chiscled borders of that silvery sheet which is older times was called "Horizon."

The sail had seemed only half long enough when the Advession's reached Whitehall; and a car-ride of less than two hours brought us, well pleased with the trip, back to Saratoga.

The University Courses of Instruction at Harvard The University Courses of Instruction at Harvard for the current year will be given to competent persons, "men and women," seconding to the advertisement. The idea is good. The lessons of the course are to be given by such men as Professors Bowen, Hedge, Lowell, Raby Waldo Emerson, and Mr. Howells. They will be adapted to either sex, and will doubtless be allke appreciated by both.

The Macon Priograph reports that the first bale of new cotion in that State was brought to market on the tweifth of August. It weighed 426 pounds, and was to be shipped to Hoston.

An Indiana harber attempted to dye a youth's mustache. Result, the total disappearance of the labial ornament. The youth brought a suit against the bar-ber. But the barber's defense, that "the hide wouldn't hold the hair," was conclusive.

M. Lakhe, a French inventor, proposes to do away M. Laskhe, a French inventor, proposes to do away, with the unisance of fresh paint in dwellings by preparing decorative paintings in shops or factories, a ling the same by the yard, and pasting it on walls like paper-hangings. To prepare it he takes thin tin-foil, spreads it on gisse, forming thus a smooth ground upon which he paints or colors in oil. After drying the surface is varnished, and the foil with its film is account from the class. When reads for handing. removed from the glass. When ready for hanging the wall or surface to be decorated is covered with some water-proof mixture, the new covering is cut and applied, the familie foil allowing it to follow all the tregularities of the wall mouldings ing the paint film.

One of the most singular cases of insanity known is reported from the Missouri Insane Asylum. A boy only eight years old lost his reason from a blow on the bead. No clothing can be kept upon him; he de-yours every thing—in short, is in the habit of eating up his clothing.

As a Boston merchant declined one of the new fif-As a Boston merchant occurred one of the new fift-teen cent currency the other day, remarking to the man who tendered it that he "couldn't come that sort of thing on him," it may not be amise to men-tion that the clean-looking "Fifteen Cente" now circu-lating moderately are genuine, and one may safely take as many as he can get—honestly.

The Svening Mail gives a detailed account of the windling ticket-offices of New York. There is a law The Steminy Mail gives a detailed account of the swindling ticket-offices of New York. There is a law which makes it a misdementor, punishable with the and imprisonment for two years, in any persons other than railroad and steamboat companies themselves and their employée, at their proper offices, to sell or issue tickets of passage on their lines, except agents, chewhere, duly appointed and acknowledged by them. Nevertheless, there are over thirty bogus ticket-offices in this city, owned and worked by accoundred, whose business it is to plander unsuspecting strangers, and who do a thriving trade in spite of the police. Frauda and robberies by these sharpers are of daily occurrence, but it is a difficult and often an impossible thing for the victims to obtain any legal redress.

The furdamed "Detter" was a few days age driven

The far-famed "Dexter" was a few days ago driven The far-famed "Dexter" was a few days ago driven by Mr. Bonner on the Prospect Fair Grounds in Brooklys, making the extraordinary time of a mile in 3.24. This is said to be the fasfest time ever made to a read wagon. Two years ago Dexter trotted a mile in a public race in 3.54 to a skeleton wagon; but on this last occasion he carried nearly a hundred pounds more than on the former, proving that he is not lostice any of his reverse. ing any of his powers.

A religious impostor, who pretends to be Jesus Christ, has been stirscting much stientien in Po-land. He has chosen twelve followers, and promises to perform miracies. The Polish peasantry have been full of credulity, and the willy impostor is now turning his success into political capital.

A genuine "ciam-bake" is said to be a Rhode Island "institution," and Burke Reint A genuine "clam-bake" is said to be a Rhode ist-and "institution," and Rocky Point, not far from New-port, the special paradise of clam-bakers. The first step preparatory to the "bake" is to lay cobble-stones on the ground; next to build a lange fire upon them. When the stones are as but as they can be the extem-pore oven is swept, and clams, often bashels of them, plied on the stones. The mass is then covered with sea-weed. When cooked the clams are generally ext-toned a reconficiely primitive manner, with fineres sen in an exceedingly primitive manner, with fingers instead of forks, and a mixture of melted butter and vinegar for a sance. Hard-shell clams, if kept on their sharp edges while cooking, remain closed, and thus retain their liquor and fine favor.

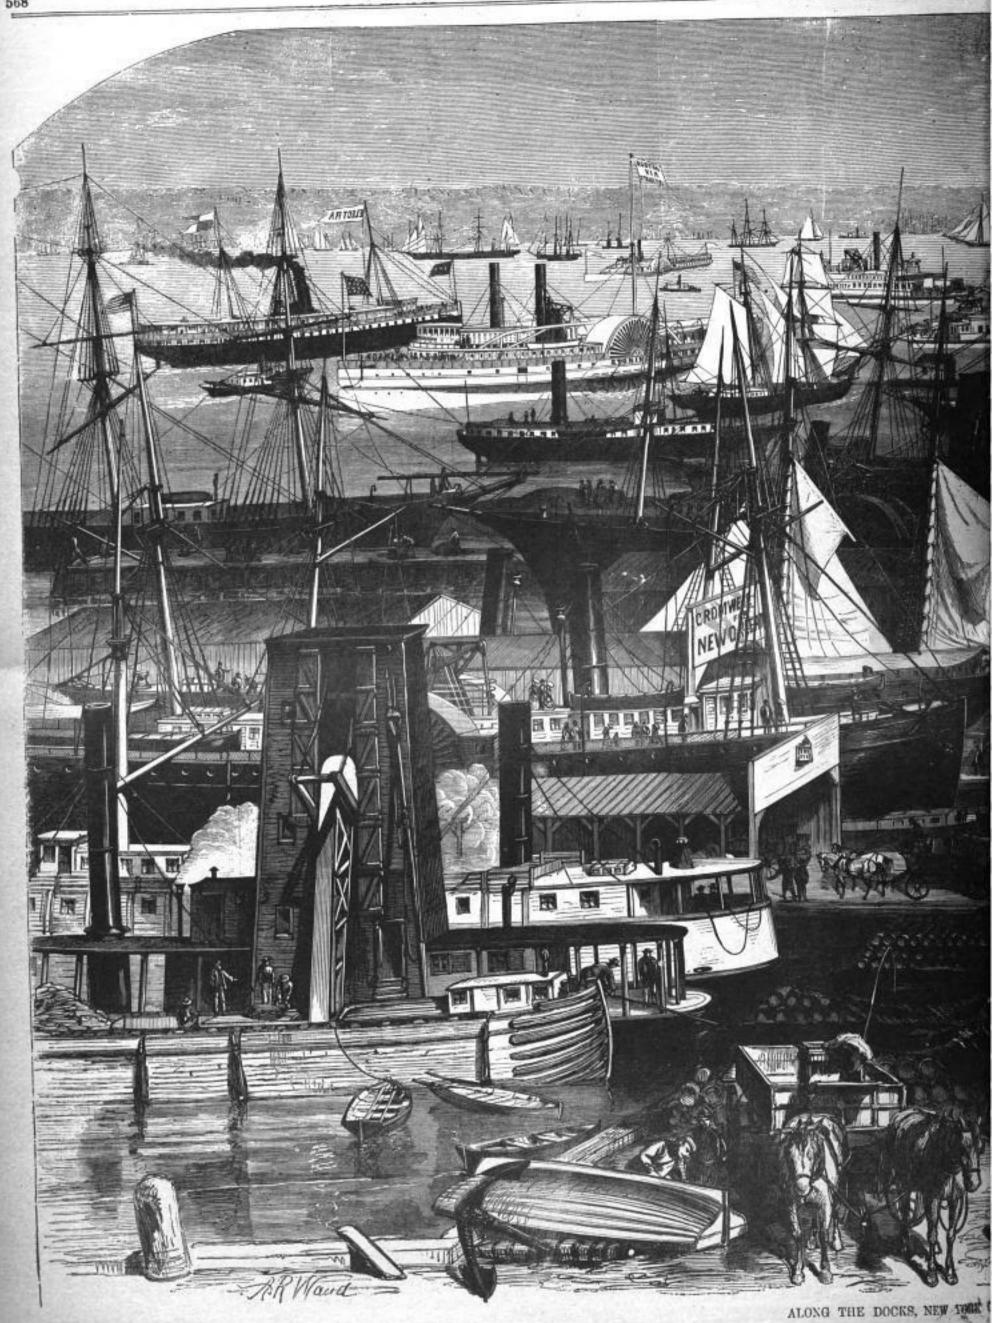

A Western merchant has broken the key of his safe, and can not get his valuables. He advertises for a burgiar.

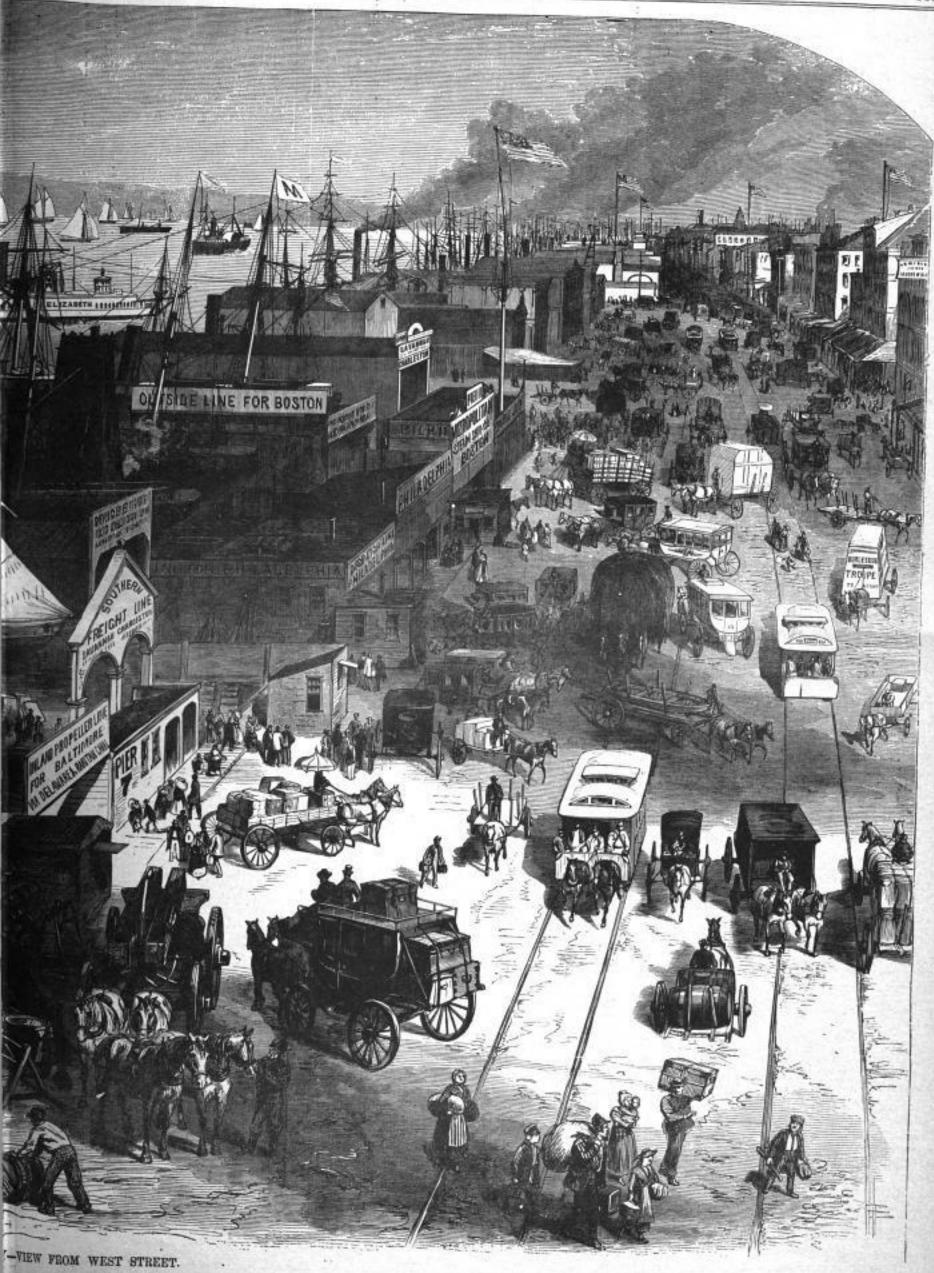

"Metallotherspia," or the cure of diseases by motals, as practiced by a physician of Paris, is the most astonishing new thing in medicine. To ascertain what metal is adapted to the case plates of gold, copper, sinc, steel, and silver are placed successively the skin of the patient, and whichever one of th plates in a given time—eay in two hours—produces the greatest smarting and redness, is chosen as the remedy fittest to cure the disease.

The biggest "bite" of the season was obtained by a young lad while fishing in the canal at Cincinnati. He cautiously drew in his line, when he found on the h ok a small tin box, which he opened and found to contain $30 in allver, $40 in greenbacks, and two gold rings, worth about $10 each.

The telegraph is making progress. It is being intro-duced into private houses in the West in connection with a little box which contains a lettered dial with a steel pointer revolving and stopping at the letters of the mereago. It is no loss of the physician. It is much used for calling in the serv-

Pire inestrance in Japon is simple but effective. No paid-up capital required. The "Company" consists of the Mikado, who issues one general "polite," which be calls an edict. The chief condition of the policy is, that every person whose house catches fire shall have his lead out of. The issues have been very light,

LOOKING BACK.

Tues is the old farm-house

With its deep, rese-tangled porch,

Where hover and rise white butterflies,

And honey-bees hold debauch. Oh, many a time and oft. In the dear familiar croft,

I have followed the lark aloft!
And my heart, my heart, flee back
On the dead years' shadowy track,
And now in the lane, on a loaded wain,
I'm a happy and bot little boy again!

Just such a windless noon Just such a windless noon
As this, in a buried June,
When the secured hay in the meadows lay,
And the thrushes were all in tune,
On the staggering load I, exuitant, rode,
And the red-faced wagoner "wey'd" and "woa'd"
Long ago in a buried June:

Days when to breathe was blice, Days when to breathe was blees, Perfect, and pure, and strong; No pulse of the heart amiss, No beat of the brain-work wrong; When care was a word, and love an absurd Pabrication of story and song.

Is it so long ago, This life of color and light? Will it not show some after-glow
See the day dips into the night?
O youth, have ye left me quite?
O years, have ye dimmed my sight?
Lo! the light is shade, and the colors fade And the day dips into the night.

SO RUNS THE WORLD AWAY.

CHAPTER XLVL

"FOR NOW WE SEE THROUGH A GLASS

WHEN the old servant pext came to ascertain When the old servant next came to account if her mistress required her services, she was strock by the sedemn stillness that pervaded the chamber; a stillness unbroken by sigh or wail. On going near the bed she found Douglas lying senseless over the body of the dead girl, his hand twisted in her long fair hair, his cheek resting on the little stiff hand.

ow is she?" the doctor asked, as he stood in the hall that evening, taking off his hat and gloves preparatory to making his usual visit up stairs. He had asked similar questions for these last forty years, but his wrinkled face auddened when the eoman answered-she's gone, Str.

"How, and when?"
We all like to know the end of a steey. from he sportsman, who, from untoward accident, has been prevented seeing the finish of a run, to the talt on the road to death.

some time this morning. I can't rightly say when, for I wasn't in the room."

The old doctor gave a sigh, and a reverent thought to the fair dead woman up stairs, and thought to the fair dead woman up stairs, and then he turned on his heel.

"No further use for me," he said; "I have some distance to go. Good-evening."

"Stop, Sir, stop!" the old woman cried, pant-ing after him to the door of his carriage. "What-ever am I to do with him?"

"Him! I suppose you mean Mr. Douglas— he isn't ill, is be?"

he isn't ill, is be?"
"I don't think he is altegether in his right mind," Sally said, looking unessily toward the open window above. "When I first went into the room, I found him lying unsensed near the body. My son, Sam, was down stairs, and I got him to come and lift the poor gentleman away, and attend to him while I dressed Miss Azalea for the last time. Well, now?"

"Well, now?"

"Mr. Douglas is sitting by her, and keeps streking her hand, and talking just as if the poor thing could hear or answer him. I don't feel easy about him, Sir. I wish you'd come and in the just him good."

Dr. Randelyh shook his head.

"If goes it's a core beyond you Goods" he

I fear it's a case beyond me, Goody," he "The Great Maker will not all at once heal the wounds be thinks fit to inflict on us;

wever, I will come. He entered the house again, and the two ascended the stairs with stealthy steps. Any hasty movement or violent sound would have jarred against the deep stillness of those lonely ambers. They paused at the open door of the room where Azalea lay, and for some intes stood in silent contemplation of the scer : tefore them.

The time was sunset, and the face of the dead was all aglow with the red light; the fair girlish countenance were an expression of ineffable pathos. The soft, small mouth was partly open, and drooped at the corners. The brows were slightly contracted. Azalea looked to be weary even in death. Her hands had been crossed over her bosom, but one was now displaced; the other lay on her hunt as if enforcing the repose it had so desired.

"Azalea, look at me—speak to me—oh, my love! let me hear one word! Were it ever so unkind I could forgive it, just for the pleasure of hearing its sound. Why do you not speak, Azalea? Are you to be voiceless forever? What have I done against you or Heaven that I should be a second with the locality allows it.

be cursed with this horrible silence?" The speaker was Douglas; the harsh broken voice—the wild anxie as gaze—the living, suffer-ing, mumble face war his. She whom he adjured had lain before him motionless ever since noon, neather eleeping not waking, neither grieved nor wondering at the strangeness of her state, nei-ther hearkening to his plaint nor seeing the misery in his eyes.

The old doctor advanced to Douglas and touched his arm.

and the same in

The latter looked round with his finger up-

"Hush!" he said; "she must not be disturbed. "She can not be disturbed," the old man said, gently. "She is dead."

"So they told me this morning," Douglas answered, with a bewildered look in his big gray eyes; "but how can that be?"

Then he lifted up the lifeless hand.

"It is very odd," he mornured; "the fingers will keep closing as fast as I open them, and they seem, oh, so cold! Will you please feel her pulse?" he added, gravely. "My dear Sir," the elder man replied, much

"My dear Sir," the choir from repured, much distressed, "learn to know and bear the truth; this poor girl's pulse will never beat again." "Perhaps you can tell me where she is," the other said. "I do not know where she can have other said. "I do not know where she can have gobe. You see she is not here, or she would speak or look at me, instead of keeping her mouth fixed like that, and her eyes always star-ing the same way. I have fancied that I had made some mistake—that this might be some one else; but these are the lineaments, this is the form that was Azalea's, only the face looks strangely sad, and the flesh is sbrunk. Yet if this were she, it would arise and sing, and pluck flowers in the garden, and I should hear its laugh afar off, and the sound of its running feet."

"Come with me; come away a little while," pleaded Randolph.

"Excuse me, but I can not do that," Douglas answered, courteously. "While there is any doubt about it, I must stay and watch, in case "While there is any it should move, and ask for me. A little while ago," he added, musingly, "I had no doubt but that it was she; but now I almost doubt her identity. If it were she, she would certainly answer me when I entreat it so caruestly. She had a passionate temper before she grew ill; but she was never long sullen. Where so you think

With God," Dr. Randolph said, reverently. "With God," Dr. Ranaceph and, reverently.

"You mean in Paradise; but what is she doing there, and what is Paradise? We people it with earthly symbols, doctor; we imagine harps and angelic musicians, decked with wreaths of amaranth with which

The spirits elect Bind their respiendent locks, inwreathed with leaves.

But surely if the spirits are enshrined in earthly forms, no shape could be fairer than was Analea's.
Why should she discard her lovely features here to assume some unfamiliar aspect in Hoaven?
Why did she not take with her the same face Why did she not take with her the same face that I so loved? Then I might hope to recognize it in the mighty realms of the awakened dead. How shall I know her, if she is naught but a sunshipy spirit, with likes trailing in her hair and clouds hiding her dear little feet? If she is in Paradise, doctor, sentient, loving, and lov-able as she was on earth, would it not be kinder of them to be the near form relief them. of them to let her cease from pulling ethereal harp-strings, and from practicing celestial har-mony, and allow her to breathe down a few words of comfort to me, just to relieve my troubled heart? Oh, Azalea? my darling, be merciful; speak one word to me to lighten the great darkness of my soul. It is the uncertainty that mad-

"Will you come away, just for a few minutes?"

Dr. Randolph said, earnessly.
"Why should I come away?" Douglas asked, flercely. "What is there I should come for?

fercely. "What is there a fercely. "What is there a The problem is here."

"At least, drink this."

"I would rather not go to sleep," shrinking from him, and looking suspiciously at the professed draught. "It would be were to go to be a should be were to go to have she has become. What des me, doctor, is, that it is all so terribly unmeaning. Her eyes used to be rife with ex-pression, and now they are dim and vacuous her hands used to be so dainty and clever, and now they lie as helpless as if they were made of marble; her feet were so quick, but they have remained in the same place for six long hours." He seized hold of her hand and placed it on forebead.

"Once when I had a headache," he contin-"Once when I had a headache," he continued, "you put your cool hand here, and the touch was a heavenly balm which cured me; now your fingers are very heavy. I fear they won't make me better. They are m. et like the leaden weight which is to drug me down to hell." "You wast drink this!" Dr. Randolph said, authoritatively. "Azalea wishes it."

"If she wishes it, abe can't be quite gone away." Douelas muttered. "I'll take it derawny," Douglas muttered. "I'll take it, dar-ling, if it were hell's own fire."

ag, if it were helf's own are. He swallowed the draught, and the old doctor gave a long-drawn sigh of relief. "I will call again in a little while," he whispered to Sally, "and we will get him to bed a possible."

Then he went down stairs moralizing,
"Had it been a woman, she would have wept away half her grief by this time. Being a man, he has pressure on the brain, poor fellow! I wonder if he'll pull through."

When Douglas was once more left alone with the dead girl he bent over her and whispered in her waxen ear,

I love you, Azalen, I love you." And when, after some hours of heavy slumber, produced by the opiate he had taken, he awoke to find himself in another chamber, he arose, and staggered mechanically to the familiar room where the dead lay, calling, "Azalea! where are you, Azalea?"

CHAPTER XLVII.

"The rest is silence."-Harriet,

"It is a dreary hour for her to take her last good-by of Auriel in," Douglas thought, as he looked not of the window on the meening of Analysis funeral. "Fate has not been kind to her, even on her burial day. I wish my darling could have been carried away in the sunshine."

He saw one or two dark figures looming through the mist in the avenue, and with a shudder he walked up to the coffin and kissed the plank that hid Azalea's face from him.

"They are come to take you away," he said. "They will take me too, my own; I shall be buried with you as surely as though I were lying stiff by your side."

There was no father to bow his face in solemn anguish over the shrouded form, no mother to wail tender grief through the empty rooms when the dark burden had been carried out, and the dear presence had passed away forever. Only old Sally had placed a few bright flowers in the hands that knew not what they held, and but one token of human regret was pressed on her fore-head, and that was the last caress Robert Douglas ever gave to any living creature.

A low avenue of walnut-trees, bare, save for a few yellow leaves that shone and quivered in the few yellow leaves that shone and quivered in the stir of rain and wind; a dark shape carried down the church-yard path by men whose focusteps fell softly on the golden drifts of sodden foliage. Tombstones, dull gray in the wet, and vivid hard moss, that had erept over and obscured the hum-bler wooden records of the dead. The marble tomb of the Mowbrays, shining white in a small grove of cypresses; an open grave, with fresh scented beaps of earth crushing down the tall grasses by its side, and the low voice of a bare-headed priest, whose prayers are voice of a bareheaded priest, whose prayers were almost inaudible in the sob and rush of the storm. Douglas asked himself was this scene real, or was it a dull hideous dream, from the incubus of which death alone could relieve him?

"He is an old man, that Mr. Douglas. I sup-pose he has acted in the place of a father to the deceased," the elergyman remarked to his clerk, when disculous himself.

when disrotting himself in the vestry.

"He did not look so a year ago; he has got shrunk and bent lately. I don't think he's past the prime of life," said the clerk, who was himself about Douglas's age.

"He wishes to remain here alone for a while; you may have him the keys. Smith. Good-you may leave him the keys, Smith. Good-morning. And as the clouds were darkening, and the run falling more thickly, the priest and his assistant hurried away as soon as possible to the comforts and shelter of home.

They have gone to their firesides," thought Douglas, as he watched their receding figures disappear in the mist; they have gone to be "wel-comed by the laugh of their children and the loving care x their wives, they have their house-holds on the warm side of the earth; with them the day is glad with sound and light; with you, my poor darling, all is darkness and silence; your home is under wer weeds and sodden mould." For the first time since his great despair had come to him he burst into a passion of weeping, and flinging himself down on the grave sobbed out hot tours and marticulate mozze on the heaped mound which was now the only symbol of Assles a presence. "Oh, child?" he cried; "have we parted forever to-day? and a' not, how will it be with us when we meet again? Will your face be transfigured into an angel's, Azalea? and shall I distinguish the mortal feat-ures I loved through the splender of your glori-fication? Will it seem but as yesterday that we pearted? or shall I run to meet you with the same heart rapture as I should if you came forth from your grave now, and said, "Robert, take me home again; it is cold."

"Oh God!" he added, bowing his face on his

"Oh God!" he added, bowing his face on his clasped hands, "make my heart strong with faith; let hope redeem the anguish of the bour. I am sickened with fear. My heart has gone down into the grave with this woman. I dread lest infinite ages should roll on, and I still be severed from her. I dread lest measureless time and impenetrable silence should intervene because in Their knowest, and Thou alone, the tween us. Thou knowest, and Thou alone, the vast mysteries of the imperishable hereafter. Comfort me, O Lord! Comfort me and give me light!"

CHAPTER XLVIII.

LO! TWAS A GALA MIGHT.

ORME HOUSE was the wonder and admiration of Marine Parade on this the evening of Miss of Marine Parade on this the evening of Miss Orme's wedding-day. The windows sparkled with light, and the air was glad with jubilant music. Even the ragged children in the street were infected by the spirit of rejoicing breathed by the festal strains, and they took hands and whirled round in circles on the pavement in un-coust imitation of the gliding shadows within.

"A prettier wedding, a gayer scene, had rarely been witnessed in Brighton," old gossip. said,

All the near friends of the family were present; these, of course, included both Lady Di Merton and Thurstan Mowbray. The day had been cloudless—sea and sky two vast sheets of blue; and in a blaze of sunlight, which harmonized well with the exultance of the bridal party. Amelia Orme had passed from her father's door, her fair hair gleaming under clouds of lace-work, which trailed over robes of flowing white, while pure-hard flowers shone like white stars on her head and bosom.

A scent of crushed flowers came from the strewn church-path, a glistening light of C ing draperies moved through the dim nisle, a bevy of fair faces were bent in prayer round the altar and the ceremony having been performed by the bride's uncle with more than usual solemnity and more than usual assistance, the Hon. Amelia Orme had returned to her father's house the Marchioness of Grandacre.

The presents to the bride were magnificent. Had she married a poor man, and really re-quired some substantial proofs of her friends' regard, she would have probably been inundated with kettle-holders, lukstands, and many other varieties of such-like "nice useful things;" but the future possessor of the Grandacre diamonds was not to be insulted by such paltry tributes; her gifts were of the costliest description; and every woman who looked at the superb bridal declared that Amelia must indeed be happy. She was very happy, and not the sharpest suffered somewhat from speech from Rosa, who suffered somewhat from envy and its consequent uncharitableness, could ruffle her sister's security.

Joy of heart made Amelia amiable and comely. As Marchioness of Grandacre she was pro-nounced to be beautiful; while poor Rosa was fain to remain that ceditory-looking girl, Rosa

Lord Orme looked earnestly after the traveling carriage which bore away the newly-married couple.

"I never saw a better matched pair," he mur-mured; " nor a handsomer."

"You mean the young people?" said Lady Diana, coming up to him to see if any advantage could be taken of his apparently sentimental mood.

"No," he answered, with enthusiasm; "I mean the two grays. I chose them for Grand-sure myself. How well they stap together!"

All the same, Lord Orme was very proud and happy in his daughter's marriage; and he did sot gredge an item of the sumptuous cutertain-ment given to celebrate the event.

That night, when the festivity was at its height, Lady Diana summoned Lord Orme to her side.

"They are all dancing," she said; "come and talk to me a little. I am tired."

Very lovely in her fatigue Lady Diana looked as she leaned back in her chair; her shoulders as she leaned back in her chair; her shoulders brought into dazzling relief by the dark crimson back-ground; her eyes half closed, her under his drooping, and revealing a pearly gleam of teeth. "You will soon have no daughter left," she added, with a significant glance at Ross, whe was engaged in an animated conversation with a vacuous looking young nobleman; a youth too mexpensenced and simple to know how to defend himself from the spirited assault the vivacious young lady was making on him.

young lady was making on him.

Lord Orms followed the direction of Lady Diana's eyes, and for an instant looked pleased then his face clouded over.

"No daughter left!" he repeated mechanic-ally; the echo of her words smote him with Between him and the moving figures of the dancers rose up a pale face, whose question-ing eyes seemed to demand, "And where, then,

is my child?"
"Of what are you thinking?" Lady Di said, gently.

1 was thinking that, should I ever meet in Paradise the two women my life was linked with on earth, her whom I most loved I should have

 Because, by some strange perversity of my intentions, I have injured her who was dear to me, and exalted her whom I ha—I mean for

"Lord Orne," Lady Disna said, with sedden energy, "why should you not marry again?" "Eh! what?"

"And marry me," she concluded, leaning "And marry me," she concluded, leaning to-ward him, and trying, with all the power of each expressive feature, to make him feel her beauty. "You are alone—and I am alone; you are no longer a young man—and I have left girlhood far behind me. We are both of us casy tem-pered; of equal rank and—and circumstances." (Lady Di hesitated a little, remembering her millioer's bill.) "I have never liked any one so well as yourself since" (here, her voice broke) "I —lost my noor—Suart. But that was a long —lost my poor—Scaart. But that was a long while ago" (recovering berself); "and I am sure that if he could look on me now"—here Lady Di gave an upward glance at the brilliant lustres of a chandelier—"he would approve my choica." "But—"began Lord Orme.

"I know what you would say," she interrupted; "my conduct is unwemanly."

"No, no, Lady Diane, I am only too much flattered; but the honor is so great—I am overflattered; but the honor is so great—I am over-whelmed—and really you are too young and love-ly to sacrifice—" He paused. What could he say? and how could be say it? All the ordi-uary expressions of astonishment would fail to convey his amount of surprise and perplexity.

He was a man averse to innovations. His first impulse was always to reject any proposition which bore the impress of novelry; he hated change; he was unhappy during the late Lady Orme's lifetime, but he got used to his unhappiness, and was sorely aggrieved when death relieved him of his tyrant. Now he had become ed to his liberty, and liberty was sweet scorstomed to his liberty, and interty was sweet to him. What was he to say to this proposition, which took away his breath with its magnitude? Lady Diana had played a bold stroke, but she knew the nature of the man with whom she had to deal. He was too chivalrous and delicate-midded to judge her harshly if she falled. If she succeeded she should not regret the means she had taken to attain the end.

"If there is but one road to a purce, one state it; and in attacking a man who lives in a continual state of mental see-saw, one's only game is to frighten all the oscillation out of him," "If there is but one road to a place, one must abe said to herself. Nevertheless, she was fem-inine after all, and a genuine blush suffused her face when she spoke the words that were to de-

Lord Orme walked up and down with hasty nervous steps.

"I am aware that I ought not to hesitate for an instant," he said; "but-" muttered an instant," he said; "but—"

("It would be odd if you did not," muttered

"But I am so waworthy."

"Not so," Lady Diana said, rising and edging toward the conservatory. "Blame mc as much as you will, but do not seek to escape—I mean, to evade—the position by self-depreciation; remember, Lord Orme, that by so doing you deprive me of the only excuse I have for my conduct. If any thing could justify my frank-ness, it would be my conviction and approxiation of your worth."

Lord Orme looked doubtfully toward the conservatory.

It was there Grandacre had proposed to Amelia, and perhaps my lord fancied there might be infection lurking in that sweet, heavily perfumed

"You are too beautiful to throw yourself away; besides—"

"Am I beautiful?" she said, softly; "do you really think me beautiful?" a quiver of joy seemed to run through her voice, her lovely gray eyes darkened with emotion. He was too per-turbed to appreciate these delicate signs of tribulation, so she recovered herself; then she pleaded earnestly and calmly, as one man might rea-son with another.

son with another.

"I am growing old, Lord Orme, and I dread the thoughts of a lonely old age. There comes a season—it is coming to us both—when pleasure turns to pain; when the vigorous grasp on life fails; when infirmities crowd on us in place of the graces of youth; then we wail over our failures, and yet dread their termination. The dark shadow comes near us, and we shrink away yearning for companionship which may give us courage to face the enemy of life. We call the young and happy to our aid, but they are blinded with the glory of their own strength and joyousness. They rush by us, unheeding our plaint, and not perceiving its cause. When you and I grow older, Lord Orme, would it not be pleasant for us to clasp each other's hands as the darkness guthers? But I forgot—you have children—your fate is happier than mine. When I die there won't be a single being who will care to listen for my last words, or—

Here the feminine element reasserted itself, and Lady Diana turned away her head and dark shadow comes near us, and we shrink away

Here the feminine element reasserted itself, and Lady Diana turned away her head and wept, or at least held up a lace handkerchief to her eyes.

"Upon my word, this is most extraordinary!
I really don't know what to say, Lady Diana.
Pray—pray don't agitate yourself. I am not worth it."

"But your wealth and title are," Lady Di murmured, sorte roce; and then she wept more.
"I tell you what it is," Lord Orme said, desperately; I will—"

perately; I will—"
"You will? Then you do not despise me!"
Lady Di cried, ecstatically.
"Dear lady," he said, "I am immensely flattered. I was unprepared, of course; but still your proposition has given me unutterable gratifitation. I am the happiest of men, and I will—"
He passed; he looked at her with tenderness.
How could he look otherwise at such a beautiful there?" You will averse up for a few men How could be look otherwise at such a beautiful face? "You will excuse me for a few moments; my guesta require my presence in the supper-room. Believe that I adore your frankness, and have determined that I will—"
"What will you do?" she said, eagerly drawing nearer to him, and laying a hand on his arm.
"I will think it over." And Lord Orme vanished in the crowd.

Have you ever seen the baffled face of a cat when its intended victim allos from under its feline paw and darts into a sheltering hole in the wall? If so, you may picture Lady Di's expression at this juncture.

Nevertheless, she was not altogether dissatisfied.

"It is half the battle to get him familiarized with the idea," she thought. "Hecate might marry him if she only persisted long enough, far less see! I shall be Lady Orme yet."

"I want to speak to you, Lady Di!" The tone was imperative, such a tone as no man uses to a woman unless words of love have passed Lady Di looked up and besitated.

"Where?" she said, ignoring the conservatory, which she had been so anxious to enter a few moments previously.

"I know enough of the sex by this time to be aware that while no one can make opportunities aware that while no one can make opportunities so quickly as a woman, no one can crade them more dextrously when she ceases to desire them," Captain Mowbray said, rather bitterly, "Did I not see you, just now, signifying by look, if not by word, to Lord Orme your wish to rest yourself on the fautenil in the shadow of youder ferns? Come."

He offered his arm, and Lady Diana accepted it with something very like a curse between her rose-pink lips. Your coquette is never very far from hating where she has loved.

Supposing that Lord Orme should return, swayed by his mutable inclinations, and she should miss the treasure!

"This comes of teaching one's mule how to drive," she marmured, discontentedly. "There must be an end to this: he shall have his final congé to-night."

She sat down in the seat to which Thurstan pointed, and he placed himself by her side. For a while there was silence between them, such silence as is sometimes sweeter than speech;

sometimes more bitter than the harshest words. Lady Di was resolved to give her companion no assistance. She sat still, so still that a few overripe fuschia blossoms that dropped on to her shoulders rested there; and when he put out his hand toward her own with an entreating gesture, she did not seem to see the movement, for her little wrist never stirred from the fold of the dress where it reposed. Despits her annoyance at her position, she could not help feeling a soft sense of enjoyment in this luxurious atmos-phere. The sharp edge of the sea wind was closely excluded from this marm inscious recess, where the vivid hoes of tropical plants were sub-

- Carrier Town

dued by the dim light, and rare fragrance made the slumberous air heavy with sweetness.
"Will you valse?" Lady Diana said, suddenly.

She was conscious of the gloom in his eves, of the harsh intonation of his voice, but she af-fected to perceive neither. The time was gone when she cared either to bill his doubts or soothe his anger.

They tell me," he said, presently, in a voice which she fult grated sorely against the harmony of the scene, "that you are going to marry that

"What old man?" she answered, indifferently, toying with the feathers on her fam.

"You know whom I mean. You have given me enough pain of heart: do not hurt me with small meannesses. What is the use of humbugging?

ging?"
"There is no use," Lady Diana said, quietly.
"The older I get the more convinced am I that, to be thoroughly comfortable, one should never take the trouble to humbug; it's much ensier to be lazy, and selfish to tell the truth."
"It can not be true" (leaning over her, and grasping her arm) "that you are going to give yourself to Lord Orme for the sake of his money?"

"Did he tell you so?" Lady Di asked, eager ly, with a vague hope that Lord Orme might have been more explicit to his friend than to herself.

"No; it is you who tell me so," Captain "No; it is you who tell me so," Captain Mowbray said, gloomily, "Your own face is an index to the falseness of your heart. You never throw away your wiles. I was watching you just now, Lady Diana. I am only too well acquainted with every variety of lie your metable features can express; but for once I must force the truth from you. Do you or do you not still love me?"

So strong is the force of habit, and so rarely did Lady Diana ever give such questions a de-cided negative, that she answered, involuntarily, "Yes." Then she thought better of it, and added, with an outbreak of genuine candor, "It is of no use my nursing any further delusion about myself, Thurstan. I believe I love people some-times, and a little time ago I quite thought I was very food of you; but to tell you the .ruth—" She hesitated. A glimpse of the young man's wrathful face, gleaming pale in the dusk, checked her for an instant.

"Go on!" he said, savagely: "the truth does not often grace your lips."

"Well, then, I care for no one but myself."
And Lady Diana sank back in her seat with a little sigh of relief. She was rather glad to be found out at last. The assumption of many disguises had become wearisome to her.

He looked at her for a while in silence; then he came near to her, and took her by the hands. "You do not love me?"

"No, on my honor, I don't think I do now," Lady Di said, calmly.
"Have you ever loved me?" he repeated, with

"Are you quite certain?" know. I dare say I did, until you emphasis. "Are you quite certain?"
"I don't know. I dare say I did, until you began to love me back again, and then it got so monotonous—really, I forget—I wish you would not ask such unpleasant questions, Thurstan." "Then you have sinned simply for vanity's sake?

She looked uneasily round.

"Do not speak so loadly," she mattered.

"Do you know what I think of you?" he said, with increased excitement, and tightening his clasp on her hands. "I think that if the Magdalen were living, you would be unworthy to touch the hem of her robe. When the day When the day comes for you to be judged, Lady Diana, I would rather be the vilest wretch that walks the streets

The pext word was whispered in her ear, and perhaps was the hardest one that Lady Diana had ever listened to during the whole course of her evil, pampered life. He kissed her as he her evil, pampered life. He kissed her as he spoke it, and in his kiss there was more of con-tampt than even that hitter word conveyed.

In another instant be was gone, and the sob-bing waves and glad music became strangely blended with the harsh echo of that parting word.

Lady Diana looked up pensively at the stars, which gleamed dimly through the thick penes of glass,

"I'll never speak the truth again," she thought;
"if I had lied, he would still be thinking me an

"Do you think I had better do it?" Lord Orme said, looking rather wistfully at Lady Di-ana, when, after a short interval, he rejoined in the conservatory.

His disconnected phrase was perfectly understood by the person to whom it was addressed; but a hovering domestic funcied that he referred to coffee, and forthwith offered him that bever-

Lord Orme took some, mechanically; but put his hand on the cream-jug when, in the agita-tion of the moment, Lady Diana filled her own cup.

"That is enough," he said, as he tilted back.
Then the cream with a view to its economy. Then he pondered again.

"I am sure it would be for your happiness and mine," Lady Di said, energetically. "Ah, yes; I dare say it might be," was the doubtful response.

Lady Diama's heart began to fill with anger; but she concealed it under the guise of emotion. "I am very unhappy," she stammered. "I have forfeited your respect, and—" Here she sobbed, not knowing well what to

"No-r

"No-no: don't say that," replied the kind-hearted nobleman, in distress. "Let it be Yes (it it will make your happiness); no doubt I shall get used - I menn, no doubt I shall be very happy. Let it be Yes! then, Lady Diana."

And, with a deep sigh, he gulped down the rest of his cuffee.

Lady Diana dejected and Lady Diana elated were two very different persons. Never was a lovelier or brighter face than that which she turned to Lord Orme now. She caught her breath with a little quick sob of delight as she leaned on his arm, and murmured, I am so happy.

The game was won. Defeat would have been disgraceful; but victory brought a thousand hon-

Pacified duns, angry rivals, wealth, comfort-all these luxuries would be secured when she was Lady Orme. I wonder if Amelia has got the family dia-

"I wonder if America has got the salary uni-monds?" she thought.

Then she gave Lord Orme's arm a little squeeze, and said;
"I shall tell our friends to-night. Come and dance this quadrille, won't you?"

"Don't tell them until after the quadrille, thon," pleaded the other.

And then they went into the dancing-room, and Lady Diana did not tell her friends for the present; but went through the figures of the dance with a little song of triumph in her heart, and the words of the song were:

"I am Lady Orme—Lady Orme!"

Her eyes shone, her lips kept moving into tremulous smiles of delight; her beauty, irradiated by joy, was almost queenly to-night. Her flashing jewels, the sheeny sweep of her robes, the undulating grace of her movements, all that pertained to her, seemed enhanced by the charm of her triumphant loveliness.

Lord Orme looked at her with mild satisfaction. He was glad she was fair, as she meant always to live with him. He hoped she wouldn't want to ride—he hated to see women knocking about valuable horses; and he should stipulate with her she wasn't to make the tea. Women were so wasteful-spilled the tea all over the ce, deluged it with water, then said it was place, deluged it was a way, weak, and rang for more.

And then there was one other thing he determined on. He would fetch Azalen home to live with him; the long endured and unsuspective with him; the long endured and unsuspective with him; ed wrong should be atomed for at length. With Lady Diana to watch over and protect her, scandal would be in a great measure averted. His new wife could help him to place the neglected girl in her proper sphere. He would no longe be burdened with the sickly feeling of remore which had haunted him since he rejected the duties of a parent, and cast his own flesh and blood away from the shelter of his love.

"Azaloa shall come home," was the refrain of his thoughts as he walked restlessly through the great salons with Lady Diana on his arm.

"Ought I not to tell dear Rosa?" the latter whispered, as they drew near a brilliant group, in which Rosa's sharp eyes and Rosa's shrill

It was indelicate of her, this precipitation; she felt that; but, then, she dared not let Lord Orme "sleep it over" without his making his decision public.

"I will have that pleasure myself," Lord Orme said, with a cortain grave dignity not unbecoming to him.

He put his hand gently on his daughter's "Rosa," he began, "I have something very agreeable to tell you."

He paused, as a servant drew near to them, and presented him with a letter.

"If you please, my lord, a person left this here just now, and was particular about its being delivered to you at once."

Lord Orme glanced at the letter. "Immediate" was written outside; and he stepped quick-ly up to a small table where candles were burn-

"Pray excuse me," he said to those near him; "but it may be from my stud farm. I will only just glance at it."

Rosa and her friends moved away. Lady Diana alone remained near him, furtively watching his face as he tore open the packet. Then she suffered her glance to wander round the richly-appointed rooms; and her little foot best time with the music as she exulted over the luxuries of her new home. Look at Rosa! how much she is enjoying the dancing, and how devoted her partner seems. Unless I am much mistaken, Lord Orme, you will soon rejoice over the bridal of another daughter. She turned kughingly toward him, and was about to put her hand on his arm to attract his attention; but when she looked round and saw his countenance, her heart quivered with a great pang of nervous terror.

"What is it?" she cried. "Oh, tell me, what is it?" Lord Orme did not speak. His face looked shrunk and livid; his eyes were fixed on the paper, which his fingers held with a stiff grasp, like hands that are dead. The dance music swelled into a frenzy of jubilee; the dancers whirled faster and faster. jubilee; the dancers wanted mear them, in a Rosa and her partner circled near them, in a perfect whirlwind of disphenous skirts. girl's eyes were shining with happy excitement. As she passed near her father she gave him a bright look of recognition, not observing the expression of his face.

"What is it?" Lady Diana reiterated, her alarm increased by a silence which seemed so

"It is God's justice, I suppose," Lord Orme said, slowly, his words coming out, with an ef-fort, from his drawn lips; -- "and my punish-

Then be put the letter lete her hands, and turning away as one who can not endure that his face should be seen, because of its sore trou ble, he abruptly left the room. She looked after him blankly, and then he eyes fell on the letter. It ran as follows:

"My Loan,-Your daughter Acalea is dead. She died in my presence a week since, and I saw her buried this morning. The only reproach she over made against you consisted in her not mentioning your name during her last hours.

Her last words were for me who loved her: but she did not speak of the man who was once too dear to her, nor of the father who was as no-

"Her foster-parent, George Moore, told me before he died, that he believed in his beart that you were married to the dead girl's mother. Whether this be true or false matters little now; for even were such the truth, and I forced you to own it, not all the honor of your name and wealth could reminate my girl into the beauty

"That she should never move again se me more wooderful than that she should have cessed to speak; for lately she had grown very silent, but her fingers were always restless, and her eyes continually sought the window, as though she expected some arrival that might bring he happiness; but no one came, excepting the old

"I am, my lord, your obedient servant, "ROBERT DOCULAS."

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

A Lany asked a gentleman how old he was. He re-plied, "What you do in every thing." What was his age? Xi.

"Are you find of tongue, Sir?" "I was always find of tongue, Madara, and I like it still."

"Nineteen dresses in three weeks, and she said last night that she could not go to suppe. because she had not a rag to her back?"

"What did Gussy say?"

"Why, that he could not either; he had no coat to his stomach."

A GRECIAN BEND TRAGEDY. A URBULAN DEAD I HAVE AND ALL MIDDING THE PARTY OF THE PA

"PB do it, sure," the madden said.
The while with wrath she shook her head,
"And that before I sleep in hed;
The bound to have the proper bend;
No more PB hear the title scorning
Of other girls whom Beaven mand—
Or break their necks the first fine moraling."

But here she ceased, and with a sigh, As though she fisic would step and cry, Before the glars with course high, Till fied the night before the morn, Her lovely form she squirmed and twisted; But with the dawn she "owned the corn," And from her effects vain desisted.

Then goaded on by wounded pride, Nor knowing where her shame to hide, In angry mood che "up and died." Yet though it sundy seems too had, Her secrows should be never ending, Her secrosial form, a vision sad, At midnight still is Grecian bend-ing.

Young ladies who play croquet are known as "maids all for lawn."

"William, my son, how came you to muddy your

"William, my son, over the desired by father in the sye, very solverly solved:
"Father, what am I made of?"
"Bather, what am I made of?"
"Deat. The Bible sees, "Dust thou art, and unto dost shall then return."
"Well, father, if I'm dost, how can I help being modely when it raise on me?"

Archie and Tom sparked the same giri. One night Archie called on her and found her alone. After some conversation he barst out with: "Miss Mollie, do you think you could leave this comfortable home, kind father and another, leving brothers and sisters, and go to the far West with a young man who has bitle to live on earch his profession?" Miss Mollie hid her band gently on Archie's shoulder, with her eyes shout half closed, her ruby tips slightly spart, and said softly: "Yes, Archie. I think I could." "Well," said Archie, "my friend Tom is going West, and wants to marry. I will mention it to him."

Her "Photo" album richly bound,
And shinking für with historie gold,
I from the lable raised and said:
I farm the lable raised and said:
I a this your Hible I behold?"
"Ah, no?" she said, with happy smile,
"We maidens have, you know, our whims,
And through devouity pondered o'er,
No Hible 'de; but Hook of Hime?"

"Pretty girl, Amanda is." "Ah! is she blonde or runetts?" "Cib, she has ber days of both."

"I understand, Mr. Jones, that you said you could turn any thing neater than any man in this town."

"Yes, Mr. Smith, I said sh."

"Well, Mr. Jones, I don't like to brag, but there is no man on earth that can turn a thing as well as I can whittle it."

"Poh, nonsense, Mr. Smith, talk about your whittless."

whittle it."

"Pob, nonsense, Mr. Smith, talk about your whitthing; what can you whittle as well as I can turn it?"

"Any thing, every thing, Mr. Jones. Just name the article that I can't whittle, that you can turn, and I will give you a V if I don't do it to the estisfaction of all these gentlemen present."

"Wall, Mr. Smith, suppose we take two grindstrones, just for trial; you may whittle and I will turn,"
Mr. Smith slid.

"Phil, my jewel," said Pat, "I'm mighty sorry you can't dine with me to-day." "Arrah, and why can't I dine with you?" said the astonished Pail.

astonished Phit.
"Because, my dear," returned Pat, "I haven't asked ye as yet."

A man who had been sick away from home wrote back thus: "I am so changed that my color creditors would hardly know me!"

The provisions of the new Massachusetts Prohibit-cey law are so exacting that the Boston police are watching the tumblers in the tireas. The most reflection some young ladies have is in the

THE BEST DEAVISO LIMON-Drawing a salary.

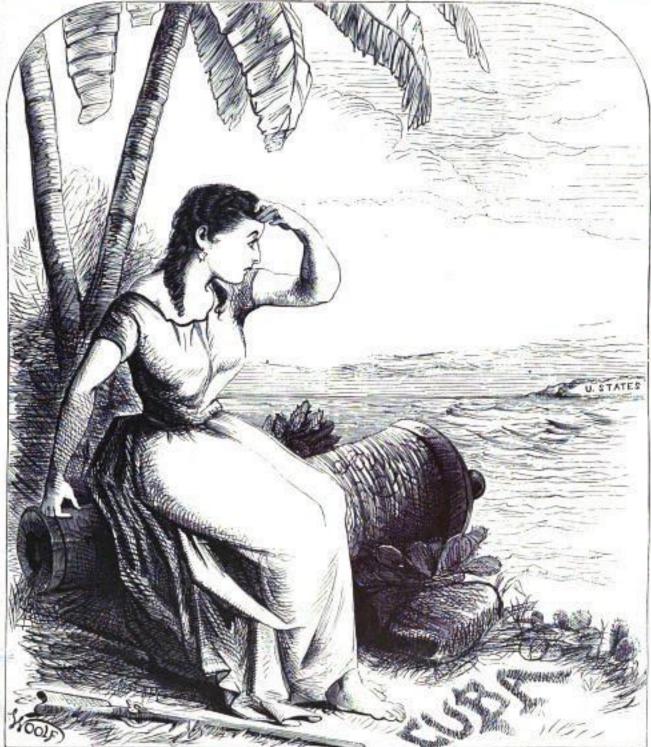

SALT LAKE CITY.

WE gave in our last Number illustrations of Omaha, Nebraska, and of a Prairie on Fire, on the line of the Union Pacific Railway. On page 572 we give this week a picture of Salt Lake City. This settlement, situated in the Territory of Utah, was formed by the Mormons, or Latter-Day Saints, after their expulsion from the city of Nauvoo, in Illinois. Their prophet, Joseph Smith, and his brother, were mardered in the jail of Carthage by an armed mob. In the beginning of 1846 the van of the Mormona, under the guidance of Britanan Youno, the successor of Joseph Smith, crossed the Mississippi on their journey for the Western wildermess; and, after enduring great privations on their journey, the pioneers reached, in 1847, the spot where they established the city, and in autumn were joined by the main body. During the winter and spring they suffered from famine; but on the arrival of harvest provisions between absolute.

of harvest provisions became abundant.

There can be little wonder that the more ignorant of the Mormons, when they first see the "City of the Saints," believe that they have reached the promised land. The city site has been well chosen. It lies in a charming and almost entirely level valley, surrounded by hills and grand mountain peaks, watered by innumerable civulets. The waters of "City Creek Cafton," divided into innumerable streams, run down every principal street of the city. The roats are wide, and, except in three or four basiness streets, each house has a large garden, and very frequently an orchard attached to it. Light and graceful trees line each street. The elimate of the valley is good; peach and apericot trees are flourishing every where. So calm and tranquil is the course of life in the Mormon capital that the remark of the Shaker to Artemas Ward would seem to be applicable to it, "Here all is peas." And whatever may be said about those peculiar institutions which have made the Mormon religion a by-word and a jest, every visitor is constrained to admit that the industry of this remarkable people has made what was once little else than a barren alkaline desert to "blossom as the rose." Their local government is excellent. Crime, in the fall sense of the word, is almost unknown among them, or is confined to the "Gentile" residents. There are but four har-rooms and one billiard-saloon, in Salt Lake City to a population of 27,000—a remarkable fact in this Western country, where there is usually a barroom to each twenty or so inhabitants. Hapid changes will no doubt follow the progress of civilization in this community, and the completion of the Pacific rail-roads can hardly fail to inaugurate them.

"UNDER A PALM-TREE-WAITING FOR A SAIL,"-TENNION'S "ENOUGABLES."

Our illustration shows

Our illustration shows the general plan of the city. The Tabernscle, irrevereatly termed by Gentiles "the great eggshell," from the form of its roof, is plainly seen in the middle distance. The building will hold 10,000 persons, and 7000 persons can be comfortably seated. It is one vast room, the dome being supported by a Howe truss, resting on stone columns. It possesses the second largest organ in the United States, and has an immease platform, with several desks for the president, the twelve apostles, and others. It is the place of worship for the Mormons of the city; and on every Sabbath they gather there to listen to exhortations often delivered by a dozen speakers. The roof is composed of wooden shingles, which, having turned somewhat gray with age, have the appearance of a dull metallic surface. The "Temple," of which we have heard so much, is a separate building, and its foundations, of granite, only are laid, although the work was begun fifteen years ago. The grand range of the Wesatch Mountains is seen in the distance.

SING-MAN, CHINESE MERCHANT, SAN FRANCISCO.-Puot. by Beady.-[See Page 574.]

CHOY-CHEW, CHINESE MERCHANT, SAN FRANCISCO.-PROT. BY BRADY.-(SEE PAGE 574)

Salt Lake City will be in direct communication with the Pacific Railroad in October next, by the branch line to be known as the Utah Central Railroad.

OUR CHINESE VISITORS.

THE visit of CHOY-CHEW and SING-MAN, the Chinese merchants from San Francisco, who ar-rived here on the evening of August 11, will further the influences of the recent visit of Mr. BURLINGAME and his diplomatic party. It will even more directly promote the friendly com-mercial relations which it was a main object of the RUBLINGAME mission to inaugurate. Creew, in his speech at Chirago on the 6th of August, admirably expressed the sentiments of the more enlightened among the great merchants in the Chinese empire when he said:
"China must brush away the dust of her antiquity, and, looking across the Pacific, behold and profit by the lossons of the New World."
That she has already begun to do this is manifest from the facts stated by him that "steamboat lines have been established on our rivers, and the telegraph will soon connect us with this wonderful sorereignty, where the people rule, and where every thing proclaims peace and good-will to all." About thirty-eight years ago the Edinburgh Review exposed the falsity of the statements made by those interested in the monepoly of the East India Company as to the anti-commercial character of the Chinese. It proved that they were, on the contrary, a highly mercial people; that they were, as they still are, the great traders of the Eastern Archipelago; that vast numbers of them were settled at Bata-via, Singapore, and other commercial emporia, all actively engaged in trade or in some species of useful industry. The Ediaborgh Review preof useful industry. The Edinburgh Review pre-dicted even then the growth of that American trade with China which now promises to assume such prodigious proportions, and the interests of which will be materially helped by the visit of Choy-Chew and Seno-Man to our metropolis as representatives of Chinese industry and com-

These Chinese merchants have been long settled in California, and have practically become American citizens. They speak our language with perfect freedom, and are well acquainted with our country. Of course, they are particularly interested in the schemes lately projected for Chinese emigration to America.

EVERY MAN HIS OWN HEALTH-BOARD.

In order to learn how to preserve health it is necessary, first, to understand what health is. A not inapt, though somewhat negative, popular description phrases it as a condition in which there is no consciousness of the existence of any orgae or member—when we do not first that we have a heart, a stomach, or any other annoying piece of mechanism within us. Predosionally, it has been worded as "a state in which all the functions are exerted with regularity and harmony." A better and more scientific definition, however, would be—a state wherein the nutrition of all the tissues is properly performed; or—to put it in language intelligible to the uninitiated—a state wherein every part of the body is repaired as first as it is wasted.*

All the various textures of which the body is composed are built up of minute cells. No mo-tion, no function can be performed without in-volving the destruction of some of these cells, and the organs called into play remain to a cer-tain extent incapacitated for action until the worn out elements are removed, and their place supplied by fresh and appropriate material. Contimud destruction and continual repair are the two; at conditions of our being, and any disturbance of the balance between them lends to more or less disastrous results. When St. Paul professed that be "died doily," his spiritual met-apt embodied unconsciously a demonstrable diviological fact. The manual laborer with every stroke of his hummer or pickaxe commits intinitesimal suicide as regards some hundreds of muscular molecules; the brain-weeker annibilates with every thought a portion of his nerve substance; each throb of the heart, each tear of grief or kough of mirth, implies the death of numerous particles of matter. It is evident therefore, that the two most important pieces of business to be accomplished are, to disc these dead atoms—to clear away the rublish— and to incorporate tools, vigorous ones in their stend. To these two great ends all the complex operations of the different organs are means. The former—the removal of dead matter—is effected through the agency of the lungs, skin, kidneys, and intestinal coral. For the latter— the process of repair—it is necessary, to use a mercantile phrase, first, that the raw material should be supplied; second that it should be conversed into the manufac ared product; and, third, that it should be sent to a market. These three de-idents are attained by the co-operation of the three grand functions of digestion, respiration, and circulation; the digestive organs being importers and, to a certain extent, manufacturers. the respiratory apparatus parting the finishing

* This general definition is, of course, incoded to apply to the mature period of life. During ladinary and youth, while the process of general is going out, the supply of new material exceeds the current waste. The opposite condition, in old are, when the waste careful the supply, indicates a decadence of the actual the supply, indicates a decadence of the actual wall powers, and is therefore a departure from health.

tourhes to the fabric; and the heart acting as wholesale dealer, while the arteries are jobbers of small lots to suit retail customers. The commercial microcosm thus figured is very much like its outside prototype. Under judicious legisla-tion (on the "non-interference" principle) affairs go on quite harmoniously, demand and supply are equalized, all classes are fairly represented. taxes are not burdensome, and "liberty, equali-ty, and fraternity" are peacefully maintained, the only "national debt" being the "debt of na-But sometimes human vanity, disregarding the "drisses fuire" philosophy, oversteps its governmental limits and undertakes to "regu-late" matters in contravention of the natural laws of trade; and then all sorts of troubles oc-Some imports are admitted free, while alnost prohibitory duties are levied on others the necessary interchange of commodities with the outer world is impeded; extravagant expenditures in certain departments entail a depre-ciation of the circulating medium; old estab-lished organs are orced to borrow from their neighbors in order to meet the drafts upon them, the markets are disturbed—there is a scarcity here, a glut there; the heart makes an over-issue of "watered" stock; ten to one the liver gets up a "corner" in bile; the small purchasers lose confidence, and their demand falls off; and the result is, that a "crisis" takes place and there is a series of failures, in some of which the assets are so far below the liabilities that there is no chance of a resumption of bush

Let us now endeavor to describe a little more in detail this manufacturing business, as transacted under the most favorable circumstances. The raw materials which are needed are, as every body knows, food, water, and air; the solid portions of food, of course, supplying the most essential elements. There are two purposes to be served by food; namely, the construction of tissue and the production of best; and alimentary substances are divided into two classes, as they are adapted to the one or the other of these ends; the first class, or food proper, consisting of substances which contain nitrogen (such as the lean parts of ment, etc., and being digested in the stomach; while the second class, or feel, comprises starch, angar, fat, oil, alcohol, etc., and is digested in the upper part of the intestine. These two kinds of digestion are performed in very different ways, the stomach furnishing an acid solvent for its part of the work, while the intestine adds an alkali to the oily materials with which it deals, and converts them into an emulsion; so that it is possible for a person to be dyspeptic as to one kind of food, while the other is properly discasted.

The food, having been duly prepared by the process just briefly hinted at, is started on a slow journey along the intestinal causal, and during its transit myriads of busy little absorbent vessels abstract from it all of its nutritive particles: the tissue-making substances being taken charge of by voins, and the fuel by special carriers called "lacteals." The former deposit their freight temporarily with the liver, where it is further purified and forwarded through other veins to the receiving burean of the heart; the latter transmit their purcels to the same destination more directly through a tuke known as the "thoracic duct," which empties into a large vein near the inner end of the left collar-bone, quite close to the heart.

Although it is the custom to speak of the heart as a single organ, we have in reality two hearts, as distinct from each other as are two city houses with a party wall between them. These two hearts are, in fact, two-story edifices adjoining each other and built upon the same plan, the upper story of each being devoted to the receipt, and the lower to the delivery of goods. The right side of the heart—or, more properly speaking, the right heart—deals only with the blood returned by the veins from all parts of the body—blood which has served its purpose, and which is brought home laden with impurities and deprived of its motivitive qualities. In the up stairs department, or "dumping-room," of the right heart this blood is monified with the proceeds of the two kinds of digestion we have described, and lowered through a trap-door into the comported through in trap-door into the comported of reality with an intricate network of minute vessels, through the delicate coats of which the blood gives out the carbon with which it was charged, and absorbs from the inspired air the oxygen which is now alone needed to render it fit for use. This process being accomplished, it is returned to the upper story of the left heart, lowered through another trap-door into the delivery dep rament, and thence distributed through the ramifying arteries to every part of the body.

the body.

From what has been said it will be readily understood that for the maintenance of health all three of these great functions, digestion, respiration, and circulation, must be adequately performed. If proper food in proper quantity be not supplied, or if the digestive apparatus full to extract therefrom available materials, all the expansion of the broadest chest will not suffice to give the blood its needed qualities; if, on the other hand, respiration be defective, or the inspired nir be deficient in oxygen or defiled with detectrious guies, good food and good digestion have their purpose thwarted; and, lastly, even if both digestion and respiration be fully operative, their week will be annulled by an impediment to the circulation of the blood, or a want of assimilative power in the tissues supplied by it. Moreover, derangement of my one of those functions soon produces a disturbance of the other two.

So far we have endeavored-without going into the more recondite mysteries of subordinate and auxiliary functions, such as the guiding stimulus of the "vis nervoea" through its "cerebro-spinal" and "ganglionic" channels; the separate duties of the "red blood disks" and "cytoid corposcles," and the machinery for their fabrication and repair; the "cellular hypothesis," or the "germinal matter theory," or the seductive "protoplasm" platform of Huxley; without inquiring whether fibrin is an aliment or an excrement; without discussing the great vexed question of the day, whether to structure or to function should be awarded causative priority; whether force is a property of matter or matter a result of force—to sketch broadly, and it is hoped intelligibly, the main conditions of health; and now, with the reader's permission, we shall point out a few very obvious inferences with regard to the means of fulfilling these conditions.

In the first place, wholesome food in sufficient but not excessive quantity, and containing the re-quisite proportions of tissue-making and heat-pro-ducing materials, must be taken at proper inter-vals. A normal appetite, and the ordinary mixed dietary resources of every household, will generally suffice to satisfy these postulates; but there are two errors frequently committed, against which we wish to give a mild warring. The first of those is the consumption of inordinate amounts of liquids, especially of cold water, dur-ing or soon after a meal. By this practice not only is the gastric juice diluted to some extent, but, what is of more consequence, the digestive organs are cooled below their working point; and it is to be borne in mind that the stomach, when called upon for action, must raise its temperature nearly three degrees above the heat of the rest of the body. The other bad habit to which we would call attention is the custom prevalent smong business men of filling the protra terspace between an early breakfast and a late supper by "any thing to stay the stomach" in the middle of the day. Under the deceptive ti-tle of "lunch" the most outrageous impositions are practiced upon the good nature of the in-ternal economy. Abominabl compounds misnamed cake, or crude atrocities termed by imaginative vendors pie, not uncommonly form the staple of this Barmecidal repast; or to the appetite which craves flesh-forming pabulum, its owner gives a "stone" in the shape of a halfcooked apple-dumpling! If we had our way, all such ill-judged appeals to perverted tastes—all pastry and confectionery of whatever grade— should be abolished by "reconstructive" act of Congress. While appetite lasts it is better to supply it with substantial, nutritive viands; aft-er hunger has been satisfied the stomach should not be overloaded with superfluous substances which merely tickle the palace.

For the process of respiration pure air, and plenty of it, is needed. With every breath we deprive the atmosphere of a portion of its oxygen, and pollute it with a certain amount of carbonic acid. This latter gas always exists in the atmosphere in the proportion of from four to six parts in ten thousand (to an even greater extent in cities); and in addition to this, every pair of human longs generates and exhales it at the rate of about fitteen cubic feet in twenty-four hours. Now, air containing one per cent. of carbonic acid gas becomes unfit for breathing purposes; so that one man confined in an air-tight spartment of moderate dimensions would before long commit involuntary suicide merely by breathing; and when we add that, besides carbonic acid, a constant elimination of more positively poisonous organic master is always occurring from the langs and from the skin, and state the further fact that a cancile in burning uses as much oxygen and gives out as much carbonic acid as an average human being, and that an ordinary gasbarner equals eight living adults in this respect, we trust that a homily on the importance of ventilation, or an heferential sermon against crowded bell-rooms and other similar poison vats, may be left to the good sense of the reader.

More especially is the procastion of securing a supply of fresh air to be observed at night, for then the percentage of pure oxygen is less. While soulight lasts plants under its influence possess the property of absorbing carbonic acid and setting free the oxygen again; but after dark they cease to perform this function, and the aximal world is left to take care of itself until morning.

To maintain the blood in active circulation no better advice can be given than that conveyed in the old saw: "Keep the head cool by temperance and the feet warm by exercise." Without exercise (limited on the hither side of fatigoe, no function can be adequately performed; but more particularly does it bear upon the proper distribution of the liquid life within the arteries. By its means the waste particles are thrown off with greater rapidity, and a demand stimulated for newer and better material; by it the blood is called to every portion of the frame, and that equalization of temperature produced which we speak of as "the glow of health." In speaking of exercise, however, we do not mean the too often overdone exertions of the gymeasium, where one set of muscles is monstrously distorted at the expense of all the rest. Moderate training of this sort is well enough in the absence of outdoor practice; but an exaggerated "biceps" is not a conclusive evidence of a perfect sanitary condition. Neither do we refer to dencing vehemently at througed assembles, where glaring gas and sudorific society are devitalizing the close atmosphere, and loading it with carbonic acid and organic matter. Under such circumstances exercise merely forces the lengs to contaminate the system by introducing impurities in excess of those already existing in it. A brisk "constitutional" walk, taken regularly in pure open air, and not producing do to weariness, is all that is required in the way of exercise in most cases. In all, of course, the amount or the violence of the exertion should be proportioned to the strength of the individ-

To some up briefly; a good digestion and appropriate food; sound lungs and pure air to fill them withal; an active circulation and regular exercise to keep it in motion—these are the principal requisites of health, and if these be fulfilled by a man's physical condition and habits of life, the less he has to do with pills and potions the better for him. A. L. C.

UNCLE SAM'S REPLY TO THE MULLIGAN ON THE CHINESIS QUESTION.

Why, Pat, you goney, what's the row
You're making all the day, Sir?
Let Ki Hi pass, you silly fool—
He'll not be in your way, Sir.
Leave it to me to trot him out,
And show you all his tricks, Sir;
That done—why, you can leave off work,
And only carry bricks, Sir.

And you, John Bell, don't strain yourself,
And of Hold Hengland prate, Sir;
For when he comes, depend upon't,
You'll sit in royal state, Sir;
Drink 'arf-and 'arf, and read the news,
And tell us all the figgers—
How, down in Abysynny there,
You British whipped the niggers.

Monsieur Crapaud, my friend in red, You need not feel alarmed, Sir; The glory of the "nation grande" Will not the least be harmed, Sir. Of equal power and equal rights You yet may see the day, Sir; But till that period comes round Let Ki Hi work away, Sir.

And you, my blue-eyed plodding coz,
Just landed from the Rhine, Sir,
You'll soon have leisure on your hands
To sing away your time, Sir;
For in the shops or on the land
He'll do your week quite clever,
While you lay off, and treat the vrow,
And lager swill forever.

Ha! Sambo—you there—hi, this way!
I want a word with you, Sir;
So come along, my dusky friend,
And bring your banjo too, Sir.
Quick—heel and toe—and reel it off;
I vow, you're quite amazing.
Now sun yourself the rest o' the day,
While Ki Hi does the slaving.

For by Jerusalem I swar,
By all the laws of nations,
He's just the motive pow'r we want
That don't need any rations.
A little rice, a little salt,
And work up to the handle;
To leave such dicker loose around
Would be a mighty scandal.

So, Ki Hi, bring your spade and pick,
And, while you dig or strike, Sir,
I'll sit and whittle all the day,
And fix things as I like, Sir.
Then, first, we'll turn the country round—
The folks is always jangling—
And make the Southern cend the North
To stop their cussid wrangling.

Next, we might level off the farm
(When you've had time to rally)
And dump the Rocky Mountains down
In Mississippi's valley.
But, first and foremost of the hull,
You bet, I've got the notion,
We'll build a bridge from Cubey hum
Across the Atlantic Ocean,

Described Tablers cure Indigestion, Heartburn, and Som Stomach. Fifty Cents per Box. Mailed for obc. Sold by druggists. S. G. Walland, 571 Broadway.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

HARPER & BROTHERS' SPECIAL TRADE SALE, 1869.

FROM AUGUST 16 TO SEPT. 25.

FRANKLIN SQUARE, NEW YORK, August, 1869.

We invite the attention of Booksellers to our Special List of Books, which we will sell on the following terms, for Cash, from the 16th of August to the 25th of September, after which our terms will positively be as heretofore.

On Orders of $ 100 at one time, as per cent. discount;

And an additional deduction of Five per cent, for Cash.

We shall not sell at any of the Trade Sales this Fall.

The Special List will be furnished to Booksellers on application to the Publishers. HARPER & BROTHERS.

MESSES. GREELEY, of the Twibune, BRYANT, of the Post, BENNETT, of the Hevald, BROOKS, of the Express, MARRIER, of the World, RAYMOND, of the Triess, and DANA, of the Sun—their Portraits, Blographies, and Characters given in the New Annual of PHRENOLOGY and PHYSIOGNOMY for 1876. Also, Landseer, Lorenzo Dove, and Peggy his wife; How to choose a Helpmest. All for 25 cents. Newsman have it. Address S. R. WELLS, 259 Physiq, N. L.

MOUNT HOPE NURSERIES.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

(Beyandmann 1940.)

GENTLEMEN Improving their grounds, Cacalanuses, Landscare Gameseus, Newschmen, and Dealess in Trees, will find our stock of Fruit and Oreasseutal Trees the largest, and the collection the most extensive and complete in the U.S.

All orders, large or small, will receive prompt and careful attention. Packing for distant points per-formed in the most skillful and thorough manner.

Small percels sent by mall when so desired.

Descriptive and Historied priced Catalogues sent prepaid on receipt of stamps, as follows:

No. 1.—Praits, 10c. No. 2.—Ornamental Trees, 10c. No. 3.—Green-House, 5c. No. 4.—Wholesale, Phus.

ELLWANGER & BARRY, ROCHESTER, N.Y.

August, 1869.

MADAME FOY'S

COMBINED

Corset Skirt Supporter and Bustle.

Is just the article needed by every lady who would consult bealth, comfort, and style. Once 48,000 doz. of these goods have been sold within the past five years, and the demand for them is constantly increasing. HARMON, BALDWIN, & POY, Sole Mannefacturers

New Haven, Conn. D. B. Saustiess & Co., Hoston, Mass.; Lex, Alexander, Bren, & Co., Philadolphia; Apama & Mout-row, Baltimore; Kausyman & Blue, New York, are our Agenta.

VICK'S Illustrated Catalogue

HYACINTHS, TULIPS, LILIES,

Hardy Bulbs for Fall Planting,

IS NOW PUBLISHED,

And will be sent runs to all who apply.

Address JAMES VICK,

Rochester, New York.

SWEET

QUININE.

SWAPNIA.

SVAPNIA.

SVAPNIA.

SVAPNIA.

SUAPNIA.

TROY FEMALE SEMINARY.—This lu-ratintion offers the accumulated advantages of over to years' successful operation. For circular, apply to JOHN H. WILLARD, Troy, N. Y.

LOSSING'S WAR OF 1812.

PICTORIAL FIRLD-BOOK OF THE WAR OF 1812; or, Illustrations, by Pen and Fencil, of the History, Biography, Scenery, Relica, and Tradi-tions of the Last War for American Independence. tions of the Last War for American Independence. By Egrecor J. Lessum, Anthor of "The Pictorial Field-Book of the Revolution." With 832 Illus-trations, engraved on Wood by Lessing & Bar-ritz, chiefly from Original Sketches by the Author. Complete in One Volume, 1988 pages, large 8vs. Price, in Cloth, $7.00; Sheep, $5.00; Full Roan, $9.00; Half Calf or Half Morocco extra, $10.00.

By 60; Haif Calf or Haif Morecco extra, $10 on.

Hr. Lossing not only writes excellent history, but he collects the materials from which that history is made; and we are reminded of Herodotra, who traveled into many hands to obtain the materials from which his immertal work was composed, and whose shiffedness in assign his sequilities, modern research and criticism are putting beyond all question, thus relating has lignorance which would have it that the Father of History was the Father of Lies. Mr. Lossing's industry is equalled only by his conscioutionness, which leads him to treat all parties to the War of 1818 with the atmost impartiality, and to give all the facts that throw light upon the contest, which is a novelty in "riting about it, for never was the history of an important war told in a mere partiest manher than that of our second conflict with England." "The time has come when it is possible to write of it with candiar as well as with spirit, as Mr. Lossing writes its history; and the time has come, too, when we are beginning to understand its real effect on the country, and when it is possible to discuss its character and its consequence in a philosophical manner, as Mr. Lossing discusses them. "It is proper that the history of such a countryman, after immense exertions to make it worthy of their approbation. That they will well appearing what he has done so theroghly is a thing of course. For young persons who would have correr views of their country's history, no briter book and be named. Its minutences, its liveliness, its accuracy, its high tore, and its evaluation cannot be superioral whose would have correr' views of their country's history, no briter book and be named. Its minutences, its liveliness, its accuracy, its high tore, and its exhaustive character, render it a fine opening work for youthful readers, whose minds are always injured by the perveal of superficial histories. " The volume is herefore by the history of the American Revolution he has now repeated, with equally happy result

-Baston Francise.

The valuable service which Mr. Lossing rendered to the bissory of the American Revolution he has now repeated, with equally happy results, for the story of our Second War with Great Britain, and we heartify the many an achievement which does our second war with threat Britain, and we heartily congretable him upon an exhiberment which does him so much honor. The value of such labors in the chickation of history can hardly be overestimated, Mr. Loseing's book has been published in a form worthy of its intrinsic marit.—Tribune.

POWLESSED BY HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK.

EFF Sint by mall, postage proposit, to any part of the United States, on receipt of the price.

Removed to 335 Broadway. THE COLLINS $15.

WATCH FACTORY.

The Collins Metal and Jewelry Partory has se-moved from 37 Names Street to their splendid New Offices, $20.

No. 335 BROADWAY.

Three superior Watches have now been in use over three pears, and give networed satisfaction; and although end at so moderate a price, are not surpassed in appearance and for time by gold once costing $100 and $200. They have been greatly improved, but the price remains the same, $10. Those of extra the fluich, $20. Gents' and Ladies' since. Jenselry of the richast styles, in every respects equal to the fluor gold, at one-cent the price. We have but

ONE OFFICE, NO AGENTS,

and are not responsible for the bogus and worth-less goods sold at these lessely establishments. the Factory is the ONLY PLACE where the Gen-nine Collins Metal Watches and Jewelry can be had.

C. E. COLLINS & CO.,

No. 335 Broadway, cot. Worth Street, (Up Stairs).

DO YOUR OWN PRINTING.

The Norely is the best Press ever invented with which to do your own printing, and is second to none for the nee of General Job Printers.

Fries of Presses, $15, $20, $20, $30.

Boston, Mass., for descriptive circular containing testimonials from all parts of the country, with specimes of work done on the press, and specimen sheets of Types, Cuts, Borders, &c.

Bloomington Nursery.

500 Acres. 18th Tear. 10 Green-Houses.

500 Acres. 18th Tear. 10 Green-Houses. Fruit, Ornamental and Nursery Stock, immense and reliable assertment, very low for each.

Applies—including most magnificent stock of year-lings: also hardy Northern sorts, such as Duchress, Oldenburg, Histop, Transcendent, and othe Crab Applies—1, 5, and 2 year.

Peaches, Pears, Cherries, Plants, Quinces, Orapez, Freed and Energyren Trees, Nursery Stocks, Osage Orange Holps Flants, Roses, own roots; Thigh, Hyserisks, Karvissus, Iris, Spuille, Lilies, Speciosres, Austrana, &c. Also superior colored plains of Fruits and Flowers. Bend 16 cents for Catalogyess.

F. K. PHENIX, Bioconington, McLean Co., Ill.

Choirs are delighted with it! THE CHORAL TRIBUTE.

By L. O. Emnason, Author of "HARP OF JUDAH," "JUBILATE," &c.

Universally presonned to be the best book of Church Music leaved during the last ten years, and greatly excelling the author's previous works. Price $1.50; $150; $150 per does. Sent, postpaid, on receipt of price.

O. PITSON & CO., Roston;
C. E. DITSON & CO., New York.

IMPROVED ALUMINIUM BRONZE HUNTING-CASED WATCHES.

The Improved Aluminium Bronze is a metal difficiling entirely from any ever offered to the public. He qualities and resemblished to Gold are such that even judges have been deceived. It has seriously coulded the attention of coleation own, and has not only called forth the enlogtume of the peculiar properties, but has also obtained a Gold Medal at the Paris Expedition.

The provenients are well finished, and as all these needs to at the Paris Expedition.

The movements are well finished, perfectly regulated, and as all these goods are manafactored in my own factory, I am chabled to warrant them as excellent time-hespers.

Further dealls will be found in my pamphlet, which will be sont, postpoid, or densind.

Goods sent by Expense, C. D. D., with charges, Address JULES D. HUGUENIN VUILLEMIN, No. 48 Names Street, New York.

Good Boys like Excellence better than Sham. Inquire concerning RIVERVIEW MILITARY ACADEMY,

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.

A wide-awake, therough-going School for Boyswishing to be trained for Business, for College, or for West Point or the Eaval Academy, OTES HISBEE, A.M., Principal and Proprietor.

AGENTS WANTED, Local and Prencting. for the New American Patent Meat and Vegetable Chopper. The best thing is the market, without exception. For Cut of Machine, Terms, &c., address D. A. NEWTON & CO., 88 Cortland Street, N. Y.

PARLOR SPEAM ENGINE: made entire work for hours if supplied with water, &c. : free from danger : a child can work it. Sent free, with instruc-tions, for $1.90; three for $5 Or. Address WALTER HOLT, No. 102 Nassan Street, New York.

Do IT NOW.—Don't delay, but send 25 cents at once and receive MAPLE LEAVES for twelve months. It is the cheapest, the best, and the most popular Monthly published. Specimen copies sent on receipt of a starm. Address. pt of a stamp. Address O. A. ROORBACH, No. 100 Nassan St., N. Y.

A LADY who has been cared of great nervous debility, after many years of misery, desires to make known to all follow-sufferers the sure means of relief. Address, enclosing a stamp, MRS. M. NER-RITT, P. O. Box 2003, Resion, Mass., and the prescription will be sent free by return spail.

A LL that is required of BASH FASTENERS, Malker's Patent will do. Ther priver get out of order. 2 per day. FELLS WALKER & CO., at Whitlock Exposition, 25 Park Phos., N. Y.

WANTED - Agenta every where. Best & chances ever offered. Address A. T. WELLS & CO., 85 Smithfeld Street, Fittsburgh, Pa. This is legitimate business.

$9 A DAY FOR ALL. Address N. Y.

JUST PUBLISHED:

SEARING'S VIRGIL'S ENEID, centaining a Dictionary, Notes, References, Biastrations, a Map, Questions, Metric 'Index, Essay on Biyls, the simile of MS, &c. A superb Edition. Postpaid, $2 25.

STEELE'S 14 WEEKS IN PHILOSO-PHY.—its merits are, the short course, the fas-cinsting sityle, the clear and practical statements, the telling and artistic illustrations, and the entirely new feature of "practical questions." Postpaid, $1.46, WORMAN'S GERMAN ECHO.—A new system for Conversation, with Vocabulary of Words and Misses. The student learns to disk in German. Postpaid, $1.25.

SUMMARY OF HISTORY.—History is a series of Statements so brief that every word may be committed to memory, if desired. A Key and Outline. Postpaid, 60 cents.

28" Samples to Teachers who will adopt, if approved, half price. Descriptive Catalogues of 350 Text-Books mailed free.

A. S. BARNES & CO., Educational Publishers, Nos. 111 and 113 William St., New York.

PIANOS and ORGANS.

Prices greetly reduced for Cash. New Seven-Octave Planos, of drit-class makers, for $855 and upward. Second-hand Planos, Melodeona, and organs from $40 to $115, at 481 Beosdway, N. Y. HORACE WATERS.

EVERY MAN HIS OWN PRINTER.

With one of our presses, and the material accompanying it, every man can do his own printing, thus saving much time and expense. Oirculars containing full information about these Presses, prices, recommendations, &c., mailed free on application. Specimen-books of types, cuts, borders, &c., &c., 10 cents. ADAMS PRESS CO., 43 Marray Street, New York.

THE ENTEY COTTAGE ORGAN is the best and chespeat. Contains the lutest improve sents—For ffreezene and For Jubilante.
 ESTEY & CO., Sole Manufire, Brattleboro, Vt.

THE NOVELTY PRINTING-PRESSES are sold as Manufacturer's Prices by
C. C. THURSTON, Brooklyn, N. Y.
Send for Circulars and Specimen-Sheets of Type. $35 Watch free to every Agent! Burloses new.

EMPLOYMENT (Ast page. For particulars, address S. M. SPENCER & CO., Bratileboro, Vt.

HARPER'S PERIODICALS.

TERMS FOR 1869.

HARPEN's MAGAZINE, One Year $4 00

Harren's Magazine, Harren's Werely, and Harren's Baran, to one middless, for one year, $16.66; or any two for $7.00.

two for $7.00.

An Extra Copp of either the Manager, Wanger, or Angeles Extra Copp of either the Manager, Wanger, or Bases will be supplied swalls for energ Club of Five Squeoniums at $4.00 cach, the one conditioner; or, Six Copies for $20.00, unifical extra copy.

The Postage within the United States is for the Manager 24 cents a year, for the Weeker or Bases, in companied with the office where received. Subscriptions from the Dominion of Canada must be accompanied with 24 cents additional for the Manager, or 20 cents for the Weeker or Bases, to propay the United States postage.

the Whitehar of passes, in properties, the Volumes of the Managing commence with the Numbers for Jane and December of each year. Someoriptions may commonce with any Number. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to begin with the first Number of the correct Volume, and back Numbers will be sent accordingly.

pes of the Werkt, commen

The Volumes of the Werkill commence with the year. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to commence with the Number next after the receipt of his order.

Subscribers to the Magazus, Wernix, or Baxan will find on each wrapper the Number with which their subscription expires. Each periodical is stopped when the term of subscription classes. It is not necessary to give notice of discontinuance.

In remitting by mail, a Post-Office Order or Draft, psychole to the order of Hansus & Baronena is preferable to Bank Notes, since, should the Order or Braft be lost or stolen, it can be renewed without loss to the ender.

the ender.

In ordering the Manauer, the Wenner, or the Baza, the name and address should be clearly written. When the direction is to be changed, both the old and the new one must be given.

TREES FOR ADVERTISESO IN HARPER'S PERIODOGALS. Harper's Heastin. — Whole Page, $200: Half Page, $125: Quarter Page, $10.—such invention; or, for a less space, $1.50 per Line, each insertion.

Harper's Worldy.-Inside Pages, $7.50 per Line; Outside Page, $2.00 per Line-sack intertion. Horper's Range.—$1 00 per Line; Cuts and Display, $1 25 per Line—each insertion.

Address HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

HARPER & BROTHERS.

PRANKLIN SQUARE, NEW YORK,

Have just Published:

Pictornal Field-Book of the War of issu-or, illustrations, by Pen and Pencil, of the Mistory, Biography, Socuety, Relics, and Traditions of the Lant War for American Independence. By Bassoon J. Lessawa, Author of "The Pictorial Pield-Book of the Remedition." With 88th Illustrations, en-graved on Wood by Lossing & Barritt, chiefly from Original Sketches by the Author. Complete in One Volume, 10st pages, large from Price, in Cisth, 57 60; Sheep, 85 be; Pall Roam, 59 00; Half Calf or Half Merocco extra, 810 69.

THE SEVEN CURSES OF LONDON. By JAMES GEREWOOS, the "Amateur Cooust," Author of "The True History of a Little Reprincefile," Houses Lar-idger," "Wild Sports of the World," Ac. Evo, Pa-

FAMOUS LONDON MERCHANTS, A Book for Boys. By H. R. Fox Bounes. With Portrait & George Peabody and 34 Hinstralium. 16mo, Cioth, $100.

SIGHTS AND SENSATIONS IN FRANCE, GER-MANY, AND SWITZERLAND; or, Experiences of an American Journalist in Europe. By Enward Golla Buryen. Time, Chill, $150.

SANDS'S PHILOSOPHY OF TRACHING. The Teacher, the Pupil, the School. By Naturaliza Basis. Sto. Cloth, $1.00.

FIVE ACRES 700 MUCH. A Truthful Etscide-tion of the Attractions of the Country, and a Care-ful Consideration of the Question of Frieft and Loss as involved in Amateur Parming, with much Valu-able Advice and Instruction to those about Purchas-ing Large or Small Places in the Rural Districts, By Rosear B. Rossavaux. With Characteristic Li-lestractons, 1970a, Cloth, $1.95.

A PARSER AND ANALYZER FOR BEGINNERS, with Diagrams and Suggestive Pictures. By Frances A. Masce, Professor of the English Language and Comparative Philology in Lafayetta College, Arabor of "Method of Philological Study of the English Language," "Comparative Grammar of the Anglo-Saxon Language," &c. 16me, Closh, 40 cents.

RHETORIC: a Text-Book, designed for Use in Schools and Colleges, and for Private Study. By Rev. E. O. Haves, D.D., Ll.D., President of the Northwestern University. 19810, Cloth, $1.98.

THE MALAY ARCHIPELAGO: The Land of the Orang-Uan and the Bird of Paradise. A Narrative of Travel, with Studies of Man and Nature. By Alvano Ressan Wallace, Author of "Travels on the Amason and Bio Negro," "Pain Trees of the Amason," &c. With Ten Maps and Fifty-one elegant likestrations. Crown Svo, Cloth, 35 50.

FISHING IN AMERICAN WATERS, By Gereo C. Score. With 170 Illustrations. Crown Svo, Cloth, $8 50.

THREE SEASONS IN EUROPEAN VINEYARDS.
Treating of Vine Culture: Vine Disease and its Cure; Wise - Making and Wines, Red and White; Wise-Drinking as affecting Health and Morals. By Wise-Inthicing as affecting Health and Morals. By Wiselam J. Flaco. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

HARPER'S HAND BOOK FOR TRAVELLERS IN EUROPE AND THE EAST. Being a Guide through France, Beigium, Holland, Gertsany, Aus-tria, Haly, Egypt, Syria, Turkey, Greece, Switzer-land, Tyrot, Hassis, Denmark, Sweden, Spain, and Great Britain and Indust. With a Railroad Map corrected up to 1866. By W. Passanous Fersings, Bevised Edition; Eighth Year, Large Phuo, Leath-er, Focket-Book Form, §7 80.

HARPER'S PHRASE-SOOK; or, Hand-Book of Travel Talk for Travellers and Schools. Being a Guide to Conversations in English, French, German, and Railan, on a New and Improved Method. In-tended to accompany "Harper's Hand-Book for Travellers." By W. Panusons Persusan. Assisted by Professors of Heidelberg University. With con-cise and explicit Reles for the Presunction of the different Languages. Square 18ms, Flexible Cloth, $1.60.

The New Novels

PURCINIED BY

HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

META'S PAPTH. A Novel. By the Author of "St. Olave's," &c. Swo, Paper, 30 coats.

FALSE COLORS, A Novel. By ANNIE THOMAS. Svo. Paper, 50 cents.

HETTY. By HEMET KINGSLAY. STO, Paper, 25 rents. MY DAUGHTER ELINOR. A Novel of American Society. Svo, Paper, $1 55.

STRETTON. A Novel. By HENET EINSSLEY. Svq. Paper, 40 cents.

CORD AND CREESE. By the Author of "The Bodge Club." Blustrated. Svo, Paper, 75 cents.

THE DODGE CLUB; or, Italy in 1829. By Javen, De Minas, Author of "Cord and Crosse," &c. With 100 Hiustrations. 8vo, Paper, 75 cents; Cloth, $1 %.

HACKERAT'S NOVELS: New Edition, beautifully printed, with the Author's own illustrations.

VANITY PAIR. 32 Hinstrations. Svo, Paper, 50 cts. THE VIRGINIANS, 150 Hinstrations, See, Pa-THE NEWCOMES. 169 Brustrations, Swo, Paper,

THE ADVENTURES OF PHILIP. Portrait of Author and 64 Illustrations. Svo, Paper, 50 cents. EW Harries & Business will imag immediately New Hilliam of Theology's other Novels, librarated by the Author, at correspondingly low prices.

CHARLES READES NOVELS:

HARD CASH. Blustrated. 6vo, Paper, 25 cents. GPIFFITH GAUNT; or, Jealousy. Illustrated. IT IS NEVER TOO LATE TO MEND, See, Pa-

LOVE ME LITTLE, LOVE ME LONG. Sto, Paper, 15 conts.

FOUL PLAY. See, Paper, 35 cents.
WHITE LIES. See, Paper, 35 cents.
SW- To be followed by Charles Reade's other Novels.

ANTHONY TROLLOPES LAST NOVELS: PHINEAS FINN, the Irish Member. Hinsteaded by Miliais. Svo, Paper, $1 25; Cloth, $1 75.

HE KNEW HE WAS HIGHT. Complete. With 64 Historicas by Marcus Stone. Sec. Paper., $1.00; Cloth, $1.60. Part II., separately, Paper, 50 cours.

EF HARTER & BROWNESS will send only of the above tools by mask, postage free, to only part of the United lates, on receipt of the price.

THE CHINESE PUZZLE.

THE FISHERMAN (ALIAS UNCLE SAM) AND THE GENIE.

"The Genie, slowly rolling himself out of the box in the form of vapor, soon assumed his proper proportions. The Fisherman stood aghast on beholding the gigantic size of the demon he had liberated."-Arabian Nights' Entertainments.

A Seven per Cent. GOLD LOAN.

$6,500,000.

The Kaness Pacific Railway, now in successful op-eration from Kaness City to Sheridan, proposes to build an extension to Denver, Colorado. The Govern-ment has granted Three Millions of Acres of the finest lands in Kaness and Colorado, which are mortgaged for the security of a loan of $6,500,000.

This loan is secured in the most effectual manner. It represents a road in produble operation, and will open the trade of the Rocky Mountain Country, and connect it with the great markets of the East. It is considered to be one of the best loans in the market, EVEN BETTER IN SOME RESPECTS THAN GOVERNMENT SECURITIES.

The loan has thirty years to run, principal and in-terest payable in gold, semi-annually, seven per cent. The cospons will be payable semi-annually in either Frankfort, London, or New York, and will be free from Government taxation. The bonds for the present are sold in correccy at 26, with accrued interest.

Circulars, maps, and pamphiets sent on application. DABNEY, MORGAN, & CO., 53 Exchange Place, N. Y. M. K. JESUP & CO., 12 Pine Street, N. Y.

Sarono will make Tine resemble Silver Use only Sarotae to clean White Paint.
From Marble Sarotae reteriors all Staint.
For pelishing Kaives Sarotae is mesurpassed.
For cleaning Brass Stain-Rods Sarotae has no equal.
If you would have clean windows, not Sarotae,
Sample cake sent by mail on receipt of 20 cents.
Enoch Morgan's Sons, 211 Washington St., N. Y.
Soaps of the facet kinds for family use.
Established 1806. Established 1809.

STEVENS POCKET RIPLE.

With Detarbable Shoulder-Rest. Most popular arm made for Sporting and Target-Shooting. Swim & Wisson's Revolves, in any quantity, for cash, at hundred price. Mason's Deramones, and other Pistols.

J. W. STORRS & CO., M'Tr's Agents, 188 Broadway, New York.

FOUNTAIN PENS. One dip writes 4 pages.

1 51 50 a gross, postpaid.— Penknife and Penkli combined.— Eraser and Pen-Bodder combined, and 12 Fountain Pens. 60 cents. postpaid. fell of slydr. Access Wawres. CITY NOVELTY CO...

604 Library St., Philadelphia, Pa.

PRETTY WOMEN.-A comparatively few ladies monopolize the beauty as well as the attention of society. This ought not to be so, but it is; and will be while men are foolish, and single out pretty faces for companions.

This can all be changed by using HAGAN'S MAGNOLIA BALM, which gives the bloom of youth and a refined, sparkling beauty to the complexion, pleasing, powerful, and natural.

No lady need complain of a red, tanned, freckled, or rustic complexion who will invest 75 cents in Hagan's Magnotta Balm. Its effects are truly wonderful.

To preserve and dress the Hair use Lyon's

"PERFECTION" Coffee-Pot.

Superior to any yet invented, combining all the advantages of the French patents, with wonderful SIMPLICITY, DURABILITY,

Lovers of GOOD COPPEE are unanimous in its

FOR SALE BY ALL DEALERS. SIMPSON, HALL MILLER, & CO., SOLE MANUFACTURETS.

Wallingford, Conn. Sample and Sazes Room, 19 John St., N. Y.

Musical Boxes

The integral and oldest depot in America. Fresh Noveltles by nearly every Steamer. Fine Supply of Fancy Goods, Swiss Carved Goods, Fine Gold and Silver Watches. F. J. PAILLARD & CO., 480 BROADWAY, N.Y.

CATALOGUES SENT FREE. MATHEMATICAL INSTRUMENTS, 112 pages.
OPTICAL INSTRUMENTS, 71 pages.
MAGIC LANTERNS and STEREOPTICAMS, 100 pp.
PHILOSOPHICAL INSTRUMENTS, 84 pages.
JAMES W. QUEEN & CO.,
924 Chestnut St., Philadelphis, Pa.

The Reason why Every One should buy a Haines Piano:

The reputation of these Pinnos is fully estab-liabed as being unsurpassed by any for a rich, full tone, elasticity of touch, long standing in tune, and elegance of style and finish.

Every article used in the construction of the Haines Pinno is of the best quality and of thoroughly seasoned materials.

The prices being reasonable, they can not fall to suit any who may desire to purchase. Circulars and information sent on application to

HAINES BROTHERS,

46 East 14th Street, New York,

Or to Seith & Nixon, Chicago, Ilia.; H. N. Herrister, J. A. McClutz, Nashville, Tenn.; Kungen. Bros., St. Louis, Mo.; J. R. Jackson, Sandrisky, Ohio; J. E. Godin, Philadelphia, Pa.; Mrs. C. Billing, Pittsburg. Pa.; Brainard & Sons, Cleveland, Ohio; Cluwer & Sons, Albany and Troy, N. Y.; J. T. Harrick, Rhinobeck, N. Y.; J. H. Henteren, Ilhaca, N. Y.; Wuitz, Bertin, & Preny, Boston, Mass.; Matthias Grav, San Francisco, Cal.; C. M. Merch, Cincinnali, Ohio; C. M. Louis, New Haven, Com.

IVORIDE

KNIFE-HANDLES.

EQUAL IN

BEAUTY and DURABILITY

TO THE GENUINE

IVORY,

AND AT

HALF THE PRICE.

This material is guaranteed to resist the action of heat and cold, whether of water or of the atmosphera.

FOR SALE BY ALL DEALERS.

J. Russell & Co.,

Green River Cutlery Works, 83 BERRHAN STREET, New York City.

per Cent. Gold Bonds

COUPON OR REGISTERED,

PREE OF GOVERNMENT TAX, SECURED BY FIRST MORTGAGE

NEW YORK & OSWEGO MIDLAND RAILROAD, and by the additional guarantee of a paid-up capital of six militions of dollars. Issue limited to $30,000 per mile of road actually built and in running order.

built and in running order.

The road is in course of thorough and rapid construction: 150 miles will be completed by the lat of October next, and the entire line, it is believed, by the end of the cusuing year.

The admirable selection of the route for commanding both local and through business can not fall to make it one of the best-paying railroads in the country.

try.

These choice securities are meeting with rapid sale at par and accreed interest in currency, at which price they are still offered.

For further particulars apply to

GEORGE OPDYKE & CO., Bankers, No. 25 Nassau Street,

New York City.

UTUAN'S HAIR GLOSS AND CURLING FLUID IS infinitely superior to any other dressing for the hair ever offered to the public. It is guaranteed to be perfectly harmless, and will produce the most successful count in heir that has a natural tendency to curl. Price 50c. Sold at Jones F. Hamm's United States Medicine Warehouse, No. 8 Collines Place, New York.

TO SPORTSMEN!!

A very superior selection of fine Screech-Loading SHOT-GUNS, RIPLES, and PISTOLS, of our own Manufacture and Importation. PISHIN TACKLE, POCKET GUTLERY, and Sportament Articles. Sale Agents for W. B. PAPE'S Celebrate Muzzle and Beeech Loaders.

MERWIN & HULBERT, Circulars supplied.) 285 Breadway, N.Y.

Potaax & Sos, Manuf're of Genu-ine Heerschaum goods. Stores 519 Broadway, under St. Nicholas Botel, & 37 John St., middle of block. Send for new wholessie or retail circular to Letter-Bex 5646. Repairing and Boiling also done.

$2000 A YEAR AND EXPENSES to Agents, to introduce the Wilson Sewing Machine. Sitch alike on both sides. Samples on two weeks' trial. Extra inducements to experienced agents. Fedfurther particulars, address the WILSON SEWING MACHINE CO., Cleveland, Obio: Boston, Mass.; or St. Louis, Mo.

FISHERMEN! TWINES and NETTING, MANUPACTURED BY

WM. E. HOOPER & SONS, tw Send for Price-List.) Baltimore, Md.

HINKLEY KNITTING MACHINE. Agents wanted. Knits every thing. Send to of-fice, 176 Broadway, for Circulars.

GOING UP TOWN!

On the 18th of August we removed to

747 BROADWAY, near 8th St., and now offer our present stock of

CHINA, GLASS, AND FANCY GOODS at very low prices.

Davis Collamore & Co., 479 Broadway, near Brooms St.

WE PUT GENUINE WALTHAM W E PUT GENUINE WALTHAM Watches into the hands of purchasers in any state, territory, town, village, or frontier settlement, at the lowest New York wholesale prices. The Express Companies take them from us and deliver them to the customers in any part of the Union, however remote. The package can be opened, and the watch examined, and not till them is the purchaser required to pay for it; and if on examination it is not satisfactory, there is no obligation to receive it. Our descripto pay for it; and if on examination it is not satisfactory, there is no obligation to receive it. Our descriptive and illustrated Price-List gives full information in regard to the watches, and our plan of sending them by express. Every one should have a copy. We send it postpaid on application; no return stamps required. When you write, please state that you saw this in Harper's Weekly.

HOWARD & CO., Jewelers and Silversmiths, No. 619 Broadway, New York.

Scrofula Cured by Brandreth's Pills.

Brandreth's Pills penetrate the whole mass of blood, causing the expulsion of impurities. The body feels relieved from a single dose; what then may be ex-pected from twenty? By continuing their use, the whole of the blood in time becomes purified, and the body reconstructed from good material, and a new lease of life secured.

Bess Stree, March 25, 1868.

Mr Duan Srz,-My daughter Alice, thirteen years old, has been completely cured of that horrible disease, Scrofnia, which for years rendered life a torment; after all medicines and many physicians had been tried and failed, I commenced giving her your pills. She took them almost every day for three months, constantly improving. She has now entirely Yours truly, DANIEL LUTHER.

HOR. B. BEANDERFO.

What will it do ? is the first inquiry the cick make concerning a medicine. Suppose Tanaur's SETTER APPRIEST is the subject of the interrogatory— what then? Simply this reply: It will relieve and cure headache, names, fatalence, nervousness, cos-tiveness, debility, billoueness, and indigestion. SOLD BY DRUGGISTS EVERY WHERE.

HARPER'S HAND-BOOK OF POREIGN TRAVEL.

HARPER'S HAND-BOOK FOR TRAVELLERS IN EUROPE AND THE EAST. Being a Guide through France, Belgium, Holland, Germany, Aus-tria, Italy, Egypt, Syria, Turkey, Greece, Switzer-land, Tyrol, Russia, Donmark, Sweden, Spain, and Great Britain and Ireland. With a Railroad Map corrected up to 1969. By W. PRINDORS FRIENCE. Revised Edition: Eighth Year. Large 18mo, Leather, Pocket-Book Form, $7 50.

HARPER'S PHRASE-BOOK.

HARPER'S PHRASE-BOOK; or, Hand-Book of Travel Talk for Travellers and Schools. Being a Guide to Conversations in English, French, German, and Italian, on a new and Improved Method. Intended to accompany "Barper's Hand-Book for Travellers." By W. Passmoux Ferance. Assisted by Professors of Heidelberg University. With con-cise and explicit Bales for the Pronunciation of the different Languages. Square 4to, Flexible Cloth, PURCHARRED BY HARPER & BROTHERS, New YORK.

HARRER & BROTERES will send the above works by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of the price.

Vol. XIII.—No. 663.7

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 11, 1869.

SINGLE COPIES, TEN CENTS. $4.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1869, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the United States, for the Southern District of New York.

PRINCE ARTHUR IN AMERICA.

PRINCE ARTHUR, the seventh child and third son of Queen Victoria, arrived in Halifax, from England, August 22, in the steamship City of Paris. The passage from Queenstown was made in six days and eleven and one-half hours—the in six days and cleven and one-half hours—the shortest trip ever made between those two ports. Prince Arrhun is a pleasantly appearing young gentleman of mineteen. He is named after Arrhun Wellesser, the Duke of Wellington. Our readers will be interested in the portrait which we publish on this page. The Prince is an officer in the British army. He is of nearly the arms are that the Prince of Wellington. of nearly the same age that the Prince of Wales was when he visited America nine years ago. All three of the Queen's sons have been extensive travelers. They have thus become acquainted with the ways of the world, and therefore better fitted to occupy the position assigned them in so-cial life, and as the possible rulers of a great na-

SHERMAN STATION.

SHERMAN STATION.

Saureman, Wyoming Territory, is the highest point attained by the Pacific Railway on its whole course from ocean to ocean. Fifteen menths ago nothing but bare hills and crags marked the spot. Now there is a little town, containing a large machine-shop, a "Wells Fargo's express office," newspaper shops, and even a millinery store. Its two hotels, of shingle, are of a rough kind, but good meals are to be obtained in them. Our illustration of Sherman is the first that has been published of the place in this country. Wyoming is to include parts of Decotah, Utah, Colorado, etc. The embryo town of Sherman is $262 feet above the sea, yet the ascent to it from the Missouri River, a distance of 549 miles, is made with the greatest case. The grades never exceed 90 feet to the mile, while for the larger part of the distance it is not over 30 feet to the mile.

THE INTERNATIONAL BOAT-RACE.

